COMMENTARY ON GORBACHEV'S TEST MORATORIUM OFFER

News Conference Cited

LD010841 Moscow TASS in English 0831 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 1 TASS -- A news conference was held for Soviet and foreign correspondents at the press center of the Foreign Ministry of the USSR today. It dealt with a statement made by Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, on Soviet television and his message to the U.N. secretary-general.

The news conference was given by Georgiy Korniyenko, a first deputy foreign minister of the USSR, Vladimir Petrovskiy, head of the International Organizations Department of the Foreign Ministry of the USSR, and Vladimir Lomeyko, head of the ministry's press department. Opening the meeting with the press, Korniyenko said: The fact that Mikhail Gorbachev's address on Soviet television on March 29 was devoted especially to the issue of ending nuclear tests attests to the tremendous significance attached to it by the Soviet leadership.

That we are concentrating efforts in this area is explained by the following considerations:

The first consideration. The issue of stopping nuclear weapons tests, while being an organic part of the general program for nuclear disarmament which was set forth in Mikhail Gorbachev's statement of January 15, lends itself readily at the same time to independent, and quick, resolution, given, of course, a shared desire to achieve it. What are the grounds for saying this? First, the problem of ending nuclear weapons testing completely is already 75-percent solved: For many years none of the nuclear powers has been conducting nuclear blasts in three mediums, that is on the surface of the earth, in the atmosphere and in outer space. So it only remains to agree not to stage them also in the fourth medium, underground. Second, the question of prohibition of underground nuclear tests has already been the subject of negotiations between the USSR, USA and Britain, and moreover -- the sides have been close to completion of elaboration of a relevant treaty. Over a period of many years various aspects of that question are being worked on also at the multilateral organ -- the Geneva Conference on Disarmament. Third, if earlier difficulties in verification over prohibition of nuclear tests were more far-fetched, than real, they are now simply non-existent: Scientific-technical means of verification became even more perfect, and, if need be, they could be supplemented with international on-site inspections.

Second consideration. With such a measure as prohibition of nuclear tests being seemingly limited, termination of nuclear tests is the most real, the simplest and the most efficient step towards ending the nuclear arms race and, to a major extent, prevention of the arms race in outer space. It is most important now to stop the arms race, to move from the dead centre the process of disarmament, above all nuclear.

It is exactly for that purpose that the Soviet Union decided to take a unilateral daring step, as a good example: It stopped any nuclear explosions as of August 6 last year -- both in military and peaceful purposes. The initial deadline of that moratorium, January 1, this year, was later extended till March 31.

And then a new constructive step was made on the part of the Soviet Union. As was announced in Mikhail Gorbachev's reply to the leaders of six states and reaffirmed in his March 29 television appearance, the Soviet Union will not conduct nuclear explosions also after the expiration of March 31 -- the extended date of the unilateral moratorium, as long as the United States does not hold such tests. Otherwise, the Soviet Union will resume nuclear tests. This, as was emphasised by Mikhail Gorbachev, should be absolutely clear. The USSR cannot waive its own security and the security of its allies.

But that would not be our choice -- all our thoughts and efforts are directed exactly at preventing such a turn of affairs. To have an accord on ending nuclear tests, the general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee is ready to meet at an early date the U.S. President at one of the European capitals.

Mikhail Gorbachev's March 28 Message to U.N. Secretary General Perez de Cuellar on the occasion of the International Year of Peace, is also permeated with the care to ensure a turn to the better in international affairs, to strengthen peace.

The Soviet Union is known to have been the first to respond to the declaration, which proclaimed 1986 as the International Year of Peace, and which was adopted by the U.N. General Assembly in October last year. In the USSR that U.N. decision was received as an extra political stimulus for the quest for large-scale and effective measures to remove the nuclear threat.

A package of exactly such measures of fundamental significance was set forth in the January 15 statement of the general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, and then reaffirmed and developed in the Political Report of the CPSU Central Committee to the 27th CPSU Congress. The fundamental basic principles of a comprehensive system of international security, put forth at the congress, harmoniously accord with the aims and the tasks of the International Year of Peace, just as with the U.N. Charter.

Answers have been given to numerous questions put by journalist.

More Korniyenko Remarks

LD011017 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 0940 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow, 1 Apr (TASS) -- Georgiy Korniyenko, first deputy foreign minister of the USSR, answering a question on the USSR's reaction to the White House proposal that Soviet experts be sent to observe the nuclear blast in the State of Nevada planned for the middle of April said: We have put forward a proposal to the U.S. Government that experts from the two countries meet at any time and in any place to discuss matters relating to monitoring the halting of nuclear blasts. Our position is unambiguous: Traveling and observing how nuclear blasts are carried out would mean to all intents and purposes legalizing blasts. Let the Americans look elsewhere for companions wanting to take part in such a legalization. We shall not take part in this. Georgiy Korniyenko was speaking at a news conference at the Press Center of the USSR Ministry for Foreign Affairs.

Asked whether the extension of the moratorium by the USSR is possible if the United States carries out a new nuclear test, he stressed that it would no longer be in force. The USSR has already warned that it will not be able to extend the moratorium endlessly. The USSR will refrain from carrying out nuclear tests only until the first nuclear explosion in the United States.

We would not like to think that President Reagan has uttered his final word on a special meeting on the issue of halting nuclear weapons tests. By proposing a meeting in the very near future in one of the European capitals to discuss this question, Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, did not mean that this meeting would replace the one arranged in Geneva and which must take the form of a visit by him to the United States. This issue remains on the agenda.

U.S. actions over the past few months represent a departure from "the spirit of Geneva," said Georgiy Korniyenko. As for the USSR we shall continue our efforts to improve the situation and achieve a turn for the better. The USSR, he noted, is particularly negatively inclined when this or that country, whether it be the FRG or Israel, joins in U.S. plans to create a so-called "space shield." The FRG's participation in the SDI program cannot fail to have an effect on the state of USSR-FRG relations too. The first deputy USSR minister of foreign affairs condemned Washington's intention to supply the most up-to-date types of weapons to counterrevolutionary gangs in Afghanistan and Angola.

U.S. Rejection Scored

[Vitaliy Korionov "Observer's Opinion" under the general headline: "Take the Sensible Step!"]

[Text] The reports currently arriving in an unbroken stream from all ends of the earth testify to the fact that the planet is witnessing what is essentially a universal referendum on today's most acute issue for mankind: Will the opportunities still available for finally halting the dangerous nuclear arms race be utilized? The cessation of nuclear tests primarily by the Soviet Union and the United States must be the chief and urgent step to be taken along the path toward this goal.

The new Soviet initiative has stirred the world and has been a powerful boost for all those who want to safeguard the earth against a nuclear conflagration. The position of the USSR, which is continuing to adhere to its unilaterally imposed moratorium, is viewed everywhere as an initiative of outstanding political signficance.

As for the United States, everyone can see that the U.S. Administration has been given yet another chance to back up with actions its declarative statements of its desire for the reduction of nuclear armaments. This chance should not be missed -- such is the resolute demand which is growing hourly everywhere, the United States included. The governments of peace-loving states, the broadest strata of the international public, political parties, public organizations and movements, parliaments, church representatives, and people espousing the most diverse political views are all demanding: Enough empty promises, it is time for immediate and vigorous actions!

What is more, the U.S. Administration is acting, but only in the opposite direction: A new nuclear explosion is being prepared at the Nevada test range. It is not enough that Washington has hastily rejected the new Soviet peace initiative. The White House is declaring over and over that it is still expecting "Soviet specialists to observe the U.S. nuclear test to be held mid-April." What is this if not cynical mockery of the hopes of the peoples who are insisting on Washington's cessation of nuclear tests!

The constructive Soviet proposal is receiving increasingly broad international support. Millions and millions of people are yet again being convinced in fact that the USSR acts with an understanding of its responsibility to mankind. If the planet continues to be shaken by nuclear explosions, the responsibility for this will rest wholly and completely with the Washington administration. And with it alone!

Levin Assails Reagan Remarks

LD312003 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1645 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] Beyond U.S. borders, Soviet proposals for a halt to nuclear tests have been received even more warmly. Washington's negative response to them has evoked indignation. The U.S. argument is seen as a defiance of common sense. In a dispatch from Washington a DPA correspondent analyzes the U.S. Administration's position on the issue, summing up: the United States sees the Soviet proposal as, just listen, a propaganda ploy. Here is my colleague Viktor Levin:

[Levin] I will begin with a quotation: Militarist states see unilateral concessions as a sign of weakness and not good intentions. To my mind this description wholly covers the American position in relation to the moratorium on nuclear explosions introduced unilaterally by the Soviet Union. What we did was to take a good-will step and for 8 months now we have not carried out any nuclear explosions although the United States stubbornly continues with its tests. As confirmed in Comrade Gorbachev's television address, we even now call on the United States to display a sense of responsibility and follow our example. The reply to this is negative.

This seems the right moment to return to the quotation I gave. I repeat it: Militaristic states see unilateral concessions as a sign of weakness and not good intentions. And whatever anyone might say as far as official Washington is concerned, the quotation hits the nail on the head. And do you know who is being quoted? I will not keep you in suspense any longer: These words were spoken by U.S. President Ronald Reagan. In his usual way, he intended to brand someone else but the way it turned out, his high-flown rhetoric disregards facts and rebounds directly on the very policies being pursued by the present American Administration.

As already noted, Washington hastened to call the new Soviet proposal -- which opens up a real way to the total halting of nuclear weapons testing -- a propaganda ploy. But just a moment; the fact that we have done so unilaterally and to the prejudice -- and there can be no two ways about this -- of our own security, given that the United States is continuing such explosions, can this fact really be a propaganda ploy? Our proposal for a Soviet-U.S. summit meeting to be held in the near future to take the first major step toward stopping the nuclear arms race and reach agreement on halting nuclear tests -- is this also a propaganda ploy? If so, then it is to ask what Washington would call responsibility for the fate of the world and political will to solve the burning problems confronting mankind.

The DPA dispatch notes that, despite wide-ranging protests from world opinion the United States has carried out not only its 22d March defiant nuclear explosion but is preparing for another test in the 3d week of April, one which is an integral part of the work to develop strike weapons in space. There are rumors, the West German journalist notes, that yet another test may be carried out in the first half of April. So are these explosions to be regarded as a constructive contribution by Washington to the cause of ridding mankind of the threat of nuclear war?

The Soviet Union has made an honest and realistic proposal dictated by a feeling of utmost responsibility and by a desire to see a ban on nuclear explosions become a fact, an immutable norm of interstate relations. Washington's position, as it appears today, shows that the U.S. Administration is not ready for such constructive steps. Recalling Reagan's words once more, it remains to be said that it is the United States which acts like the militarist state about which the head of the U.S. Administration spoke.

Kornilov Urges Test Ban

LD312116 Moscow TASS in English 1727 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 31 TASS -- TASS political news analyst Yuriy Kornilov writes: "It is not yet late to halt the nuclear arms race. The first major stride in that direction is needed. Putting an end to nuclear testing by all, above all by the Soviet Union and the United States, as well as by the other nuclear powers, could become such a step. We attach tremendous significance to the solution of this task which concerns the destiny of all peoples", Mikhail Gorbachev said in his speech over the Soviet television on March 29. The world press emphasizes that this is another vivid confirmation of the Soviet Union's consistent foreign policy course aimed at removing the danger of nuclear holocaust.

A good example set by the Soviet Union, which unilaterally announced a moratorium on all nuclear explosions eight months ago, on the day of the 40th anniversary of the tragedy of Hiroshima and Nagasaki, and urged the USA and other nuclear powers to follow suit has evoked approval all over the world.

And this is natural. One need not be an expert in the military sphere to realize that not to conduct testing means to put an end to the refining of nuclear weapons, to start practical advance to their complete elimination everywhere. The Soviet Union views an end to testing as part and parcel of the Soviet Union's large-scale peace programme, the implementation of which would enable humanity to enter the 21st century being rid of the threat of nuclear catastrophe.

We view an end to testing as a most important element of setting up a comprehensive system of international security, the foundations of which have been formulated by the 27th CPSU Congress.

It would seem that Washington should support the Soviet Union's initiative and meet the expectations of the peoples, for President of the United States Reagan, less than six months ago, put his signature in Geneva to the joint Soviet-U.S. statement which clearly declared that a nuclear war is inadmissible and that the sides will not be striving for nuclear superiority. But what was Washington's real answer? At first silence and then awkward manoeuvres aimed at avoiding the discussion of the essence of the matter while a number of tests of nuclear devices were conducted in Nevada.

After non-aligned countries, other peaceful nations started declaring for an end to nuclear testing ever more resolutely, and the USSR, having extended its moratorium till March 31, declared that it will not conduct tests even after the expiry of that deadline, till the USA conducts a nuclear explosion. Another nuclear explosion, the eighth one in the past eight months was set off at the test site in Nevada. What is this if not an ostentatious and brazen challenge to the Soviet Union, to all peoples? This is an act of defiance that evoked stormy indignation all over the world.

Trying to camouflage the militaristic essence of its policy, Washington is launching these days ever more propaganda fireworks aimed at misleading the public. It is asserted, for instance, that the USA, allegedly "lags behind" the USSR and needs nuclear explosions to ensure its own security. But this is a lie and to refute it it is enough to quote the information of such a prestigious organization as the Swedish Institute of Defence Studies. Its information indicates that the number of nuclear devices the USA has tested since 1945 exceeds by third that tested by the USSR. And a number of nuclear tests conducted by the USA and other western powers is 50 per cent greater than the number of tests by the USSR. Furthermore, Washington asserts that to end testing is impossible because of "difficulties of verification". This is also a lie which has been refuted more than once by prominent western politicians, scientists and military experts.

The U.S. ruling circles placed self-seeking interests of the military-industrial circles above the interests of entire humanity and their own people. Ignoring the will of the international public, flouting the United Nations Charter, going back on its own obligations assumed during the Soviet-U.S. summit meeting, Washington continues banking on the militaristic course, on force, and is asserting that it is precisely in this way that the United States can "influence" the USSR's policy. These are futile calculations. Time and the course of events show if the U.S. ruling circles will be able to realize soberly the realities of the present and abandon the hegemonistic philosophy and militaristic doctrines dashed by life itself. As for the Soviet Union, it remains loyal to the policy of peace and continues declaring vigorously for the removal of war threat.

FURTHER COMMENTARY ON LATEST U.S. NUCLEAR TEST

Test Provokes 'Outrage'

["TASS Commentary for KRASNAYA ZVEZDA" by military observer V. Chernyshev: "Contrary to the Will of Millions"]

[Text] A shock wave of outrage and anger has spread throughout the world. Its epicenter was the American test range in Nevada, where the United States, despite everything, carried out a new explosion of a nuclear device. This test, code-named "Glencove," is Washington's crude and ostentatious response to the act of good will on the part of the USSR in stating that it would not carry out nuclear explosions even after the expiry of its unilateral moratorium on 31 March this year, that is to say, not before the first nuclear explosion in the United States. The American Administration thus ignored the call to stop nuclear tests, although people throughout the world realize the urgency for this important measure, which would improve the international atmosphere and constitute a major step toward eliminating nuclear arms.

In continuing its nuclear explosions the U.S. Administration is increasingly opposing itself to the clearly expressed will of the majority of states in the world and the demands of the broadest strata of the world public and ignoring the warnings coming from many influential U.S. politicians and public figures and members of the American Congress. Such actions show up the true worth of the American Administration's hypocritical statements about Washington's alleged desire to make nuclear arms "impotent and obsolete" and to reduce and scrap them. The following legitimate question also arises: Can the testing [otrabotka] of more and newer nuclear means in the United States really accord with the recognition of the inadmissibility of nuclear war and of attempts to gain military superiority enshrined in the joint Soviet-American statement at the Geneva summit meeting?

According to a report in THE WALL STREET JOURNAL, preparation is in full swing in Nevada for the the testing of an X-ray laser pumped by a nuclear explosion scheduled for April.

The testing [otrabotka] of a laser weapon for the purpose of ABM defense and for its use in outer space must cause serious concern in the world. First, it is a direct breach of the Soviet-American ABM Treaty, which forbids testing for the purposes of ABM defense anywhere except at the previously announced and established test ranges (in the case of the United States, White Sands in New Mexico and Kwajalein Atoll in the Pacific). Second, the creation [sozdaniye] of such devices for nuclear explosions in outer space is a practical measure whose implementation in the future may lead to breach of the provisions of other important documents -- the SALT II treaty and the 1967 treaty on outer space.

The testing [otrabotka] of a nuclear-pumped X-ray laser once again refutes the myth about the "nonnuclear" nature of SDI spread by Washington officialdom. In this regard it is appropriate to recall a number of other facts which clearly indicate the preparation of nuclear weapons for "star wars" in the United States.

In 1983 the "Fletcher Commission," in a report to the U.S. National Security Council, recommended that $895 million be invested by 1989 in developing [razrabotka] nuclear-pumped X-ray lasers. In February 1985 the U.S. Secretary of Defense and Secretary of Energy signed a joint document whereby their departments are to engage in energetic work to create [sozdat] new types of nuclear weapons for "star wars." Directive No 172, signed by the U.S. President in May 1985, officially states that nuclear weapons may be an element of SDI. In the middle of last year R. Wagner, assistant to the secretary of defense for atomic energy, testified to Congress that plans to use nuclear weapons in a large-scale ABM system with space-based elements were at the "focus of attention" in the Pentagon. In accordance with the White House's request for the next fiscal year, appropriations for research [issledovaniye] and development [razrabotka] in the sphere of nuclear armaments under the SDI program are doubling. It is intended to appropriate at least $250 million for nuclear tests for "star wars" in Nevada.

It is now no longer a question of work of a "scientific research nature" being carried out by the Pentagon in the SDI sphere, the American newspaper CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR writes, but of practical tests of new kinds of weapons. The creation [sozdaniye] of nuclear armaments for outer space is causing alarm in the world, including in the countries of U.S. allies. French President F. Mitterrand expressed this alarm as follows: "The transfer of nuclear arms into outer space will mean not just the end of the 1972 treaty on ABM systems but the beginning of a new spiral in the arms race and advancement toward other forms of arms whose nature I am not even able to specify at this moment."

Washington's insolent action has caused anger and outrage among all progressive mankind. People of good will are insistently demanding a ban on all nuclear tests.

'Challenge' to Arms Opponents

AU271603 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 27 Mar 86 p 3

[Commentary by Spartak Beglov of NOVOSTI; paper's headline: "From the Soviet Viewpoint: After the Nevada Test"]

[Text] The subterranean nuclear test carried out as scheduled by the Americans on 22 March in Nevada was assessed quite unequivocally in Moscow, as in most capitals of the world. It is an open challenge to the opponents of the arms race throughout the world; "a 150-kiloton blow to the hopes of the peoples."

It would seem, though, that the term "as scheduled" is out of place here. Reports from the United States indicate that the U.S. Administration has altered the schedule of the nuclear explosions, and has moved up the date of the test, originally slated for April, to March.

Primarily there are two explanations for this unusual hurry. First, the six signatory states of the Delhi declaration 1 week before the Nevada explosion received an unmistakable signal from the USSR, indicating its readiness not to carry out any nuclear explosions even beyond 31 March, at least until the next summit meeting, should the Americans consent to do the same. Thus Washington was confronted with the unanimous opinion of seven states with a total of 1 billion inhabitants, and decided to resort to preemptive action. The world was to be presented with a fait accompli, before the demand for discontinuation of the tests had become a chain reaction that could no longer be stopped, neither abroad nor in the United States itself.

Second, the U.S. Administration had suffered a severe defeat in Congress 48 hours before the Nevada test: The House of Representatives refused to approve a $100 million grant for military aid to the "contras" in Nicaragua. It is amply known how Reagan reacts in cases like that: Whenever his policy of strength suffers a setback somewhere, he immediately attempts to boost his prestige again by an ostentatious demonstration of strength in some other place. This was practiced in October 1983 when the White House -- after the debacle in Lebanon, where nearly 250 GI's were killed in Beirut -- launched the invasion against tiny Grenada, so as to present it as the "greatest victory of American weapons."

The new nuclear explosion in Nevada, where a weapon for "star wars" was tested, has still further undermined the confidence in the United States as a potential disarmament partner. When Ronald Reagan and Mikhail Gorbachev during the Geneva summit meeting last November agreed on the need to accelerate progress toward nuclear disarmament, it seemed -- at least verbally -- as if the U.S. President wanted to comply with the hopes of American and international public opinion. But these were only words. The deeds of the administration amount to the opposite, and are obviously dictated by the interests of the military-industrial complex and the ultraconservative circles of the United States.

Thus, with whom is the Soviet Union dealing in the dialogue with the United States? With the America that is genuinely interested in halting the arms race and in constructively collaborating with the USSR in implementing the plan for nuclear disarmament, outlined at the 27th CPSU Congress, or with a militarist group which arrogantly rejects all reasonable arguments for preventing the arms race in space and for halting it on earth that were agreed on at the Geneva summit meeting?

These are questions which invariably arise in view of the new Soviet-American summit meeting planned for this year.

SHABANOV OUTLINES SOVIET VERIFICATION POLICY

PM270936 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 24 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 5

[Article by Army General V. Shabanov, USSR deputy defense minister: "A Most Important Element in the Disarmament Process" -- uppercase passages published in boldface]

[Text] The solution of the problem of verification [kontrol] is of fundamental importance in the program for the elimination of nuclear and other types of mass destruction weapons put forward in the statement by M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, on 15 January this year.

Comprehensive and most stringent monitoring [proverka] of the fulfillment of possible future agreements is a most important element in the disarmament process proposed by the Soviet Union.

Quite often Western propaganda has vociferously spread the myth of the impossibility of agreeing with the USSR on effective verification [kontrol] measures and attempted to distort the Soviet position on this question. Whatever sphere of arms limitation and reduction you take -- be it nuclear or conventional arms, nuclear tests, or preventing the spread of the arms race to space -- everywhere the Americans have hidden behind the "problem of verification [kontrol]" that they themselves have invented: The Russians do not agree to verification [kontrol], they say, so there is nothing to talk about. These actions are based by no means on a sincere U.S. interest in successfully resolving the questions of limiting the arms race but on other, frankly unsavory aims -- torpedoing agreements that are under preparation or have already been signed.

This stalling tactic was used by Washington when, for instance, discussing the question of the ratification of the treaties limiting underground nuclear weapons tests (1974) and on underground nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes (1976). It has been used by the United States to wreck ratification of the SALT II Treaty, to hamper talks on banning chemical weapons, to avoid the moratorium proposed by the USSR on all nuclear explosions, and to block any Soviet peace initiatives in limiting the arms race.

The Soviet Union's statements on questions of verification [kontrol] exposing Washington's long-standing political speculation on this problem and calling for a new boost to be given to arms limitation talks seem all the more important to the entire world. Now certain circles in the West are trying to hush up the Soviet initiative and pretend that nothing has happened. And that is no accident because, as the saying goes, they have had the ground cut from under their feet and their possible objections to the Soviet Union's peace initiatives have been removed in advance.

In what respects are the Soviet proposals in this sphere new and constructive? Why is any unbiased observer today saying that the USSR's bold steps have put a stop to the use of the verification [kontrol] problem to hinder Soviet-U.S. talks?

The essence is that the USSR has clearly stated that it is prepared to embark on any sensible verification [kontrol] measures if they really promote the limitation of the arms race. Verification [kontrol], as an element in interstate relations, objectively serves the sides' security interests. But verification [kontrol] is not an end in itself. Its main task is to ensure the solution of the problem of ending the arms race. As the CPSU Central Committee Political Report to the 27th Congress stressed, "disarmament without verification [kontrol] is impossible, but verification [kontrol] without disarmament is senseless." Hence the need for the amount and methods of verification [kontrol] to accord with the nature and scope of specific accords.

The experience of monitoring [proverka] the execution of existing strategic arms accords and other previously concluded treaties and agreements in the arms limitation sphere confirms the indisputable priority of national technical means of verification [kontrol]. The potential of these means is constantly increasing. At the same time the Soviet Union is flexible on this question. If necessary it is prepared for additional measures to be drawn up and adopted to promote the effectiveness of verification [kontrol] using national technical means. This refers first and foremsot to various types of notification and exchanges of quantitative information on arms. Other additional verification [kontrol] measures may be adopted up to and including on-site inspection [inspektsiya]. The only important thing is that these measures shold not serve as a tool for interfering in states' internal affairs and should not damage either side.

The USSR's position on verification [kontrol] is a realistic embodiment of the Soviet concept of creating a comprehensive international security sytem envisaging a strictly verifiable [kontroliruyemyy] reduction in the levels of states' military potentials to limits of sensible sufficiency. Specifically, it is a question of all avenues of arms limitation and reduction. Our ideal is a world with no weapons and no wars.

IN THE SPHERE OF IMPLEMENTING THE PROGRAM FOR THE ELIMINATION OF NUCLEARWEAPONS it is planned to develop special procedures for destroying nuclear munitions and for dismantling, reequipping, or destroying nuclear weapons delivery vehicles. Both the numbers of weapons to be eliminated would be agreed; verification [kontrol] of the arms being destroyed and restricted would be carried out by national technical means and through on-site inspections [inspektsiya]. Any other additional measures are possible.

Taking into account the fact that the USSR and the United States are experienced in developing procedures and practical actions for destroying nuclear means, the USSR sees no insuperable obstacle in the way of solving the problem of verifying [kontrol] the destruction of nuclear weapons and is prepared to agree to the most radical solutions of this problem on, of course, a mutual and equal basis.

IN THE SPHERE OF ENDING NUCLEAR WEAPONS TESTS the USSR has proposed a solution to the question of verification [kontrol] which satisfies the most carping U.S. skeptics. It is well known that for many years Washington has ignored the fact that the sides' existing national technical means make it possible to verify [kontrolirovat] nuclear explosions with high accuracy and reliability. And in this respct the United States is geographically more favcrably situated than the USSR. However, without checking it in practice, the U.S. side rejected the verification [kontrol] system envisaged by the 1974 treaty on underground nuclear explosions, the geology of test sites, and other measures.

For a long time Washington, hiding behind a "verification [kontrol] problem" which it had artifically created, refused to join the Soviet moratorium on all nuclear explosions. Now the USSR has stripped away that mask of hypocrisy. It has been directly stated in this regard: "Verification [kontrol] is no problem for us. If the United States ends all nuclear explosions on a reciprocal basis, the proper verification [kontrol] will be entirely ensured by national technical means, with the help of international procedures, and, if necessary, with on-site inspection [inspektsiya]." The Soviet Union has expressed readiness to make use of the well-known proposal from the leaders of the six states -- if acceptable to the other side too -- to provide assistance in monitoring [proverka] the end of the nuclear tests, including on-site inspection [inspektsiya]. Even the conservative British newspaper THE TIMES was forced to admit that, "The USSR's readiness to ensure on-site inspection [inspektsiya] has placed the United States and Britain in an extremely complicated position."

Needless to say, in order to fully solve the problem of nuclear tests a treaty is necessary which would prohibit nuclear weapons tests universally and forever. The USSR proposes drawing up such a treaty and resuming or starting relevant talks. From the very outset the resolution of these questions could be handled in parallel in order to reach a comprehensive agreement as quickly as possible.

IN THE SPHERE OF BANNING SPACE STRIKE ARMS the Soviet Union's principled position is well known. It consists in the renunciation by two sides -- the USSR and the United States -- of the creation, [sozdaniye] (including scientific research work), testing, and deployment of space strike arms.

Naturally, given Washington's consent, this decision would have to be verified [kontrolirovatsya] in a guaranteed way. The USSR favors the strictest verification [kontrol], including opening up the relevant laboratories to inspections [inspektsiya] on a reciprocal basis.

This step by the USSR demolishes the arguments of the supporters of the U.S. "star wars" program about the impossibility of verifying [prokontrolirovat] the ban on the creation [sozdaniye] of space strike means. The question can now be put this way: Either nuclear weapons are scrapped, strike arms in space are prevented, and the threat of war in general is eased -- with all these measures carried out under strict national and international verification [kontrol] -- or space strike means are deployed and there is an unchecked arms race in all avenues, an exacerbation of international tension as a consequence, and a growth in the threat to peace.

IN THE SPHERE OF BANNING AND TOTALLY ELIMINATING THE ACCUMULATION OF STOCKPILES OF CHEMICAL WEAPONS the USSR advocates the strictest and most reliable verification [kontrol] both of the elimination of chemical weapons and of the industrial base for their manufacture. Specifically we propose announcing in good time the location of enterprises producing chemical weapons and ending their production, starting to work out procedures for destroying the corresponding production base, and embarking on eliminating chemical weapons stockpiles soon after a convention comes into force.

At sites where the destruction of chemical weapons stockpiles is to take place it is planned to ensure stringent verification [kontrol] from the start of the destruction process to its completion by having international inspectors [inspektsiya] constantly in attendance or by combining systematic international inspections [proverka] with the use of measuring devices at these sites.

Similar verification [kontrol] is also planned at the site where permitted quantities of the banned chemicals will be produced for scientific, agricultural, medicinal, and other nonmilitary needs. International inspectors are planned to be in virtually constant attendance there.

An extensive choice of verification [kontrol] measures -- from the use of national technical means and the exchange of data to systematic and constant international inspections [inspektsiya], including monitoring [proverka] upon request -- is planned for all other types of activity under a future convention.

Thus, the USSR is prepared in practice for any verification [kontrol] measures that guarantee the security of the states participating in the destruction of chemical arsenals. Even the most carping opponent of the destruction of chemical weapons has been deprived of "agruments" aimed against the Soviet proposal.

THE SOCIALIST COUNTRIES ARE PROPOSING EFFECTIVE VERIFICATION [KONTROL] MEASURES LINKED WITH REDUCING AND FREEZING TROOPS AND ARMS IN CENTRAL EUROPE. These measures include an exchange of lists (rosters) of the Soviet and U.S. military units subject to reduction and withdrawal from the central European region indicating their actual designation, size, location, and the number of main types of arms held; reciprocal notification of the start and completion of practical measures to reduce Soviet and U.S. troops; and exchange on a reciprocal basis of figures on armed forces in the reduction region in terms of the parameters previously applied at the talks; reciprocal notification about all ground forces movements, the calling up of reservists, and military exercises by ground forces involving over 20,000 men; the holding of on-site inspections [proverka] following a justifiable request; the creation of an advisory committee; and the holding of bilateral or multilateral consultations between the interested parties.

In addition to the above measures the USSR also advocates the establishment of permanent centers for monitoring [kontrol] entry and exit to and from the reduction region of military contingents. In our opinion this would make it possible to reliably verify [kontrolirovat] the numbers of armed forces in the zone covered by the agreement on freezing troop numbers.

Thus, the initiatives put forward by the Soviet Union on verification [kontrol] measures are aimed at promoting the intensification of the talks that are under way and the removal of the artificial obstacles put in the way of the talks by the United States. Our proposals in this sphere graphically demonstrate the USSR's readiness for far-reaching verification [kontrol] measures aimed at getting the existing system of talks moving and ensuring the optimum effectiveness of the disarmament machinery. In submitting these proposals our country proceeds on the basis that each arms limitation and reduction measure and each step along the road of reducing the threat of war must bring the peoples greater security and confidence in the future, yet not to the detriment or at the expense of other states but by strengthening mutual security.

MORE COMMENTS ON U.S.-FRG SDI AGREEMENT

'Dressed in Peaceful Clothing'

OW311112 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1500 GMT 27 Mar 86

[From the "Novosti" newscast; commentary by Boris Parkhomenko]

[Text] It has been officially announced in Bonn that the FRG is ready to sign an agreement with the United States on participating in the so-called Strategic Defense Initiative, DIS. Our commentary:

[Parkhomenko] Hello, comrades: FRG Economics Minister Bangermann went to Washington to sign this agreement. In this lies the subtlety. Officially Bonn is rushing to stress that the agreement has an exclusively peaceful, scientific and economic character, and is not at all military. In that case, Defense Minister Woerner would have had to sign it. However, there is one more delicate detail which would alert even the most trusting: The fact is that, by agreement with the United States, most of the clauses of this agreement will not be made public. They will be made known to only a narrow circle of people. A question arises: Why are the cooperation plans of the industrial firms and scientific laboratories of the United States and the FRG made secret if they are, as it is being maintained, of a peaceful nature?

From the very inception of the SDI project, the question of participation by U.S. allies has been a topic for bitter debate and the object of mass protests. Realistically thinking politicians, scientists, and military specialists, including those in the West, have often spoken about the aggressive trend of this so-called initiative. The FRG is no exception.

The opposition representatives in the Bundestag -- the Social Democrats and the Greens -- are not the only ones to have censured their country's plan to participate in the "star wars" program. Many deputies from the ruling coalition have also voiced doubts as to the correctness of the Kohl government's decision. This is why supporters of SDI have had to hide the content of this unpopular agreement from FRG society. This is why it has been dressed in peaceful clothing.

Marches Protest Agreement

LD282219 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1900 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Viktor Levin commentary]

[Excerpts] In West Germany the traditional Easter peace marches have begun. According to reports from Hamburg, one of the main slogans under which peace supporters are marching is the demand for the United States to abandon plans to prepare "star wars." The linking of the FRG to the U.S. program of strategic defense research is also condemned. Here is our station commentary from Viktor Levin:

The participants in the Easter marches had not yet set off when the official spokesman of the FRG Government Ost reproached them for allegedly whipping up hysteria and sowing panic. No one is threatening peace, Ost assured. The Bonn government equally light-heartedly interprets its joining the U.S. "star wars" program as a contribution to peace. Repeating the stale ideas of U.S. official propaganda, Bonn affirms that the SDI is a completely defensive program and its implementation will serve the interests of consolidating peace. This logic, as you see, is the same as in Ost's affirmations, but its contradiction with facts and good sense is so obvious that not only antiwar movement activists, but also many politicians of parties represented in the Bundestag are critical of the SDI itself and the Federal Republic's joining it.

That the SDI has nothing in common with defense, that spreading the arms race to space threatens to increase the danger of nuclear war sharply and will certainly disrupt nuclear disarmament has been argued repeatedly. Peace supporters understand this. They understand it and firmly oppose SDI, and it is natural that these who take on the role of accomplices of the U.S. Administration are under fire from their criticism.

Europe, and all Europe, can and must make its contribution to the cause of strengthening peace. In this vital process history itself gives it a special role. Wide circles of public opinion -- and this is shown in particular by the Easter peace marches beginning in Europe -- recognize this responsibility and are quite determined to make a contribution to consolidating peace. But, you would certainly not say this of the governments of a number of countries. The Bonn government spokesman Ost, with his statement that no one is threatening peace also is trying to mask the indisputable fact that FRG policy, expressed in aiding and abetting U.S. militarist ambitions, is a factor not strengthening peace, but undermining it. This policy corresponds to the interests of certain circles in the United States but fundamentally contradicts the interests of the FRG itself and Europe as a whole.

REACTION TO SOVIET MEDITERRANEAN PROPOSALS CITED

[TASS roundup: "To Create a Barrier Against Nuclear War"]

[Excerpt] The Soviet Union advocates the curbing of the arms race, the creation of an all-embracing system of international security, the solution of problems of peace and development, and the blocking of the path of nuclear war; it calls for responsible policies from others and condemns the aggressive, provocative, and neoglobalist U.S. policy, which creates a threat to international peace and security. This idea is emphasized in the broad international response to the Soviet-Algerian talks and the speeches exchanged at the Kremlin dinner by M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee; and Chadli Bendjedid, president of the Democratic and Popular Republic of Algeria and general secretary of the National Liberation Front Party. The new Soviet peace initiatives have generated a broad response in the world.

Algiers -- The Soviet-Algerian talks and the Kremlin speeches have generated enormous interest in Algeria. The Soviet Union is convinced that there is broad scope for equal and mutually advantageous Soviet-Algerian cooperation, the newspaper EL MOUDJAHID writes. At a time when the international situation causes grave anxiety; when seats of tension are not only not disappearing but, on the contrary, increasing in number -- as shown by events in the Mediterranean -- it is important that the two countries whose viewpoints coincide on many issues should concentrate their efforts on achieving the goals of complete decolonialization, establishment of a new international economic order, disarmament, security, and the ensuring of peace throughout the world. Together with other Algerian press organs, this newspaper gives particular attention to the statement by the general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee that if the United States were to withdraw its fleet from the Mediterranean, the Soviet Union would simultaneously do the same, and that the USSR is ready to embark without any delay on talks concerning this issue. The Soviet Union advocates the transformation of the Mediterranean into a zone of stable peace and cooperation, EL MOUDJAHID points out. M.S. Gorbachev and C. Bendjedid resolutely condemned the U.S. aggression against Libya and reaffirmed their solidarity with the Libyan people.

The Soviet Union, another Algerian newspaper, AL-SHA'B, points out, attaches great importance to the stance of the Nonaligned Movement, in which Algeria occupies a leading position, and expects that it will play an increasingly important role in world politics. The similarity or coincidence of the USSR's and Algerian approaches to the solution of many international problems, the news agency APS emphasizes, stem logically from their friendship and mutual understanding. Algeria highly values the constructive Soviet initiatives in the disarmament sphere. According to the newspaper HORIZON-2000, C. Bendjedid's official friendly visit to the Soviet Union will give a new boost to mutually advantageous cooperation between the two countries. Algeria and the Soviet Union stand on similar positions, particularly on questions concerning the peoples' national liberation struggle. It is sufficient to recall the diverse assistance rendered by the USSR to Arab peoples opposing the imperialist U.S. policy.

Tripoli -- The USSR's stance, expressed in the speech by M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, has unmasked the rapacious aggressive policy of U.S. imperialism, which threatens peace all over the world, Libya's UN representative Rajab al-Zaruq declared. Washington is provocatively "flexing military muscles" throughout the world -- in the Mediterranean, in the Korean peninsula, and in the Indian Ocean. It threatens the peoples of all developing countries, particularly small ones, which follow an independent policy and wish to build their life according to their own views; the objective of this policy, as the Soviet leader's speech convincingly showed, is to impose global U.S. hegemony on the peoples.

The general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, the Libyan newspaper AL-FAJR AL-JADID writes, resolutely condemned the U.S. Administration for its aggressive action against the Libyan Jamahiriyah. He declared that the U.S. actions constitute a challenge to the entire world public and a trampling of universally recognized civilian relations. Facts testify that it is a question not of an incident that has occurred suddenly but of a kind of "punitive" operation planned and considered in advance.

Damascus -- It was delcared in Moscow, the Syrian news agency SANA reports, that the use of U.S. weapons against independent and sovereign Libya has exposed the imperialist and predatory face of U.S. neoglobalist policy. The Soviet Union expresses solidarity with the Libyan people who are upholding their sacred right to freedom and independence from imperialist encroachments.

Washington -- The Soviet leader, THE WASHINGTON POST notes, pointed out that the Soviet Union is forced to maintain its ships in the Mediterranean for one single reason -- the U.S. 6th Fleet, threatening the security of the USSR and its friends and allies, is in the immediate vicinity of Soviet borders. If the United States were to withdraw its fleet from there, the Soviet Union would simultaneously do the same. It is prepared to embark without any delay on talks concerning this issue. The Soviet leader, the U.S. news agency UPI reports, joined a new call for the withdrawal of U.S. and Soviet ships from the Mediterranean to previous Soviet proposals for the transformation of that sea into a zone of peace. The Soviet Union dispalyed support for Libya, THE NEW YORK TIMES points out. The Soviet leader's condemnation of the aggressive U.S. action against Libya followed Moscow's declaration that this action could lead to serious consequences reaching far beyond its borders.

REPORT ON 1985 SOVIET TRADE WITH CAPITALIST COUNTRIES

[Text] Moscow March 31 TASS -- The TASS economic news desk reports:

The total volume of trade turnover between the Soviet Union and industrially developed capitalist countries in 1985 exceeded 37.8 billion roubles. Soviet exports to these countries amounted to about 18.6 billion roubles and imports to 19.2 billion roubles. A TASS correspondent got these figures at the USSR Ministry of Foreign Trade.

The FRG remained the USSR's biggest trade partner from among Western countries: The volume of Soviet-West German trade last year was about 7.09 billion roubles (of this sum Soviet export was 3.99 billion roubles). The USSR's trade turnover with Finland was 4.99 billion roubles (Soviet exports - 2.3 billion roubles), with Italy - 3.79 billion roubles (Soviet exports - 2.47 billion roubles),with France -- 3.78 billion roubles (Soviet exports -- 2.17 billion roubles). The volume of the USSR's trade with Japan grew by 320.6 million roubles as compared to the previous year and exceeded 3.21 billion roubles in 1985 (Soviet export to the Japanese market - 928 million roubles).

Then comes the USSR's trade with the United States which amounted last year to more than 2.7 billion roubles. Soviet trade with Britain in 1985 amounted to 1.9 billion roubles (including Soviet export - 1.22 billion roubles), with Austria - 1.66 billion (exports - 804.6 million roubles), Belgium - 1.44 billion (858.1 million), Holland - 1.3 billion (986.6 million). The Soviet Union's trade exchange with Canada amounted to 966.8 million roubles.

Last year the Soviet Union's trade turnover with Switzerland was 927.9 million roubles (including Soviet export - 383.8 million roubles), with Sweden - 798.4 million roubles (492.1 million roubles), Greece - 728.2 million (593.9 million), Spain - 588.4 million (235 million). The volume of Soviet Australian trade went up by 42.5 million roubles as compared to the previous year and amounted to 545.8 million roubles.

The volume of the Soviet Union's trade turnover with West Berlin was 408.5 million roubles (including Soviet deliveries - 259.3 million roubles), with Denmark - 397.8 million roubles (270.8 million), Norway - 177.6 million (104.3 million), Iceland - 109.5 million (60.1 million), Portugal - 106.4 million (48.9 million). Soviet-New Zealand trade was worth 90.9 million roubles, a growth of 34.4 million roubles over the previous year.

The Soviet Union's trade and economic ties with other industrially developed capitalist countries also developed in 1985. The trade turnover with Ireland in 1985 amounted to 56.5 million roubles (Soviet exports - 25.5 million roubles), with Malta - 27.2 million roubles, Luxembourg - 19.3 million and with Lichtenstein - 7.9 million roubles.

NONALIGNED COUNTRIES CONDEMN U.S. AGGRESSION IN NICARAGUA

[Text] New York March 31 TASS -- The Coordination Bureau of the Non-Aligned countries has denounced the escalation of the aggression aimed against the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of Nicaragua and demanded that the United States immediately stop funding anti-Nicaraguan gangs.

At its session the bureau adopted a communique which expresses grave concern over the deterioration of the situation in the region caused by the unabated acts of aggression against Nicaragua, designed to overthrow its lawful government. The Non-Aligned countries demanded an immediate end to the campaign of provocations, threats and attacks on the people and government of that Republic and stressed that the United States should resume the bilateral talks with Nicaragua, which were broken off by it.

WEEKLY 'INTERNATIONAL OBSERVERS ROUNDTABLE'

LD301705 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1130 GMT 30 Mar 86

["International Observers Roundtable" program with Rudolf Georgiyevich Kolchanov, deputy editor in chief of TRUD; Aleksandr Aleksandrovich Lebedev, deputy editor in chief of MIROVAYA EKONOMIKA I MEZHDUNARODNYYE OTNOSHENIYA; and Aleksandr Vladimirovich Zholkver, politcal observer of central television and All-Union Radio]

[Text] [Zholkver] Hello, comrades. At the center of everyone's attention today is the address by Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev on the issue of halting nuclear tests. This is now one of the main issues of the day: upon its solution depends the halting of the nuclear arms race, upon its solution -- to a decisive extent -- depends the strengthening of peace on our planet. It seems to me that first of all we ought to remind ourselves, albeit briefly, of the history of the nuclear test-ban issue.

[Lebedev] Well if we are going to talk about the history of this issue, Aleksandr Vladimirovich, then of course this is an appropriate time for recalling it, for way back in 1946 the Soviet Union was the first to make a proposal for the banning of nuclear weapons for all time, for eliminating nuclear weapons, and for using nuclear energy exclusively for peaceful purposes. In general, this was a call to the United States. The consequences of the barbarous bombing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki were still fresh in the memories of people, bombing which was carried out by the United States. But evidently in the United States and elsewhere in the West at that time there were circles which thought that they would be able to preserve their atomic monopoly, if not forever then at any rate for a sufficiently lengthy period in order to implement the atomic blackmail diplomacy of sad repute. The consequences of the refusal of the United States and its allies to accept the Soviet Union's proposal are still felt to this day.

[Kolchanov] Aleksandr Aleksandrovich, I agree with you, the history of this issue, the history of the issue of the banning of nuclear tests, has indeed now become a part of history. I am not going to dwell in detail on all the stages in the history, if you will, of the Soviet Union's peaceful battle for nuclear disarmament: I am just going to remind our listeners of those stages which are perhaps the most important ones. On 5 August 1963, a treaty banning tests of nuclear weapons in three environments was signed in Moscow. It can be stated firmly that the conclusion of this treaty was first and foremost the consequence of the persistent and consistent efforts of the Soviet Union.

[Kholkver] And as Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev put it while speaking on Soviet television, this means that now we do not have to start from scratch.

[Kolchanov] Yes, definite experience has already been built up in the struggle for achieving an agreement of this kind, and definite experience has also been built up of a negative kind, so to speak...

[Zholkver, interrupting] Of resistance to banning nuclear weapons.

[Kolchanov] Yes, yes, that is precisely what I wanted to say. In 1977, on the initiative of the USSR, tripartite talks begin between the USSR, the United States, and Britain with the object of working out a treaty on the complete and universal banning of nuclear weapons tests. By the summer of 1980, it had proved possible in the main to coordinate the provisions of the treaty, a number of technical appendices, and the issues of monitoring. But in the West there was a sharp turn towards confrontation. In November 1980, the American side broke off these talks and in July 1982, President Reagan made a unilateral decision not to resume them at all.

[Zholkver] True, it has to be said that this did not stop our country in its desire to erect barriers in the path of nuclear arming. I remember, Rudolf Georgiyevich, that in that same year -- 1982 -- the Soviet Union took upon itself unilaterally at the session of the UN General Assembly an obligation not to be the first to use nuclear weapons.

[Zholkver] Well, unfortunately, it has not yet proved possible to implement our proposals either within the UN or on a bilateral or trilateral basis or at the Geneva disarmament conference; we continue to favor bilateral and trilateral and multilateral talks on the issue of ending nuclear tests. This was stressed by Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev. And we are also acting unilaterally.

[Kolchanov] Yes, and we are taking practical steps: There is the nuclear test moratorium about which everyone knows and which is widely supported in the world, which we introduced on the 40th anniversary of the bombing of Hiroshima, 6 August 1985. Then, as is known, we extended the moratorium until 31 March and after 31 March we are willing -- Mikhail Sergeyevich stressed this once again in his address -- not to resort to nuclear weapon tests if the Americans do the same.

[Lebedev] This is of course the manifestation of a very high sense of political responsibility which our leadership and our country is demonstrating once again in the critical period that mankind is currently living through. In the statement of 15 January, we proposed a stage-by-stage program of nuclear disarmament. One has to start somewhere. As Mikhail Sergeyevich said, the most realistic, the most simple step -- and also a radical step in this direction -- would be the reaching of an accord, primarily, of course, between the United States and the USSR but with other nuclear powers, too, on the immediate halting of all nuclear tests.

[Zholkver] And the Soviet Union also stressed its sense of responsibility and its goodwill with its proposal that there should be a meeting now, without delay, as Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev said, with the President of the United States either in Rome or in London...

[Kolchanov] Or in any European capital.

[Zholkver] Or in any European capital in order to start discussion of this very important issue and give instructions so that the appropriate documents might be able to be prepared. The Soviet Union, in fact, has stressed repeatedly that we favor a broad and effective system for monitoring a ban on nuclear tests. For a long time the issue of monitoring was an excuse for the West; it was allegedly difficult to monitor whether or not nuclear tests were being carried out. Well, scientists, including U.S. scientists, have confirmed that this can now be monitored by national means, but the Soviet Union is in favor of also carrying out monitoring tests on site in the event of its being necessary. The issue is not one of monitoring.

[Kolchanov] Of course.

[Zholkver] The issue is one of desire, of political will, of striving for the conclusion of a treaty of this kind. And, as Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev stressed when he appeared on television, the Soviet Union is once again appealing first and foremost to the U.S. Administration and giving one more chance -- if I can put it like that -- for thinking, for reflecting and ultimately for taking into consideration the demand of the world public. For of late it is not just the Soviet Union that has been coming out so persistently in favor of ending nuclear tests. Remember, for example, the appeal by the leaders of the six countries which signed the so-called Delhi declaration. They call insistently upon both the Soviet Union and the United States to end nuclear tests. I have seen a statement by the Indian Government, transmitted via the channels of the Indian Foreign Ministry. After the Soviet Union had responded positively to the second appeal by the six states, the U.S. Government dragged out its answer and the Indian Foreign Ministry then drew attention -- as this statement points out -- to the rapid response to this initiative by the Soviet leadership, unlike the U.S. leadership. True, the American leadership replied in its own special way, it replied with new nuclear explosions in Nevada.

[Lebedev] Yes, and this, of course, gives rise to a wholly justifiable feeling of indignation; this is naturally wholly understandable in our people, since our country, our government has in the recent period alone unilaterally made so many good-will gestures, so to speak, that it appeared one could wholly count upon at least some constructive reaction in response. This explosion in Nevada of course aroused great indignation among the world public and among the most diverse political forces. Furthermore, you know, the arrogance, demogoguery, and insincerity of the position of both the U.S. Administration and the leaders of a number of other countries which are its NATO partners, are right now standing out in particular relief.

[Zholkver] This is giving rise to worry and indignation in the United States itself. For instance, I have seen an appeal by a whole detachment, I would call it, of U.S. religious figures, an appeal to the President, calling upon him to follow the example and actions of the Soviet Union is halting nuclear tests and to do the same; they declare, literally, we call upon you to take the next essential step and call an immediate halt to nuclear weapons tests. This decision will not place the national security of the United States under threat, they declare. A moratorium on testing nuclear weapons is subject to verification. Well, if even such figures as United States religious leaders are addressing such messages to the President, one must assume that this sort of mood is very widespread in the United States. And this appeal to the President states frankly: We are at a cross-roads; one way leads us to the dead end of nuclear destruction, and the other to the future of a world without nuclear weapons.

[Kolchanov] The world is indignant, the world protests. The U.S. Administration's words are sharply at variance with its deeds, and this position, apparently, is not by chance.

[Zholkver] Yes, indeed. Behind this are indeed the interests of other circles, first and foremost the military-industrial circles in the United States, those who place their stake on the illusory search for military supremacy on earth and in space.

[Zholkver] Yes, for it was just the other day that the White House delivered what was more or less an ultimatum and demanded that Congress should urgently -- as it stated -- lift the ban on testing the ASAT antisatellite weapon. May I remind you that last year Congress refused to allocate funds for such tests to be carried out; this is a certain barrier to putting weapons into space. And now the White House has insisted that this should be replaced. Why? Well, because in the spite of the catastrophe over the Challenger spacecraft, and even though the reasons for this have still not been finally explained, plans have already been announced in the United States for 9 launches of the reusable spacecraft in shuttle program to be carried out to start with, then 12 and 18, starting February of next year. And the majority of these launches are to be openly military in nature.

[Lebedev] Yes, and at the same time, all this is accompanied by very dangerous statements on the part of quite responsible U.S. officials in connection with the fact that the realization of the programs you mentioned, Aleksandr Vladimirovich, will require the violation or repudiation, shall we say, of treaties between the USSR and United States which have already been concluded and which are currently being observed, in particular the SALT-II Treaty and the ABM Treaty. As Weinberger's aide, Perle, has stated, the United States will have to resort, as he put it, to an expanded interpretation, to an expanded interpretation, you see, of the ABM Treaty, for instance. But to call a spade a spade, that means violation of the treaty.

[Zholkver] Yes, an agreement has just been signed in Washington between the FRG Economics Minister Bangemann and the U.S. Defense Department head Weinberger, on the question of the FRG's participation in the American military space programs. Well, it is true, as one should point out, that a number of maneuvers were undertaken here. As I have said, it was signed on behalf of the West German side not by a military figure but by an economic one, so as to make all this out to be, so to speak, some sort of economic project, as they said. But there is no getting round it. Of course, economic interests are involved here, that is, the interests of the major West German military concerns. Bangemann himself names about 50 or 60 firms in the FRG...

[Kolchanov]... Mainly from Southern Bavaria, where the largest military industrial firms are situated.

[Zholkver] Yes, aviation, aerospace firms, these are interested in it. That is so. But it is clear that it is a purely military program which the FRG is now joining, and the ruling circles in Bonn indisputably will bear their share of responsibility for this, as the FRG Social Democrats are now saying publicly.

[Kolchanov] One would like to say that they do not know what they are doing in this case, but the trouble is that, in fact, they do know what they are doing.

For example, I remember a conversation I had in the Bundestag, where three deputies said: Well, we have a democratic country; we cannot ban our firms from participating if they want to. Meanwhile, however, the FRG Constitution itself contains an article that pronounces as unconstitutional and punishable those actions capable of violating the peoples' peaceful life. If they wanted to ban these firms from participating, they could, naturally, do so. That is purely an excuse. The fact is that the U.S. is exerting strong pressure. The American aspiration to make Western Europe a nuclear hostage is being realized; their aspiration to draw it into another nuclear space adventure also is being realized. But I agree, Aleksandr Aleksandrovich, the West Europeans themselves -- I mean, of course, the leaders of those countries can in no event (?evade) responsibility.

[Zholkver] Yes, this relates, incidentally, to Japan, as well. The latest Japanese delegation -- the third, if I am not mistaken -- is now leaving for the States to study this issue. But, what, properly speaking, is there to study? For Weinberger has frankly stated that the Japanese have more advanced technology than the United States in whole series of spheres, first and foremost microelectronics. The United States is aiming to make use of this in military space programs, and demanding that Japan join in with SDI. Here, again, I have seen a report that representatives of 18 Japanese corporations, major ones like Hitachi, Toshiba, Fujitsu, Nissan, are sending their representatives to the United States to discuss this matter. This is not just an economic matter. Of course, these companies may indeed acquire profits at some stage, but what a risk! What a responsibility for the destiny of Japan itself as well -- which has felt U.S. nuclear bombs for itself -- is being assumed by those prepared to sign the agreements on cooperation in "star wars."

But, it seems to me that we have, so to speak, gone out into space: if we come back to our sinful earth, there are more than enough examples of what this obstinate U.S. refusal to subscribe to our proposal for halting nuclear tests is connected with. It is a manifestation of that very same imperial policy of strength...

[Lebedev, interrupting] Arrogance...

[Zholkver, interrupting] Arrogance, an aspiration to force other peoples to function, to act, to have the social system which is to the contemporary U.S. leaders' liking.

And, strictly...

[Kolchanov, interrupting] And to punish all those who disagree with that. Although what right do they have to punish sovereign states, which might not have the same power as the United States but which have the same measure, the same completeness of sovereignty?

[Zholkver] Rudolf Georgiyevich, I believe you are thinking above all of Libya, if we are talking of recent events.

[Kolchanov] Of course, of course, it is a question of Libya.

[Lebedev] On the whole, if one now takes a look at this concept of neoglobalism, if one investigates it, it will become clear what aspect is new about it. The new thing, simply, is that every U.S. president deems it his duty to create his own doctrine and to propagandize it in very possible way. But, if we recall the Truman Doctrine, which, it seems, already showed its complete bankruptcy in the era in which it was espoused, is it not clear today, in the nuclear missile and space era, that a similar concept -- even if one calls it by this pseudo-new word, neoglobalism -- that it is unrealizable? It is equally unrealizable as the previous, considering the technical level of modern armaments and the threat of an arms race. Well, Rudolf Georgiyevich now spoke of Libya and about those aggressive actions against a sovereign state. And what about Nicaragua?

[Zholkver] But it must be noted that times have changed in the world, as well as the arrangement of forces, and it also must be noted that people see dangers more distinctly and come out against them more actively. For example, the true explosions of indignation aroused by the explosion in Nevada, the U.S. missile attacks on Libya, and the undeclared war against Nicaragua. Here are the events literally of the last few hours: The Arab League Council unanimously condemns the United States for its actions against Libya; an extraordinary session of the Nonaligned countries' Coordination Bureau harshly condemns the United States for its provocations in the Mediterranean; the Security Council discusses the issue, and Malta's representative declares that no threat of force can be permitted, especially when it is a question of actions by a UN member-state thousands of miles away from its shores. It is clear which country is in question. And so, the French newspaper LIBERATION concludes that Washington found itself isolated from a political point of view. Even the NATO council, at ambassador level, did not support the Pentagon's action. You know how the Italian Government fairly unambiguously condemned these acts. Shultz is presently in Rome and, strictly speaking, if one may say so, is squeezing the Italian Government on the issue, which is not at all easy. I am not even mentioning the mass anti-U.S. demonstrations that have rolled across Italy, especially in towns in the vicinity of U.S. bases. The bases were put on combat readiness in connection with these events. The U.S. Administration, LIBERATION notes, can only count on its faithfull ally, Israel, which indeed used this tense situation in the Mediterranean to unleash a new barbarian air raid on Palestinian refugee camps and new provocations in southern Lebanon. These actions, incidentally, just as the actions against Nicaragua, found the widest condemnation everywhere, including, as I have already said, among the closest U.S. allies in NATO.

[Lebedev] Well, Aleksandr Vladimirovich, you have just listed a whole chain of events. Rudolf Georgiyevich for his part has noted all these regional conflicts and tensions in various parts of the world and so on, and all this against the background of a clearly growing military confrontation between the principal powers, in the military-technological plane, so to speak. Clearly we are now already talking, as described in the 27th congress Political Report, not of equal security but of equal danger precisely founded upon the established military-strategic equilibrium. But, very soon, and this was emphasized at the congress, this equal danger may become insufficient as, so to speak, a deterrent factor. When you hear all this, read it, the question inevitably arises: Is there some realistic, constructive, practical way out of this most complicated international situation? Along what paths is it possible to seek this way out and get out of blind alleys?

[Kolchanov] The 27th congress put forth a program for the total eliminating of mass-destruction weapons by the end of this century and adopted the foundations for an all-embracing system of international security. It is a document of enormous gravity, having an enormous effect upon antiwar movements, and enjoying the widest support of millions of people in every region of our planet. I would just like to recall the military part of this foundation for an all-embracing system of international security. It includes renouncement by the nuclear powers of warring against each other or against third states in both the nuclear and conventional spheres. It proceeds from the necessity to prevent an arms race in space; to halt all nuclear weapons tests, and to completely eliminate them; to ban and destroy chemical weapons; to renounce other means of mass destruction; and so on. Indeed an all-embracing system of all-embracing security.

[Zholkver] And now, in conclusion, I will cite what Mikhail Sergeyevich again emphasized while speaking on Soviet television: We are not going to depart from the course of preserving and strengthening peace, reaffirmed by the 27th CPSU Congress.

U.S. DECISION ON STINGER MISSILES REPORTED, VIEWED

Television Report

OW010214 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1115 GMT 31 Mar 86

[From "The World Today" program presented by Bronislav Myakota]

[Text] An alarming report has been received from Washington today. The United States, using CIA channels, has begun secret shipment of the most modern U.S. weapons -- Stinger missiles -- to antigovernment terrorist gangs in Angola. THE WASHINGTON POST says the decision to begin shipment of Stinger missiles was very actively urged by Clair, chief of the department for CIA secret operations. The director of the agency of spies and subversion, Casey -- during his visit to Africa at a secret meeting with Savimbi, leader of the National Union for the Total Liberation of Angola [UNITA] dissident group and paid CIA agent -- stated that effective weapons for his bandits are already on the way. The decision to increase military aid to the gangs not only in Angola, but also in Afghanistan, was adopted by the White House earlier in the month on the advice of a special interdepartmental group planning and coordinating all CIA secret operations.

This group -- which has been given the unofficial designation the 208 Committee, the number of the room where its sessions are held -- includes high officials of the State Department, the CIA, the Pentagon, and the National Security Council. It is precisely this group that has come to the conclusion that antigovernment groups in Angola and Afghanistan need more deadly armaments.

THE WASHINGTON POST notes that these arms shipments will lead to increased CIA intervention in the internal affairs of developing states.

U.S. Waging 'War by Proxy'

LD311032 Moscow TASS in English 1017 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] Washington March 31 TASS -- The U.S. Administration is intensifying its policy of breeding regional conflicts and blocking peaceful settlement in the "trouble spots" of the world, notably in Central America, southern Africa, the Middle East and Asia.

According to the NBC television company, the administration has decided without much publicity to begin shipments of modern weapons to Afghan counter-revolutionaries and anti-government groups in Angola. The case in point is the delivery of Stinger anti-aircraft missiles and other newest weapon systems.

A similar report appeared in THE WASHINGTON POST. Quoting informed sources in the administration, the paper wrote that the White House has taken the decision to this effect earlier in March on the recommendation of a special inter-departmental group planning and coordinating "covert operations" of the CIA.

The group, known as the "208 Committee" (from the number of the office where it meets), includes high-ranking officials of the U.S. Department of State, the CIA, the Pentagon and the National Security Council.

The White House describes bandits whom it lavishly supplies with weapons by a lofty-sounding word -- "freedom-fighters". This word-juggling act, however, cannot conceal the fact that in reality Washington befriends hardened criminals, professional hangmen and terrorists.

These are Afghan counter-revolutionaries who massacre peaceful civilians, teachers and medical doctors. These are former Somozists who had "ensured the interests" of American monoplies in Nicaragua for 40 years by means of bloody terror, and are now trying to topple the Sandinista government with CIA's assistance, to put an end to revolutionary transformations in that country. These are henchmen of the South African racists for UNITA who stage armed raids on Angola. These are what remained of the Pol Pot horde of pathological killers.

Staking on these outcasts of history, the United States reveals in full view of the world its retrograde, anti-popular foreign policy course which is doomed to failure because it is retrograde and anti-popular.

Observers point out that the decision on new arms deliveries to Afghan counterrevolutionaries was taken following the recent trip to Pakistan of the U.S. Attorney General Edwin Meese who had visited there counterrevolutionaries' camps and had promised to further render lavish assistance to them.

The same as before, new armaments will be delivered to the counterrevolutionaries through the territory of Pakistan (of which Washington is most outspoken) that has been turned by Washington into a base of the undeclared war against the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan. Washington obviously intends to wage the war by proxy. The Ziaul Haq regime should realize into what dangerous ventures Pakistan's overseas "patrons" are trying to draw that country, for the results of it could be disastrous.

The more defiant is the behaviour of the U.S. in the international area -- the more hypocritical is the rhetoric with which it tries to camouflage its policy of confrontation.

Thus, the U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz who toured a number of European country spoke out in favour of the "revival of the progress" achieved in the period preceding the Geneva summit, of a calm and purposeful discussion of problems. The first impression is that there is every reason to welcome this statement.

However, on the eve of his trip, at a meeting with leaders of ultra-right-wing organizations the same Shultz announced new massive arms deliveries to all sorts of gangs in various parts of the world with the help of which the CIA was trying to overthrow the legitimate governments which pursue a policy not suitable to Washington. It is clear to everybody that the policy of "neoglobalism", in other words the export of counterrevolution, is incompatible with the spirit of Geneva.

If Washington really seeks the lessening of international tension and the improvement of the world climate, it should stop looking for a cover-up for its policy which has ended in failure but still is dangerous to the cause of peace, assess the situation in the world soberly and pragmatically and give up the policy of confrontation and the kindling of conflicts.

CIA HEAD 'MAIN CHAMPION' OF U.S. NEOGLOBALISM

[Text] Washington March 31 TASS -- The "knights of cloak and dagger" from the U.S. CIA and personally its head William Casey are the main champions of President Reagan's doctrine of neoglobalism which envisages the so-called "right" of Washington to interfere in the internal affairs of developing countries and to place in power pro-American regimes there.

This follows from an article published by WASHINGTON POST today. It shows that Casey has turned the CIA into an obedient tool of the White House ready to develop and "justify" any adventuristic ideas of leaders of the administration.

According to the newspaper, Casey "angrily rejected CIA analyses that did not mesh with the anti-Soviet pronouncements of White House policy-makers and speech writers." The CIA director sees the "hand of Moscow" everywhere and incessantly urges to "combat communism."

WASHINGTON POST writes that "in 1982 Casey ordered an intelligence review of the African Continent. When the rough draft came to his desk, it... concentrated on the indigenous problems of agriculture, education, poverty and development. Casey was reportedly incensed at the draft and replaced the analyst with another senior official" whose anti-Soviet views were well-known. This resulted in the drawing up of the report which concentrated mainly on the "hand of Moscow" and ignored almost totally the regional problems of the continent.

The CIA director reportedly loves covert operations. Those who do not agree with the idea of the usefulness of large-scale secret operations for the U.S. are simply removed by him from the management. His latest victim is John McMahon, a high-ranking CIA officer.

The newspaper describes Casey as one of the anti-Soviet "activists" of the top echelon of the administration and points out that the influence of the CIA director on the shaping of the U.S. foreign policy is growing. WASHINGTON POST explains it largely by his close relationship with the President and the virtually identical outlook the two men share on what they describe as the "global Soviet threat."

OREKHOV VIEWS WEINBERGER TRIP TO FAR EAST

LD291600 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 1208 GMT 29 Mar 86

[Text] Washington, 29 Mar (TASS) -- Nikolay Orekhov reports: C. Weinberger, U.S. defense secretary, leaves on 31 March for a 2-week trip to Asian and Pacific countries, visiting South Korea, Japan, the Philippines, Thailand, and Australia.

In Seoul the Pentagon chief will head the U.S. delegation at the annual, 18th to date, U.S.-South Korean consultative meeting on security matters, which will, as usual, be devoted to discussion of questions connected with the presence on South Korea's territory of the many thousands of U.S. troops. This year however the U.S. defense secretary also intends to use the meeting to clarify the "safety margins" of the puppet regime of Chon Tu-hwan which is now coming up against a marked awakening of the democratic opposition inside the country, which is causing unconcealed disquiet within the Washington administration.

Weinberger's visit to Japan, which Washington is trying more and more actively to draw into its militarist preparations in the Far East, will begin with a visit to the air base of Misawa on the island of Hokkaido where American F-16 fighter bombers, capable of carrying nuclear weapons, are based. It is also planned for the Pentagon chief to attend exercises of Japanese "Self-Defense Forces." But Weinberger, as observers consider, will concentrate his attention on efforts to attract Japan into the implementation of Washington's "Strategic Defense Initiative" which is aimed at the militarization of space.

During talks in Manila, the head of the U.S. military department plans to promise the new government of the Philippines a significant expansion of American military and economic assistance in exchange for keeping Subic Bay and Clark Air Base, the largest U.S. military bases abroad.

In the words of the American press, the main aim of Weinberger's visit to Bangkok is to encourage "Thailand's efforts to modernize its defense potential."

Great significance is being paid in Washington to Weinberger's visit to Canberra where he will try to enlist Australia's support for the continuing U.S. conflict with New Zealand that was caused by its government banning the entry of American ships with nuclear weapons on board into New Zealand's ports.

BUSH CALLS FOR CONTINUED U.S. NAVAL BUILDUP

[Text] New York, March 31 TASS -- TASS correspondent Vladislav Orlov reporting.

U.S. Vice-President George Bush called for a further buildup of the strike capability of the U.S. Navy. He made remarks at a ship-building yard in Maine during the launching of a new guided missile frigate, the Kaufman, which is the 567th vessel in the armada of U.S. warships showing the flag around the world.

Washington is known to have made naval buildup and modernization one of the main elements of the notorious program for "America's re-armament". The aim is to increase the number of naval ships to 600.

The vice-president actually confirmed the intention of the White House to use naval power as an instrument for global expansion and imperialist diktat. His remarks were clearly congruous with the recent call of the U.S President for peace "from strength". Bush emphasized that the interests of "peace and freedom" demanded that the United States has the world's most powerful navy.

Bush cynically described numerous punitive expeditions of U.S. warships to the coasts of other nations within the framework of its notorious "gunboat diplomacy" as "peace-keeping missions" throughout the 20th century. At the same time he referred to the piratic act staged by the 6th U.S. Fleet against Libya as something the U.S. took pride in.

Ordinary Americans responded to the speech of the U.S. vice-president by staging a demonstration in the yard as Bush was making his remarks. The demonstrators demanded an end to the interventionist policy of the White House.

KOLESNICHENKO ASSESSES U.S. FOREIGN POLICY

PM280933 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 27 Mar 86 First Edition p 4

[Article by T. Kolesnichenko: "In the Spider's Web of Stereotypes"]

[Text] The West German magazine STERN, noting the grave failures of U.S. foreign policy, remarked recently: "But all this does not deprive America of its complacency which under Ronald Reagan has assumed exaggerated proportions. Anything can happen but America is proud of itself. It can no longer feel the alienation growing between it and the rest of the world...The errors, tragedies, even catastrophes, have no place in his cliche-ridden thinking." If you consider that these opinions are being expressed not just anywhere but in a country firmly attached to Washington's policy, you can imagine the pitch of criticism which its adventurist course is generating throughout the world.

Nonetheless the U.S. Administration continues stubbornly to steer its course. One act of provocation follows another. The most recent have been the nuclear explosion in Nevada and the act of piracy perpetrated 15,000 km from U.S. territory off Libyan shores. Why does Washington react with imperial arrogance to the world public's protests and why is it openly setting about aggravating the international situation?

There are external and domestic reasons for this. Let us begin with the fact that never before in U.S. history has an administration so thickly stuffed with anticommunist "ideologists" threatening the course of historical development stood at the helm of power. Some of these "ideologists," moving from the Californian capital to Washington and taking Cabinet posts, are continuing to look on the world from the same frankly provincial level. And these latter-day crusaders see Satan's "evil empire" which has stuck in the throat of "God-chosen" America. That is why everything which issues from the Soviet Union, including its peace initiatives, allegedly comes from the Evil One, is advantageous only to the USSR, and contradicts U.S. interests.

During its term in office the present administration has not changed this thinking stereotype, despite political experience. Interviewing the U.S. President recently, NBC television asked whether he still adheres to the opinion he voiced several years ago to the effect that the Soviet Union is the "evil empire" representing the gravest threat to peace. He replied: "I have tried tactically to calm down because we are now trying to conduct talks and achieve some kind of agreements."

So are talks tactics? And does Washington have no intention of "calming down" strategically with the Soviet Union, on hiking the arms race and creating dangerous regional conflicts? And in the chase after an unrealizable dream again trying to "roll back communism" and wear down the USSR's economy and undermine its political system? Here what is surprising is not the ideological blindness of the Washington figures who have resolved to reverse the wheel of history (that is the very essence of shameless anticommunism) but the methods which they use again and again. For instance, take the strong-arm pressure, the "showing of the flag" -- after all this has already happened frequently. It has happened and has ended ignominiously. Nonetheless Washington is again resorting to "muscle-flexing." The nuclear explosion in Nevada, the provocative entry of Warships into our territorial waters, and, finally, the act of tyranny against the Soviet UN mission -- this is for the sake of a "deterrent," and all these examples are some kind of "ballons d'essai." And suddenly the Russians will take fright and given in? That, it turns out, is the aim of the saber-rattling off Libyan shores.

In a report from the White House a CBS correspondent announced that one of the main aims of such operations in the Gulf of Sidra, the administration had told him, was "to demonstrate American might in order to impress (?!) the USSR."

It does of course make an impression. On the USSR and the whole world. But the opposite impression to the one on which Washington was counting. It is not fear, but a wave of anger and indignation which is mounting on the planet. The peoples unanimously denounce Washington's adventurist course and the "right" it has arrogated to interfere shamelessly in other people's affairs.

And here lies one more most substantial blunder on the part of the Washington leadership. By its militarist blather and nuclear explosions it would like to suppress the peaceful Soviet initiatives and divert world public attention from specific proposals on the most urgent problem of the present day -- the abolition of nuclear weapons -- which the Soviet Union has played on the conference table.

The tactics are most primitive but there is a big stake on them: What disarmament can there be, it is being said, when Soviet-U.S. relations are being aggravated and the "spirit of Geneva" is evaporating like dew in the dawn? Here, it is claimed, we must think not of disarmament but rather of arms upgrading. And in general until America creates an impenetrable space shield over its head there is no point in even talking of abolishing nuclear weapons. In their own interests the U.S. allies must rally as one under the SDI banner. And meanwhile they must engage in regional conflicts (of course, it is not the United States which is creating them) which place the world on the brink of war and aggravate Soviet-U.S. relations.

Here is the apology for logic which Washington follows. But in vain. Atlantic solidarity is cracking. Far from all the U.S. allies are now obediently swallowing the propaganda concoction prepared in Washington's kitchen. Some are openly turning their noses up at it. Others are maneuvering in an attempt to contrive not to be drawn into a dangerous and hopeless business. As a result, as THE PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER recently noted, having in mind the mounting support for the Soviet peace offensive, Washington "is now encountering a very grave political challenge from the USSR."

It must be said that the administration's present "global" policy is defined not least by strictly internal "domestic" considerations. However, the U.S. political phenomenon is manifested precisely in the fact that the ruling elite (more than anywhere in the capitalist world, where it is in genral an inherent characteristic) is guided above all not by general national interests but purely selfish interests which are only to its own advantage. Washington politicians sometimes prefer to gain a few thousand or even hundred notes from their fellow citizens (mostly right-wing or duped by propaganda) while losing the support of the public opinion of an entire allied state. In the White House and on Capitol Hill this is called "being a pragmatist." But in the corridors it is said of such people that they are "prepared to cut off their nose to spite their face." In other words, they are prepared to embark on any adventures and illegal steps and finally jeopardize their country's security as long as they achieve power.

In that sense the present administration has broken all records. Its propaganda efforts have created a series of simple stereotypes in which, it must be said, quite a lot of Americans believe. Here are just a few of them: Inasmuch as the Soviet Union threatens America, the latter must be strong and arm itself. Any talks must be conducted from a position of strength. If we do not continue to arm ourselves, there will be no talks.

Nonsense, you say? Of course, but imagine the American "boondocks" where the supreme cultural achievement is the television set and the public assembly place is the church. This selfsame nonsense in a "patriotic" packaging is repeated there day after day from the pulpit and the screen. Movies about a "Soviet invasion" of the United States are shown regularly there. The result is that the continuation of the nuclear explosion in Nevada allegedly brings an agreement on ending them closer.

Another stereotype: America is losing its position in the world arena, it is being crowded out by Communism. Communism must be stopped or the United States will become a second-rate power and lose world prestige. And since that is so, it is perfectly justifiable for Washington to send its emissaries to all corners of the planet (as though they were various states of its own country) to decide on the spot how to hold elections, who should be in power and who should not, in brief, to interfere cynically in other people's affairs.

The present shameless U.S. action against Libya also has domestic propaganda backup. It has long been dinned into Americans that Libya is a source of international terrorism although, as is well known, these "laurels" go to Washington. But a stereotype is a stereotype. And official propaganda (as in the case of Grenada) is trumpeting: "Look what a winner the President is, we have scored off the terrorists." In addition "there are no or almost no American victims everything has been gotten "cheaply." [quotemarks as published] How can we fail to rally round such an administration and give the Republicans our votes at the congressional elections this November. And (this with a view to the long term) how can we fail to support the candidate of this "firm and resolute" party in the presidential elections in 1988.

And already some Democrats are worrying about how to associcte themselves with an advantageous situation in order to get their piece and are approving the administration's "bold step" (?!)

And the administration is losing no time. It is trying everywhere to drawn all its blunders in the previous years of its rule in a "patriotic" euphoria. And there are many of these blunders: Poverty has risen, the federal budget deficit is snowballing, the dollar exchange rate is dropping, presenting the threat of the specter of inflation, and much else. But surely we should not be thinking about that, propaganda declares, now that the stars and stripes are off Libyan shores. This is all sad, but a fact. A great country, a country of fine workers, yet official propaganda is trying to reduce the mass consciousness stultified by the hypnosis of stereotypes, to the level of the ideas of a child playing with a toy pistol.

Of course, not everyone is hypnotized. Millions of Americans are realizing increasingly clearly where the administration's cowboy policy may lead the world and their own country. The truth about the Soviet Union is blazing a trail. The Soviet peace proposals are meeting with a profound response in the United States. That is why the President will have to "calm down," if only outwardly. That is why the White House has been compelled, if only verbally, to confirm its adherences to the "spirit of Geneva" and its readiness to improve Soviet-U.S. relations. An increasing number of Americans are realizing that today the U.S. military is sinking Libyan ships in the Gulf of Sidra and tomorrow it may sink the common ship containing all mankind.

Yes, it is time that Washington got out of the spider's web of decayed stereotypes and time that it finally calmed down. And not for "tactical" considerations but in the long term and in earnest.

U.S. NICARAGUA STANCE LINKED TO VIETNAM POLICY

LD312031 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1800 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Commentary by Vyacheslav Lavrentyev]

[Text] The Reagan administration's Central American policy has recently been compared increasingly with President Johnson's policy in Southeast Asia in the mid-1960s. At that time, Washington's attempt to obstruct the victory of the national patriotic forces in Vietnam and its aspiration at any cost to save the Saigon puppet regime led to the gradual involvement of the United States in a war which is now described in the United States as nothing other than an adventure.

Now the Reagan administration is involving the country in a similar adventure in Central America by attempting to destroy the revolutionary government of Nicaragua and to establish the systems which existed there during the time of its protege Somoza. It is true that the dictator himself is no longer alive, but the White House places its stakes on the members of his National Guard who are known as the contras.

Comrades, you know that the Vietnam war gave rise to a long period of shock among Americans not just because of the defeat and the senselessness of the casualties that were sustained. The country was stunned and indignant at how the authorities abused public opinion over the course of many years, at their lies, cunningly presenting the interests of the grasping military concerns as the interests of the whole nation. In brief, it was from beginning to end an adventure which was worked out and implemented by the White House, the CIA, and the Pentagon. The comparison between Vietnam and Nicaragua inevitably arises. As at that time, the whole policy of the present administration concerning Nicaragua is densely mingled with disinformation and distortion of facts. This is what Richard Cohen, observer for THE WASHINGTON POST newspaper, writes about this: The U.S. Administration has made accusations against the Sandinist government that Brazilian extremists are being trained in Nicaragua, that Nicaragua is being transformed into an anti-Semitic state, and that the Nicaraguan leaders are trading all they can in drugs. Not one of these assertions, the American journalist stresses, was confirmed after painstaking checking. However, the lies helped the U.S. Administration gain the U.S. Senate's agreement to allocate $100 million in aid to the Nicaraguan contras. Moreover, units of the American regular Army are now being transferred to Honduras which could lead to the U.S. troops' direct invasion of Nicaragua.

Comrades, you know how the war in Vietnam ended for the United States. Let me be bold enough to state that if the U.S. military unleashes aggression against the Nicaraguan people, its result will the just as ignominious.

U.S. SECRETLY SENDS TROOPS TO HONDURAS

LD292030 Moscow TASS in English 1900 GMT 29 Mar 86

[Text] San Francisco March 29 TASS -- The sending of U.S. Army units to Honduras from Fort-Ord military base in the north of California started in an atmosphere of top secrecy, the California KVTU television company reported. The report stresses that representatives of the army command refused to specify the aims of that operation. It is pointed out in the circles of local observers that the dispatch of the troops to Honduras is taking place against the background of a frenzied anti-Nicaraguan campaign launched in the USA on the initiative of the U.S. Administration, which does not conceal its plans to overthrow the Sandinist government by means of crude force.

USSR-PRC FOREIGN MINISTRY TALKS FOCUS ON DISARMAMENT

LD310959 Moscow TASS in English 0936 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing, March 31 TASS -- Soviet-Chinese consultations have been held at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of China on the items of the agenda of the session of the U.N. General Assembly. Taking part in the consultations from the Soviet side was Igor Rogachev, member of the Collegium of the USSR Ministry of Foreign Affairs, and from the Chinese side -- Li Daoyu, head of a department of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of China. During the consultations held in a businesslike atmosphere much attention was devoted to the disarmament problem.

Participants in the consultations were received by the Deputy Foreign Minister of China Qian Qichen.

PRC'S ZHAO ZIYANG SPEAKS ON DISARMAMENT

LD282004 Moscow TASS in English 1835 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing March 28 TASS -- A meeting was held here on the occasion of the International Year of Peace proclaimed by the United Nations Organization. The Premier of the PRC State Council Zhao Ziyang addressed it and said that China needs peace because it is only in conditions of peaceful development that the country can achieve flourishing, the aims of socialist modernisation requiring the efforts of several generations. The PRC's stand on the question of peace and its efforts in the interests of peace, Zhao Ziyang noted, exert and will exert a general impact on a world scale. "Being aware of this important mission", he said, "China is prepared to undertake the necessary efforts and make a contribution to the cause of peace and stability".

Having emphasised that China opposes the arms race, the premier of the State Council declared that in future the PRC will not stage nuclear tests in the atmosphere.

Zhao Ziyang outlined China's position on the problem of disarmament. It includes, in particular, the prohibition and total liquidation of nuclear arms as the ultimate aim; the proposal to reduce substantially all types of nuclear arms of the United States and the USSR because this, according to Zhao Ziyang, would create conditions for all nuclear states to hold an international conference with the aim of discussing further measures of nuclear disarmament; the commitment by all nuclear states not to be the first to use nuclear arms and the conclusion on this basis of an international convention banning their use; the use of outer space exclusively for peaceful purposes and the conclusion of an international agreement banning space arms; the total prohibition and destruction of chemical weapons; the implementation of the necessary verification measures.

But at the same time the Chinese leaders continue to base their approach to the problems of war and peace on the concept of the equal responsibility of the "two super powers", that is the United States and the USSR, for the existence of international tension and the war danger. Thus, in his report at a session of the National People's Congress in Beijing Zhao Ziyang stated: "The arms race and the struggle for regions between the two superpowers poses the main threat to peace in the whole world and the security of various countries".

JAPANESE OFFICIALS SAY MOSCOW AGREES TO FISHERY TALKS

OW010137 Tokyo KYODO in English 0120 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Excerpt] Moscow, March 31 KYODO -- The Soviet Union Monday agreed to hold ministerial talks with Japan to break the deadlock in negotiations to set fishing conditions and catch quotas in each other's 200 mile-economic zones, Japanese officials said.

The agreement came when Japanese Ambassador to Moscow Yasue Katori handed over a letter from Foreign Minister Shintaro Abe informing the Soviets of a Japanese decision to send Tsutomu Hata, minister of agriculture, forestry and fisheries, to Moscow in a bid to resolve the matter.

A Soviet Foreign Ministry official said the country will issue a formal acceptance of Hata's visit in a few days.

DPRK PARLIAMENTARIANS BRIEFED BY OFFICIALS

[TASS report under general heading "Interparliamentary Ties": "USSR-DPRK"]

[Text] A delegation of the DPRK Supreme People's Assembly headed by Yang Hyong-sop, chairman of the Standing Committee of the Assembly, arrived in Moscow 26 March on an official friendly visit at the invitation of the USSR Supreme Soviet.

The delegation was met at the airport by A.E. Voss, chairman of the USSR Supreme Soviet Soviet of Nationalities; A.Ya Rybakov, USSR Supreme Soviet deputy; V.G. Vysotin, chief of the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium International Relations Department; other officials; and DPRK ambassador to the USSR Kwon Hui-kyong.

A friendly conversation took place on the same day. The Korean comrades were briefed on progress in the fulfillment of the 27th CPSU Congress decisions, which are aimed at the acceleration of the country's socioeconomic development. It was noted with satisfaction that the constantly strengthening parliamentary contacts between the two countries make a weighty contribution to the strengthening of USSR-DPRK relations and accord with the interests of peoples in both states, as well as the cause of peace and international security.

The delegation's members headed by Yang Hyong-sop visited the V.I. Lenin Mausoleum on 27 March and laid a wreath. A wreath was also laid at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier by the Kremlin Wall.

DPRK'S KIM IL-SONG MEETS SFRY'S VLAJKOVIC

LD301442 Moscow TASS in English 1408 GMT 30 Mar 86

[Text] Pyongyang March 30 TASS -- The peace-minded forces of the world should foil the aggressive intrigues by U.S. imperialism aimed at building up armaments and militarizing outer space, and work more persistently for setting up nuclear weapon free zones in various parts of the globe, Kim Il-song, general secretary of the Workers' Party of Korea and president of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, said at a meeting with Radovan Vlajkovic, president of the collective presidency of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, now on an official friendly visit here.

Kim Il-song stressed that the Korean people came up with peace initiatives for improving the situation in the Far Eastern region, normalizing relations between the North and South of the Korean Peninsula and unifying Korea by peaceful means. All these proposals, however, ran up against counteraction on the part of the United States and the Seoul regime, which carry on the policy of confrontation. This is borne out by the recent "Team Spirit-86" military maneouvres.

Vlajkovic drew attention to the importance for the cause of peace of the Soviet-U.S. arms limitation talks and urged the peoples of all countries to pool their efforts in the struggle for peace all over the world and the liquidation of the stockpiled weapons arsenals. He stated Yugoslavia's full support for the proposals of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea aimed at ensuring peace in Korea and achieving its peaceful unification without outside interference.

MONGOLIAN ARMY DAY MARKED IN MOSCOW, ULAANBAATAR

[Unattributed and TASS reports: "In Honor of the Anniversary"]

[Text] [Unattributed report] The Mongolian People's Army, which was born in the flames of revolutionary struggle, has traveled a glorious combat path in cooperation with the Soviet Armed Forces. Its servicemen, rallied closely around the MPRP, are greeting their holiday with new successes in combat and political training. This was stated at the ceremonial meeting of representatives of the capital's public and servicemen of the Moscow garrison to mark the 65th anniversary of the Mongolian People's Army. It was held on 17 March at the M.V. Frunze Central House of the Soviet Army in Moscow.

On the presidium were leaders of a number of ministries and departments, generals, admirals, and officers of the Soviet Armed Forces, veterans of the Great Patriotic War, and also Ts. Gurbadam, Mongolian ambassador to the USSR.

In the report by Army General V.I. Govorov, USSR deputy defense minister, it was noted that the Mongolian People's Army is a modern army of the socialist type. It makes a fitting contribution to the cause of strengthening the defense might of the fraternal socialist countries and fulfills with honor the historical mission of defending the interests of peace and socialism on the eastern borders of the socialist community.

The meeting was addressed by Major General (R. Gunchin-Ish), Army and Air Force attache to the Mongolian Embassy in the USSR.

On the same day, Maj Gen (R. Gunchin-Ish), Army and Air Force attache to the Mongolian Embassy in the USSR, held a reception to mark the 65th anniversary of the Mongolian People's Army.

The reception was attended by Army General YE.F. Ivanovskiy and Army Gen V.L. Govorov, USSR deputy defense ministers; Admiral A.I. Sorokin, first deputy chief of the Soviet Army and Navy Main Political Directorate; and generals, admirals, and officers of the Soviet Armed Forces.

The guests included Army, Navy, and Air Force attaches to the embassies of a number of foreign states in the Soviet Union.

Ts. Gurbadam, Mongolian ambassador to the USSR, was present.

[TASS report] Ulaanbaatar, 17 Mar -- A ceremonial meeting of Mongolian People's Army servicemen and the capital's public has been held here to mark the 65th anniversary of the Mongolian People's Army. It was attended by J. Batmonh, general secretary of the MPRP Central Committee and chairman of the Mongolian People's Great Hural Presidium, and other party and state leaders of the Republic, as well as a Soviet military delegation headed by Army General I.M. Tretyak which is here for the celebrations.

The 27th CPSU Congress, Mongolian Defense Minister Colonel General J. Yondon stressed in his report, convincingly confirmed the indissoluble link between socialism and peace. It elaborated the concept of the creation of an all-embracing system of international security, whose implementation requires a steady struggle against the nuclear threat. Mongolian People's Army servicemen will continue to increase vigilance and strengthen their close alliance with the fraternal armies of the other socialist countries.

On the same day J. Batmonh received the Soviet military delegation.

A wreath-laying ceremony was held at the burial vault of D. Suhbaatar and H. Choybalsan and at the monument to Soviet servicemen on (Zaysan) hill.

[Unattributed report] A Soviet military delegation headed by Army Gen I.M. Tretyak arrived in Ulaanbaatar 16 March at the invitation of Mongolian Defense Minister Col Gen J. Yondon. The Soviet military delegation will take part in the celebrations of the 65th anniversary of the Mongolian People's Army.

TASS CITES KARMAL REPORT TO PDPA CENTRAL COMMITTE

LD312007 Moscow TASS in English 1943 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] Kabul March 31 TASS -- "In the history of human civilisation there are events from which the count of new time is started. And the historic 27th Congress of the CPSU has become such an event", it is said in a report made by the general secretary of the Central Committee of the People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan, Chairman of the Revolutionary Council of the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan Babrak Karmal at a plenary meeting of the PDPA Central Committee. His report was published today.

"The main idea of the 27th CPSU Congress is to enter the 21st century without nuclear, chemical and other weapons of mass annihilation, to rid mankind of constant fear for its future, to switch to peaceful needs the tremendous sums now being squandered on the arms race. The new Soviet peace proposal to create an all-embracing system of international security sounded from the rostrum of the congress and its mainstays were outlined".

"It was with readiness that revolutionaries of the whole world responded to Mikhail Gorbachev's words that the countenance of the current century is determined by liberatory people's revolutions started by the Great October Revolution".

"The present plenary meeting", Babrak Karmal went on, "is a definite milestone. A tense year filled with tremendous events has become a part of history. A difficult year perhaps but also a most fruitful one. The development of the Armed Forces of a new type was continued. Their combat might was strengthened. The year will go down in history as the year of the Loya Jirga and the highest Jirga of the border tribes that fully and entirely supported our home and foreign policy. The country's social and economic development has gained pace".

Babrak Karmal called for more work in rural areas, for the switching of the centre of the party's entire political and socio-economic activity to the countryside, where the majority of the country's population lives and works.

"Socio-economic measures play a leading role in the implementation of the new approach along with political ones. The drafting of the "guidelines for the DRA's economic and social development in 1365-1369" was an event of key importance in the country's life. It is a top priority task of the entire party and the entire people to fulfil the five-year plan", Babrak Karmal said.

Then Babrak Karmal outlined the tasks now facing the country:

-- In the military field to increase the size of the Armed Forces to the planned figures and to complete in the main the protection of the borders. The Armed Forces should concentrate on the struggle against banditism inside the country, on ensuring the peaceful and safe work of Afghans. These are not only military but also political tasks. Their fulfilment is our main patriotic and internationalist duty;

-- In the field of the home policy it is necessary before the end of the year to complete the elections to the local bodies of power. The draft constitution of the DRA should be ready by then so that it could be approved after a nation-wide discussion;

-- In the field of foreign policy all efforts should be directed at the attainment of a political settlement around Afghanistan.

Pursuing its peaceloving policy, the DRA has exerted every effort for the attainment of a political settlement of the situation around Afghanistan by way of talks. Thanks to the DRA'S efforts, in particular the statement of May 14, 1980 and the August 1981 statement, the road was opened for talks between the DRA and Pakistan. From the very beginning of the Geneva talks the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan displayed good will and political realism, and has done and is going everything possible for their successful advancement. But unfortunately Pakistan, which is experiencing pressure from American imperialism, hegemonism and reaction, is taking a negative stand and avoiding under various pretexts a direct constructive dialogue. That is why although there is certain progress at the talks they are advancing yet too slowly.

MOSCOW VIEWS U.S.-PAKISTANI MILITARY-ECONOMIC DEAL

LD201727 Moscow World Service in English 1531 GMT 29 Mar 86

[Commentary by (?Yuriy Kirichati)]

[Excerpts] A new United States-Pakistani military and economic deal worth $4.2 billion has been concluded in Islamabad. This exceeds by $1 billion the previous deal, the term of which expires in 1987. Nearly half the funds will be used to expand American military aid to Islamabad. Our observer (?Yuriy Kirichati) looks at the reasons behind Washington's encouragement of the Pakistani authorities' militaristic ambitions.

Both Washington and Islamabad speak of the need to bolster Pakistan's defenses in the light of events over Afghanistan. Today however, no special evidence is required to prove that a threat to Pakistan stems least of all from Afghanistan. Afghanistan's peace proposals to settle all controversial problems with Pakistan at the conference table are common knowledge. If there is a threat it confronts Afghanistan itself and it stems from Islamabad that has turned Pakistan's territory into a base for Afghan counterrevolutionary bands.

Pakistan's growing military potential has been causing legitimate concern in neighboring India too. Attention is focused there on the deployment of arms supplied to Pakistan by the United States and on the type of these weapons, including F-16 fighter bombers capable of carrying nuclear weapons, sea-based Harpoon missiles -- in fact offensive types of arms. You may wonder what Islamabad needs them for if it has been talking exclusively about defense.

All this has been giving rise for concern in Pakistan itself. In his comments on the conclusion of the new military and economic deal Tikka Khan, the general secretary of the Pakistan People's Party which belongs to the Movement for the Restoration of Democracy, has said that by receiving American aid Pakistan has found itself firmly in United States' fetters. The leaders of the movement denounced the deal as a United States interference in Pakistan's internal affairs. In their opinion Islamabad's course toward further broadening military and political cooperation with the United States does not meet the country's national interests and creates a threat to its security. Pakistanis wonder what new concessions and services will Washington demand from Islamabad in exchange for billions of dollars.

PHILIPPINES STRIKERS DEMAND CLOSURE OF U.S. BASES

LD311352 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1030 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Sergey Pravdin commentary]

[Text] The strike by Philippine workers employed at the Clark Field and Subic Bay bases, the biggest American military bases in Southeast Asia and located on Philippine territory, has entered its 10th day. The guards at the bases opened fire today in an attempt to disperse the striking pickets. Sergey Pravin comments on this report:

The trade union, which unites in its ranks more than 20,000 people, announced the strike on 21 March, demanding the wage increases and improvement in social security. These demands were supported by the Philippine Trade Union Federation, the May Movement, which has turned to all progressive forces with an appeal to come to the side of the striking workers. The Philippine public organization Coalition Against Bases has already responded to this call. In a statement it is said that the Philippines are continously subjected to humiliation and insults and often even to violence by the American servicemen, who are violating, in a crude way, human rights, laws, and customs of the country. American soldiers who commit a crime on Philippine territory are practically unpunishable, because the matters are examined not by local courts but behind barbed wire of American military bases. Since the start of the strike there has already been a clash between the pickets and the American soldiers, who are protecting the strike-breakers. At the same time, according to the new agencies' reports, there were casulaties on both sides. According to the reports from Manila, the guards were shooting in the air today. However, during the clashes between the strikers and soldiers, several people were again injured. As UPI emphasizes, the present strike is the biggest in the history of the trade union of workers employed at the American base.

The agency notes that the tense situation has reached its limit. This is also caused by the fact that after the flight of former President Marcos to the Hawaiian Islands, and coming to power of the opposition forces government headed by President Aquino, the movement for elimination of the Pentagon's bases has intensified sharply in the Philippines. President Aquino, in a meeting yesterday with New Zealand Prime Minister Lange, who arrived in Philippines on an official visit, recalled that the period of validity of the present American-Philippine agreement on bases is to expire in 1991. Aquino stressed that the fate of this agreement is yet to be examined by her government. The Philippine public demands elimination of all the Pentagon's bases now.

PROSPECT FOR CHANGE IN PHILIPPINES EXAMINED

[Correspondent L. Kuznetsov dispatch: "Palace and Huts. The Philippine People Await Changes"]

[Text] Manila, March -- You would not recognize Malacanang Palace, which translated means "House of the Great Leader." It used to stand surrounded by soldiers saluting black limousines. Today there are crowds of people here, and water and fruit sellers have set themselves up along the iron fence. Turned into a "people's museum" by decision of the incumbent president, the palace has begun a new life.

Following the February events, when the new administration headed by Corazon Aquino acceded to power, changes have begun in the country. President C. Aquino has proclaimed an interim "constitution of freedom." The Philippine National Assembly (parliament) has been dissolved. The interim constitution pursues the aim of restoring legality, ensuring respect for citizens' rights, and helping to eliminate the abuses committed by the former administration. C. Aquino has pointed out that special attention will be devoted to creating democratic institutions.

While the interim constitution is in effect, the head of state will be vested with all executive and legislative power. The state apparatus is being reorganized. Some ministries have been abolished, and new ones created. Only two members of the old cabinet have kept their posts. Many city mayors and governors have been replaced temporarily by officials acting for them (pending elections to the local organs of power). Reshuffles are also being carried out in the Armed Forces. While welcoming the intention to improve the Army by dismissing generals and officers who have compromised themselves, at the same time the public wants the Armed Forces to stop acting as a tool for crushing internal discontent.

Naturally, the measures being taken by the new leadership have their supporters and their opponents. Many of the present administration's measures are meeting with covert resistance. However, the general political climate is conducive to implementing changes aimed at improving the situation in the country.

The new leadership has inherited a heavy legacy. There is, above all, the unresolved agrarian question -- large landowners and foreign companies are driving peasants from the land and mercilessly exploiting them. Protests are crushed with the help of the planters' and the multinational corporations' private armies.

The foreign debt of $26 billion remains a heavy burden. Meanwhile, the need for financial assets has naturally not diminished. They hope to satisfy it partly out of the assets which were illegally misappropriated by way of bribes, embezzlement of public funds, and all kinds of machinations and taken abroad by a number of top figures in the old administration and by entrepreneurs. Therefore, the announcement of a struggle against corruption has elicited support here.

Many other questions are also being placed at the center of attention. What, for example, is to be done with the "white elephants"? This is what the Filipinos call the prestige buildings like the luxurious palace built to receive high-level guests and which senselessly devours vast funds which could have been used to build housing for the homeless. According to data reported by the newspapers, 7 out of every 10 Filipinos live below the poverty line.

Foreign policy questions occupy a prominent place. Of course, as (K.D. Lapus), professor of international relations at the University of Santo Tomas, said in conversation with your correspondent, the "American dimension" in Manila's international course will remain prevalent. However, many people in the Philippines favor abandoning the one-sided orientation toward the West and developing relations with the socialist countries. It is hard to disregard these sentiments.

Diplomats representing the ASEAN countries (the Philippines is a member of this grouping) in Manila have welcomed the government's plans to strengthen ties within the association and to solve its economic difficulties to some extent not with IMF subsidies but by means of the unutilized reserves that lie in collaboration and cooperation within the ASEAN framework. Deputy Foreign Minister (L. Shahani) has declared that "President C. Aquino's new government intends to review the policy on the question of keeping nuclear weapons at U.S. bases in the Philippines and the presence of ships with nuclear weapons on board in the region." Naturally, people here are wondering what lies behind these words.

A few days ago the first tour of the presidential palace took place, and the tickets were distributed, above all, in the capital's working class districts. After the people had left the "House of the Great Leader," I talked with the guide of one of the groups -- Joselita Benitez, a student at Manila College:

"My group included laundresses, women street cleaners, and fishermen," J. Benitez said. "Of course, they were astounded at the richness of the living quarters, the gold and the diamonds. For all this luxury was built on their suffering and poverty and on their exploitation. A most vivid example of injustice!"

From the palace the people returned to their huts. They believe and hope that there will be positive changes and that the promises to improve their lives will be fulfilled this time.

[Text] Sofia, April 1 TASS -- A CPSU delegation, led by Nikolay Ryzhkov, member of the Political Bureau of the CPSU Central Committee, chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers, arrived in Sofia today to attend the 13th Congress of the Bulgarian Communist Party, at the invitation of its Central Committee.

ARKHIPOV RECEIVES SFRY KOSOVO DELEGATION

LD312110 Moscow in Serbo-Croatian to Yugoslavia 1900 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] Ivan Arkhipov, first deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers, today received a delegation of the Socialist Autonomous Province of Kosovo, headed by Nedjo Borkovic, president of the Executive Council of the Socialist Autonomous Province of Kosovo. During the talks which took part in a warm and friendly atmosphere, they discussed questions of further developing economic and scientific-technical cooperation between the Soviet Union and the SFRY and, among other things, the development of fraternal relations between the Dagestan ASSR and the Socialist Autonomous Province of Kosovo.

The talks were attended by Vladimir Vinogradov, RSFSR minister of foreign affairs; (Dzhavit Dolebkhanov), first deputy chairman of the Council of Ministers of the Dagestan SSR; as well as by Milojko Drulovic, SFRY ambassador to the Soviet Union.

MARCHUK, ROMANIA'S URSA DISCUSS SCIENTIFIC TIES

AU281950 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 1808 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow, 28/3/1986 -- Ion Ursu, first deputy chairman of the National Council for Science and Technology, had an interview with G.I. Marchuk, deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers, chairman of the USSR State Committee on Science and Technology, in Moscow, on March 28.

Messages were exchanged on the occasion between Academician Elena Ceausescu, D. Sc., first deputy prime minister, chairman of the National Council for Science and Education of Romania, and G.I. Marchuk.

During the meeting the stage and results of the Romanian-Soviet technologic and scientific collaboration were analyzed and the directions for the further development and deepening of the collaboration in this domain, were established in harmony with the understandings reached at the meetings between Nicolae Ceausescu and Mikhail Gorbachev.

Stress was laid on the need for concentrating the two parties' efforts on accomplishing by cooperation the research-development targets of the program of collaboration between Romania and the Soviet Union in 1986-1990, primarily in domains related to the development of the base of raw materials, fuels and energy, the evolving of new technologies.

SHULTZ ADMITS DIFFERENCES IN U.S., ITALY LIBYAN STANCES

LD311533 Moscow TASS in English 1525 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] Rome March 31 TASS -- U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz, now on a tour of a number of West European countries, has again lashed out Libya.

Speaking at a press conference here, he tried in every way to whitewash the aims of the recent exercises of the U.S. Sixth Fleet in the Mediterranean. George Shultz' negotiations with President of Italy Francesco Cossiga, Chairman of the Council of Ministers Bettino Craxi, and Foreign Minister Giulio Andreotti, he said, centered on questions linked with the exercises off Libyan shores.

George Shultz was compelled to admit that there are differences between the United States and Italy in the attitude to that issue. Italy is known to have criticized Washington's anti-Libyan actions. Though the secretary of state tried to diminish the significance of these differences, in a private talk he more bluntly expressed irritation at the Italian Government's stand, as is noted by REUTER news agency with reference to American officials.

SOVIET OFFICIAL DISCUSSES REPERCUSSIONS OF FRG SDI TIES

LD011040 Hamburg DPA in German 1004 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow, 1 Apr (DPA/VWD) -- The SDI contracts concluded between the Federal Republic and the United States will probably not strain the forthcoming session of the German-Soviet Economic Commission. Georgiy Korniyenko, USSR first deputy foreign minister, stressed at a press conference in Moscow today that the concluding of the SDI contracts is not an economic topic and would hardly be raised in such a context. However, this set of treaties will "inevitably" affect the condition of German-Soviet relations, Korniyenko said.

The commission is to meet in the Soviet capital on Thursday and Friday [6-7 April]. The Bonn delegation will be headed by Economics Minister Martin Bangemann. Subjects to be discussed at the session include the consumer goods and services sectors.

FRG BREACHES W. BERLIN STATUS TO SIGN SDI ACCORD

LD281345 Moscow in English to North America 0001 GMT 28 Mar 86

[From "The Round-up of Political Events" program]

[Text] After prolonged negotiations the United States and Federal Germany have signed an accord in Bonn's participation in the "star wars" program. Here are some details:

One of the stumbling blocks which was finally overcome was the participation of West Berlin firms in the American program. West Berlin is supposed to be a demilitarized city, and in line with the allied regulations the city's status has to be observed by the United States, Britain and France. But on Bonn's insistence the status will be breached, providing all of us with a fresh example of how Western commitments and obligations under international accords are easily violated. Federal Germany has become the second West European nation after Britain to participate in the "star wars" program, a fact which raises a number of crucial questions.

Number 1: So-called Western democracies with their much touted concern for such values as human rights, dignity, freedom and what-not are in the forefront of the ugly and despicable business of making more and more new weapons. The most vulgar argument heard from all those people, who claim they're not modern barbarians but well-dressed, well-educated and good-mannered executives, managers and politicians, is that progress will stop and humanity will suffer a terrible setback if Moscow and those so-called nuts from antiwar movements have their way and there is nobody to develop, build and deploy space weapons.

Number 2: Some smart people in Washington who claim that star wars is fundamental research don't believe a word of what they're saying. Who will draw the line between research, laboratory and field testing? Who is going to tell all those firms, companies and corporations when to stop and that enough is enough? And how serious is it to claim that the military-industrial complex will voluntarily part with multibillion dollar profits offered by new arms for the sake of honoring for instance the Soviet-American ABM Treaty of 1972, which is seen in Washington as a sheet of paper and a barrier to the further escalation of the arms race?

Number 3: It is hardly a coincidence that those who oppose banning nuclear tests are the most ardent supporters of star wars. In the United States, Great Britain and Federal Germany, top government officials are well aware that such a ban will not lead to any of those apocalyptic scenarios of the West falling apart under a conventional Soviet onslaught that they've been frightening their people with. In Washington, London and Bonn they have nothing else to offer to the public as a justification for the ongoing nuclear madness. According to reports from Washington, the U.S.-West German accord on star wars was expected to be signed at a low-key private ceremony. Why be so bashful if space weapons are such a boon to humanity?

U.S. REPORTEDLY STOCKPILING PERSHING II'S IN FRG

[Rudolf Kolchanov commentary]

[Text] The West German Magazine DER SPIEGEL, citing U.S. sources, reports that not 108 Pershing II missiles -- as was agreed upon in the December 1979 NATO decision -- but 156 such first-strike nuclear missiles have already been sited [razmeshcheno] on FRG territory. International affairs journalist Rudolf Kolchanov is at the microphone:

In this case one simply cannot but repeat the well-known dictum that sooner or later every secret comes out. True, the first reports to the effect that the United States intended to introduce intermediate-range nuclear missiles into the FRG in a larger quantity than was officially announced appeared some 4 years ago. At first, news surfaced in the Western press that the Pentagon had ordered from military concerns not 108 Pershing II's but some 400. For whom were they earmarked? The reply to this question was given then by the PARLAMENTARISCH POLITISCHE PRESSEDIENST, the press bulletin of the Social Democratic Party of Germany. It reported that the entire new nuclear missile arsenal would be deployed [dislotsirovan] on FRG territory.

As facts testify, these predictions are being realized. At the U.S. Fort Sill military base in Oklahoma State, 30 more complete Pershing II's are ready for dispatch beyond the ocean. They can at any moment join the missiles which have already been concealed [zatailis] in West Germany. Combined with the nuclear weapons previously imported into the FRG, the new intermediate-range missiles make up an immense stockpile of mass destruction weapons.

But Washington even considers this to insufficient: John Wickham, U.S. Army chief of staff, stated that the number of missiles sited [razmeshchennyye] on FRG territory is far lower than the computed level of requirement.

Four years ago Washington publicly assured the Bonn chancellor that additional nuclear armaments for West Germany would be limited, as regards Pershing II's, to 108 units. Today it is a question of 400. How many will it be tomorrow and the day after tomorrow?

GENRI COMMENTS ON USSR-FRG RELATIONS

PM261023 Moscow SOVETSKAYA ROSSIYA in Russian 23 Mar 86 First Edition p 5

[Ernst Genri article under the rubric "Writer's Notes": "Which Road Into the 21st Century?"; a postscript states: "I wrote this article at the suggestion of FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU, one of the leading FRG bourgeois newspapers. The article was not printed"]

[Excerpt] What is needed today, apart from a political agreement at summit level, to achieve genuine mutual understanding between USSR and FRG citizens?

A very great deal. In these relations the people on the banks of the Rhine need, above all, to employ the practical realism that is usually characteristic of them. What is needed is the final rejection of any form of revanchism and readiness to develop as widely as possible mutually advantageous trade with the Soviet Union and the other socialist countries.

Of course, the awful traces of the war years have not yet been entirely effaced from our peoples' consciousness. But for more than 40 years we have managed to avoid new bloodshed in Europe. This alone is a fact of truly immense importance. Now that the "star wars" idea is a monstrous glimmer on the horizon, the Europeans have and will have no other way out than to resolutely take the road of peace.

It is precisely the former enemies who can set an example by marching shoulder to shoulder toward peace. Europe is our common home! Neither we nor they have the right to allow anyone to set fire to it. This is the chief task.

It is clear that a very great deal still lies ahead in this painstaking work.

Try to understand us. We do not wish the West Germans ill. We know that things were extremely difficult for many of them under the fascists. But we cannot forget what they did in our country during the war years, how many people we lost, and how much suffering we endured at that time.

How can such things be forgotten?! That was the lowest point in the entire history of Russian-German relations. But we are prepared to maintain normal, good-neighborly relations between our states.

We thought that the foundations for such relations were laid by the USSR's treaty with the FRG of 12 August 1970. We believed that that treaty would draw a line under the terrible past.

But what has happened?

During the more than 15 years since then FRG policy toward us has been directed back toward Adenauer rather than forward to sincere cooperation.

We see (and our eyes became particularly sharp-sighted after 1941) that your Armed Forces are growing not day by day but hour by hour, that U.S. nuclear missiles have been deployed on your land not far from our borders, and that your revanchists are making more noise now than they have done for a long time.

What do you think Soviet people say on hearing about all this? Do they like to admit the thought that everything might be starting all over again with you, as in the thirties and forties? We have had enough of two world wars.

Looking in the direction of the figures at the helm on the Rhine, we want to know for sure: Do they really advocate lasting, unbreakable peace? Or do they advocate some two-faced game whose ultimate aim is the same old revenge? We have a right to expect an honest, direct answer.

USSR ROME EMBASSY STATEMENT ON ITALY'S SDI ROLE

LD311529 Moscow TASS in English 1621 GMT 31 Mar 86

["Soviet Embassy Statement" -- TASS item identifier]

[Text] [no dateline as received] — The USSR Embassy in Rome made a statement to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Italy over the decision taken by the Italian Government to allow Italian companies to participate in the implementation of the SDI program. This step, the statement says, can only be viewed as the gradual dragging of Italy into the implementation of the U.S. plans to militarize outer space. The Italian Government cannot help realizing that the fulfilment of these plans, aimed at breaking the existing military-strategic parity and achieving military superiority over the USSR, is bound to project the arms race into space and to destabilize the strategic situation, and also that it contradicts the provisions of the ABM Treaty concluded in prepetuity [as received] in 1972 and constituting the foundation of the process of the limitation and reduction of nuclear armaments.

The above-stated actions by the Italian Government obviously run counter to its repeated assurances about readiness to promote the ending of the arms race, the lowering of the level of military confrontation in the world and in Europe, and to facilitate the successful progress and positive completion of the Soviet-American talks in Geneva on nuclear and space arms. Hardly do they tally also with the Italian Government's statement in favour of strictt observance of the 1972 ABM Treaty. The present crucial situation in the world, as it was stressed in the statement, calls for urgent efforts to prevent the spreading of the arms race to outer space and curb it on earth, and each country should display a heightened sense of responsibility as regards its practical steps and decisions.

The hope was expressed that the Italian Government would display a proper attitude to this statement and draw conclusions really testifying to Italy's adherence to the cause of limiting and reducing nuclear arms and preventing an arms race in outer space. Such a position would fully accord with the vital interests of all states in Europe, Italy included.

TASS REPORTS SOVIET-ALGERIAN JOINT COMMUNIQUE

["Joint Soviet-Algerian Communique" -- TASS headline]

[Text] Moscow March 28 TASS -- Chadli Bendjedid, president of the Algerian People's Democratic Republic and secretary-general of the Algerian National Liberation Front (FLN) Party, was in the USSR on an official friendly visit from March 25 to 28, 1986, at the invitation of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, the Presidium of the USSR Supreme Soviet, and the Soviet Government.

During the visit to the USSR, the esteemed Algerian guest and the persons who accompanied him enjoyed cordial friendly reception and warm hospitality which reflected the high level of close friendship between the two states.

Chadli Bendjedid laid wreaths to the V.I. Lenin Mausoleum and to the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier near the Kremlin Wall.

M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, and Chadli Bendjedid, president of Algeria and secretary-general of the FLN Party, had a private meeting that was held in a friendly atmosphere.

The Soviet-Algerian talks held during the visit made it possible to have a fruitful exchange of views on questions of developing bilateral cooperation and on a broad range of international problems of mutual interest.

The following officials took part in the talks: From the Soviet side -- A.A. Gromyko, member of the Political Bureau of the CPSU Central Committee and president of the Presidium of the USSR Supreme Soviet; E.A. Shevardnadze, member of the Political Bureau of the CPSU Central Committee and foreign minister of the USSR; S.L. Sokolov, alternate member of the Political Bureau of the CPSU Central Committee and minister of defense of the USSR; A.F. Dobrynin, secretary of the CPSU Central Committee; K.F. Katushev, chairman of the State Committee of the USSR for Foreign Economic Relations. Present at the talks also were -- K.N. Brutents, deputy head of the International Department of the CPSU Central Committee; L.F. Ilichev, deputy foreign minister of the USSR; A.A. Shvedov, head of the First African Department of the USSR Foreign Ministry; V.N. Taratuta, the USSR's ambassador to the Algerian People's Democratic Republic.

The following Algerian officials took part in the talks: Ahmed Taleb Ibrahimi, member of the FLN Political Bureau and foreign minister; Larbi Belkheir, director of the President's Office; Belkacem Nabi, minister of energy, chemical and petrochemical industries; Abdelaziz Kehllaf, minister of finance; Abderrazak Bouhara, in charge of international ties of the Permanent Secretariat of the FLN Central Committee; Abdel Madjid Alahoum, Algeria's ambassador to the USSR; General Kamel Abderrahim, deputy chief-of-staff of the National People's Army; Abdelaziz Ziari, chairman of the Commission of the National Popular Assembly on education, culture and social matters; Abdelkader Benkaci, head of the Department for Foreign Affairs and Cooperation of the President's Chancellery; Hocine Meghar, director of the Department for Socialist Countries of Europe at the Foreign Ministry of Algeria; Ahmed Attaf, director of the Department for International Political Problems at the Foreign Ministry of Algeria; M'hamed Achache, director of the Department for International Economic Problems at the Foreign Ministry of Algeria.

The participants in the talks informed each other of economic, social and cultural achievements by their countries, made an in-depth analysis of the present state of bilateral relations and prospects for their further invigoration, and examined the current international situation.

The Soviet side described the results of the work of the 27th CPSU Congress which endorsed the party's course towards accelerating the country's social and economic development, defined the party's foreign policy strategy, adopted a new edition of the CPSU Programme, sanctioned changes and social development for 1986-1990 and the period ending in 2000.

The Algerian side described the nationwide discussion of the enriched text of the National Charter of Algeria, which ended with extensive approval of the document, and the new vistas that opened in this connection for continuing the independent national development and building socialism in Algeria.

Both sides examined the present state and prospects of developing relations between the Soviet Union and Algeria in various spheres and expressed their satisfaction with the attained level of political and interaction, as well as cooperation in the economic, scientific, cultural and other spheres.

They highly assessed the fruitful relationship between the CPSU and the National Liberation Front Party which, specifically, find manifestation in the exchange of high-level delegations, development of interparty ties on a planned basis, and exchanges of information on their activity. Ties between the Supreme Soviet of the USSR and the National People's Assembly of Algeria were just as highly assessed.

The sides stressed the great importance of regular contacts at all levels and in all areas with a view to strengthening friendship and cooperation between the Soviet and Algerian peoples.

Satisfaction was stated with the high level of economic, scientific and technical ties between the two countries, and the mutual aspiration was expressed to impart to them as fresh impetus by way of better use of their economic potentialities. The sides agreed to intensify the long-term cooperation in the areas which correspond to the priority directions of their development plans.

During the profound exchange of views on the causes underlying the dangerous heightening of the present-day international political and economic situation, the sides stated that the particular difficulties currently facing the world are due to imperialism's policy of colonialism, neocolonialism, expansionism, unrestricted arms race, its policy directed at deepening the crisis in international economic relations and increasing the number of seats of tension in various parts of the world. They expressed profound concern over the developments, their negative consequences for the cause of peace, security amd universal development.

The sides reaffirmed the conviction that a reliable improvement in the international climate may occur only through curbing the arms race and preventing its spread to outer space, ensuring the peoples' right to decide by themselves their destiny, restructuring and democraticzing international relations.

The Soviet side stressed that the struggle against the nuclear menance, the arms race, for the preservation and consolidation of universal peace remains the major direction in the USSR's activity in the world arena. A concrete programme of action to attain these objectives was set forth in the January 15, 1986 statement by general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee and confirmed at the 27th Party Congress. The congress also approved the foundations for an all-embracing system of world security.

They cover all major spheres of international life: military, political, economic and humanitarian. The implementation of the advanced foundations will help ensure a free, independent and secure development of all countries and peoples on earth and turn the course of world developments on the whole towards detente and to change substantially the face of today's world.

The Algerian side, proceeding from the provisions of the National Charter of Algeria and Algeria's membership in the Non-Aligned Movement, set fourth its assessment of the international situation and the measures which, in its view, should be undertaken to improve it. The Algerian side set out in this connection, specifically, its position on disarmament and world security problems in accordance with the National Charter and Algeria's activity within the Non-Aligned Movement, directed at achieving general and complete disarmament and establishing a system of international collective security.

Both sides highly assessed the constructive efforts they are undertaking with a view to ensuring universal peace.

They noted in this context the great importance of the fresh efforts with a view to resolving the complex of international problems by way of negotiations and stressed the urgent need for actions to set up in the future a comprehensive system of security, pointing to the interrelationship between disarmament and development.

They believe that the seats of tension existing in various parts of the world have emerged as a result of the denial of the peoples' right to self-determination, to a free choice of the political system and the path of economic and social development. Special attention was given to the situation in the Middle East, southern Africa, Maghreb, Central America and other parts of the world, which gives rise to concern.

On considering the developments in the Middle East, both sides pointed out that Israel, enjoying support of its strategic allies -- the United States and other forces hostile to the interests and legitimate rights of the Arab peoples and countries -- is responsible for the dangerous worsening of the situation in the region due to Israel's continuing aggressive machinations, expansionism, seizure of Arab territories, claims to establishing there its domination, and denying the Palestinian people their inalienable national rights.

They reiterated the need for a fair, lasting comprehensive settlement of the Middle East crisis, the achievement of which should include as the central problem the solution of the Palestinian issue. Proceeding from this premise, they reaffirmed their conviction that lasting peace in the Middle East is impossible to secure by way of separate agreements, and denounced in this connection any attempts to look for pseudo-solutions on this basis.

Both sides reaffirmed their support for the PLO -- the sole legitimate and authentic representative of the Palestinian people. They also believe that meeting their national aspirations calls for the exercise of the people's right to self-determination and to the establishment of an independent, sovereign Palestinian state of their own.

The USSR and Algeria demanded cotal and unconditional liberation of all Israeli-occupied Arab territories.

They back the struggle of Lebanon's patriotic forces for its total liberation and demand an immediate withdrawal of all Israeli military units from Lebanese territory. They are convinced that it is possible to settle Lebanon's internal problems only by peaceful means on the basis of national consent from the Lebanese themselves while preserving that country's unity, sovereignty and territorial integrity.

Both sides stressed that an international conference on the Middle East under the United Nations' auspices remains an indispensable condition for a fair, lasting and comprehensive settlement of the Middle East crisis.

They also confirmed the need for the PLO's full and equitable participation in all negotiations on such a settlement as the sole representative of the Palestinian people expressing their legitimate national aspirations.

On considering all aspects of the situation in Africa, both sides spoke in favor of strict respect for independence, sovereignty and the principle of non-interference in the internal affairs of African states, and in favor of the exercise by all peoples on the continent, who are still under colonial and racial opressions, of their right to independence.

Having expressed full support for the just struggle of the African peoples for achieving and strengthening national independence, the Soviet Union and Algeria highly assessed the OAU's growing positive role in international relations, and expressed satisfaction with its activity to achieve the continent's complete liberation, its decisions directed at Africa's economic development, and its views on problems of peace, security and disarmament.

Having reaffirmed their adherence to the idea of turning that continent into a nuclear-free zone, they denounced the nuclear ambitions of the Pretoria regime which is pursuing aggressive goals.

The Soviet Union and Algeria resolutely denouce South Africa's apartheid regime which, relying on overt backing from the imperialist accomplices, is pursuing a policy of colonial and racial oppression, aggression and intimidation with regard to the "Frontline" states with a view to establishing its domination in the region, as well as the machinations directed at a neocolonialist solution to the southern African problems.

Both sides reaffirmed their solidarity with and support for SWAPO and the ANC in their struggle for the exercise of the national rights of the peoples of South Africa and Namibia, as well as the "Frontline" states in their opposition to the racist Pretoria regime and firm determination to fulfil the task of liberating the south of the African Continent.

Both sides called on the world community to adopt urgent measures for the unconditional granting of independence to Namibia on the basis of full and precise observance of resolutions of the U.N. Security Council, including Resolution 435. They also called on the world community to work resolutely so as to speed up the dismantling of the apartheid regime by applying mandatory and comprehensive sanctions, which would be an effective contribution to the South African people's struggle for the exercise of their national rights in their homeland. Both sides expressed support for the forthcoming international conference on the question of sanctions against South Africa and agreed to facilitate the attainment of its objectives.

The sides expressed concern over the continuing conflict in the Western Sahara, and reaffirmed their support for Resolution 40/50 of the U.N. General Assembly, which provides a relevant basis for a political settlement of the conflict.

On considering the situation in the Mediterranean, both sides noted the dangerous developments in that region, and reaffirmed their adherence to the idea of turning it into a zone of peace and cooperation.

They resolutely denounce the threats and provocations against the Libyan Jamahiriyah, the introduction of economic and trade sanctions against it, which represent a veritable economic aggression against a sovereign state. The sides denounced the United States' act of aggression against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriyah. They stressed that actions of this kind run counter to the Charter of the United Nations and the generally accepted norms of international law, and pose a serious threat not only to the situation in the Mediterranean, but also to peace and security worldwide.

Recalling the Israeli aggression in Tunisia and realizing the gravity of aggression against Libya, the sides observed that the latest developments attest to the continued collusion organized against the Arab peoples of Maghreb and the Middle East. They demanded that an end be put immediately to all manifestations of threats, aggression and intimidation with regard to the Libyan Arab Jamahiriyah, and expressed their firm solidarity with the Libyan people in this difficult moment for them.

The sides pointed to the inseparable link between security in the Mediterranean and security in Europe, and stressed the need for taking into account the legitimate interests of countries in the southern Mediterranean in what concerns security, stability and cooperation in the Mediterranean in accordance with the Helsinki Final Act.

The participants in the talks analyzed with a sense of profound concern the dangerous escalation of the conflict between Iraq and Iran, which is inflicting heavy damage to the development of the two countries and to the progress of their peoples, as well as to stability and security in the region. They urgently call for the termination of the conflict and for a peaceful settlement of all differences between those two countries on the basis of respect for their territorial integrity and recognition of the existing borders between them.

On considering the situation in Central America, the sides reaffirmed their commitment to the principles of respect for the choice of political, economic and social systems by the peoples in the region, non-interference in the internal affairs of the states in that area, and a peaceful solution of the outstanding problems there by way of negotiations. They denounced the use of military or any other pressure, intimidation or sanctions as an inadmissible encroachment on free and independent choice of the development path of the peoples and states in Central America.

The sides backed the constructive efforts by Latin American states directed at attaining a peaceful, fair and lasting settlement in that region and the restoration there of security and stability.

The Soviet Union and Algeria favour the solution of problems existing in South-East Asia by policial means through establishing a fruitful dialogue between states situated there, and on the basis of respect for their independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity, consolidating mutual trust and security, non-interference in each other's internal affairs. Both sides back the constructive efforts that are being undertaken by the South-East Asian countries with a view to finding a political settlement to the outstanding problems and establishing lasting peace and stability in that region.

Both sides examined the international economic situation, and expressed profound alarm over its continued deterioration.

They agreed that it is necessary to carry out immediate coordinated actions with a view to eliminating the instability and uncertainty which now characterize the international economic situation, and restructuring international economic relations and establishing a new just international economic order.

The Soviet side informed the Algerian side about its proposal to convene in the future a world congress on problems of economic security. The Algerian side showed interest in the proposal.

Both sides came out in favour of deblocking such initiatives advanced by developing countries as holding "global talks" within the U.N. framework on world economic problems, convening an international monetary and financial conference, and others.

They reaffirmed their determination to continue the efforts with a view to implementing the necessary restructuring of international economic relations on the basis of justice, equality and mutual interest.

Taking into account the special complexity and acuity of Africa's economic problems, they stressed the need for large-scale international efforts with a view to overcoming the economic difficulties facing the African countries. Both sides wished that the special session of the U.N. General Assembly on the critical economic situation in Africa facilitate the economic upsurge on the African Continent. While discussing the questions of the further development of relations between the USSR and Algeria, the sides observed that the consolidation and deepening of mutually beneficial cooperation between them on the basis of the principles of equality and mutual respect meet the interests of the Soviet and Algerian peoples, the cause of peace and progress. The mutual desire to develop cooperation on a long-term basis was expressed.

The following joint Soviet-Algerian documents were signed:

1. Long-term programme of economic, trade, scientific and technical cooperation between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Algerian People's Democratic Republic.

2. Soviet-Algerian protocol on consultations.

3. Agreement between the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Government of the Algerian People's Democratic Republic on economic and technical cooperation.

The sides expressed profound satisfaction with the positive results of the official friendly visit to the USSR by Chadli Bendjedid, president of Algeria and secretary-general of the FLN Party, which imparted a fresh impetus to the relations of traditional friendship and cooperation between the peoples of the two countries.

The Algerian president expressed sincere gratitude for the warm reception accorded in the Soviet Union to him and the persons who accompanied him.

Chadli Bendjedid invited M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, to make an official friendly visit to Algeria. The invitation was accepted with satisfaction. The dates of the visit will be agreed upon later through diplomatic channels.

REPORT ON SUPREME SOVIET DELEGATION EGYPTIAN VISIT

PM271443 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 27 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 5

[TASS report: "Visit Over"]

[Text] Cairo, 26 Mar -- The USSR Supreme Soviet delegation comprising P.G. Gilashvili, deputy chairman of the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium (delegation head), and USSR Supreme Soviet deputies S.A. Losev, A.I. Mayorets, N.I. Popov, and D. Yusupov has concluded its official visit to the Arab Republic of Egypt [ARE].

The delegation was received by Egyptian President H. Mubarak. The head of the Soviet delegation conveyed a message to him from the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium. The sincere desire of both sides to develop good relations was noted during the meeting.

Talks were held with a delegation of the Egyptian People's Assembly headed by R. al-Mahjub, its president. The Soviet parliamentarians also had meetings with Egyptian Prime Minister 'A. Lufti and his deputies -- Y. Wali, minister of agriculture and general secretary of the ruling National Democratic Party of the ARE, and 'I. 'Abd al-Majid, the country's foreign minister -- and with S. 'Abd al-Hakim, chairman of the Consultative Council.

The delegation toured the country, familiarized itself with the life and labor of the Egyptian people, and visited the Aswan High Dam and hydroelectric power station constructed with the Soviet Union's technical and economic assistance and the historical monuments of Aswan and Luxor.

During the meetings and talks, which were held in a friendly atmosphere, the sides discussed questions connected with the activity of the USSR Supreme Soviet and the ARE People's Assembly and advocated the further development of contacts between the two countries' legislative organs. They emphasized that interparliamentary ties make a useful contribution to the cause of strengthening trust and mutual understanding between the Soviet and Egyptian peoples.

The Soviet parliamentarians informed the Egyptian side about the results of the historic 27th CPSU Congress, which outlined a strategy for accelerating Soviet society's further development and qualtiatively improving all aspects of its life. The documents approved by the congress and the speech delivered there by M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, in fact mark the start of a new stage in implementing a Leninist foreign policy aimed at delivering mankind from the threat of a global nuclear catastrophe and achieving a drastic breakthrough in international affairs in the interests of ensuring peaceful and equitable conditions for the development of all peoples and states.

The Egyptian side showed interest in the USSR's constructive proposals for the stage-by-stage, consistent elimination of nuclear weapons throughout the world, which were set forth in M.S. Gorbachev's 15 January 1986 statement and underwent further development in the 27th CPSU Congress decisions. The opinion was voiced that the implementation of the impressive plans to accelerate the USSR's socioeconomic development is having a positive effect on increasing the Soviet Union's prestige in the international arena. During discussion of the situation in the Near East concern was voiced at the dangerous situation which is persisting there as a consequence of Israel's continuing aggression against the Arabs. The Soviet Union confirmed its conviction that a comprehensive and just settlement in the Near East can be achieved with the help of collective actions, within the framework of an international conference on the Near East with the participation of all interested sides, including the PLO -- the sole legitimate representative of the Arab Palestinian people.

In the course of discussing bilateral relations between the USSR and the ARE, the sides confirmed their desire to further develop cooperation in various spheres on the basis of the principles of equal rights, mutual advantage, and noninterference in other states' internal affairs.

The USSR and Egyptian parliamentarians voiced confidence that the exchange of opinions that took place during the Soviet delegation's visit will make a positive contribution to the cause of arranging a constructive political dialogue between the USSR and Egypt.

The USSR Supreme Soviet delegation expressed cordial gratitude for the hospitality shown it during its stay in the ARE. Yesterday the delegation left for home. The guests from the USSR were seen off at Cario International Airport by R. al-Mahjub; M. 'Abdallah, chairman of the Egyptian People's Assembly Foreign Affiars Commission; and other officials. The send off party included A.M. Belonogov, USSR ambassador to Egypt.

On 26 March the delegation returned to Moscow. It was met at the airport by A.E. Voss, chairman of the USSR Supreme Soviet Soviet of Nationalities; other officials; and S.H. Basyuni, Egyptian ambassador to the USSR.

ARKHIPOV MEETS WITH EGYPTIAN ECONOMICS MINISTER

[Text] Moscow March 27 TASS -- Ivan Arkihpov, a first deputy chairman of the Council of Ministers of the USSR, today received Sultan Abu 'Ali, minister of economics and foreign trade of the Arab Republic of Egypt, and had a conversation with him on issues of promoting trade and economic cooperation. Taking part in the conversation also were Viktor Dementsev, chairman of the Board of the State Bank of the USSR, and Salah al-Din Hasan Basyuni, Egypt's ambassador to the USSR.

MEDITERRANEAN GROUP PRAISES SOVIET INITIATIVE

LD310837 Moscow TASS in English 0806 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] Tripoli March 21 TASS -- TASS corresdpondent Georgiy Shelenkov reports:

The Organisation of Socialist and Progressive Parties of Mediterranean Countries welcomes the Soviet proposals aimed at ensuring peace and security in the Mediterranean, said Ahmed Shahati, general secretary of that organisation, deputy chairman of the Libyan-Soviet Friendship Society.

In a TASS interview he noted the timeliness of the Soviet proposals which were set forth forth by General Secretary of the CPSU Central Committee Mikhail Gorbachev at a time when American military unleashed an unprovoked aggression against sovereign Libya. A new manifestation of the U.S. Administration's "gunboat diplomacy" created a real threat to peace and security not only in the region but also in the whole world. Libya is not the only Mediterranean country to have become a target of U.S. imperialism's aggressive conspiracies, said Ahmed Shahati. The criminal deeds of American military in long-suffering Lebanon are still fresh in the memory of all. Any other people of our region, coming out against Washington's great power ambitions, might fall tomorrow victim to hegemonistic designs of the White House.

Therfore, we call upon all nations and progressive forces of the region to back the new peace initiative of the USSR and take concrete steps towards its materialisation, stressed the general secretary of the Organisation of Socialist and Progressive Parties of Mediterranean Countries.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON VISIT BY MOZAMBIQUE'S MACHEL

Gromyko, Machel Begin Talks

LD311251 Moscow TASS in English 1150 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 31 TASS -- Soviet-Mozambican talks were started in the Grand Kremlin Palace today. They are held by Andrey Gromyko, member of the Political Bureau of the CPSU Central Committee and president of the Presidium of the USSR Supreme Soviet, and Samora Moises Machel, chairman of the Frelimo [Mozambique Liberation Front] party and president of the People's Republic of Mozambique.

The Mozambican leader arrived in Moscow Sunday for a working friendly visit at the invitation of the Soviet leadership.

Ryzhkov, Machel Hold Talks

PM311821 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 1 Apr 86 First Edition p 1

[Text] A meeting took place in the Kremlin 31 March between Comrade Ryzhkov, member of the Politburo of the CPSU Central Committee and chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers; and Machel, chairman of the Frelimo and president of the People's Republic of the People's Republic of Mozambique, who is in the Soviet Union on a friendly working visit.

Taking part in the meeting were Comrade Shevardnadze, member of the Politburo of the CPSU Central Committee and USSR minister of foreign affairs; Comrade Talyzin, candidate member of the Politburo of the CPSU Central Committee, first deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers, and chairman of the USSR Gosplan; as well as Chissano, member of the Politburo of the Frelimo Central Committee and Mozamblique's minister of foreign affairs; and Machungo, member of the Politburo of the Frelimo Central Committee and minister of planning.

During the conversation, which passed in an atmosphere of friendship and mutual understanding, Nikolay Ivanovich Ryzhkov informed the Mozambican leader about the work being undertaken in the Soviet Union in accordance with the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress in implementing the strategic policy of accelerating the country's social and economic development, and in consolidating peace and international security.

Samora Machel in turn spoke about the measures for strengthening Mozambique's economy and defense capability which are being carried out by the country's government and Frelimo, at a time of incessant attempts by internal and external reaction to push the Mozambican people off the progressive path of development chosen by it.

Expressing satisfaction with the level of cooperation attained between the Soviet Union and Mozambique in various fields, the participants in the conversation devoted particular attention to questions relating to raising its efficiency, and mapped out a number of specific measures in this area.

Samora Machel highly appraised the assistance being rendered by the Soviet Union to Mozambique. On the Soviet side confirmation was given of its solidarity with People's Mozambique and its willingness to continue giving it support in the cause of consolidating the country's independence and security.

Also taking part in the talks were: On the Soviet side -- B.I. Aristov, minister of foreign trade; K.F. Katushev, chairman of the State Committee for Foreign Economic Relations; S.F. Akhromeyev, USSR first deputy minister of defense; L.F. Ilichev, USSR deputy minister of foreign affairs; and Yu.F. Sepelev, USSR ambassador to Mozambique.

On the Mozambique side -- A. Pangueme, secretary of the Frelimo Central Committee, deputy minister of national defense, and political commissar of the Armed Forces; Mozambique Ministers S. Vieira, A. Branco, and J. Dos Santos; H. Patricio, Mozambican ambassador to the USSR; and other officials.

International Topics Discussed

LD311849 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1730 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] Soviet-Mozambican talks were held in the Kremlin today. Taking part on the Soviet side were: Comrade Gromyko, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo, chairman of the Presidium of the USSR Supreme Soviet; Comrade Shevardnadze, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo, USSR minister for foreign affairs; Comrade Sokolov, candidate member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo, USSR minister of defense; Comrade Dobrynin, secretary of the CPSU Central Committee; and other officials. Present on the Mozambican side were Machel, chairman of Frelimo, president of the People's Republic of Mozambique; and other members of the Mozambican delegation.

During the talks, which passed in a friendly atmosphere, the Soviet leaders informed the esteemed Mozambican guest about the main directions of the economic and social policy of the CPSU endorsed by the 27th party congress. The Mozambican side's attention was drawn to the CPSU's international activities in the conditions of the world situation, which has sharply deteriorated due to the militarist circles of imperialism. It was stressed that the struggle against the nuclear danger and the arms race, and for the preservation and strengthening of universal peace, is the pivot of the foreign policy of the CPSU and the Soviet state.

The historic importance of the Soviet program for nuclear disarmament, set forth in the 15 January 1986 statement by Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev, CPSU Central Committee general secretary, was pointed out. The implementation of this program would make it possible to halt the arms race on earth and prevent it spreading to space, and to transfer considerable funds to the needs of development and to elimination of hunger, illiteracy, poverty, and disease in the liberated countries.

Samora Machel reaffirmed Mozambique's support for the Soviet Union's foreign policy initiatives, the implementation of which would make it possible to radically improve the situation in the world. He stated that this applies primarily and completely to the Soviet program for nuclear disarmament set forth in the statement by the CPSU Central Committee's general secretary, and to the creation of an all-embracing system of international security.

At the present stage, the Soviet Union considers the need to strive for the immediate end to nuclear weapons tests as a matter of primary importance. The Mozambican side welcomed the Soviet Union's decision to refrain from staging nuclear explosions after 31 March, if the United States does not stage such explosions. It also had a positive attitude toward the Soviet proposal to hold a Soviet-U.S. summit meeting in the near future in Europe in order to reach agreement on stopping nuclear tests.

It was stated that the contribution of the People's Republic of Mozambique to the struggle against imperialism and racism and to the cause of guaranteeing universal peace and international security is valued in the Soviet Union.

During examination of the situation in southern Africa, it was stressed that the responsibility for the crisis situation there lies first and foremost with the Pretoria regime. It was noted that the policy of complicity and appeasement of the Republic of South Africa, conducted by Western countries, first and foremost the United States, is encouraging the racists to take new aggressive actions against independent African states and new bloody repressions against the anti-apartheid fighters.

Invariable solidarity with Mozambique and Angola, which are victims of aggression on the part of the forces of imperialism and racism -- which are striving to force these independent countries to turn away from the path of development they have chosen -- was expressed by the Soviet side.

Soviet-Mozambican bilateral relations were discussed. The sides expressed satisfaction with the level of friendly cooperation reached between the CPSU and Frelimo, and between the Soviet Union and Mozambique, and resolve was reaffirmed to continue to develop bilateral ties on the basis of the treaty of friendship and cooperation between the USSR and the People's Republic of Mozambique. The Soviet side stated that it would continue to render Frelimo and the Mozambique people aid and support in their efforts aimed at implementing the program of socioeconomic transformation and at strengthening the independence and defense capability of the country.

[Text] Moscow March 31 TASS -- The CPSU Central Committee and the Presidium of the USSR Supreme Soviet today gave a dinner in the Grand Kremlin Palace in honour of Samora Moises Machel, chairman of the Frelimo party and president of the People's Republic of Mozambique.

The Mozambican leader and his wife were accompanied at the dinner by Mozambican party officials and statesmen.

The Soviet side was represented at the dinner by Mikhail Gorbachev and wife, Andrey Gromyko and wife, Nikolay Ryzhkov and wife, Vitaliy Vorotnikov, Eduard Shevardnadze, Sergey Sokolov, Nikolay Talyzin, Anatoliy Dobrynin, vice presidents of the Presidium of the USSR Supreme Soviet, deputy chairmen of the Council of Ministers of the USSR, ministers of the USSR, the chairmen of the State Committees of the USSR and other officials.

Mikhail Gorbachev and Samora Moises Machel exchanged speeches. The dinner passed in a friendly atmosphere.

Gorbachev Dinner Speech

LD311614 Moscow TASS in English 1608 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 31 TASS -- Follows the full text of the speech made by General Secretary of the CPSU Central Committee Mikhail Gorbachev at a dinner in the Grand kremlin Palace given by the CPSU Central Committee and the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the USSR in honour of Samora Moises Machel, chairman of the Frelimo party and president of the People's Republic of Mozambique:

Esteemed Comrade Machel, Esteemed Comrade Grasa Machel, Esteemed Mozambican guests, Comrades,

I am happy at the opportunity to welcome in Moscow our big friend President Samora Machel, his esteemed wife and the other Moaambican comrades.

We regard every visit by you to the Soviet Union as testimony of the friendship linking our countries, peoples and parties. Meetings between Soviet and Mozambican leaders serve well the cause of perfecting relations between our countries. I am confident that your present visit as well will be keynoted by this good tradition.

For more than ten years now the Mozambican people is building the mainstays of a new free life under the leadership of the Frelimo party. On scoring victory over the colonialists it fulfilled its sovereign right to choose the road of its social development itself.

It is a matter of immutable principle for the Soviet Union that the emergent countries should shape their destiny themselves. This principle underlines our entire policy. We again clearly stated this at the 27th CPSU Congress. But not everybody in the world of today is prepared to recognise this sacred right of peoples. Moreover there are forces that want to decide for others how they should live. Motivated by their egoistical interests they are doing everything to impede a free choice by peoples, and when such a choice has already been made they try in every way to undermine the states that do not suit them, to reverse their development. Examples of this are on the surface. Look how openly the United States imperialists are interfering in the affairs of Nicaragua, Angola, Libya and some other countries, look at the cynical cruelty with which they act.

The people of Mozambique know all this from their own experience. In treading the chosen path, you have not only to overcome the grave legacy of the colonial past, but also to counter the relentless pressure from imperialism, racism and reaction. They are waging a virtual war against People's Mozambique, sending against it armed gangs of mercenaries and renegades.

Your country feels all the consequences of the crisis situation that has developed in the South of Africa. There is no need to prove that its chief source lies in the aggressive policy of the racist Pretoria regime backed by the United States and its allies. It is high time that the South African rulers be compelled to behave in a civilized way, to stop bloody repressions inside the country and aggressive actions with regard to neighboring countries. But the patrons of the racists are doing everything so as to prevent the world community from adopting effective measures in order to attain this goal.

A fair settlement in southern Africa demands the solution of several vital problems. It calls, above all, for a total termination and inadmission of aggressive forays by the racists against "Frontline" African nations. Secondly, it calls for the immediate solution of the problem of decolonizing Namibia, now in an impasse due to Washington's and Pretoria's policy. Thirdly, it calls for the earliest eradication of apartheid in South Africa, an inhuman system of racial oppression and exploitation, the very existence of which is an international disgrace. We come out in favour of freedom for Namibia and South Africa, so that people of all races live there in peace, equality and accord.

We declared at the 27th CPSU Congress that the Soviet Union favours a political settlement of international crises and is prepared to invigorate the collective search for ways to deblock conflict situations in various parts of the world.

This also holds true for the south of Africa. All that is necessary is to give up the futile attempts to exploit the conflict in that region for intervention in the internal affairs of sovereign African states, and to respect the lawful interests of the peoples who live there. We are prepared to join all the interested parties, those who stand in practice, not in words for freedom, justice and peace in the south of Africa, to get down without delay to drafting appropriate measures. The peoples of the "Frontline" States and the patriotic forces of Namibia and South Africa, led by SWAPO [South West African People's Organization] and the African National Congress, can be confident of the Soviet Union's continuous solidarity and of its support for their just cause.

I want to note specifically the great importance of cooperation between newly-free and socialist countries to a radical improvement in the world political climate and to asserting the just principles of international security.

We greatly value cooperation in that field with People's Mozambique, whose positions on most of the important international problems either are close to or are identical with ours. I would like to express gratitude to the government of your country for supporting the Soviet program for the stage-by-stage elimination of nuclear weapons and other means of mass destruction by the end of this century.

Regrettably, the enemies of peace and disarmament would not take a realistic view of the situation and continue to rely on strength. But it is our firm conviction that the reactionary militarist forces are not destined to destroy the belief of the peoples in the possibility of safeguarding world peace and to subvert their struggle for attaining this lofty goal. The Soviet Union will continue the persevering and painstaking work to translate into practice its comprehensive program for the prevention of thermonuclear catastrophe and for the establishment of a secure peace. And we know that the peoples of the world will be in our side in this noble endeavour.

The Soviet Union suggested to the United States that agreement be reached without delay on ending nuclear tests as the first and very important step to the elimination of nuclear weapons, which President Reagan has said on more than one occasion he would like to achieve. Today there is a realistic opportunity to show good will in practice rather than in words. We expect Washington to take a responsible approach to our proposal.

Dear comrades, we have every reason to say that relations between the Soviet Union and Mozambique, resting on the 1977 treaty of friendship and cooperation, are developing fruitfully in the defined areas. Contacts between the CPSU and the Frelimo party have a special place in the system of these relations. Our parties stood at the sources of friendship between the Soviet and Mozambican peoples. Their commitment to common ideals continues today to cement, one may say, our cooperation, which is serving the supreme interests of both peoples and the cause of peace and social rejuvenation. This will remain true in future as well.

The Soviet Union has been doing and will continue to do what it can to render Mozambique assistance in economic and cultural development, in training national personnel and in strengthening its defenses. Of course, we have large untapped reserves in a number of areas. We should join forces and make an effort to put them to use as soon as possible. We think such an approach businesslike and correct.

Allow me to wish you, Comrade Machel, the party and state leadership of People's Mozambique and the Mozambican people success in defending the achievements of the revolution and in constructive work to build new society, and also peace, happiness and well-being.

I wish the best of health to our dear guest, Comrade Machel, his esteemed wife and all the Mozambican friends present here.

May close contacts, friendship and cooperation between the CPSU and the Frelimo party, between the Soviet Union and People's Mozambique continue to develop and grow stronger from one day to the next.

Report on Machel Speech

LD311723 Moscow TASS in English 1654 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 31 TASS -- "People throughout the world demand an end to the threat of mankind's destruction and refuse to live under the threat of nuclear war, under the threat of the use of weapons of mass annihilation", it was stated by the chairman of the Frelimo party, President of the People's Republic of Mozambique Samora Machel at a dinner given in his honor tonight in the Grand Kremlin Palace. "Mankind demands an end to the arms race, demands that outer space and the oceanbed be used for development and not for military purposes", the Mozambican leader said.

"The struggle for peace is the main concern of all people in the world. For Mozambicans who 21 years ago became victims of imperialism's aggressive actions peace is a dream we want to come true. Peaceful life is pressingly needed to direct energy and efforts at economic, social and cultural development, at overcoming poverty, hunger and illiteracy. The time has come when scientific-technical achievements and resources should serve progress and not death and destruction. The entire scientific-technical and financial potential, material resources should be used exclusively in the aims of improving man's life".

"Mozambique considers it important for the easing of international tension for the Soviet-American dialogue, started in Geneva, to continue. We welcome the Soviet Union's constructive proposals and thinks highly of the Soviet Union's recent decision not to conduct nuclear explosions after March 31 if the United States acts likewise".

"The regime of apartheid is the main cause of violence and war danger in the south of Africa", Samora Machel stressed. "Apartheid is a manifestation of imperialism's fascist and militaristic policy in our region. The colonisation of Namibia, the occupation of a part of Angolan territory, the armed banditism against the People's Republic of Mozambique, support for the puppet groupings in Angola are an external continuation of the terrorist policy pursued by the regime of apartheid against the South African people. But in practice some Western circles, which continue to come out for non-violent solutions of conflicts in our region, do little to destroy apartheid -- the cause of violence", the Mozambican leader said. "The aggressors and the victims are often held equally responsible".

"The independence of Namibia, which must be free just as the other former German colonies, was made dependent early in the 1960s on problems that are in no way related to the attainment of this aim. The very same circles that oppose sanctions against the Republic of South Africa are doing nothing when the ruling regime in South Africa carries out sanctions in practice against Mozambique and other neighbouring countries", Samora Machel stressed.

The president of the People's Republic of Mozambique spoke highly of the development of Soviet-Mozambican cooperation which is based on mutual interests and facilitates the attainment of common ideals in the struggle for peace and socialism.

PRAVDA Profiles Machel

[Unattributed report: "On the Visit to the USSR by Samora Moises Machel, chairman of the Frelimo Party and president of the People's Republic of Mozambique"]

[Text] At the invitation of the Soviet leadership Samora Moises Machel, chairman of Frelimo and president of the People's Republic of Mozambique, will be arriving in Moscow today on a friendly, working visit.

S. Machel was born on 29 September 1933 to a peasant family. In 1962 he joined the ranks of the Mozambique Liberation Front (Frelimo). From the beginning of Frelimo's armed struggle against the Portuguese colonizers in 1964 he headed one of the partisan detachments. In 1966 he was made a member of the Frelimo Central Committee and became secretary of the Central Committee's Defense Department. At the Second Frelimo Congress in 1968 he was nominated commander of the partisan army and became a member of the Presidential Front Council. At the end of 1970 he was elected Frelimo president.

Since the day the country proclaimed its independence on 25 June 1975 S. Machel has been president of the People's Republic of Mozambique and head of government. He also holds the posts of chairman of the country's supreme legislative organ -- the People's Assembly -- and chairman of its Permanent Commission, is commander in chief of the Mozambique Armed Forces, and holds the military title of marshal. At the Third Frelimo Congress in February 1977, where the decision was made to turn the front into the vanguard party of Mozambique society, he was elected chairman of Frelimo. In 1982 S. Machel was awarded the title "Hero of the Republic." At the Fourth Frelimo Congress in April 1983 he was reelected as its chairman.

Under his leadership the party adopted a course of building the foundations of a socialist society in Mozambique. This course is being pursued in the conditions of bitter resistance by external reactionary forces striving to turn the country from its chosen course.

In the international arena Mozambique pursues an anti-imperialist, anticolonialist, and antiracist course; works to unite the forces of peace and social progress, end the arms race, and improve the international situation; and is an active member of the OAU and the Nonaligned Movement.

The leader of People's Mozambique has visited the Soviet Union on more than one occasion. S. Machel has been awarded the international Leninist prize "For Strengthening Peace Between Peoples" and also the Order of People's Friendship.

Soviet people fervently welcome the arrival of the important Mozambican guest and express their confidence that the new visit to the USSR by Comrade Samora Moises Machel will help to further develop fruitful cooperation between the Soviet Union and Mozambique.

CUBAN AMBASSADOR MEETS WITH ARKHIPOV

FL252138 Havana Radio Reloj Network in Spanish 2034 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] Ivan Arkhipov, first deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers and CPSU Central Committee member, today met with Lionel Soto, Cuban ambassador to the Soviet Union.

The Soviet and Cuban officials discussed bilateral matters, especially those related to the Cuban-Soviet inter-government joint commission meeting to be held in Havana in April. The meeting between Arkhipov and Lionel Soto also dealt with the increase in bilateral cooperation in the technical and economic sectors. They also discussed the broad projects agreed upon at the third party congress and at the 27th Congress of the Soviet Union Communist Party.

REPORT ON U.S. ADVANCES TO CHILEAN MILITARY

PY291547 Moscow in Spanish to Chile 2130 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Text] In its last issue, the weekly APSI states that the U.S. Government has reportedly devised a plan to sensitize the Chilean military and make it see the need for a change in the Chilean Government. APSI states that the invitation U.S. Army Chief of Staff General John Wickham extended to Chilean Army Deputy Chief of Staff General Santiago Sinclair was reportedly made in keeping with this plan. The invitation was turned down by Sinclair, who claimed numerous institutional obligations as the reason for not traveling to the United States.

APSI states that an official U.S. source has revealed that the invitation was a type of test [preceding word in English]. If Sinclair did not accept, it would mean that Pinochet had decided to close his ranks and prevent (?contacts with) the Chilean military. Should any such invitation be accepted, it would mean that Pinochet no longer has the power to prevent the contacts. [Words indistinct] continues playing both sides the U.S. official source stated, as correctly mentioned by the magazine APSI.

When one talks about contacts, it is understood that one refers to the official British contacts because the British are faithful to the U.S. secret services. [sentence as heard] In turn, referring to the problems seen within the Chilean Armed Forces which, thus far, have been the regime's backbone, the periodical FORTIN MAPOCHO notes in one of its most recent issues that disquiet, dissatisfaction, lack of control, informal meetings, tension, and [word indistinct] prevail in the barracks.

BRIEFS

LATIN AMERICAN TRADE -- Moscow March 26 TASS -- The Soviet Union's trade with most Latin American countries has grown noticeably in 1985 as compared with the previous year. A TASS correspondent learned at the USSR Ministry of Foreign Trade that the USSR's total trade turnover with countries of that region amounted to 10.2 billion roubles in 1985, or a billion roubles more than in 1984. Soviet purchases in Latin America grew rapidly and exceeded 5.9 billion roubles. Soviet export to the countries of the region in 1985 amounted to about 4.3 billion roubles. [Unattributed article: "Gaining a Profound Mastery of the Ideological Wealth of the 27th CPSU Congress: On Studies Within the Political and Economic Education System"]

[Text] Our society's entire life is today determined by the political course outlined by the 27th CPSU Congress. The congress took place at a crucial point in the development of the country and of the modern world as a whole. It formulated the strategy for the struggle for the triumph of the ideals of communism, peace, and progress, and made a creative contribution to the theory of Marxism-Leninism and the practice of improving socialism. It gave answers to the vital questions which time has set for the party and for society and armed the Communists and all working people with a clear vision of the future. Party principles and exactingness, open exposure of shortcomings and errors, and profound analysis of the internal and external conditions surrounding society's development characterized the congress' work.

The main political result of the congress was the general line of accelerating the country's socioeconomic development and strengthening world peace that it adopted. The decisive force in the fulfillment of the concrete program mapped out by the congress is the masses' living creativity. That is why it is a task of paramount importance for party organizations to bring the essence and spirit of the 27th CPSU Congress decisions to every Soviet person and to help people to become clearly and profoundly aware of its innovative decisions and their own involvement in and responsibility for the implementation of those decisions.

"The most essential matter, on which the full force of party influence must today be concentrated," M.S. Gorbachev stressed at the congress, "is for every person to achieve an understanding of the crucial and critical nature of the present moment. Any plans we make will be left hanging in the air if they leave people indifferent, if we cannot arouse the masses' labor and social activeness, energy, and initiative." That is why mastery of the ideological and political wealth of the congress and mobilization of all the forces and creative potential of the Soviet people to implement the congress decisions must now be the center of attention in the ideological and political education work of the party organizations.

The party Central Committee has defined the priority tasks in the propagandization and clarification of the documents and materials of the 27th CPSU Congress. From March-June this year, it is recommended that their study be organized within the system of party and Komsomol political education and the economic education of the working people. Eight or nine study sessions are planned in the various forms of political and economic schools, and five in theoretical, methodological, and economic seminars; schools of the party and economic aktiv; and universities of Marxism-Leninism.

The content of studies must be based on study of the CPSU Central Committee Political Report to the 27th CPSU Congress, the congress resolution on the Political Report, the new edition of the party program, the CPSU Statutes with amendments, and the Basic Guidelines for the Economic and Social Development of the USSR for 1986-1990 and for the Period Through the Year 2000.

The following topics are recommended for study sessions and collective discussions: the 27th CPSU Congress on the main trends and contradictions in the modern world; the acceleration of the country's socioeconomic development — the CPSU's strategic course; the further democratization of society and the deepening of socialist self-management by the people; the main aims and avenues of the CPSU's foreign policy strategy; the enhancement of the party's role and its level of political, ideological, and organizational activity; and the results and historical significance of the 27th CPSU Congress.

In order to clarify the congress materials and give assistance in studying them, it is also necessary to make use of various forms of mass political work. It is recommended that sociopolitical readings, lectures, people's university study sessions, and integrated political days be organized at labor collectives, cultural centers, and places of residence. Lecturers, keynote speakers, and political information and agitation workers should be involved in this explanatory work. Meetings must be held between working people and congress delegates, the party and economic aktiv, production front-runners, and initiators of socialist competition. It is important to do this work in a coordinated way, linking it as far as possible with organizational and economic activity.

Questions of accelerating the country's socioeconomic development must take a central place in the propagandization of the congress materials. In the course of clarifying the provisions of the Basic Guidelines for the Economic and Social Development of the USSR for 1986-1990 and for the Period Through the Year 2000, it should be stressed that the course of acceleration is the key to the resolution of the most important problems — short- and long-term, economic and social, domestic and foreign policy.

Studies in the political and economic education system are called upon to help Communists, Komsomol members, and all working people more energetically in order to resolve the tasks set by the congress. It is important to seek a universal awareness of the fact that the essence of acceleration lies in the new qualitative growth of our economy, the comprehensive intensification of production, and the introduction of efficient forms of management. The 12th 5-Year Plan must be a turning point in this respect. The party puts forward the radical acceleration of scientific and technical progress as the main lever for the intensification of the national economy. Sectors ensuring the acceleration of that progress as well as the highest possible labor productivity and production efficiency will be developed more rapidly.

In revealing the main avenues of the party's economic policy and the tasks and peculiarities of the new 5-year plan, it is necessary to examine in detail questions of modernization both of the national economy as a whole and of the relevant sectors, associations, and enterprises, and to draw attention to the need to bring into play reserves for economic growth, and especially for the improvement of product quality. The radical improvement of product quality must be the vital cause of every Communist and every working person.

The persistent implementation of the party's modern agrarian policy and the fulfillment of the USSR Food Program are priority tasks. The study of these questions by the working people, first and foremost by those employed in sectors of the agro-industrial complex, should help improve the standard of party political and ideological education work in the countryside, strengthen organization and discipline, and mobilize all forces and potential to increase the production of agricultural output.

The congress defined the main avenues of the CPSU's social policy and indicated ways of implementing it. Concern for man has always been at the center of the party's attention. Economic activity is not an end in itself, it is a very important prerequisite for the development of the social sphere. It is from this standpoint that the party approaches the whole range of tasks associated with providing the country with food, supplying the market fully with goods of various kinds, extending the range of services, resolving the housing problem, and further developing health care and education. The implementation of an active social policy provides for the establishment of the principle of social justice and the improvement of social class and national relations.

The utilization of the advantages of the socialist system is impossible without the further democraticization and deepening of socialist self-management by the people and the expansion of publicity in the life of the party and of society. The congress further elaborated questions on improving our democracy and statehood and the entire Soviet political system. Propaganda work must show the new demands on the activity of state and public organizations. The effectiveness of the studies will be all the greater when the students' understanding of the problems of improving socialist democracy is deeper, and their participation in sociopolitical life is more active. The studies should reveal, convincingly and in a well-argued fashion, the essential advantages of socialist democracy as compared to bourgeois democracy, and expose the lies and hypocrisy of bourgeois propaganda on the problems of the rights and freedoms of the individual.

The CPSU Central Committee Political Report to the congress and the new edition of the party program give a comprehensive analysis of the main avenues and features of present-day world development. Their study will make it possible to assimilate, from Marxist-Leninist standpoints, the entire range of problems arising from the crucial nature of the current development of our society and the world in general, questions which characterize the close link between social progress and the strengthening of world socialism, anticolonial revolutions, and the growth of the international communist and workers movement. Questions of the party's foreign policy activity must take an important place in the study of congress materials. The interest in them is quite natural. Through the fault of imperialism, mankind is threatened as never before by nuclear catastrophe. The U.S. Administration and their main fellow travelers in NATO pin their hopes on military strong-arm pressure, exacerbate the international situation, declare openly their aggressive global aspirations, and preach unbridled anticommunism and chauvinism. All this requires the propagandists to step up their exposure of imperialism's aggressive policy and reveal its antipopular, antihuman nature.

It is necessary to explain in detail the main aims and avenues of our party's foreign policy strategy. The CPSU makes tremendous efforts to eliminate the nuclear danger and the arms race and to preserve and strengthen universal peace. The 27th congress put forward an integral program for the total elimination of nuclear and other weapons of mass destruction by the end of the century and the creation of a comprehensive system of international security, and formulated the fundamentals of such a system. In studying the congress materials it is important to stress that these fundamentals arise logically from the CPSU Program and conform fully to the foreign policy initiatives put forward in M.S. Gorbachev's statement of 15 January 1986.

The study of foreign policy questions should promote a profound awareness of the significance of every Soviet person's conscientious labor to successfully fulfill plans for socioeconomic development — a very important condition for consolidating peace and strengthening our motherland's might. Attention should be drawn particularly to the need to increase Soviet people's political vigilance and improve the cultivation of socialist patriotism and internationalism, class consciousness, and intolerance of imperialism and of bourgeois ideology and morality.

The final topic in the study of the congress documents and materials in the current academic year is the activity of the Communist Party. The Political Report to the congress, the new edition of the program, and the amended CPSU Statutes convincingly demonstrate the significance of the party's leading role; formulate the increased demands on the standard of its political, ideological, and organizational activity; and further develop Leninist teaching about the party.

The novelty, scale, and complexity of the set tasks demand from Communists and all party organizations a radical restructuring of party work, the establishment everywhere of an atmosphere of creativity, a principled approach and exactingness, and the active, persistent implementation of the 27th CPSU Congress decisions. An integral part of the restructuring is to learn to work in a new way, to establish a style which meets the tasks of acceleration. This means a concrete, businesslike approach, consistency, unity of word and deed, selection of the most effective means and methods, careful consideration of people's opinion, and bold coordination of the actions of all social forces. Party committees, as the congress pointed out, must become true organs of political leadership. The successful resolution of the set tasks is possible only through the joint efforts of all Communists, whose vanguard role is manifested in practical actions and in the pure and honest nature of the party person. Study sessions must include businesslike discussion of the growth in the demands made on party work. That is an essential condition for increasing Communists' ideological maturity, principles, and activeness in implementing party policy. The congress set the task of utilizing in every way the transforming force of Marxist-Leninist ideology and of strengthening its ties with life. Today it is particularly important to use every form and method of developing a firm scientific philosophy, a high political awareness, and a responsible attitude toward the cause in every sector of activity by every Soviet person. The resolution of the 27th party congress on the CPSU Central Committee Political Report stresses: "Increasing the maturity of the socialist society and building communism means steadily increasing man's awareness, enriching his spiritual world, and bringing the people'screative potential into play."

The successful study of the congress documents and decisions and the quality and effectiveness of study sessions will be determined to a significant degree by how well prepared and informed the propagandists are. It is recommended that party committees, political enlightenment institutes and study rooms, and councils for the economic education of the working people carry out instruction seminars together with propagandists on all of the topics being studied; enlist congress delegates and party, soviet, and economic leaders and scientists to address them; and provide the necessary local materials.

In the study of the congress documents there should be broad utilization of active forms and methods and the collective discussion of theoretical and political issues; they should be linked organically with the students' labor and social life. The knowledge acquired can take material form only in concrete actions to implement the congress decisions. It is necessary to persistently strive to ensure that the study and propagandization of the congress documents and materials promote the inculcation in Soviet people of a feeling of being master of their country, a high sense of public duty and personal responsibility, and an indivisibility of words and deeds, and that they arm communists and all working people with a clear perspective and a concrete program for practical work to implement the plans outlined by the party. It is the task of party organizations and propagandists to help Communists, Komsomol members, and all working people master the ideological wealth of the 27th CPSU Congress in depth and translate its decisions into practical deeds.

Solovyev Speaks at Leningrad Integrated Political Day

PM281436 Leningrad LENINGRADSKAYA PRAVDA in Russian 21 Mar 86 p 1

[LENTASS report: "Mass Energy and Creativity for the Party's Plans. Tasks Linked With the Successful Fulfillment of the 27th CPSU Congress Decisions at the Focus of Attention of Participants in Integrated Political Day Held Yesterday in Leningrad City and Oblast"]

[Excerpt] The 27th CPSU Congress presented Soviet people with large-scale plans in terms of both scope and depth. The party Central Committee Political Report, the new edition of the CPSU Program, and the other congress documents comprehensively elaborated the party's general course of accelerating the country's socioeconomic development and strengthening peace on earth. The decisions of the supreme forum of Communists generated universal support and approval and enormous labor enthusiasm among Leningraders and all Soviet people.

This was said at the integrated political day held yesterday in city and oblast labor collectives. Its participants expressed firm determination to make a fitting contribution to the implementation of the party's creative plans, which are aimed at further enhancing Soviet people's prosperity and strengthening our motherland's might.

Yu.F. Solovyev, candidate member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and first secretary of the Leningrad Party Obkom, addressed working people at the No 16 thermal welding shop of the "Izhorskiy Zavod" association. The discussion at the meeting centered upon ways to fulfill the "Intensification-90" program, the experience of whose elaboration was highly assessed at the congress. It is the basis for the acceleration of scientific and technical progress and the widespread introduction of modern equipment and fundamentally new technologies. Particular attention was given at the meeting to the creation of flexible automated production units which, in conjunction with automated design systems, will make it possible to significantly boost labor efficiency.

An important role in achieving the set objectives has been assigned to the reconstruction of enterprises, shops, and sections. It sets responsible tasks for the collectives of scientific and design institutions.

Questions were raised concerning the restructuring of the economic machinery, the enhancement of output quality, and the development of socialist competition. It was noted that it is necessary to resolutely abandon obsolete management methods and everything that cannot justify itself at the present stage of economic development. Only thus will it be possible to create a comprehensive, efficient, and flexible management system.

The successful fulfillment of set plans, it was emphasized at the integrated political day, depends largely on Leningraders' activeness and creativity. Party and public organizations must launch extensive work to propagandize the initiative of team leaders and workers who were delegates to the 27th party congress, which has been approved by the CPSU Obkom Bureau.

It was emphasized at the meeting that one of the important reserves for increasing work efficiency lies in the intensification of the role played by the human factor. Every labor collective must establish a creative atmosphere and ensure high standards of labor organization, discipline, and order.

Yu.F. Solovyev noted that the party obkom is taking resolute measures to improve the work of trade, transport, and medical institutions and other consumer services spheres. An extensive housing construction program has been planned for the city and the oblast.

It was said at the meeting that the enhancement of material and spiritual prosperity must be linked to the intensification of the struggle against those who evade socially beneficial activity or live on unearned income. Exceptionally great importance attaches to the work to affirm a healthy way of life and to overcome drunkenness, alcoholism, and other negative phenomena in our life.

The participants in the integrated political day expressed ardent approval of the party's policy in the international arena, whose main objective is to ensure for the Soviet people the opportunity to work under conditions of lasting peace. The USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium appeal to the U.S. Congress was a new and vivid manifestation of our state's peace-loving policy. It contains proposals to terminate nuclear tests and ensure lasting peace on earth.

Following the meeting, Yu.F. Solovyev toured other shops of the "Izhorskiy Zavod" Association and conversed with workers.

Ukrainian Party Commends Subsidiary Farming

AU261648 Kiev PRAVDA UKRAINY in Russian 21 Mar 86 p 1

[Unattributed report: "In the Ukrainian Communist Party Central Committee"]

[Text] The Ukrainian Communist Party Central Committee has examined the initiative by Voroshilovgrad Oblast collectives of agro-industrial complex enterprises and organizations to increase foodstuff production.

The adopted decision notes that the collectives of Voroshilovgrad Oblast enterprises and organizations of food, and fruit and vegetables industries, fisheries, trade, and public catering have drawn up plans to increase foodstuff production in the 12th 5-year period by making better use of local raw material resources and existing production capacities; by also providing shops with needed equipment made, on the principles of patronage, at machine-building, chemical, and coal mining enterprises; and by meeting, for the most part, the oblast population's needs for many kinds of foodstuffs that were underproduced or brought from outside.

By raising the procurement of local raw materials, the output of canned fruit and vegetable preserves will increase 50 percent, including much in demand natural [as published] tomatoes, peppers, squash, salads, eggplants, jams, and fruit preserves, which will increase 2 times, and stewed sour and sweet cherries and plums, 6 times. The output of pastry will go up almost threefold, and that of marmelade, candied fruit [zefir], sweetmeats, cakes, and soft drinks, 1.5-2 times. The output of milk products with increased nutritive and biologic values will rise almost 33 percent; the catch and sales of live fish will increase 25 percent. The purchase of surplus fruit, berries, and vegetables from the population will rise and their sales, fresh, will increase 1.5-2 times.

Having attached a great deal of significance to this initative, which is aimed at a greater satsifaction of the population's demands for foodstuffs, the Ukrainian Communist Party Central Committee has requested that the Ukrainian agro-industrial complex state committee, ministries of bread products and the forestry industry, the Main Administration of Internal Waters Pisciculture, the Ministry of Trade, and the Union of Consumer Societies, along with local organizations and their juridsictions, take concrete steps in order to increase foodstuffs production from each ton of raw materials, to breed more fish in inland waters and in warm water reservoirs of electric power systems, and to organize processing enterprises, shops, and delivery centers in areas where agricultural produce is made and procured.

Obkoms and oblispolkoms have been instructed to widely commend the Voroshilovgrad Oblast initiative for increasing foodstuff production from local raw material resources and for improving their supplies to the population; to encourage in every way the development of subsidiary farms at enterprises, private farms of the population, collective gardening, and fruit growing; to tigthen control over the process of readapting enterprises and shops that previously made wine and alcoholic drinks; and to ensure that in the immediate future the population is self-sufficient in the case of foodstuffs which can be produced locally.

Machine-building plants, industrial enterprises, construction, assembly, and other organizations, irrespective of their departmental subordination, are to be more actively engaged in patronage assistance to food industry enterprises in the production of necessary equipment, of means for small-scale mechanization, and of spare parts, and in the construction and reconstruction of shops and sections.

Obkoms, the Ukrainian Trade Union Council and Komsomol Central Committee have been requested to use the decisions of the 27th CPSU and Ukrainian Communist Party Congresses for guidance and to launch purposeful organizational and mass political work in the collective of agro-industrial complex enterprises and organizations in order to foment efficient socialist competitions aimed at increasing the output and at improving the quality and choice of foodstuffs.

Editorial boards of newspapers and television and radio broadcasting are expected to systematically highlight advanced experience accumulated by enterprise and organization collectives of the agro-industrial complex in making fuller use of local raw material resources and possibilities to raise the output of foodstuffs and improve their supplies to the population.

Uzbek Consumers' Societies Union Debates Tasks

GF271912 Tashkent Domestic Service in Uzbek 0215 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] The meeting held in Tashkent by Uzbek Birlashu [Union of Consumers' Societies] discussed the results of the work carried out by the republic's consumers' societies in 1985 and the entire 11th 5-Year Plan period. The tasks concerning the realization of the decisions adopted by the 27th CPSU Congress and those adopted by the CPSU Central Committee and the USSR Council of Ministers concerning the question of measures required for further developing the consumers' cooperative societies were also discussed. It was established that the level of work carried out by the board of Uzbek Birlashu and the all-Uzbekistan consumers' cooperative societies network was not compatible with contemporary demands and the growing needs of the people in rural regions. Regardless of the serious criticisms made in the 16th and subsequent plenums of the Uzbek Communist Party Central Committee, the oblast party conferences, and the 21st congress of the republic's Communists, the cooperative workers have not made a serious improvement in their work.

Contemporary methods in trade are being put into effect with great flabbiness. The tasks assigned for developing the self-service domain for purchasers in Surkhan-Darya, Khorezm, and Syr-Darya Oblasts are not being consistently realized. [sentence indistinct] There are many more shortcomings in the work of Uzbek Birlashu in other fields. Plans related to the process of procuring and purchasing fruits and melons and watermelons are being impaired. A great deal of squandering is being allowed in the process of (?checking) and storing them. There is a low sense of responsibility in the process of service and there is little [word indistinct] in the general nourishment factories.

From various viewpoints, the meeting participants linked the [word indistinct] incidents in the consumers' cooperative societies with the breaching of Leninist principles related to the selection, appointment, and training of cadres. All this does not serve the people. (?The speakers) pointed to the need for reorganizing work in all the domains concerning the republic's consumers' cooperative societies and consolidating state discipline and law.

Significant tasks have been assigned to the field in the 12th 5-Year Plan period. Plans have been made for [words indistinct] and for developing all domains of the work of the consumers' cooperative societies.

Comrade Mikhaylov, first deputy chairman of the Uzbek SSR Council of Ministers, addressed the convocation. Comrade Anichev, second secretary of the Uzbek Communist Party Central Committee, participated in the work of the meeting.

Progress of 'Mir' Orbital Station Flight Reported

LD011126 Moscow TASS in English 1118 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow, April 1 TASS — TASS correspondent reports from the ground control centres:

Under the mission program, Soviet cosmonauts Leonid Kizim and Vladimir Solovyev continue to test the Mir orbital station in the manned flight regime.

Yesterday the cosmonauts checked the functioning of individual systems and equipment and adjusted the onboard computer complex. A technical experiment called "resonance" was carried out to determine the dynamic characteristics of the integrated space system consisting of the base station and two spacecraft.

Two more fuel tanks of the integrated power unit of the station were refuelled and oxygen was pumped into the living compartments under the program of work with the Progress-25 unmanned freight spaceship.

According to telemetry information and crew reports, the onboard systems of the manned complex Mir — Soyuz T-15 — Progress-25 are functioning normally.

The cosmonauts are in good health and feel well.

Further Reportage on Science Academy Speeches

LD271050 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1100 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Excerpts] The annual general meeting of the USSR Academy of Sciences was held last week in the Moscow State University Assembly Hall on the Lenin Hills. Opening it, Academician Anatoliy Petrovich Aleksandrov, the academy president, said that in the current 5-year period Soviet science must substantially increase the contribution it makes to accelerating the rate of scientific and technical progress, mobilizing all forces in order to do this. Particular attention should be given to the urgent problem of implementing scientific results in the national economy. The academy president cited a number of examples of how progressive technology is not used in ferrous metallurgy, how output of an economical internal combustion engine has been started after a great delay, and how progressive technologies capable of yielding great profit are not put into use.

[Begin Aleksandrov recording] I ought to say that such a situation comes about for various reasons, but the reason for this is first and foremost the economic difficulties in introducing new production. Usually new technology leads to either a reduction in the consumption of materials for production, the manufacture of this output becomes less labor intensive, or there is a reduction in energy consumption. These are three ways of modernizing a specific sort of output. In all cases, this leads to the output becoming cheaper, and in all cases, this is, according to natural laws, unprofitable for our enterprises.

This is one of the important reasons why the introduction of a whole number of developments is being held up. We must now exert very great efforts to see that this shortcoming — it is our common shortcoming in the country's economic system — is eliminated. The fight against this must be waged both by us and by industry. In many directions our developments are now, to put it quite simply, mothballed, frozen. This happens for various reasons. Sometimes our staff members have ambitions to claim credit for their work; I would say that these are wholly senseless ambitions, and I want to put it as harshly as that. It is much better when innovation proceeds in conjunction with the institutes in the industry, in conjuction with industry. Industry and the relevant institutes should also accept these innovations as their own affair. Therefore, they must be involved with these developments as soon as they start to hatch, as the saying goes. [end recording]

Petr Nikolayevich Fedoseyev, vice president of the academy, delivered a report: "The 27th CPSU Congress on the Tasks of Soviet Science." In the further improvement of the socialist society, the speaker said, a deciding role falls to economic growth, taking account of the intensification of the scientific and technical revolution.

[Begin Fedoseyev recording] A fundamental task in accelerating scientific and technical progress is to strengthen the link between science and production, and to create ways of integrating science, technology, and production, such as will ensure that scientific ideas can be accurately and rapidly transmitted from their conception to wide application in practice.

It is the urgent task of social sciences at the present stage to make a scientific analysis of the objective contradictions of socialist society, and to work out well-founded recommendations to resolve them. We have firmly adopted the principle that contradiction is a source of development. But this possibility is realized under the essential condition that scope is given to the principle of progressiveness, and that the outmoded and obstructing aspects or forms of the given process are overcome. This also relates to the chief source of social development, the dialectic of productive forces and production relations. Under socialism, there is, on the whole, a correspondence between them, but, as was noted at the congress, this correspondence is not automatically realized. Contradictions also arise, especially in conditions of the acceleration of scientific and technical progress. At present, some aspects of production relations — for instance, elements of the economic mechanism such as the system of economic (?changes), pricing,and material incentives — do not assist, and in many cases hamper the introduction of the latest achievements of science and technology. Academician on Long-Term Scientific Progress Plans

[Program entitled: "Turning the Congress Decisions Into Practical Deeds"; interview with Aleksandr Aleksandrovich Zhuchenko, president of the Moldavian Academy of Sciences and delegate to the 27th CPSU Congress, with correspondent Irina Starchukova; date and place not given — live or recorded]

[Excerpts][Starchukova] The 27th CPSU Congress closed almost 20 days ago. What main conclusions have you drawn for yourself, as head of the republican Academy of Sciences?

[Zhuchenko] For me the most important impression of the congress is first of all the systematic approach to the country's problems. Each one of us now understands that the main thing is not the quantity but the quality of our activity. Questions related to scientific-technical progress produced a particular impression because of the quality of the formulation and arguments on the problems. Questions of speeding up the country's economic and social development are most closely tied up with utilizing the latest scientific and technological achievements. This is setting scientific collectives and scientists a special task. We must solve the most topical questions with greater perseverance, solve them more quickly, and, with the production workers, ensure they are introduced into mass production more effectively.

Of course there are no simple questions here. We must reorganize the scientific research work in each collective. Raising the efficiency of scientific work requires a sharp, quick build-up of the material-technical base of scientific research itself. One cannot speak of the computerization and intensification of the national economy without achieving this process in science itself. In order to solve major scientific-technical problems quickly, it is important to equip scientific institutions with up-to-date instruments and machinery. Of course we ourselves can and must do a great deal in this area, but it is very important to organize scientific instrument-making and to raise the standard on a countrywide scale — I would even say on a CEMA-wide scale.

[Starchukova] We have touched upon computerization. The special importance of this problem to the national economy is also indicated by the fact that a decision by the CPSU Central Committee and the USSR Council of Ministers provides for the formation of an All-Union State Committee for Computer Equipment and Information Science. Well, what is being done in this area by Moldavia's scientists — in the sphere of computerization?

[Zhuchenko] Well, first of all, in the course of the 11th 5-Year Plan, we implemented the first stage of a computer system for collective use in Moldavia. This is a three-level system which has ensured the extensive development of terminals throughout the entire system of the academy. We have succeeded in setting up data banks for the main sectors of research. A center for the automation and metrology of scientific research was set up. This has enabled us to create information retrieval measuring systems [informatsionno-poiskovyye izmeritelnyye sistemy], for instance, the so-called Biotron center has been introduced within the system of the departments of biological-chemical sciences. Now, by the decision of the USSR Academy of Sciences Presidium, this center has been converted into a methodological center for the use of data measuring facilities [informatsionno-izmeritelnyye sredstva]in biological research. This has, of course, made it possible to receive qualitatively new data from biological subjects under research on the basis of multiparameter measurements and, most importantly, to obtain dynamic characteristics of subjects under research, including in stress situations.

It is natural that realizing such a base is only possible on the basis of the training of cadres. A campaign against illiteracy at the level of all scientific staff members was organized. In other words, today the main bulk of scientific workers within the natural-science sphere are confidently handling computers and data banks and we believe that this forms the foundation for introducing computer equipment facilities in the national economy. In other words, one must start the transformations oneself.

[Starchukova] Is there a certain body of institutes which are concerned with these problems?

[Zhuchenko] There is, of course, a certain specialization. But the sense of today's transformations in the academy lies precisely in all-round computerization. In other words, what we are speaking of is the extensive utilization of computer equipment facilities first of all at biological institutes and even at social science institutes.

[Starchukova] Let us return to the following point: At the congress the question of the ties between science — any science, academic, applied, VUZ — and practice, was raised.

[Zhuchenko] First of all the formulation of the question to the effect that science needs to turn toward production and production toward science is, of course, absolutely justified and correct. Yes, the vacuum of responsibility that exists today in this sphere needs to be eliminated. Scientists have many reserves in this field. Of course here we face the well-known contradiction between the scientists' striving to develop their own ideas and the requirement of an interdisciplinary approach toward solving the biggest tasks and problems. Today this contradiction needs to be eliminated and, of course, not infrequently scientists will have to neglect their own personal interests. However, here we must not let the scientists' motivation be eliminated. The question of changing over to tackling programs comprehensively is not a simple one. It is very important here to ensure a situation in which the incentive of each scientific worker and his scientific potential should be realized to the maximum.

On the other hand, it is also important to ensure that our tasks are brought closer to the requirements of the national economy, that is, to concentrate efforts and funds on tackling the biggest and more important tasks. It is assumed that the changeover of the scientists at the Academy of Sciences to the new system of payment for work — payment for work which will depend on the quality of the ultimate research efforts — will in many respects stimulate the interdisciplinary approach to tackling these tasks.

[Starchukova] After all, you already have experience of working according to this system?

[Zhuchenko] Our institutes have been working for 15 years now according to the new system of payment for work — that is in accordance with the well-known Karpov system.

[Starchukova] You mean the Karpov Physicochemical Scientific Research Institute in Moscow?

[Zhuchenko] I mean the principle of payment for work of the Karpov Institute which was implemented back in the seventies at the republic's main institutes. Returning to the question of speeding up production — the system of using the results of the achievements of science in the national economy must be fundamentally changed.

[Starchukova] What is wrong with the existing system? Where are the main shortcomings which create obstacles to the earliest possible introduction of the achievements of science into production?

[Zhuchenko] Unfortunately there are too many of them to list; but the main ones I would mention are the following: first, insufficient material incentive for enterprises to introduce the achievements. The planning system itself in many ways hampers quick and large-scale introduction because planning from the achieved level of complete utilized capacity of shops and existing equipment does not afford the possibility either in time — or, if you like, in space — of changing over to new technologies. All of this must, of course be done within the framework of the plan. It is very important to ensure that production should provide science with purposeful orders. It must be said that, unfortunately not infrequently, our production workers relate these orders at the lowest level and frequently to minor themes and tasks. On the whole a scientific worker is little interested in this. Tackling such a task does not interest him. It seems to me, therefore, that the skill in drawing up orders of production for science is very important; but it needs to be drawn up, of course, taking into account the specific character of the institutes of individual industries and fundamental science. Scientists have always confronted such major important problems with great energy and solved them.

[Starchukova] Well, what forms do interrelations between Moldavian science and production now take?

[Zhuchenko] If one speaks of the forms of interrelations, then, along with the well-known forms — setting up scientific centers of scientific-technical complexes — we regard common scientific-technical programs as very important. We implement them at the levels of ministries and departments. Within the system of the republic there are 14 all-republican, interdepartmental, scientific-technical programs now being implemented. For all of them the Academy's scientific institutions are the main ones. It is necessary to stress the common, all-penetrating, all-permeating criteria of these programs: namely, first increased labor productivity and resources and energy economy. A compulsory condition is that they should be ecologically safe. This reflects the specific nature of our republic and the strain of the ecological situation in the world.

[Starchukova] Do you have institutes whose research efforts have so far not found an active application in the national economy? What is being done in practice to change this?

[Zhuchenko] Unfortunately, the Moldavian Academy of Sciences and our scientific institutions are no exception in this sorry list. Unfortunately, quite a few such research efforts can be quoted. Well, we can quote works in the sphere of the electric-spark alloying of metal surface's — this raises the wear resistance of tools twofold, threefold, up to sixfold. It will suffice to say that in Moldavia alone we annually write off tools worth R30 million. The use of electric-spark alloying — the corresponding installations, including automated ones, have been created for this purpose at our experimental works, of course with the participation of scientists — these, on the whole, are used only on a scale which is determined by the productivity of our comparatively small experimental works. If one speaks of these installations, particular difficulties are connected with narrow departmental interests. For instance, a number of ministries duplicated this installation on their own initiative. But these installations are needed by all departments, and what happens more often than not is that when one department needs something, it succeeds in introducing this far more quickly than when all departments need something at the same time.

[Zhuchenko] I think that the interdepartmental complexes have been and will serve a specific purpose and will solve particular tasks. But we need to introduce things en masse, the entire front of the achievements of science, introduce things over the entire front of the national economy. For that reason it is assumed that, even though it is very important and necessary to set up scientific-technical centers and complexes, the national economic plan should still be the main lever for implementing the achievements of science. In this plan the achievements of science should be set out — by the way, in this lies the advantage of our planning system. It is obvious that in the national economy plans, the sections "Introduction of the Achievements of Science" should become an integral part and not an appendix, as has been the case so far. And in this case scientists's recommendations will perhaps receive state significance. They will form the basis of the plan itself. But for this purpose, as was said at the congress, the nature of the work of Gosplan itself also needs to be changed. It must become a scientific-economic body which plans and monitors the realization of scientific-technical achievements.

[Zhuchenko] Well, first of all, these ties are determined by the academy's active participation in the realization of interindustrial scientific-technical programs. For 7 years now the republican council has been functioning in the republic. It is headed by the president and is made up of deputy ministers of all ministries and departments who head science in their industries, including the deputy chairman of Gosplan who is in charge of science. This enables us to surmount what are in many respects so far still very powerful departmental barriers in solving precisely these programs.

[Starchukova] How do you see these interrelations with Gosplan, either the republican or the union one, in the long-term? When will the union Gosplan change its image and functions?

[Zhuchenko] First of all, it seems to me that a comprehensive program of long-term planning for scientific-technical progress should be made the basis of interrelations between scientific centers and Gosplan. Such programs have been drawn up now and are being drawn up to the year 2010. In each 5-year plan we renew these programs and we do so together with ministries and departments; on the whole this work is carried out by Gosplan and Academy of Sciences. I think that long-term planning of scientific-technical progress is a determining factor for successful cooperation.

[Starchukova] What practical measures to implement the congress decisions will be taken in the immediate future within the system of the Academy of Science? What new things will appear? Where will you start?

[Zhuchenko] First of all, working with people. This is the main thing. And here our main reserve, the human factor, should operate. The task means that each one at his work station should start working more efficiently, more purposefully and with greater application. This is the first thing. Second, I think that in many respects we need to revise the criteria of our work. This especially relates to science: emphasis on the ultimate results of work and not on interim indices. And our ultimate result — the result of scientific work — is increased labor productivity and increased efficiency in the national economy. The congress decisions are a program for each Soviet citizen.

[Starchukova] Thank you, Aleksandr Aleksandrovich, for this interesting conversation. Permit me to wish you all the very best.

Stationary Oil Extraction Rig — The crew of the vessel Stanislav Yudin of the Kaliningrad-Mornefetgazprom association have maritime operation. Our correspondent, Stanislav Chitarin, reports saying that the crane/erection vessel Stanislav Yudin recently started to work on equipment for Kaliningrad oilworkers. Its lifting capacity is 1,600 metric tons. Erection of the first stationary oil-extraction rig on the Soviet Baltic continental shelf demanded eight months of complex and costly underwater hydrotechnical work. The idea was to erect the huge rig on shore and place it over the point of drilling, and this operation is reaching conclusion. The 60-meter jib of the crane has lifted a platform weighing roughly 1,500 metric tons from the moorings on slings. The vessel's captain says this is the first operation of its type in the world. The platform is to be lowered onto the vessel's deck and taken to the place where it will be placed on the legs of the rig. [Summary] [Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 0500 GMT 22 Mar 86 LD]

Antarctic Expedition Continues — The vessels of the flotilla of the 31st Soviet Antarctic expedition are continuing to work in accordance with their set program. As the Ministry of the Maritime Fleet reported to a Mayak correspondent, the Baltic scientific ship Professor Zubov has completed a complex of research on the theme of "Polar Experiment-South." These observations were carried out in a broad expanse of water in the Pacific sector of the upper southern latitudes in the base of the Ross Sea. After visiting the New Zealand port of Wellington, where the seamen will stock up on fresh water and provisions, they will again return to the sixth continent. The motor vessel Professor Zubov will take part in transport operations for the expedition. [Text] [Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 2200 GMT 22 Mar 86 LD]

Possible New Arctic Base — Leningrad, March 26 TASS — An aircraft reconnoitering ice conditions in the Arctic has found a suitable ice floe to serve as the base for the projected Soviet drifting station "Severny Polyus-28" (Northern Pole-28). The pilots, members of the airborne arctic expedition "Sever-38" (North-38) that is to set up the new polar research center, dropped a special pennant on the ice floe and reported their find to Leningrad. Their choice is a field of perennial "Canadian Pack" ice as vast as some six square kilometers, currently drifting 500 kilometers east of Zhokhova Island. An advance party will be landed on the ice floe within the next few days to prepare a runway for transport planes. [Text] [Moscow TASS in English 1521 GMT 26 Mar 86 LD]

Experimental Computer Models — Experimental models of personal office computers have been created at Leningrad "Elektronmash" scientific production association. These minicomputers have a sufficiently large memory; the speed with which operations can be carried out is around a million characters per second [as heard]. A state commission has recommended them for series production. Yaroshevskaya, a project designer, says the machines are very necessary for engineers, planners, and programmers. A number of enterprises will begin making personal computers for various industrial purposes this year. [Summary] [Moscow Television Service in Russian 1130 GMT 26 Mar 86 LD]

Mass-Produced Computers — Minsk, March 15 TASS — Batch production of personal computers has been started at the computer technology production amalgamation in Minsk. The personal computer can be switched to automated production control systems and computer centres. The miniature machine is of a low weight and size. It can be easily placed on a working desk. The personal computer is relatively cheap, easy to handle and has multiple uses. It can be applied in teaching and designing, research and medicine, to optimise planning calculations and accounting operations. [Text] [Moscow TASS in English 1452 GMT 15 Mar 86 LD]

More On News Conference

LD011945 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1637 GMT 1 Apr 86

[News conference at the USSR Ministry of Foreign Affairs Press Center in Moscow on 1 April with Georgiy Markovich Korniyenko, USSR Ministry of Foreign Affairs first deputy minister; Valdimir Fedorovich Petrovskiy, chief of the USSR Ministry of Foreign Affairs International Organizations Department; Vladimir Lomeyko, head of the USSR Ministry of Foreign Affairs Press Department -- recorded]

[Excerpt] [Lomeyko] A question from Rajiv Shah of the Indian PATRIOT newspaper: In the USSR's opinion, what mechanisms for talks can be the most effective to achieve a ban on nuclear weapons tests?

[Korniyenko] The Soviet Union's proposal on a radical solution of the problem of banning nuclear weapons tests envisages, as is known, the use of all possible mechanisms of talks to achieve this aim. I would remind you, in this connection, that the Soviet Union has proposed to the United States that bilateral Soviet-U.S. talks begin to work out an understanding on the total banning of nuclear weapons tests. We also have confirmed our proposal to the United States and Great Britain to resume, and to bring to a conclusion, the trilateral talks broken off by the United States in 1980. We also are prepared to make use of the proposal forwarded by the nonaligned countries to hold consultations to extend the Moscow treaty banning nuclear tests in three environments into the fourth environment which it does not currently include -- underground. Simultaneous with this, we also are in favor of beginning multilateral talks without delay within the framework of the Geneva disarmament conference in which all the nuclear powers can participate. I particularly would like to stress that the Soviet Union does not impose any preliminary conditions and does not give preference to any of the abovementioned mechanisms. In our opinion, each can play a useful role in achieving an agreement on such an important question as banning nuclear weapons tests.

In our opinion, simultaneous with bilateral or trilateral talks, multilateral talks also can be held on banning testing in order to work out an appropriate treaty. And, we stress that questions of verification can be discussed at all the talks, at the same time as other articles of the treaty. Finally, to give a stimulus to dialogue on the question of banning testing and, primarily, to speed up the start of specific talks between the USSR and the United States, CPSU Central Committee General Secretary Gorbachev proposed something that the U.S. President already has spoken of; namely, to meet in the capital of a European power in the near future to exchange opinions on the problem of banning testing. Thus, it is now up to the U.S. side.

[Petrovskiy] I would like to add to this that we informed U.S. Government some time ago that we already have appointed a delegation to conduct talks with the United States on questions of ceasing nuclear weapons tests. The head of that delegation, Andrey Mikhaylovich Petrosyants, is currently in Geneva and he is ready to sit down at the negotiating table with a U.S. delegation at any time if agreement is reached to conduct such talks.

[Lomeyko] A correspondent of the Indian PTI [Press Trust of India] agency, Mr Gupta, has the following question: Does Reagan's refusal to meet Gorbachev to discuss the question of banning nuclear tests under the pretext that it is necessary to discuss the whole complex of Soviet-U.S. relations at such a meeting mean that Gorbachev will not go to Washington this year?

[Korniyenko] First, we do not want to think Reagan has said his final word on a special meeting on banning nuclear weapons tests. He has not said he rejects such a meeting. Well, I repeat, we would not like to think this is the final word.

As far as the second part of the question is concerned, I quite clearly would like to say that in proposing now that a meeting be held specially in Europe in the very near future to discuss the question of banning nuclear weapons tests, Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev did not intend that this proposal, this meeting, if it takes place, should replace the meeting which was agreed to in Geneva and which is to take the form of a visit by him to the United States. This question has not been taken off the agenda.

[Lomeyko] Some questions from the floor, please.

[Unidentified voice] In connection with Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev's message to the UN secretary general, what role do you allocate to the United Nations in creating an all-embracing system of international security?

[?Petrovskiy] Our proposal on the creation of an all-embracing system of international security which was put forward at the 27th congress undoubtedly is a multifaceted and global task in the sense it requires the joint efforts of all states and, therefore, it is quite natural that in solving it a contribution must be made and a role must be played by the United Nations which, in accordance with its charter, is called upon to serve as the center for harmonizing the actions of states. It must be noted that that prestigious organization has firmly confirmed its role in the system of international relations over the past 4 decades as a unique and universal instrument of international cooperation. It has proven capable in a whole series of cases of taking practical measures with regard to reducing the danger of war. Naturally, the organization will do much more in the future than has been done up to now. I believe the United Nations is capable of contributing to the creation of the material, the political-legal, and moral-psychological guarantees required to create a system for a just and secure world [or peace].

An important role in creating an all-embracing system of international security also can be played by direct dialogue between the Security Council permanent members which are, moreover, nuclear powers and all the more so since, according to the organization's charter they have particular responsibility for maintaining international peace and security. It is precisely for this reason that our country proposes that the leaders of the five powers hold a roundtable meeting and discuss what can and must be done both to strengthen peace and security and, primarily, to eliminate nuclear weapons.

Thus, as we see, the United Nations has rather large opportunities to make a contribution in the creation of an all-embracing security system.

[Unidentified speaker] Stuart Lowey, a correspondence of the U.S. television company CNN, asks how diplomatic contacts are progressing regarding the timing for Comrade Gorbachev's visit to the United States?

[Korniyenko] What the administration has publicly stated has indeed been brought to our knowledge through diplomatic channels. I have in mind the times which the U.S. side considers most convenient for it. For our part, the point of view which you know and which was formulated in the Political Report at our congress -- how we imagine a new meeting between the leaders of our states -- also has been conveyed to the administration quite officially.

That is, there must first of all be confidence in the success of such a meeting, in a constructive outcome of such a meeting, and then the dates will be no problem. Any time will be acceptable for the Soviet leadership, even if it requires a change in existing plans. This would be done for the sake of that.

Alekseyev Notes U.S. Rejection

OW020537 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1400 GMT 31 Mar 86

[From the "Novosti" newscast; commentary by Sergey Alekseyev]

[Text] Peter H. Roussel, deputy White House press secretary, made a statement in Santa Barbara, California practically rejecting the new Soviet peace initiatives outlined in Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev's address. Our commentary:

[Alekseyev] Hello, comrades. Yes, today, when millions of people of our planet were united by the new hope that the Washington administration would at last make a reciprocal step in the direction of peace, a representative of that same administration came out with that sort of statement. On behalf of the U.S. President, the statement talks about the immutable U.S. position on the question of the Soviet nuclear test moratorium, repeating for the nth time arguments on behalf of the necessity of those tests to ensure the reliability and effectiveness of nuclear forces. The statement also practically rejects our proposal for a summit meeting in Europe in the near future for the purpose of concluding an agreement on the banning of nuclear tests and, to top it off, it once again invites Soviet specialists to observe the next U.S. nuclear explosion on the Nevada test range scheduled for mid-April.

It is noteworthy that on the very eve of the issuance of the statement, the U.S. President, at a White House meeting with our schoolgirl Katya Lycheva, said that he, -- and I quote: also wants the total liquidation of nuclear arms, that he has lived through four wars and is striving for peace.

How is one to reconcile these words of the President with the statement made by one of his subordinates? One wishes to believe that this statement is not as yet the U.S. answer to the new Soviet proposal, which is tied to the most important question of today. Otherwise, the world has every right to consider Washington's action to be a demonstrative, criminal challenge not only to the Soviet Union, but to all peoples of the world.

[Text] New York April 1 TASS -- The U.S. television network ABC, touching upon the TV address by the General Secretary of the CPSU Central Committee Mikhail Gorbachev during which he proposed a meeting in Europe with President of the USA Ronald Reagan to solve the question of banning nuclear tests, pointed out that the idea was clearly not to the liking of the U.S. Administration.

It was emphasised in the reportage that the White House had rejected Mikhail Gorbachev's proposal at once, declaring only that it does not suit the best interests of the USA, its friends and allies. The administration rejects the moratorium under the pretext that it is very difficult to verify. It also insists that the reliability of the existing arsenals of nuclear weapons should be verified periodically.

The television company emphasised that the administration needs the explosions to develop new weapon systems in the "star wars" programme. But American expert in the sphere of arms control Barry Blechman who dealt with those matters in the Carter administration is of the opinion that the administration simply does not want a test ban under any conditions and so invents various justifications, overestimates technical difficulties of verification, etc.

Dubinin Refutes U.S. Stance

[Text] New York April 1 TASS -- The banning of nuclear tests, their prohibition is the simplest, real, reliable and effective step to ending the nuclear arms race and to a considerable extent to preventing an arms race in outer space, a press conference at the United Nations Headquarters was told today by the USSR Permanent Representative at the United Nations Yuriy Dubinin. This step accords with the most important task of our time -- that of stopping the arms race and taking the disarmament process, first of all in the nuclear field, out of deadlock. That is why the bold Soviet proposals directed at ending nuclear tests are evoking a tremendous positive response of the peoples, of political and public circles in the whole world, including in the United States and the United Nations Organization.

The ending of nuclear weapon tests, Yuriy Dubinin noted, in an organic part of the Soviet programme of ridding mankind of nuclear arms by the year 2000. A package of fundamentally important major and effective measures to eliminate the nuclear threat was set forth by the USSR on January 15 and then confirmed and developed in the Political Report of the CPSU Central Committee to the 27th CPSU Congress. The mainstays of an all-embracing system of international security, set forth in these proposals, harmoniously agree with the aims and tasks of the International Year of Peace proclaimed by the United Nations Organization and with the United Nations Charter. At the same time the question of ending nuclear tests lends itself to an independent and, moreover, quick solution, given of course mutual desire.

That is why the Soviet Union hopes that the United States Administration has not yet said its final word in connection with the proposal by the general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee to meet with the United States President already in the near future in one of the European capitals in order to solve this question of immense importance for the whole of mankind.

The permanent Soviet representative to the United Nations resolutely refuted the groundless contentions by the American side that by making its porposals the USSR supposedly wants to pick up propaganda points, to outwit or outdo the other side. Everybody would be happy if the United States responded with similar "propaganda" and joined the unilateral Soviet moratorium, he stressed.

Zagladin Cables Senator Cranston

LD020811 Moscow TASS in English 0708 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 2 TASS -- Vadim Zagladin, a deputy of the USSR Supreme Soviet, addressed American Senator Alan Cranston, as a convinced supporter of a moratorium, that he use his prestige among his colleagues in the U.S. Congress to urge the U.S. Administration to end nuclear testing.

While the Soviet Union's moratorium on all nuclear testing, the proposals put forward by Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, on March 29, pave the ground for a total ban, the telegram from Vadim Zagladin says, the U.S. Administration has once again demonstrated its reluctance to heed the voice of reason and take the path leading to disarmament. The nuclear explosions conducted in Nevada, the administration's refusal to discuss the Soviet proposals undermine hopes for a limitation and, in the final analysis, elimination of nuclear weapons. Since no testing is necessary if one does not wish to preserve such weapons and further upgrade them.

My colleagues in the USSR Supreme Soviet are unanimous that it is necessary to put an end to nuclear testing so that mankind could meet the 21st century without the Sword of Damocles of a nuclear threat hanging over them, Vadim Zagladin emphasises.

Test Ban Supporters Cited

[Text] A Sensible Proposal...

Washington, 30 Mar -- The Soviet Union's authorities reaffirmation of its political will to seek to transform a nuclear test ban into an immutable norm of international relations was received with tremendous interest by the public here. News agencies carried reports from Moscow, marked "urgent," which emphasized: "Announcing that the USSR is giving President Reagan another chance, M.S. Gorbachev declared on Saturday that the Soviet Union will continue to observe its unilateral moratorium as long as the United States refrains from carrying out a nuclear explosion."

"The Soviet Union has again demonstrated its sincere desire to end nuclear weapons tests. Without any doubt, the ball is now in President Reagan's court. He must give an answer. In my view, it will be difficult for the United States to continue tests because they can no longer be justified," G. La Rocque, director of the Center for Defense Information, told your correspondent.

"A few days ago we who work in the Center for Defense Information sent a letter on this issue to President Reagan. I think that holding a meeting between M.S. Gorbachev and R. Reagan is a very sensible proposal because first, it is easy to implement and second, it relates to a question which brooks no delay."

"Most Americans support the Soviet proposal. I fully agree that the moratorium is the simplest and most effective step toward ending the nuclear arms race," (J. Koks), national coordinator of the American Peace Test organization, said in conversation.

U.S. Response Examined

PM020941 Moscow SOTSIALISTICHESKAYA INDUSTRIYA in Russian 1 Apr 86 p 3

[Article by our international observer G. Dadyants: "It Is Still Not Too Late"]

[Text] The address on Soviet television by M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, has been received with enormous attention and hope by the entire world public.

It was concerned with the ultimate problem -- the problem of ending nuclear tests. The Soviet leader's readiness to meet with President Reagan in the very near future in London, Rome, or any other European capital to reach agreement on this question is being regarded by political observers as authoritative confirmation by the Soviet Union of its political will to seek to turn the ban on nuclear explosions into an immutable norm of interstate relations.

"The Soviet Union has once again demonstrated its sincere desire to stop nuclear weapons tests," G. La Rocque, director of the American Center for Defense Information, stated. "There is no doubt that it is now up to President Reagan."

What, then, has President Reagan done?

The White House essentially failed to respond to the proposal -- a proposal concerning the most important question of the present day -- but hurried from the outset to reject the idea of a summit meeting. Moreover, Regan, White House chief of staff, stated that the United States intends to continue carrying out nuclear explosions.

The American Administration's negative reaction to the new Soviet peace initiative shows that the United States does not want nuclear disarmament. Clearly, all President Reagan's statements in Geneva that nuclear war was impermissible and that the United States would not seek military superiority have remained mere words. Washington continues to place the interests of the military-industrial complex above those of mankind and even its own people.

The American Administration's refusal to halt nuclear explosions shows that the people there do not appreciate, or do not want to appreciate, the prevailing situation in the world. The quantity of stockpiled nuclear weapons has acquired a new quality. As a result of the achievements of scientific and technical progress the nuclear arms race is going out of control and could end up being controlled solely by computers. In this regard the risk of a world nuclear war, including one as the result of an error or accident, centuples.

The Soviet Union is doing all in its power to stop any further dangerous development of events. Eight months ago, on the 40th anniversary of the American atomic bombing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki, we introduced a moratorium on nuclear explosions, hoping that the United States would follow this good example. Then, after the meeting between M.S. Gorbachev and President R. Reagan in Geneva, the moratorium was extended until 31 March. The United States not only did not join the Soviet moratorium but even continued to carry out nuclear explosions, including explosions directly designed to implement the "star wars" program. A few days before the expiry of the Soviet moratorium, the United States carried out a nuclear explosion in Nevada. It has now become known that they intend to detonate yet another nuclear device.

How can the U.S. stance be described? It cannot be described as other than provocative.

It is highly symtomatic that the refusal to join the Soviet moratorium was accompanied by other provocative U.S. actions in the international arena -- intrusion by American warships into Soviet territorial waters in the Black Sea, demands for a 40-percent cut in the Soviet Union's UN diplomatic staff, and flagrant provocations against Libya and Nicaragua.

What are they aiming at in the White House? By using force they aim to dictate their will to other countries and peoples. Here the American leaders state that they thus also intend to influence Soviet policy.

Let us say straightaway that we are talking about an attempt involving clearly unsuitable means. No one ever succeeded by using strong-arm methods against our state in the past, and, today, as M.S. Gorbachev stressed, they are simply ludicrous.

Obviously they cannot or do not want to understand in the White House that the restraint being shown by the Soviet Union is not a sign of weakness. This restraint is attributable to a keen sense of responsibility for the fate of the world, responsibility which is sadly lacking in the American Administration.

It lacks even a basic sense of reality if it hopes to achieve military superiority over the Soviet Union using the nuclear-pumped lasers tested in Nevada. There are no weapons which the Soviet Union is not prepared to ban or place under strict international control [kontrol], and nor have there been or will there be any weapons which it is incapable of creating if they appear in the United States.

In rejecting the Soviet peace initiative, the American Administration is showing once again its arrogance and ostentatious disregard for the opinion of the peoples, the world community, and, ultimately, its own people. P. Warnke, former head of the American delegation at the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks, has stated that the U.S. Administration is committing a very serious error in refusing the Soviet proposal. A futher buildup in nuclear armaments will result in an undermining of America's own security.

The development of the world has now entered a stage which requires new approaches to questions of international security. You cannot today, in the nuclear space age, think in the categories of the past. It must ultimately be understood that everything has fundamentally changed and that the question is no longer just that of the preservation of peace but of the survival of mankind.

It is quite clear that if the American explosions continue, the Soviet Union will also be forced to renew its nuclear tests, because it will no longer be able to forgo its own security or that of its allies. The consequences of the nuclear arms race in the prevailing conditions can be dangerously unpredictable.

The Soviet moratorium has expired but there is still time. "It is still not too late to stop the nuclear arms race," M.S. Gorbachev said in his address. "A major first step in that direction is needed. The halting of nuclear tests by everyone, above all the Soviet Union and the United States, as well as the other nuclear powers, could be such a step."

The peoples of the world demand that Washington heed the voice of reason and immediately stop its nuclear explosions. Today this question affects each and every one of us.

CHERVOV INTERVIEW CRITICIZES EUROPEAN SDI

AU270608 Bratislava PRAVDA in Slovak 21 Mar 86 p 6

[Interview with USSR Colonel General N. Chervov by APN military commentator V. Morozov: "The Dangerous Nature of the European Variant of the So-Called Strategic Defense Initiative. The Threat of Increased Tension in Europe" -- date and place not given; initial paragraph is paper's introduction]

[Text] The idea of creating a West European antimissile defense has been of late actively assessed [posudzuje] on the pages of the West European countries' press.

High-ranking NATO generals -- B. Rogers, M. Werner, and W. Altenburg -- have already spoken on that theme. At the request of the NOVOSTI military commentator V. Morozov, prominent Soviet military-political expert Colonel General N. Chervov takes a stance on some questions mentioned in an interview by B. Rogers, commander in chief of the NATO Armed Forces in Europe (in the NEUE OSNABRUECKER ZEITUNG newspaper) and W. Altenburg, general inspector of the FRG Bundeswehr (in DER SPIEGEL magazine).

[Morozov] What can be said about the B. Rogers' and W. Altenburg's statements about the idea of a European variant of the American Strategic Defense Initiative -- the "European Defense Initiative"?

[Chervov] Such propagation of a new "idea" deliberately confuses people. What is involved here is not at all the modernization of the air defense system. The NATO bloc assesses the creation of a variant of a West European antimissiles defense. Rogers openly says that Western Europe is allegedly not to wait for some sort of a "spinoff" ["odpad"] or "secondary raw materials" of the so-called Strategic Defense Initiative, but must itself create a corresponding antimissile system. Altenburg, too, sings the same song.

What will it lead to? To a further arms buildup, of course. DER SPIEGEL magazine notes that the "West and East will arrive at the new equilibrium of fear, but on a substantially more complicated level and by expending much greater resources." It would seem that such a prospect of the realization of the plan of the Strategic Defense Initiative is, on the whole, clear. However, Altenburg turns everything upside down and asserts that "this does not at all have to become a new round of feverish arms buildup,... but if you want to, these are incentives for disarmament... this is an absolutely new moment in thinking." This is a strange naivete! Such myths are refuted by reality. After all, one envisages the development and production of new weapons, and this -- in a normal human language -- is called feverish arms buildup.

One cannot run away from the truth and pretend that creating new antimissile weapons according to the variant of the so-called European Defense Initiative are a "blessing" for Western Europe. When we look the truth in the eye, fomenting a feverish arms buildup in yet another respect would increase tension in Europe and lead to the growth of the threat of war. Strengthening the security of Western Europe should not be sought along the line of the so-called American Strategic Defense Initiative and European Defense Initiative, but along the line of a complete liquidation of nuclear weapons on earth, along the line of ridding the European Continent of nuclear and chemical weapons. The proposals submitted by M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, in his statement of 15 January 1986 are opening realistic possibilities for a successful course in that respect.

[Morozov] General Rogers speaks about U.S. "restraint" within the framework of the program of the so-called Strategic Defense Initiative which, allegedly, is restricted to research only. What can be said in this connection?

[Chervov] In this respect, Mr Rogers has forgotten two things: The first one is his own statement in the French magazine SCIENCE ET VIE (October 1985) that in the U.S. "star wars" program, "any restraint or lagging behind the USSR did not and does not exist." To prove it, he submits these facts: "When I was the Army's chief of staff, all scientific research work in the sphere of antimissile defense was subordinated to me...We received the order: A. to speed up scientific research work so as to prevent the Russians from achieving superiority; B. to develop a prototype and test it."

"In 1979, when I left that post in connection with the transfer to NATO, we achieved such success that, as it was envisaged, we could stop one fired bullet with the help of another fired bullet." Further, Rogers openly states that the United States has never halted research in the sphere of antimissile defense and has not limited it, that the work has continued at full speed also after the signing of the agreement on antimissile defense in 1972. "The Strategic Defense Initiative," Rogers says, "is not something new that has just been invented; it is already an old idea."

That is the way it is -- in black and white. Washington officials blather about the "restraint" of the United States, and he, Rogers, refutes everything. "That is cheap propaganda," he said in October 1985. It is not clear why Rogers has now made a 180-degree turn and has also begun speaking about "restraint," by which he refutes his own words.

The second circumstance is the existing situation. Rogers obviously knows that the Strategic Defense Initiative ranks in the Pentagon among those military strategic programs (with the MX ICBMs, the ballistic missiles on submarines of the Trident system, and the strategic B-1B bombers) having highest priority. The administration's budget documents state openly that the United States, regardless of the course of the Geneva talks and the USSR's standpoint on that issue, will continue all the way to the full development and deployment of the antimissile defense with elements of space bases. The real intentions of the U.S. Administration to accelerate the work on the Stategic Defense Initiative are attested to by the billions of dollars requested for it. For example, for the 1987 fiscal year, the Pentagon alone requests for the so-called Strategic Defense Initiative $4.8 billion (75 percent more than in the current fiscal year).

The greatest part of the work within the framework of the so-called Strategic Defense Initiative is in the stage of experiments and construction of demonstration models for carrying out tests. This activity is at variance with the spirit of the agreement on antimissile defense, and some of them (the tests of an X-ray laser outside the polygons [polygony] of antimissile defense) are at direct variance with the 1972 agreement.

In the work for the so-called Strategic Defense Initiative the main U.S. military-industrial companies, universities, laboratories of leading firms, as well as private research organizations participate. Could one imagine the United States spending (in 5 years) $26 billion on research to later abandon the idea of "star wars" only because "the Russians will be against their deployment"? It is also ridiculous to think that $26 billion would be earmarked only to resolve a theoretical question whether it is or it is not possible to develop offensive space devices. Weinberger comments on it openly: "I exclude the possibility of relinquishing strategic defense, be it at the research stage or at the deployment stage." The U.S. President himself declared on 7 February 1986 that he will do everything he can for the continuation of research and tests within the framework of the so-called Strategic Defense Initiative.

Mr Rogers obviously knows all this. Therefore it is not clear why it was necessary to mix up everything like that. Perhaps he has received the order from Washington to rehabilitate himself somehow for the statements in SCIENCE ET VIE. Or his task was to help the U.S. Administration to more cleverly circumvent the new Soviet initiatives which propose to Europe and all people not "star wars," but a world without nuclear weapons.

[Morozov] According to Rogers' view, in case the East and the West would succeed in creating effective defense systems, that is, their own "space shields," "general tranquility" would prevail and none of the sides would need nuclear weapons. What is your opinion?

[Chervov] A simultaneous creation of "space shields" in the East and West will lead to a very unstable, critical situation. The following is involved:

If one of the sides deploys offensive and defensive systems, and the other has only offensive, in that case the first one gains a marked strategic superiority and the possibility of launching a disarming nuclear strike. In such a situation the reduction of strategic offensive weapons loses sense for the other side. It must perfect and develop them in order to maintain the possibility to renew the strategic equilibrium. This is the elementary logic of nuclear counterweight, based on the objectively existing interdependence of offensive and defensive strategic systems.

But also if the two sides had offensive and defensive systems the situation would be worse than if the two sides had only offensive weapons. Calculations reveal that at a minumum, very small advantages of one of the sides in the effectiveness of its defensive system immediately destabilize the entire situation. Such a situation exists also when the level of offensive weapons is markedly reduced. In other words, with both sides having "space shields," reductions of strategic offensive systems lose their value, because such reduction will no longer guarantee the stability of the situation to the sides, particularly when one of the sides clearly wants to gain superiority in defensive systems, such as the United States does it now.

At a press conference in Geneva, M. Gorbachev presented an original example of a situation when both sides have "space shields": "Imagine what the consequences of even a coincidental collision in outer space would be. Let us say that something has separated from a rocket, its warhead of the rocket booster would tear off and collide with a grouping of these space weapons. Signals will be sent, and all this can be interpreted as the other side's attempt to destroy these weapons. Computers go into action, and in such a case politicians cannot do anything sensible. And we will become slaves to these events."

We know the tragic fate of the Challenger space shuttle. If that were to happen with the two sides' "space shields" in existence, the computers of the American "space shields" would begin working immediately. And how would it end?

A joint deployment of "space shields" -- that is a deceptive course, which creates the illusion of strengthening the security of the sides, but in reality undermines it. The USSR favors a radical reduction of nuclear weapons, but without deploying extensive systems of antimissile defense and without developing offensive space weapons. Only such a course can lead to the total liquidation of nuclear weapons and the stabilization of the situation.

MBFR DELEGATE NEYLAND VIEWS NEW BLOC PROPOSALS

PM271155 Moscow MOSKOVSKIYE NOVOSTI in Russian No. 12, 23 Mar 86 Signed to Press 18 Mar 86 p 5

[Article by Nikolay Neyland, member of the Soviet delegation at the Vienna talks: "12 Steps To Meet the West"]

[Text] In late February at the Vienna talks on the mutual reduction of armed forces and armaments in central Europe, the socialist countries undertook an important new initiative.

The GDR delegation, on behalf of the GDR, Poland, the USSR, and the CSSR, submitted a detailed draft "agreement on an initial reduction of ground forces and armaments by the Soviet Union and the United States with a subsequent nonincrease in the levels of the sides' armed forces and armaments and related measures in central Europe." The Warsaw Pact states' desire to achieve a positive change at the talks was reaffirmed. What characterizes the submitted draft?

The new proposals, while preserving all the fundamental provisions contained in the socialist countries' 14 February 1985 proposals, greatly develop them, add detail, and supplement them. The new draft considers those elements of the West's position set forth 5 December last year which are acceptable.

Speaking in Vienna, V. Mikhaylov, the leader of the Soviet delegation at the talks, noted the 12 points on which the socialist countries took steps to bring the positions closer. They essentially extend to all the main fields of a possible accord: the reduction of Soviet and U.S. troops, the provision on verification [kontrol], and others.

Taking into account the West's position, the socialist countries agreed on reduced volumes for the initial reductions of troops of the USSR and United States and also with the West's proposed 3-year deadline for a subsequent freeze. They provide in their draft agreement for the establishment, for the entire period of its operation, of permanent points for monitoring the exit and entrance of troops from the region or into the region of the reductions, the possibility of undertaking on-site verification [proverka] following a justified request, the creation of a consultative commission, and the exchange of information on troops coming under the operation of the nonincrease undertaking, and other points.

The NATO representatives assert frequently but unfoundedly that the achievement of progress at the talks is impeded by the Warsaw Pact countries' reluctance to agree on verification measures. It is now obvious that that is by no means the point. The socialist countries stand and have stood for sensible verification according with the content and point of disarmament measures.

And so a new step has been taken at the Vienna talks, bearing witness to the Warsaw Pact countries' possession of the political will not only to move the protracted talks from a standstill but also to lay a practical foundation to agreed reductions of conventional armed forces. All this refutes the militarists' phony arguments that the abolition of nuclear weapons will leave the West "defenseless" in the face of "Soviet military superiority."

Several weeks have elapsed since the new initiative was put forward and time has shown that the Western participants in the talks are unfortunately continuing to impose on the Warsaw Pact countries terms for the agreement which would put them at a disadvantage compared to the NATO countries.

How else is it possible to assess the Western participants' persistent attempts to unjustifiably extend verification measures beyond the framework of the agreed region of central Europe, that is to the territory of the Soviet Union, which fundamentally contradicts the very mandate of the Vienna talks? The Western participants are seeking to minimize the real reductions of armed forces and are refusing to resolve the question of arms reduction and at the same time are arbitrarily increasing and complicating their demands for verification and taking them to the point of absurdity, as though this was the main aim of the talks, and not the reduction of military antagonism in central Europe. The Vienna talks are not taking place in a vacuum, they are an important part of the overall process of talks to halt the arms race and of the consolidation of trust between states. "The main thing here," as M.S. Gorbachev said at the 27th CPSU Congress, "is to bring matters to a mutually acceptable balance of interests."

GORBACHEV TO VISIT HUNGARY FOR PACT SESSION

LD311856 Budapest Domestic Service in Hungarian 1630 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Report by correspondent Jozsef Barat]

[Excerpt] Among Mikhail Gorbachev's upcoming trips this year only one can be viewed as certain now -- the CPSU general secretary will visit Budapest and will participate in the Warsaw Pact Political Consultative Committee session due to take place there in the near future.

Vadim Loginov, Soviet deputy foreign minister, said this in response to a question from Budapest Radio's correspondent at his briefing held especially for Hungarian journalists accredited to Moscow.

The meetings among socialist country leaders have played no small role in developing the Soviet Union's stance to ease international tension, as well as the so-called Gorbachev proposals, said Deputy Foreign Minister Loginov. Then, he expressed his hope that the Hungarian capital might be the venue of new initiatives of major importance. The Budapest period, as Vadim Loginov described it, hopefully will be characterized by wide international reaction.

IZVESTIYA ROUNDTABLE ON CEMA INTEGRATED PROGRAM

PM281531 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 22 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 5

[Interview with Vyacheslav Sychev, secretary of CEMA, and Arnold Romanov, deputy chairman of the USSR State Committee for Science and Technology, by Sergey Dardykin, IZVESTIYA observer for the Socialist Countries Department, under the rubric "IZVESTIYA Roundtable": "Preparing for the 21st Century" -- first paragraph is editorial introduction]

[Text] Developing the economy by qualitatively different, intensive methods today means introducing into production in good time and to maximum effect all the best that has been produced by the human intellect. This idea came across more than once from the rostrum of the 27th CPSU Congress. Having declared a course aimed at intensifying the national economy, in December last year the CEMA countries adopted the Integrated Program of Scientific and Technical Progress for the period through the end of this century. It covers five priority areas: the application of electronics to the national economy, comprehensive automation, accelerated development of nuclear power engineering, new materials and the technologies to produce and process them, and biotechnology.

Editor: Why have precisely five areas been designated and not six or four? And why have precisely these areas been selected from all the diverse problems of contemporary science and technology?

Sychev: The answer is very simple. If we make rapid progress in these areas, broad progress will be ensured across the entire economic front. There is no sector of the national economy, or virtually no sector, where progress in these five areas of science and technology would not lead to decisive changes.

Editor: The program is calculated to cover 15 years. Is there any guarantee that by this time revolutionizing scientific discoveries will not have emerged that will force the content of this joint quest to be revised in some way?

Sychev: There is not and cannot be any such guarantee. It is calculated, for example, that by the end of the century the number of microprocessors will exceed the number of electric lamps in the world. This is one of the forecasts already made today. But it is possible that discoveries in science and technology will be made that we don't even suspect today. Consequently, the CEMA countries do not regard the program as something immutable. One thing is clear: The level of the tasks set by the program cannot be lowered.

Romanov: But it is perfectly possible that it can be raised. New, more advanced solutions to problems must immediately affect the nature of the program's targets. It is envisaged that it will constantly be augmented, improved, and modified. Not only in conformity with those trends in scientific and technical progress that are in fact already arising, but also in anticipation of them. Implementation of the Integrated Program must proceed side by side with the development of the corresponding areas of science and technology in the world and, in some cases, overtake it.

Editor: Western propaganda stubbornly insists on the idea that the Integrated Program is the socialist countries' answer to the Western European "Eureka" program.

Sychev: This is untrue for one simple, purely chronological reason. As is well known, the decision to develop the program was taken at the CEMA economic summit in June 1984. It was then that its priority areas, widely reported in the press, were defined. At that point the "Eureka" program had not even been heard of. On the other hand, it is not surprising that many aspects of the two programs coincide. What is more, it would be unnatural if there were cardinal differences between them. The logic of scientific and technological development is the same throughout the world.

Romanov: The CEMA countries were the first to take the step of combining their potential in the chief areas of scientific and technical progress. And for all the similarity of the two programs, in the scale and diversity of the tasks being resolved our plans are immeasurably broader and larger. The 93 problems included in the Integrated Program are the tip of the iceberg. They are all broken down into component parts and these in their turn are broken down into individual themes and targets. And even today, although the details of the program have not been completely finalized, the number of these themes and targets amounts to several thousand. While it is a question of several dozen, 100 at most, within the framework of "Eureka."

At this point it is appropriate to discuss the groundlessness of attempts to present the Integrated Program as a step in the direction of autarchy. The socialist countries have been in favor and are still in favor of developing extensive international cooperation in science and technology and a mutually profitable division of labor in this sphere. However, the experience of recent years has forced them to concern themselves with strengthening their technological independence in conditions where the West sometimes succumbs to the temptation of using scientific and technical exchange as a weapon of blackmail and discrimination. Incidentally, Western propaganda deliberately creates a distorted picture of the direction in which the stream of licences, "know-how," and scientific and technical information as a whole actually flows. For example, in the last 5 years the Soviet Union has sold the United States triple the number of licenses it has acquired there, or, 1,600 American patents are now registered in the USSR, while more than 5,500 of ours are registered in the United States. I think these statistics speak for themselves.

And, finally, one more fact. As far as one can judge from press reports, many of the problems connected with the "Eureka" program, primarily questions of finance and participation by individual countries, have not yet been resolved. The fundamental difference of the Integrated Program lies in the fact that from the very outset its implementation has had a solid planned basis.

Editor: In other words, the mechanism for implementing the program is primarily the plan mechanism.

Romanov: Exactly. For example, in the Soviet Union the targets of the Integrated Program are included in the 5-year plan. And, from 1987 onwards, they will also be included in the annual plans for economic and social development as special sections. The other CEMA countries have made a similar pledge. And targets relating to the production of individual types of products will also be taken into account in planning. It is envisaged that approximately 18 months before new output appears, work will have begun to determine the CEMA countries' needs when drawing up proposals relating to specialization and cooperation.

Editor: Before, and fairly frequently, this kind of coordination required far more time...

Romanov: ...The difference with the present situation is that the Integrated Program itself already includes individual countries' interest in a certain type of work and a certain type of output. The initial data necessary to determine the volumes of production and supply in the future are known at the very first stage. Moreover, the decision has been made at top government levels that all work connected with implementation of the Integrated Program is to be given priority. This work must be carried out in a shorter space of time than has been usual within the framework of scientific and technical cooperation. The CPSU Central Committee and the USSR Council of Ministers are daily devoting the closest attention to this. The same is true of the situation in fraternal CEMA countries. And every target in the Integrated Program will be guaranteed priority allocation of resources.

Sychev: When, in December last year, the program was adopted at the extraordinary CEMA session in an atmosphere of exceptional unanimity, we all experienced a sense of deep satisfaction. Not only because such an important document had been drawn up and approved. In conversation many of our colleagues expressed this thought: The development of this program is a good example of how we can carry out important work rapidly and well. Without any of the bureaucratic practices for which we often rightly criticize ourselves. Without the sluggishness that is at times characteristic of CEMA organs' activity. It is important to stress that during the implementation of the program the style of our work must remain the same as it was during the compilation of the program.

Romanov: All the more so in view of the fact that in a number of areas of the Integrated Program its implementation will not be begun from square one. An example of this is computer equipment. For many years now there has been very broad cooperation in the production of a unified computer system and the so-called small computer system. The volume of reciprocal deliveries of computer equipment amounts to billions of rubles. Over these years firm ties have formed between scientific, design, and production collectives.

Sychev: The same can be said of cooperation in the production of equipment for nuclear power plants. Its systematic development is reflected in the fact that in the construction of nuclear power plants the socialist countries rely totally on their own resources; equipment for nuclear power plants does not include a single Western component or assembly part.

At the same time there are also areas included in the Integrated Program that rely to a lesser degree on existing reserves. Here firm, ramified cooperation has to be established. It is in this first year of the Integrated Program's implementation that the most important tasks falls, important that is from the viewpoint of the program's success -- the formation of the pilot [golovnyye] coordinating organizations and the development of methods, skills, modes, and the practice of mutual relations with other organizations in CEMA countries.

Naturally, direct links between collectives have existed hitherto. However, they have mainly amounted to the exchange of experience in organizing production and socialist competition. Now it is extremely important that direct links between enterprises and science institutes in CEMA countries develop into deep cooperative relations. This is a key issue. And the pilot organization must play a large role in resolving it. They will have to organize close interaction throughout the entire cycle of work -- from scientific research and design work to the organization of specialized production and the marketing and technical servicing of output.

Editor: What do these pilot organizations represent? They are a new form in the practice of socialist integration.

Sychev: A provision on pilot coordinating organizations was agreed literally just the other day. The understanding was reached even earlier than this responsibility in all 93 problems of the Integrated Program would be taken on by Soviet collectives -- the most prestigious scientific research centers and production associations. The pilot organizations will include 11 of the 16 intersectorial scientific and technical complexes formed recently. "Personalnyye EVM," "Svetovod," "Membrany," "Rotor," and others can be cited as examples. Institutes of the USSR Academy of Sciences will form the core of the majority of them.

Romanov: The pilot organizations are invested with the right to conclude economic agreements and contracts with partners from other CEMA countries, including those of a commercial nature, and to implement the reciprocal transfer of joint work. The procedure for specialist assignments has been simplified for them. The general aim is to speed up the decision-making process and to avoid supplementary, at times not very necessary coordinations and linkages, superfluous correspondence, and everything that retards matters. Now the time has really come when the center of gravity of all work is being shifted "onto the shoulders" of the pilot organizations.

Editor: Three months have passed since implementation of the program began. What has been done?

Sychev: We would probably wish that more had been done. But we already have results. Cooperation programs have been detailed for all five priority areas. All the pilot organizations have been designated. Two new CEMA permanent commissions have begun work: for cooperation in the sphere of new materials and the technologies for their production and processing, and for cooperation in the field of biotechnology.

Romanov: It is important to stress that, from the moment the program was signed, all the executors were basically known. Today more than 300 scientific, design, and production organizations are participating in the program's implementation on the Soviet side, as well as many hundreds of organizations in other CEMA countries. More and more new collectives are becoming involved in the process of implementation under way.

Editor: When can we expect to see the first output that we will be able to say is born of the Integrated Program?

Sychev: On certain problems -- from the beginning of next year.

CEMA INTRODUCES CONCEPT OF 'HEAD' ORGANIZATION

LD012014 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 1203 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow, 1 Apr (TASS) -- The acceleration of the pace of development and introduction of the latest scientific and technological achievements, essential for implementing the CEMA member-countries' comprehensive program of scientific and technical progress, requires that problems be solved rapidly and that associations and enterprises' economic self-dependence be enhanced. To implement the tasks of the comprehensive program, the CEMA countries, therefore, have jointly elaborated the concept of the head organization [golovnaya organizatsiya].

Arnold Romanov, USSR State Committee for Science and Technology deputy chairman, writes on the status and functions of such an organization in an article published in the latest issue of the CEMA Secretariat's press bulletin. He notes this form should help tackle the chief problem of setting up direct links between those involved in the program's practical implementation. Head organizations are to bear responsibility for technical standards and quality and for meeting target deadlines; in other words, they will function as organizers of a whole complex of tasks. At the same time, a head organization may act as a direct performer of one or several specific assignments. In addition, it elaborates a draft detailed program of cooperation covering the whole "science and technology-production-distribution" cycle.

At the same time -- and this is what is fundamentally new -- the draft detailed program is agreed by head organizations dealing with the problem in direct conjunction with head organizations responsible for particular subjects and targets.

Another new point, Arnold Romanov notes, is that the detailed cooperation program for the problem can be embarked upon immediately after it has been signed by the authorized representatives of the parties. Direct links between all participants in the work are established on the basis of corresponding agreements.

Coordinating head organizations have thus far been defined for all 93 problems in the 5 priority sectors in the comprehensive program. They include some of the major Soviet scientific centers and scientific-production associations, and also the interindustry scientific-technical complexes recently created as a new type of organization in the USSR. These are headed by leading scientific establishments in the USSR Academy of Sciences, and the majority of the 16 newly created complexes of this type have been brought into work being done under the comprehensive program. These include the Paton Electro-Welding Institute, "Robot," "Biogen," and others.

SOCIALIST PARLIAMENTARIANS DISCUSS ASIAN SECURITY

[TASS report: "Forum of Parliamentarians"]

[Text] Ulaanbaatar, 26 Mar -- The role of parliamentarians in carrying out socialist countries' foreign policy initiatives to strengthen peace and security in Asia and the Pacific and in developing the antiwar movement in the region is the theme of an international consultative meeting that has opened in Ulaanbaatar.

Representatives of the parliaments of the DPRK, Laos, Cambodia, Mongolia, the USSR, and Vietnam are taking part in it. The Soviet delegation is headed by A.U. Salimov, deputy chairman of the USSR SUPREME Soviet Presidium.

Opening the meeting, N. Jagbaral, candidate member of the MPRP Central Committee Politburo and deputy chairman of the Mongolian People's Great Hural Presidium, said that mankind is confronted with the threat of nuclear catastrophe as a result of the unprecedented nuclear arms race unleashed by the forces of international reaction. Today Asia and the Pacific have been allocated a special place in imperialism's strategy plan.

In the noble cause of ensuring peace and security on the continent, the speaker observed, parliaments can successfully resolve questions of war and peace. And here the socialist countries of Asia have a special responsibility. Mongolia fully supports their constructive efforts to defend peace and stability in Asia and establish good-neighborly relations among the continent's states.

The Soviet Union, N. Jagbaral stressed, has proposed a clear and specific program to rid mankind of nuclear war and scrap means of mass extermination. The CPSU's historic 27th Congress provided an in-depth Marxist-Leninist analysis of the present-day international situation and imparted a new boost to the peoples' struggle for a peaceful future.

COMPARISON OF GORBACHEV MESSAGE TO UN SECRETARY GENERAL

Moscow PRAVDA in Russian on 29 March carries in its First Edition on page 3 a report on the message of CPSU General Secretary Gorbachev to UN Secretary General Perez de Cuellar on 27 March. The PRAVDA report, entitled "The International Year of Peace Is a Year of Joint Action by All States," has been compared with the Moscow TASS English version published in the 28 March Soviet Union DAILY REPORT, page CC 1, revealing the following variations:

Paragraph five, line six reads in PRAVDA: up the development [sozdaniye] of other means of mass annihilation (providing vernacular and subbing "means" for "systems");

Same paragraph, lines eight, nine, and ten read in PRAVDA: us provide for verification [kontrol], including on-site inspections [inspektsii] where necessary. This verification [kontrol] should be enough (providing vernacular for "verification" and "inspections");

Paragraph six, lines five and six read in PRAVDA: universal destruction. The total cessation and prohibition of nuclear (adding "total cessation and");

Page CC 2, paragraph two, line eleven reads in PRAVDA: Union suggests that the leaders of the five powers (adding "the leaders of");

In the same paragraph, lines fifteen and sixteen reads in PRAVDA: an opposite goal. Once the nuclear weapons are destroyed, the so-called "exclusive club" of state possessing them would also cease (adding quotation marks and rewording);

Paragraph four, lines five and six in PRAVDA reads: whose motto is "to safeguard peace and the future of humanity," and to actively (adding quotation marks).

REPORT ON SOVIET TRADE WITH DEVELOPING COUNTRIES

LD012043 Moscow TASS in English 1848 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 1 TASS -- TASS economic news analyst Sergey Zinchuk writes:

The Soviet Union conducts its trade and economic ties with developing countries on an equal and just basis. Responding to the striving of developing countries to expand their export and diversify their export deliveries, the USSR increases purchases of their output from year to year. In 1985, for instance, the Soviet import from developing countries increased by 114 million roubles as compared to the preceding year and reached almost 7.7 billion roubles.

The growing Soviet import is a good stimulating factor of the further development of many branches of the economy in these countries, while the growth of the share of manufactured goods in Soviet purchases helps not only the development of new branches of economy in these countries but also the creation at enterprises of a big number of new jobs. Besides, bigger deliveries to the Soviet market give the developing countries considerable currency earnings as well.

In its turn, the Soviet Union provides these countries with a wide range of machinery and equipment, energy carriers, consumer goods and agricultural produce.

In 1985, it was reported at the USSR Ministry of Foreign Trade, India was the Soviet Union's biggest trade partner in the developing world. The volume of Soviet-Indian trade turnover exceeded 3 billion roubles last year, of which 1.5 billion were Soviet imports from that country. Then by volume of trade with the USSR come Argentina -- 1.3 billion roubles (Soviet imports -- 1.23 billion) and Libya -- about 1 billion roubles (Soviet purchases -- almost 0.9 billion roubles). The Soviet Union also successfully developed its trade ties with dozens of other developing countries of Asia, Africa and Latin America.

The number of projects built or under construction with the participation of Soviet organisations in these countries include major metallurgical complexes, hydropower stations, machine-building plants and oil refineries, trunk pipelines, projects in agriculture and transport. As differnet from Western countries, the Soviet Union has never made its assistance dependent whatsoever on any political demands. Neither does it demand in payment a partial handing over of the completed projects into its ownership. The USSR's assistance to developing countries pursues the aim of helping them in setting up their economies, achieving genuine economic independence and, in the long run, successfully solving the tasks of accelerating socio-economic development.

In the new five-year-plan period (1986-1990) the Soviet Union will be solving the tasks of its own economic development but it also intends to expand economic cooperation with developing countries, to increase both the import of their projects and the export of its high-quality, most modern machinery and equipment to those countries.

COMMENTATORS VIEW 'INTERNATIONAL SITUATION'

LD282301 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1315 GMT 28 Mar 86

["International Situation -- Question and Answers" program presented by All-Union Radio foreign policy commentator Sergey Pravdin; with TASS political observer Yuriy Kornilov; IZVESTIYA international observer Melor Sturua; and international affairs journalists Vladimir Tsvetov, Vasiliy Lesovik, Vladimir Pasko, Pavel Kasparov, and Konstantin Patsyuk]

[Excerpts] These days in our editorial office mail we get many listeners' letters, the authors of which express full support for the new Soviet peace initiatives and the peace-loving foreign policy course of the Soviet Union, but condemn the notorious U.S. neoglobalism and its provocative imperial policy. We have had such letters from Comrades Yaglo from Moscow, Sagamanyan from Yerevan, Tyutrin from Orekhovo-Zuyevo, Perevalov from Leningrad, Borisovskiy from Minsk, (Chavchavadze) from Tbilisi, the Simakov family from Khabarovsk and many, many others. It is impossible to list the authors of all such letters, but I would nevertheless like to quote a small excerpt from one letter. Its author, labor veteran Dancheva from Moscow - regretfully, she did not indicate her full name and patronymic -- writes:

There is probably not a single sensible adult in the world now who would not be worried by the threat of destructive nuclear war and the fate of entire mankind. I am already 75 years old. I have experienced both joys and troubles in my life. But with all my heart I want one thing -- for the peoples of all countries to live in peace and friendship, to rejoice in the sun and children, to delight at masterpieces of art and, with their own hands, to make life even more beautiful. That is why I fully support the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress and the peace program reaffirmed by it.

More than 3 weeks have already gone by since the congress ended. The Soviet Union and the other socialist countries do not cease their peaceful offensive. But instead of showing political will and for its part taking a step forward, to meet the Soviet peaceful proposals halfway, the United States has conducted a new nuclear explosion. This crude provocation and open blackmail, writes Comrade Dancheva, has attracted condemnation from all over the world. Why did the United States take this step now, when a Soviet moratorium on nuclear tests is in force?

We now go to TASS political observer, Yuriy Immanuilovich Kornilov.

[Kornilov] Anger and indignation -- that is the reaction of the international public to the actions of the U.S. Administration that sanctioned the test of a nuclear device at a testing ground in Nevada on 22 March.

The explosion caused not just an earth tremor in Nevada; it caused a genuine storm of international protest which tore off the architects of Washington's foreign policy the remnants of the propagandist make-up meant to corroborate their sham love of peace and, at the same time, vividly demonstrated that millions of people in various corners of the planet are fully aware of the fact that the problem of banning all nuclear explosions is one of the key problems on the solution of which the very future of our planet depends. Guided by a striving to do everything for the preservation and strengthening of peace, the Soviet Union has put forth a specific program designed for a precisely defined period, for the total elemination of nuclear weapons, the implementation of which would enable mankind to meet the 3d millenium under a peaceful sky and space. Guided by the same striving, our country has, now for more than 7 months, unilaterally not conducted nuclear tests and persistently called on the United States to begin talks on an all-embracing ban on such tests.

This position is in full accord with the strivings and expectations of the widest sections of world public -- strivings and expectations which found their expression equally in a UN General Assembly resolution containing an appeal to halt all nuclear weapons tests; in the communique of the Foreign Ministers Committee of the Warsaw Pact member-states which met in Warsaw in March; in a recent joint message by the leaders of Argentina, India, Mexico, Tanzania, Sweden, and Greece, calling for not sanctioning any nuclear tests in the coming months; and in a number of other important international documents. But how, one may ask, does the United States reply to the goodwill of the USSR and the calls of other peace-loving states? In the beginning their response was silence. Then, a series of nuclear explosions accompanied by attempts, under various far-fetched pretexts, to avoid a direct response to the Soviet call for joining the moratorium. And finally, yet another nuclear explosion, the eighth since our country unilaterally ceased such explosions. It is an open, insolent challenge to peoples and world public opinion.

[Pravdin] Now that waves of public indignation are swamping Washington, they are clearly trying to provide some kind of propaganda safeguards for their militarist and provocative action there. What arguments does American propaganda resort to for that purpose?

[Kornilov] There are several such arguments, if the statements of the American adherents of the arms race can at all be called arguments rather than propaganda tricks which would, of course, be far more accurate. It is maintained, for example, that nuclear tests are inevitable in order to maintain the effectiveness of the American deterrence arsenal and not to fall behind the USSR thereby undermining the security of the United States. They also expatiate in Washington about difficulties of monitoring nuclear explosions.

[Pravdin] Well, as far as the argument about an imaginary U.S. lag is concerned, it is not a new postulate. It is set in motion in Washington every time there is a question of testing or manufacturing new weapon systems, of new appropriations for military purposes. Is that not so?

[Kornilov] Exactly so. The very same circles which are now trying to justify nuclear tests by using fables about a U.S. lag, at other times painstakingly frightened the U.S. citizen with Soviet superiority, now in the field of bomber aviation, now in the field of missiles. And every time these fabrications would suffer total fiasco which in the end would be admitted in Washington itself. This time too this move is not working. An indeed, what U.S. lag can there be when everybody knows well -- and this is confirmed, in particular, by so authoritative an organization as the Swedish Defense Research Institute -- that since 1945 the United States has tested a third more nuclear devides that the USSR and together with other Western powers, one-and-a-half times as many.

[Kornilov] This too is a fabrication calculated to deceive people who are insufficiently knowledgeable or confused by the bourgeois propaganda. Prominent political figures, authoritative military experts, and eminent scientists, also, of course, in the West, unanimously agree that effective monitoring of stopping nuclear tests is possible. If the United States were to support halting tests of that kind on a mutual basis, it could be fully ensured through national technical means as well as through international procedures and, in required cases, with on-site inspection. I will recall an opinion on this account by Palme, Sweden's former prime minister who was recently killed by the hand of a terrorist, these were his words: Scientific and technical knowledge and experience gathered to date make it possible to ensure the appropriate checks of the observance of a treaty banning any nuclear weapons tests. End quote.

Facts show that the negative position of those circles in Washington which, ignoring the views of the world public, stubbornly refuse to reciprocate the Soviet moratorium on nuclear explosions is, of course, explained not by a mythical U.S. lag nor by equally mythical monitoring difficulties. The genuine cause lies elsewhere -- in fact that nuclear explosions are a key component of the arms race and the continuation of such a race is the core of the militarist policy of strength which the U.S. ruling circles, expressing the aspirations and will of the powerful military-industrial complex, obstanately refuse to relinquish.

[Pravdin] What is the oonnection between nuclear device explosions and Washington's so called Strategic Defense Initiative?

[Kornilov] Most direct. Washington's elaborated plans for militarization of space propose the development of laser weapons as one of its key components. In order to get those weapons going, it is necessary to use the power of a nuclear explosion. Nuclear tests are one of the important components in preparation for the star wars progfam. Let us add that the cost of this program is expressed by the cosmic sum of $1.5-2 trillion and its implementation will bring, and is already bringing, U.S. weapon magnates truly cosmic profits. Should we therefore be surprised that the bosses of the military-industrial compolex, who play the role of generators of militarism, are not awaiting the stoppage, or even a slowing of the pace of nuclear weapons production lines and that they are erecting ever-newer obstacles in the way of reliably blocking the channels of prefecting nuclear and developing space weapons, once an end has been put to nuclear tests?

The U.S. press, in particular THE WASHINGTON POST, has reported in the last few days that Washington especially re-examined the schedule for conducting nuclear tests, having moved the date of conducting one explosion from mid-April to the end of March. Comparing these facts, observers and many press organs come to the natural conclusion that the White House thereby attempted to neutralize the public movement in favor of a moratorium, the movement which in the coming month would undoubtedly acquire an even wider range. But the wishes of the Washington administration and its real possibilities are far from one and the same thing. Whatever maneuvers Washington figures resort to in order to guide the dangerous militarist course of their political line, they will not succeed, just as they will not succeed in taking the heat out of the indignation in connection with the sabotage of the call by our country for banning all nuclear tests.

As far as the Soviet Union is concerned, it -- faithful to its principled policy of peace -- views the cessation of all nuclear-weapons tests as one of the key elements in the creation of an all-embracing system of international security, the principled basis of which was formulated by the 27th CPSU Congress.

Replying recently to a joint message from the leaders of Argentina, India, Mexico, Tanzania, Sweden, and Greece, Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev emphasized that in order to fully solve the problem of tests an agreement which would ban such tests under international law is necessary. The Soviet Union proposes beginning preparations for such an agreement without delay. In a word, our country intends to continue to do everything to move the solution of the urgent problem of halting nuclear tests on to practical tracks and to achieve a total elimination of nuclear arsenals. This peace-loving, consistent line meets with growing support from all those to whom a clear sky over the planet is dear.

[Pravdin] Comrade (Ivanchenko), from Sevastopol writes: It is well known that Libya has long been the target of a brazen and openly provocative anti-Libyan policy on the part of the Washington administration. Please tell us about the latest events in that area and about the reasons for such actions by the United States, which constitute an open threat to the cause of peace.

The main reason behind Washington's vicious anti-Libyan campaign lies in the fact that the Libyan Government pursues an independent foreign policy line, supports national liberation movements, and is carrying out a serious democratic transformation at home. The Washington administration began imposing various economic, diplomatic, and other sanctions against independent Libya virtually immediately after the victory of the Libyan revolution and recently the United States has been holding continual provocative maneuvers off the Libyan coast. It is precisely over the past few days that the neoglobalist policy has clearly revealed its imperialist and brigandish face. U.S. aircraft carried out several missile and bombing runs against Libyan territory and patrol boats at sea. Three attack aircraft carriers and more than 30 other warships are concentrated off the Libyan coast against a small country with a population of fewer than 4 million, whose entire fleet, even according to Pentagon specialists' estimates, consists of five frigates and nine patrol boats. It was against these small ships and a number of land targets that the three U.S. aircraft carriers went into action in the first days of this week. According to a UPI report, the naval aircraft flew more than 200 sorties on Monday, 24 March, alone. In the United States at present no words are being spared to justify that aggressive action. The facts, however, irrefutably show that this is not an incident which arose suddenly but kind of a punitive operation which was planned in advance. As Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev noted at the Kremlin reception in honor of Chadli Bendjedid, president of the Algerian People's Democratic Republic and general secretary of the National Liberation Front Party, the U.S. action is a challenge to the entire world public and a violation of universally recognized civilized relations. Such a policy provokes regional conflicts and puts international peace and security in danger. Such a policy is aimed against all independent peoples and conflicts with the interests of the American people as well.

The U.S. piratical action has aroused resolute condemnation throughout the world. News agencies report that anti-American rallies and demonstrations are being held in Tripoli and other Libyan cities. Addressing his fellow citizens, the leader of the Libyan revolution, Al-Qadhdhafi, stated that the Libyan people will continue their courageous struggle against the intrigues of imperialism. Resolute support for Libya has been expressed by the socialist countries and the Arab League states. Moreover, some members of the league have expressed their willingness to render military assistance to Libya. It is indicative that the U.S. action has been condemned even by many of its closest allies, including Italy. The U.S. aircraft carrier diplomacy has been supported only by the so-called strategic partner of the United States in the Middle East, Israel, which, with the help of the United States, is carrying out completely open aggression against neighboring countries, and by Prime Minister Thatcher, whose government waged a colonial war against Argentina in 1982 over the Falkland Islands. At that time, London, too, received the full support of Washington, up to and including secret intelligence data. The aggressive U.S. attack on Libya was widely condemned at an emergency session of the UN Security Council in New York convened at the request of the Soviet Union and some other countries.

Servicemen (Aklhmolovskiy) and (Bratchenko) from Moscow ask which circles are represented by Caspar Weinberger, secretary of defense in the present U.S. Government. Every time the United States takes a new step in exacerbating the arms race and military hysteria, it is in one way or another always connected with the name of the U.S. secretary of defense, write our listeners. Here with an answer to the question in Melor Sturua, IZVESTIYA international observer.

[Sturua] The secretary of defense's office is on the third floor of the famous five-sided building, the Pentagon. It is an enormous room with a huge table in the middle. It is said that the telephone console on the table is of such dimensions that an intercontinental bomber could take off from it. Of course, this is an exaggeration, but the point behind it is that the man sitting behind that table pursues a policy of steadily whipping up the arms race. Even more eloquent are the photographs on display on the Pentagon chief's table -- photographs of Winston Churchill and Ronald Reagan. Washington observers claim that it is precisely to these two people that Weinberger owes his ascent: By his ideological devotion to the former's anti-communism, and his personal devotion to the latter, which, indeed, harmonize ideally with each other.

Reagan and Weinberger have long years of cooperation behind them. When Reagan became governor of California he made Weinberger finance director of his state. In that post, Weinberger displayed such tight-fistedness that he was even nicknamed Cap the Knife. Without the least hesitation he cut down the allocation for the Californians' social needs. In 1970, Weinberger was transferred to Washington to become director of the Office of Management and Budget, and from 1973 to 1975 he held office as secretary for health, education, and welfare. In 1976, after the Democrats came to power, Weinberger left Washington, returned to California and became vice president of the multinational construction company Bechtel Corporation. He actively participated in the 1980 presidential campaign, was a member of Reagan's so-called kitchen cabinet, and as remuneration for his services, was given the post of secretary of defense by Reagan.

Weinberger's appearance in the Pentagon at first worried the military-industrial complex and the top military brass. They remembered Weinberger as the stingy Caspar the Knife. However, their concern soon disappeared -- Weinberger immediately proved to be a fervent spokesman for the military monopolies and aggressive circles. He started presenting such mighty military budgets to Congress that a new nickname was coined for him -- Caspar the Spade. He throws money into the Pentagon furnace with a spade, wrote U.S. newspapers in this connection. Incidentally, Weinberger has yet another nickname -- Caspar the Sword. The origins of this nickname are in Weinberger's rabid anticommunism, in the way in which he brandishes his sword, calling for a crusade against socialism and progress. Here is how one of Weinberger's retinue describes him. Caspar is a militant anticommunist, he writes. Insofar as he does not have the necessary refinement, his foreign policy views are notable in their rigidity and simplification. The Soviets are our enemies, he asserts. He is an opponent of detente and an opponent of normalization of Soviet-American relations. Weinberger is a rabid advocate of the "star wars" program, i.e. of the militarization of space and the creation of first-strike space forces. Weinberger maintains an equally aggressive and unconstructive stance on the issue of banning nuclear tests.

Weinberger has recently been appearing more and more frequently on television screens and in the press -- sometimes surrounded by arms kings, sometimes accompanied by strapping generals and admirals, dressed in half-civilian half-military uniform. We see him climbing up aircraft carriers' gangways and descending into tank hatches, ascending into the heavens and diving to the ocean depths in submarines, inspecting military parades and opening military maneuvers, peering through binoculars and periscopes. Caspar Weinberger learns his role, tease American observers. However, it is not at all funny, for they are talking about a man who heads the biggest and most aggressive military machine in the capitalist world.

FOREIGN MINISTRY SPOKESMAN VIEWS LIBYA, PAKISTAN

[TASS report: "At the USSR Foreign Ministry Press Center"]

[Text] At a briefing held at the USSR Foreign Ministry Press Center on 28 March, the attention of Soviet and foreign journalists was drawn in particular to the USSR's new peace initiative put forward during the Soviet-Algerian talks and aimed at turning the Mediterranean into a zone of stable peace and cooperation. It was stressed that the need to attain that goal and its topicality have been reaffirmed by the recent aggressive actions by a U.S. naval armada in this region, thousands of miles from the United States.

In response to a request during the briefing to comment on work being done in Pakistan to create nuclear weapons, a USSR Foreign Ministry spokesman stated that the appearance of nuclear weapons in Pakistan would create a qualitatively new situation in South and Southeast Asia, a region adjoining the USSR's southern borders. It is our conviction that Pakistan's security, territorial integrity, and sovereignty could be truly and reliably guaranteed not by persistent efforts to create nuclear weapons or by feverish armament but by a sober evaluation of the current situation in the world.

REPORT ON CONTRACTS WITH LIBYA, OTHER ARAB COUNTRIES

[Text] Moscow April 1 TASS — The TASS economic news desk writes:

The Soviet Union and Libya will cooperate in the building of a new gas pipeline on Libyan territory. A contract to this effect was signed between the Soviet Foreign Trade Association "Tsvetmetpromexport" and Libyan organisations. The line between Brega and Zuetin will be 105 kilometres long. The Soviet association will take part in projecting work and supply the necessary materials and equipment.

A gas pipeline from Mars-el-Brega to Misurata has already been built in Libya with the USSR's technical assistance and the participation of "Tsvetmetpromexport". The pipeline is to be handed over for guaranteed service in the coming months, it was reported at the USSR State Committee for External Economic Ties.

The Soviet Union and Egypt are developing bilateral cooperation in metallurgy. In accordance with a recently signed contract between the Soviet Foreign Trade Association "Tyazhpromexport" and its Egyptian partners, a batch of metal rolled stock will be supplied from the USSR to Egypt. It will be used in the expansion of the mixer section of the convertor production shop at the metallurgical plant in Helwan that was built with the participation of Soviet organisations.

The Soviet Union and Syria will jointly draw up a scheme of making comprehensive use of the water resources of the Hermon area. A contract to this effect was signed between the Soviet Foreign Trade Association "Selkhozpromexport" and Syrian organisations. The necessary equipment and materials will be delivered to Syria from the USSR, and the necessary specialists will also be sent.

The Soviet Foreign Trade Association "Energomashexport" will deliver for the first time ever this year a trial batch of asynchronous electric motors of various capacity to Jordan. This is provided for by a contract with the firm "Electric Workshop Services".

A specialized "Energomashexport" exhibition will be held in Jordan from May 2 to 9 and feature a wide range of the association's export wares. It is expected that new ties between firms and organisations of the two countries will be established during the exhibition and a number of contracts signed on the delivery from the USSR to Jordan of electrotechnical and power equipment, including electric motors.

VOSS-LED DELEGATION DEPARTS FOR IPU TALKS IN MEXICO

LD020922 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 0900 GMT 2 Apr 86

DUBNA INSTITUTE COLLECTIVE GREETED ON JUBILEE

PM271515 Moscow SOVETSKAYA ROSSIYA in Russian 26 Mar 86 First Edition p 1

[Text] To the International Collective of the Joint Institute for Nuclear Research:

Dear Comrades,

We cordially congratulate you on the 30th anniversary of the formation of the Joint Institute for Nuclear Research, Dubna -- the socialist countries' first international scientific center.

A large collective of specialists from fraternal countries engaged in the noble task of using the achievements of modern science for peaceful purposes is working productively in the joint institute. The results obtained in fundamental research into the physics of the atomic nucleus and elementary particles and the development of a number of entirely new scientific areas in the study of the properties of matter have won the institute deserved authority and world recognition.

The joint institute has exerted a considerable influence on the development of nuclear physics in both the Soviet Union and other countries, has set an example in integrating the efforts of socialist states in science, has generated a whole galaxy of outstanding scientists and specialists, and has laid the foundation of a number of new scientific schools and major research collectives. The institute has performed much applied work in the sphere of atomic energy, materials technology, nuclear electronics, medicine, and other spheres of science and technology.

We express our confidence that the Joint Institute for Nuclear Research will remain at the forefront of science, helping to successfully implement the Comprehensive Program for the Scientific and Technical Progress of CEMA Countries and strengthen peace throughout the world. This will make a fitting contribution to fulfilling the decisions of future congresses of socialist countries' Communist and workers parties.

We wish you, dear comrades, health, happiness, and further creative successes.

'Ominous' Meaning Seen

[Viktor Ivanov commentary]

[Text] Reports from Washington say the U.S. Administration intends to supply the Afghan terrorists and Angolan separatists with up-to-date antiaircraft Stinger missiles. Radio Moscow's Viktor Ivanov comments:

With good reason the news media in the United States and elsewhere see the would-be action as one geared to scaling up the undeclared wars being waged by the United States against the two sovereign nations. In the last few years the administration has given the bands of terrorists hundreds of millions of dollars to buy weapons and munitions, mainly from the United States. Similar assistance is given to the UNITA [National Union for the Total Indenpendence of Angola] terrorists who have been trying to overthrow the revolutionary government in Angola. If in the past American support was covert, to dodge responsibility for bloodshed, the killing of civilians, and the destruction of economic facilities, U.S. participation in the terrorist activities against Afghanistan and Angola is now becoming open and demonstrative. Since only the U.S. Armed Forces are equipped with Stinger missiles, to give these missiles to terrorists and separatists virtually means to give them American mercenaries' status. As a result, the planned action takes on an ominous political meaning. The chairman of the House Intelligence Committee, Lee Hamilton, has said: This is not a covert action in the ordinary understanding of the term. This is a war.

Being aware of the potential consequences of actions of this kind, the administration has maneuvered to whip up the undeclared wars in Afghanistan and Angola in circumvention of Congress. Since the missiles are to be delivered with the aid of the Central Intelligence Agency the administration is free to act practically without control. What's more, it knows it will win the voting in Congress.

So we can speak of two trends in how the leaders in Washington take the problem of regional conflicts. One is an escalation of military action, from delivery of weapons to the so-called friends of America who fight against their own people, to direct armed actions. The other is reflected in attempts to ignore legislative power and public opinion in the country and growing condemnation abroad. All this taken together makes the so-called doctrine of neoglobalism. The U.S. Administration uses this doctrine to substantiate its wish to solve international problems as it sees fit.

This policy, however, is not beginning to yield results desirable to Washington. The administration's policy in the Middle East and Central America is deep inside a blind alley, even though the United States has flooded both regions with weapons and is using or getting ready to use armed force there. Nor is it a success in Afghanistan or Angola. On the contrary, the undeclared war is rallying the population closer around the government.

Meanwhile, American weapons are continuing to kill civilians. As more weapons are delivered, more civilians fall victim to them. American antiaircraft missiles have already destroyed several airliners in Afghanistan and Angola. The advanced Stinger missiles are intended to destroy more.

U.S. 'Arming Murderers'

["The United States Is Arming Murderers' -- TASS headline]

[Text] Moscow, 2 Apr (TASS) -- The White House has secretly sanctioned the dispatch of several hundred "ground-to-air" missiles for counterrevolutionary bands in Afghanistan and Angola. Vsevolod Ovchinnikov writes today in PRAVDA. The first consignments have already been received. Reports about this are being assessed in the United States as a new stage in U.S. interference in regional conflicts and as the turning point in the implementation of the doctrine of "neoglobalism." THE WASHINGTON POST observers Evans and Novak note that for the first time in the long history of U.S. secret operations the matter concerns up-to-date combat equipment that has up to now been supplied only to the closest U.S. allies.

The observer points out, "Thus antigovernment forces in Afghanistan and Angola, and then perhaps in Nicaragua and Cambodia, will receive U.S. 'Stinger' missiles with heat-seeking capabilities. They are capable of hitting helicopters and low-flying aircraft at a distance of up to 8 km. Bellicose senators are fighting for the dispatch of not just hundreds but thousands of such missiles so that the rebels can 'defend themselves from air strikes.' However, the U.S. patrons of the 'freedom fighters' are, of course, keeping quiet about the generally known facts that precisely in Afghanistan and Angola cutthroats armed by them have already shot down passenger aircraft using antiaircraft missiles."

"The Central Intelligence Agency has been entrusted with training bandits in the use of 'Stinger' missiles. Under the current administration, U.S. interference in the internal affairs of countries of Asia, Africa, and Latin America has been stepped up to such a degree that a special interdepartmental coordinating group has had to be set up consisting of highly placed representatives of the CIA, Pentagon, State Department, and the National Security Council."

"The authors of the notorious doctrine of 'neoglobalism' cynically claim that their aims are to extend the boundaries of 'freedom and democracy' by force. In reality, they are arming mercenary bands in a vain attempt to brake the course of history with the help of state terrorism. Such a policy increases international tension, hampers the political settlement of acute problems and adds fuel to the fire of regional conflicts," the commentary stresses.

COMMENTARY VIEWS CIA OPERATIONS IN AFGHANISTAN

LD311735 Moscow World Service in English 1431 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Excerpts] Room 3407 in the Senate wing of the U.S. Congress is called the safest room of the Capitol. The most secret meetings and talks that should be hidden from outsiders are held there. It is there that on January 9th, 1980, a group of senators met in a confidential atmosphere with high-ranking officers from the Central Intelligence Agency. Though they tried hard to conceal the fact from the public it leaked into the press. Journalist (Ted Shultz) reported that the secret talks focused on CIA plans of covert combat operations in Afghanistan.

The Central Intelligence Agency has always viewed Afghanistan as an important target of covert operations in the Middle East. Along with trying to suppress progressive movement in Afghanistan, the knights of the cloak and dagger have been making plans for decades to transform the sovereign state into a bridgehead for hostile actions against the Soviet Union. The Western press said so many times back in the fifties.

CIA operations against Afghanistan became especially large in scale after Afghans carried out a national democratic revolution. What was Washington worried about? It is not simply that the positions of American imperialism were seriously weakened in the Middle East in the seventies. But as a collection of articles by prominent Indian publicists published in Delhi recently says, the existence of Democratic Afghanistan demonstrates to the people of the region a model of building a new life on the basis of social justice and economic progress.

The journalists show the (?groundlessness) of the Western propaganda claim that the war of American special services against Afghanistan started only after the appearance of a limited Soviet Army contingent in its territory.

Immediately after the April Revolution, the CIA secretly sent a big group of its officers to Pakistan to organize a counterrevolutionary front against Afghanistan.

The recent sharp aggravation of counterrevolutionary activities in parts of Afghanistan bordering on Pakistan is the handiwork of those CIA units. The claims of the Western media that the American CIA started large-scale operations against Afghanistan only after the appearance of the limited Soviet Army contingent are groundless and contradict facts. The CIA, acting as the instrument of the most reactionary circles of American imperialism for suppressing the struggle of peoples for freedom and social justice, started covert operations against Afghanistan long before the Soviet Army contingent was sent to Afghanistan. The secret operations guided from Langley created a threat to the independence and territorial integrity of Afghanistan and the gains of the revolution. That is why the Soviet Government responded to the request of the government of its southern neighbor for military aid. But that happened in December of 1979, when all other ways of counteracting the subversive actions of the CIA had been used up.

U.S. ADOPTS PROTECTIONIST MEASURES AGAINST PARTNERS

[Text] Washington April 1 TASS -- TASS correspondent Aleksandr Shalnev reports:

Going back on its own assurances of the United States "adherence" to the principle of free trade, the White House announced on Monday the intention to embark on a new series of tough protectionist measures against competitors in trade.

Some countries of the Euorpean Economic Community and Taiwan have been chosen this time as victims to toughening protectionist measures by the USA. According to a White House statement, President Reagan intends to impose quotas and increase tariffs on goods from the EEC countries put on the U.S. market. According to the statement, this will be done unless the Common Market urgently removes what Washington regards as an "obstacle" in the way of U.S. goods to Western Europe. But this reservation is nothing more than a formality. Experts are of the opinion that the question of quotas and tariff increases can be regarded as finally settled.

As to Taiwan, the President decreed to start without delay a special investigation to establish the scope of Taiwan's "inequitable" trading practice, as is the administration's opinion. The White House also made it plain that the investigation will be followed by punishment.

The steps announced by the Washington administration show the essence of the so-called new trading policy that was proclaimed by Reagan in the autumn of last year and was presented as an "equitable" policy aimed at promoting unimpeded development of international trade. Meanwhile measures against the EEC and Taiwan are just the beginning of the United States onslaught on rivals in trade. According to some information, the Congress now considers some 300 protectionist bills, and a number of them envisages measures that are even tougher than those announced by the White House.

PENTAGON ACCELERATING NEW WEAPON SYSTEMS TESTS

LD020624 Moscow TASS in English 0600 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Text] San Francisco, April 2 TASS -- The Pentagon is conducting tests on new weapon systems at an accelerated pace. A spokesman for the U.S. naval command has said that a Tomahawk cruise missile was test-fired in the Pacific off the shores of California. The missile was launched from a submerged submarine and hit a land target. In March, two tests of Minuteman-3 intercontinental ballistic missiles were conducted, and an MX missile was test-fired.

[Text] The trade volume between the USSR and PRC reached 1.6 billion rubles, equivalent to more than U.S. $2 billion, last year, registering an increase of 60 percent. This is a record figure in recent years.

According to an announcement by the Soviet Ministry of Foreign Trade, the cooperation between the two nations has been carried out on the basis of a balance between income and expenditure.

ZHAO ZIYANG REPORTS TO NPC ON DRAFT PLAN

LD291002 Moscow TASS in English 0933 GMT 29 Mar 86

[Text] Beijing March 29 TASS -- Zhao Ziyang, premier of the State Council of the People's Rebpublic of China, has delivered a report on the draft 7th five-year plan of China's economic and social development (1986-1990) at the 4th session of the 6th National People's Congress, currently under way here.

Summing up the results of the past five years, he said that the mean yearly growth of gross indistrial and agribultural output amounted to 11 per cent. It became possible to stop the fall in the revenues of the state budget, and balance revenues and expenditures in 1985. During the past period China used 10.3 billion dollars in foreign investment.

Among major achievements, Zhao Ziyang singled out the attainment of self-sufficiency in grain and cotton, improved supplies of consumer goods, and a change in the serious disproportion between agriculture, light and heavy industries. This made it possible to end the rationing of a number of manufactured goods. But the rationing of flour, cereals and vegetable oil remains.

The premier of the State Council pointed out that the pursuit of extra-high rates in industry resulted in the emergence of the factors of instability, affected the efficiency of production and the quality of products.

Zhao Ziyang said that in the next five years or beyond, the country will have "to lay the groundwork of a socialist economic system of a new type with specific Chinese features." The draft five-year plan provides for a 33 per cent growth in the gross industrial and agricultural output. About five million specialists with higher education will be trained, and the introduction of compulsory nine-year schooling will be started.

The head of the Chinese Government stressed that due to the extreme complexity of the tasks of restructuring the economic system, its reform cannot be completed within the current 7th five-year period. Only a "framework of the new economic system" will be created. In this connection, he called for "serious study and consideration of all advanced experience in economic management, accumulated by countries in the world, including developed capitalist states."

In foreign economic relations, Zhao Ziyang stressed the need for "laying chief emphasis on increasing the inflow of foreign currency by expanding export."

PRC SPOKESMAN CITED ON U.S. ACTIONS AGAINST LIBYA

PM010940 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 28 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 5

[TASS report under general headline "Condemnation of the Aggression Against Libya"]

[Text] Beijing -- Speaking at a 26 March briefing for local and foreign journalists, Ma. Yuzhen, chief of the PRC Ministry of Foreign Affairs Press Section, made the following statement in connection with the U.S. aggression against Libya:

Since the beginning of this year the U.S. fleet has often held maneuvers in waters close to Libya, subjecting that country to a military threat. This has led to a buildup of tension in the Mediterranean. The Chinese Government expresses its profound concern in connection with this. This United States recently carried out an attack on the territory of the sovereign state of Libya, which is a breach of the norms of international relations.

RUSSIAN-CHINESE DICTIONARY PUBLISHED IN PRC

SDI PROPAGANDA CAMPAIGN CONDUCTED IN JAPAN

LD311238 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 0930 GMT 31 Mar 86

[From the "International Diary" program; presented by Nikolay Agayants]

[Text] Foreign news agencies report the arrival in the United States of a major delegation of Japanese experts who are to draw up final recommendations to their government on linking up the Land of the Rising Sun to the U.S. "star wars" program. In reports from Washington and Tokyo AFP asserts that this issue has virtually been settled: It is just a question of the timetable. The opinion is also being expressed that a corresponding agreement will be signed during the forthcoming visit across the ocean by Prime Minister Nakasone, which will be preceded by a meeting between him and Weinberger, the U.S. defense secretary, in Tokyo, Here is my colleague, Vladimir Pasko:

Unfortunately there are more than sufficient grounds for predictions of this kind. It is known that sympathy for the U.S. so-called Strategic Defense Initiative was expressed by Tokyo way back in January of last year, during Prime Minister Nakasone's visit to the United States. He described the idea of creating space weapons as interesting and promising. Subsequent events have shown that these words were not just a compliment for the militarist project. The whole of the past period in Japan has been marked by a powerful propaganda campaign in favor of involving the country in it. Practical steps aimed at the same this have also be implemented. These include first and foremost the agreement concluded with the United States on handing over military technology. Of great importance, too, have been the trips by two representative missions which have visited Pentagon locations where the development [razrabotka] of space weapons is carried out.

With their customary, narrowly practical approach, the Americans do not conceal the motives behind their interest in getting Tokyo involved in their dangerous venture. We look upon Tokyo as the cheapest supplier, Perle, the assistant U.S. defense secretary, and Abrahamson, the head of the "star wars" program, frankly told journalists a few days ago. But what advantages will Japan get from this?

In working on public opinion the SDI supporters there have placed the main emphasis on the fact that participation in it is a minimal sacrifice in easing the trade contradictions with the United States, and that this will supposedly become a powerful impulse for the development of advanced technology in Japan itself, leading allegedly to the strengthening of its position as a power with worldwide influence.

But the example of Japan itself places these arguments in doubt. For it is not difficult to see that it owes its own rapid rebirth and emergence in the front line of scientific and technical progress primarily to the fact that by virtue of constitutional restrictions it was less closely linked than others with military business, to the respect of the world community, to the declaration of its three nonnuclear principles; not to produce, not to have, and not to bring in nuclear weapons.

These are now being undermined. Possibilities are being sought for getting around them. Tokyo states that it is not going to regard space weapons as nuclear even if they involve the use of nuclear energy. According to the government, SDI will embrace a wide circle of research that is not connected to nuclear aspects, and so possible involvement in the program will not be a violation of the nonnuclear principles. It has been declared that these principles concern only the territory of the country and do not therefore extend to Japanese research carried out beyond its borders.

No matter what they say, however, the facts cannot be changed. The very concept of "star wars" is linked directly with nuclear weapons. And joining in it means casting aside both the nonnuclear obligations and other important obligations that Japan has taken upon itself concerning the use of space for peaceful purposes and banning the export of arms -- the very same principles that are ensuring respect for Japan in the world, and not just respect, but security. Is it not too much to pay for the dubious hope of being able to ease trade restrictions by the United States?

JAPANESE OLYMPIC COMMITTEE HEAD ON GAMES IN DPRK

[Text] Tokyo March 31 TASS -- The question of holding the competitions of the 1988 summer Olympic Games in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) and in South Korea evoked great interest in international Olympic circles, Cazuzy Sybata, chairman of the Japanese Olympic Committee and rector of "Nychon Digaku" University, told TASS correspondent A. Anichkin.

It seems to me that the proposal for organising the competitions in the territory of both Korean states deserves serious attention. Contests in a number of sports can well be held in Pyongyang. Among them one may name at once soccer and cycling. Certainly, this question should be thoroughly discussed by representatives of the DPRK and South Korea. Its positive solution would also contribute towards the settlement of the situation on the Korean peninsula as a whole, Sybata said.

As is known, the international ice hockey and soccer federations, and the tennis association are going to decide the question of sportsmen's participation in the Olympic Games without determining their status as professionals or amateurs, as the executive of the International Olympic Committee intends to recognize as valid the decisions by these federations on this issue.

But the issue is complex as regards both these sports and, for instance, boxing. In this sport amateurs and professionals widely differ: The rules and conditions of competitions are vastly different. The advocates of opening up the games to professional boxers contend that this measure will provide an opportunity for many big-name boxers, the American ones in particular, to take part in the largest sports tournaments.

Accordingly, they assert, this will boost the popularity of this sport. But actually, the case in point is not concern for a further flowering of boxing, but for enhancing the "profitability" of the Olympic Games. This point of view is highly dangerous for sport and actually leads to making commercialism rein over it. It is upheld by those who are interested, above all, in increasing earnings from the sale of television broadcasting rights.

Here we approach the foremost question: Does this line correspond to the goals of the Olympic movement? I should say outright that the issue of opening up the Olympic Games to professionals is directly linked with the tendency towards commercialization, which has surfaced lately, that is an excessive preoccupation with the profitability issue to the detriment of the interests of sport.

JAPANESE MANEUVERS TO INCREASE TENSION IN REGION

LD271008 Moscow World Service in English 1531 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Boris Dmitriyav commentary]

[Text] According to the newspaper SANKEI SHIMBUN, all-round exercises will be held in Japan from the end of July and through August to rehearse the strategic dispatch of troops to Hokkaido.

It's the 8th Division of the land Self-Defense Forces stationed in the south of Kyushu that is to be dispatched to Hokkaido, and that is about 5,000 servicemen and almost 1,000 combat and support vehicles. About the same time there will also be naval and air exercises. When reading the report by the SANKEI SHIMBUN, one might believe that Japan is threatened with aggression and the 8th Division of the Self-Defense Forces is hurrying across the country to rebuff it. And where does that alleged threat come from?

Since the matter in question is Hokkaido, Japan's northernmost island, apparently the invasion of the enemies' armies is expected this time from the Soviet Union. That, of course, is absolutely absurd and first of all from the military point of view. And in general the whole myth about a Soviet military threat is absurd. Japan's military leaders themselves don't really believe it. Simply the anti-Soviet campaign has long become the sole justification of their existence. The Soviet Union has never intended, and does not intend to attack Japan, and the National Defense Agency is well aware of that.

So why has it become necessary to rehearse the dispatch of a whole division, 5,000 servicemen and 1,000 vehicles from the south to the north of the country? The exercises on Hokkaido are provocative as regards the Soviet Union, both in scale and character. When moving big military contingents closer to the borders of the Soviet Union, it is to be understood that Tokyo regards the Soviet Union as an enemy and the Japanese Army is actually being trained for conducting military operations against the Soviet Union. Moreover, this strategic dispatch isn't by far the only anti-Soviet action of the Japanese military. The Self-Defense Forces have been conducting exercises on Hokkaido long and regularly. And now the National Defense Agency plans to form a special military region there. This is supposed to increase the combat ability of the army in case of extraordinary circumstances. It is planned to deploy new cruise missiles of Japanese make in the north of Hokkaido and have up to 25 submarines close [to] the Soviet Kuril Islands.

All this extraordinary militaristic activity close [to] the Soviet border can only enhance tension in the Far East and that is the first and main aftermath of the course of military confrontation the organizers of the strategic exercises are trying to impose on the country.

JAPAN PEACE COUNCIL SUPPORTS ZUSHI, MIYAKE GROUPS

OW010855 Moscow in Japanese to Japan 1200 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] The Peace Council of Japan stated its all-out support for struggles against U.S. Forces' facility projects in Zushi City and Miyake Island. Yielding to the Pentagon's request, the Nakasone regime is attempting to start constructing airstrip and housing facilities for the U.S. forces in these areas.

The Peace Council of Japan announced its solidarity with the residents of Zushi City and Miyake Island, and the start of a nationwide campaign. The council plans to launch a collection of signatures, meetings, and demonstrations. This antiwar organization also calls on Japan's public opinions to activate the antiwar campaign in opposition to the Japan-U.S. military alliance which imposes danger on Japan's security.

U.S. CONCERNED OVER S. KOREAN REGIME'S DESTINY

[Text] The Seoul regime, striving to dampen the spark of the popular movement for the democratization of life, has declared the campaign announced by the opposition for the collection of 10 million signatures on a petition demanding the abolition of South Korea's present Constitution and the holding of direct presidential elections to be legal law. At the microphone is our commentator Sergey Pravdin:

Virtually not a day passes now without reports coming from Seoul about mass demonstrations in some regions of the country against the dictator Chon Tu-hwan. Since the beginning of the year the South Korean secret police have thrown more than 1,000 people behind bars. The activity of student organizations has been banned. Leaders of the New Democratic Party of South Korea are under arrest, as are several dozen opposition-minded parliamentary deputies. While promising in words to carry out measures for the so-called liberalization of the regime, the Seoul authorities are indeed intensifying repression. But as yet they are not giving them the desired result. Since the beginning of this year the internal political situation in South Korea has become so exacerbated that even in Washington they have started to display concern over the further destiny of their Seoul puppet. According to a UPI agency report it is this which explains the fact that high-ranking Washington visitors have recently become more frequent in Seoul. A group of congressmen recently visited there followed by Assistant Secretary of State for East Asian Affairs Sigur.

Pentagon chief Weinberger will be visiting South Korea at the beginning of next week. A trip to Seoul by Secretary of State Shultz is also planned. But the Washington administration, it goes without saying, is afraid by no means for the fate of General Chon himself, but for its own present positions in the Southern part of the Korean peninsula, which has been turned by Washington into its own (?hearth). High-ranking representatives of the U.S. Administration have taken to frequently visiting Seoul in order to determine whether they can count on the fact that Chon will establish order, even if it be with the harshest measures, or whether the United States will have to look for another card in their Seoul collection, as they did for example in Haiti. But about one thing there is no doubt: Nobody will now succeed in putting down the wide movement for democratic transformations. This is also testified to by the creation of a few days ago in Seoul of a national coordinating center for democratization which has been joined by representatives of all opposition forces in the country.

PRAVDA CITES AFGHAN MINISTERS ON PRIORITIES

PM240700 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 21 Mar 86 First Edition p 4

[Dispatch by special correspondents V. Okulov and V. Shurygin: "Way to Concord. The Revolution in Afghanistan Broadens its Social Base"]

[Text] Kabul, March -- According to the local calendar in Afghanistan, the new year is approaching. What it will be like is a question of concern to Afghans today.

Almost 8 years have elapsed since the national democratic revolution was carried out in the country under the PDPA's leadership. It proclaimed as its aim "the creation of a new society founded on the principles of peace and freedom, progress and justice, fraternity and equality." During this time the Afghan people have achieved undoubted successes in implementing democratic, antifeudal transformations. The land and water reforms have given land to hundreds of thousands of peasants. The process of democratizing society's life has begun; the level of the people's education and culture has risen; and 1.2 million Afghans have learned to read and write.

However, the revolution in Afghanistan is developing under conditions of armed external interference in this country's internal affairs. The United States and its allies have spent hundreds of millions of dollars on the "undeclared war" against the DRA. At the same time, the West's mass media are conducting an extensive subversive propaganda campaign against the DRA.

Therefore, the measures the PDPA is taking to broaden the revolution's social base have to play an exceptionally important role. The main task, Babrak Karmal, general secretary of the PDPA Central Committee and chairman of the DRA Revolutionary Council, has pointed out, is to broaden the impact on the masses and acquire new friends and political allies.

As reported, the top organ of state power -- the Revolutionary Council -- now incorporates an extra 79 people. More than 70 percent of those newly elected are nonparty people. The Central Council of the National Fatherland Front -- the largest mass public organization in the country -- has been reinforced by 33 new members representing all the ethnic groups that inhabit Afghanistan. The government's composition has been enlarged significantly.

We talked with General Sarzang Khan Zazay, retired, who was appointed minister without portfolio for nationalities and tribal affairs. In the past he has been governor of a province and commander of a division.

"The government is doing a lot to improve the life of the tribes," he said. "Schools and medical centers are being built and wells dug in their settlement regions. The people's power respects their traditional form of self-government, which is what the jirgas are. The task today is to involve the tribes in more active participation in state affairs and, primarily, in defense of the country against encroachments from outside."

In the minister's opinion, the dushmans are maintained chiefly by aid from the United States and its allies. He believes that one of the chief tasks in his new post is to give the maximum assistance possible in returning home to those who let themselves be drawn abroad by deception.

The Pushtuns, Baluchis, and other tribes living both on Afghan soil and on the territory of neighboring states are undoubtedly interested in a peaceful life.

At last September's supreme jirga of border tribes they came out unanimously against U.S. and Pakistani interference in Afghanistan's internal affairs and adopted a decision to prevent the use of their territory for imperialism's "undeclared war" against the DRA.

Addressing Western journalists gathered for a news conference in Kabul's Intercontinental Hotel, Maulawi Abdul Wali Hojat, minister of Islamic and awqaf affairs, used specific examples to show the biased nature of Western judgments on the situation in Afghanistan. As is known, by using established stereotypes, the imperialist press persistently pushes the notion that the ideas of the April Revolution are incompatible with the postulates of Islam and that government policy infringes on the interests of ministers of religion and believers in general. They stubbornly ignore all the facts attesting to the opposite. In fact, for example, during the past 4 years alone the government spent approximately 1 billion afghanis on building and repairing mosques and giving assistance to ministers of religion.

In Afghanistan, the bulk of whose population remains illiterate even today, the predominant religion there -- Islam -- plays an important role in the life of the people, particularly in rural localities. According to recently published data, there are 250,000 mullahs and other ministers of religion in the country, while the entire working class totals 420,000, and the intelligentsia -- 190,000.

The dushmans deal cruelly with ministers of religion who refuse to cooperate with them. There are hundreds of representatives of the clergy on the lists of Afghans killed by them. More than 250 mosques have been destroyed.

"Today we patriotically-minded ministers of religion," Abdul Gafur Bagher, recently appointed minister without portfolio for Islamic affairs, said in a conversation with us, "consider it our chief task to make all believers, including the Afghans now in Pakistan and Iran, aware of the truth that the policy of the people's power does not run counter to Islam."

Bagher is a well-known figure in the Muslim world. He graduated from Kabul University and has academic degrees awarded by Cairo and Columbia Universities. He was a member of parliament and worked at the Ministry of Education. He believes that the situation in the country has now improved significantly from the viewpoint of both security and sentiments in different sections of society.

These are the sentiments in Afghanistan today. A story by Sidik Kaun, our Afghan journalist colleague, added a characteristic detail to the overall picture of them. He recently went home, to Laghman Province, and met there with his fellow countrymen, including local employers. One of them trades with foreign firms. Several years ago, he admitted, he wanted to build a grape-processing factory but could not make up his mind to do so. Now, after the Revolutionary Council's recent resolutions, he believes that this is now a dependable and profitable business.

The aforementioned resolutions state that the nation's efforts are now being directed toward establishing mutually advantageous relations with national employers, giving them assistance and protection from competition from foreign capital, and providing business circles with a real opportunity to represent and champion their own interests in government organs.

For the purpose of increasing agricultural production the government encourages the private sector's initiative in creating large mechanized farms permitted by the law on virgin land and on other virtually uncultivable land. Work is now being carried out in the contry to improve the financial, tax, credit, customs, and price policies with a view to taking the private sector's interests more fully into account.

There is no doubt that the work being mounted in the country to broaden the revolution's social base will help to create throughout Afghan territory a situation in which disputed questions can be resolved in an atmosphere of trust and concord.

DRA COUNCIL MEMBER CHARGES PAKISTAN WITH GENOCIDE

[Special correspondent V. Shurygin dispatch under the "Topical Interview" rubric: "Solidarity and Support"]

[Text] Kabul -- Haji Muhammad Chamkani is a well-known figure in Afghan political circles. In the sixties he was already a member of parliament; he then became a provincial governor and took part in many all-Afghan forums...In September last year he was elected chairman of the supreme jirga of border tribes. H.M. Chamkani was recently appointed to the DRA Revolutionary Council.

"Thousands of delegates representing the tribes living on Afghan and Pakistani territory took part in the border tribes' jirga," he told a PRAVDA correspondent. "We unanimously decided to make our contribution to safeguarding peace in this region, particularly to prevent the penetration of dushman gangs from Pakistan into the DRA across the territory inhabited by the Pushtuns.

"In response, the Pakistani regime has launched a punitive operation against the Pushtuns in the Khyber region, introducing regular troops with tanks, artillery, and aircraft there. What is happening there right now can only be called aggression and genocide against our fellow tribesmen who are defending their legitimate rights and interests. In the past too the ruling clique in Islamabad has frequently made attempts to deprive the Pushtun tribes living in Northwest Pakistan of their rights and freedoms won in persistent struggle against the British colonialists.

"It is perfectly understandable that our solidarity and support are with our fellow tribesmen with whom we have a common history and common friends and enemies. We believe that the truth will triumph."

H.M. Chamkani also described the positive changes in the lives of the tribes living on Afghan territory since the April 1978 revolution, the construction of schools and medical centers and veterinary clinics, and the way in which people in the DRA respect their customs and traditions and involve them in the country's administration. Recently a number of popular figures representing various tribes were appointed to the government and other organs of legislative and executive power in that country.

TRADE AGREEMENT SIGNED IN MOSCOW WITH BANGLADESH

BK011330 Moscow in Bengali to Bangladesh 1200 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] A Soviet-Bangladesh trade agreement was signed in Moscow yesterday. As a result of negotiations there, the annual trade turnover, that is, the exchange of commodities between the two countries, will increase 80 percent in comparison to last year. The list of Bangladesh export items for the Soviet Union will expand. The new items will include jute carpets and garments.

REPORTAGE ON PRK TRADE MINISTER'S VISIT

Visits Kiev

AU010939 Kiev PRAVDA UKRAINY in Russian 25 Mar 86 p 3

[RATAU report: "A Visitor to Kiev"]

[Text] (Chan Phen), minister of internal and foreign trade of the People's Republic of Kampuchea [PRK] who arrived in our country at the invitation of the Ministry of Foreign Trade, recently spent several days in the Ukraine's capital city. The visitor had a conversation in the Ukrainian Council of Ministers, inspected the K. Marx confectionery in Kiev, the Darnitsa silk combine, and the Ukrainian SSR Exhibition of National Economic Achievements. The minister made a trip to the Sovkhoz named after the Great October Socialist Revolution in Kievo-Svyatoshinskiy Rayon.

Trade Documents Signed

[Text] Moscow, March 28 TASS -- The aggregate volume of Soviet-Kampuchean trade turnover will almost double from 1986 to 1990 as compared with the preceding five year plan period. This increase is envisaged by the agreement between the USSR and the People's Republic of Kampuchea on trade and payments for that period. A protocol to the agreement for the current year and a number of other bilateral documents on trade have also been signed. The signature from the Soviet side has been put by Boris Aristov, USSR foreign trade minister, the Kampuchean side -- by (Chan Phen), Kampuchean foreign and home trade minister.

Under the long-term agreement the Soviet Union will supply to the People's Republic of Kampuchea in the current five-year period equipment, machinery, trucks and tractors, mineral fertilizers and primary materials. In its turn, the USSR will broaden the nomenclature of its imports from the People's Republic of Kampuchea and long with natural rubber and timber of precious tree species, which were purchased earlier, will be supplied from Kampuchea also by some other types of products.

An important characteristic feature of the long-term agreement is the growth of supplies from the USSR to the People's Republic of Kampuchea in 1986-1990 for use in resolving the important tasks set to the republic's agriculture by the Fifth Congress of the People's Revolutionary Party of Kampuchea. Among the tasks set to the republic is to ensure an increase in gross rice crop, a broadening of the cultivated fields and strengthening of the export base of agriculture. Thus, in particular, over the five year period, the Soviet Union is to supply to Kampuchea eleven hundred tractors, 78 thousand tons of various fertilizers and a large number of farm machines.

Large-scale supplies of equipment and materials for use in the restoration of [word indistinct] plantations will be continued. This work is done in cooperation by the two countries within the framework of accelerated development of production in Kampuchea of natural rubber, one of that country's most important export items.

In 1985, a TASS correspondent was told at the USSR Foreign Trade Ministry, the volume of Soviet-Kampuchean trade grew 18.8 million roubles as compared with the previous year to reach 100.2 million roubles.

The USSR's exports to the People's Republic of Kampuchea increased by 14.9 million roubles to reach 91.1 million, while the Soviet purchases increased by 3.9 million roubles to reach 9.1 million. Thus in particular, last year the Soviet foreign trade organizations supplied to the Kampuchean partners 298 tractors, 678 various motor vehicles, 7,000 tons of rolled stock of ferrous metals and 6.9 thousand tons of carbamide. The USSR also supply to Kampuchea oil products, medicines, paper, tyres, yarn and consumer goods, including textiles, tableware and others.

The Soviet-Kampychean documents signed in Moscow today, it was pointed out at the signing ceremony, will be an important step in the development of trade and economic relations between the USSR and the People's Republic of Kampuchea, and their fulfillment will contribute towards a further socio-economic progress of the People's Republic of Kampuchea.

STRIKES CONTINUE AT U.S. BASES IN PHILIPPINES

[Excerpts] Manila, 1 Apr (TASS) -- The general strike by 22,000 workers at U.S. bases and other military sites in the Philippines has been under way for 10 days. Pickets of those participating in the strike are patrolling the approaches to them.

In connection with the strike, the U.S. naval command is today preparing to tranfer to Japan a detachment of amphibious landing craft which is based in the Philippines as part of the interventionist Rapid Deployment Force.

Washington has meanwhile unleashed a campaign of pressure on the Philippines leadership. Chairman of the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff Admiral W. Crowe, who has arrived in the country, demanded that the strike be ended. The visitor from overseas expressed his "alarm" in connection with current events and said that the U.S. leadership is intently following the development of the Philippines situation. We are interested in maintaining political stability in the country on whose territory are located the large bases Clark Field and Subic Bay, Crowe said. Clearly counting on strengthening bilateral military ties, the admiral let it be known that the U.S. Administration intends to increase military aid to the Philippines.

ANTONOV ALLOWED TO RETURN TO BULGARIA

Pre-Departure Statement

LD011831 Moscow TASS in English 1736 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] Rome April 1 TASS -- After lengthy judicial procrastination Sergei Antonov has finally left for home. Before his departure by air Sergei Antonov made the following statement: "At long last the day has come that I have waited for so long and brought me freedom. I have had nothing to do with those people with whom I was associated."

"There was a juridical error made that did not allow Sergei Antonov to leave for Bulgaria immediately", said the Bulgarian citizen's lawyer Giuseppo Consolo. "In any case his acquittal on grounds of 'insufficient evidence' cannot be accepted. Sergei Antonov must be acquitted as being totally innocent."

Returns to Sofia

LD020737 Moscow TASS in English 0727 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Text] Sofia, April 2 TASS -- TASS correspondents Andrey Smirnov and Yuriy Tyssovskiy report: Bulgarian citizen Sergey Antonov returned home Tuesday evening. The long imprisonment could not but tell on the health of the victim of a dirty political provocation. He languished in Italian jail for three years and four months on the absurd charge of involvement in an attempt on the life of the pope of Rome. Sergey Antonov and two other defamed Burgarian citizens were found not guilty, following a long preliminary inquiry and trial which was based on the false testimony of Turkish terrorist Agca who fired at the pope of Rome in May 1981. The trial brought to light facts disclosing American and Italian secret services in organizing that unseemly juridical farce which was used in the West for launching a broad campaign of slander against countries, above all the People's Republic of Bulgaria and the USSR.

Sergey Antonov and his countrymen were found not guilty "for lack of evidence." This flagrantly unfair wording was adopted to "save the face" of provocateurs and those who masterminded the disgraceful trial in Rome. "I am happy to be back home, at long last, that I am again amid relatives, friends and colleagues, all those who waited for me during that long time. Truth triumphed, in the final account. The slander against me, my countrymen, socialist Bulgaria failed," said Sergey Antonov at Sofia airport.

REPORTAGE ON PARTY CONGRESS OPENING IN SOFIA

Zhivkov Receives Delegation

LD011627 Moscow TASS in English 1613 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] Sofia April 1 TASS -- Todor Zhivkov, general secretary of the Central Committee of the Bulgarian Communist Party, chairman of the State Council of the People's Republic of Bulgaria, today received the CPSU delegation headed by member of the Political Bureau of the CPSU Central Committee, chairman of the Council of Ministers of the USSR Nikolay Ryzhkov, that arrived here to take part in the 13th Congress of the Bulgarian Communist Party. Present at the meeting were members of the Political Bureau of the BCP Central Committee, chairman of Bulgaria's Council of Ministers Georgiy Atanasov and Secretary of the BCP Central Committee Dimitur Stanishev.

Todor Zhivkov spoke about the atmosphere of political and labour enthusiasm in which Communists, all working people in Bulgaria are awaiting the 13th BCP Congress. He stressed that the BCP and the entire Bulgarian people approve of the results of the 27th CPSU Congress, the general line endorsed by it of accelerating the country's social and economic development, and of strengthening peace on earth. Nikolay Ryzhkov conveyed to Todor Zhivkov from the Central Committee of the CPSU and the General Secretary of the CPSU Central Committee Mikhail Gorbachev wishes of success in holding the congress of Bulgarian Communists. He told him about the work done in the Soviet Union to fulfill the large-scale programme of socialist construction outlined by the 27th CPSU Congress and the creative enthusiasm with which it was received by the Soviet people.

Mutual confidence was expressed that the implementation of the decisions of the 27th Congress of the CPSU and the 13th Congress of the BCP will serve the cause of further consolidating relations of friendship and cooperation between the two fraternal parties, peoples and states. The meeting passed in an atmosphere of cordiality and unity of views on the questions under discussion.

Mikhaylov at Press Conference

[Text] Sofia April 1 TASS -- The importance of the vigorous foreign policy line of the CPSU and the Soviet state aimed at ending the arms race, removing the danger of nuclear war was pointed out by Secretary of the Central Committee of the Bulgarian Communist Party Stoyan Mikhaylov. Speaking here today at a press conference in connection with the 13th Congress of the Bulgarian Communist Party that opens tomorrow, he emphasised that the speech of General Secretary of the CPSU Central Committee Mikhail Gorbachev over the Soviet television on March 29 means a new constructive initiative of the USSR, the initiative that mobilizes the actions of peace forces to the struggle for a peaceful future of the world.

Replying to questions from newsmen, Stoyan Mikhaylov described the trial that ended in Rome as an abortive vicious provocation of the secret services of imperialist countries against socialism, Socialist Bulgaria and its citizens. He emphasised that the decision adopted by the Rome court cannot evoke complete satisfaction since Sergei Antonov must be released as absolutely innocent. It was noted at the press conference that much interest is shown abroad in the 13th Congress of the Bulgarian Communist Party. This is shown by the fact that a large number of foreign reporters arrived from different countries to cover the forum of Bulgarian communists. More than 26 hundred delegates representing over 930 thousand members of the Bulgarian Communist Party will attend the congress. More than 130 foreign delegations are expected to take part in the congress.

Congress Opens

LD020638 Moscow TASS in English 0627 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Text] Sofia, April 2 TASS -- The 13th Congress of the Bulgarian Communist Party opened at the People's Palace of Culture in Sofia today. It is attended by more than 2,600 delegates. Present at the congress are more than 130 delegations of communist, workers, revolutionary-democratic, socialist and other parties and movements. The delegates will discuss the speech by General Secretary of the Central Committe of the Bulgarian Communist Party Todor Zhivkov on fundamental questions of further building developed socialism in Bulgaria, the party Central Committee's report to the congress, theses on socio-economic and cultural development of the country, elect the party's steering bodies.

REPORTAGE ON CHANCELLOR SINOWATZ VISIT

Arrives, Met by Talyzin

LD011428 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 1402 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow, 1 Apr (TASS) -- Federal Chancellor Fred Sinowatz of the Austrian Republic arrived today as a guest of the Soviet Government to take part in the opening of the national exhibition "Austria's Modern Industrial Technology."

He was met at the airport by Nikolay Talyzin, candidate member of the Politburo of the CPSU Central Committee, first deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers, and chairman of the USSR State Planning Committee and other officials.

Discuss Cooperation

LD011653 Moscow TASS in English 1640 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 1 TASS -- Alternate member of the Political Bureau of the CPSU Central Committee, first deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers, Nikolay Talyzin had a meeting today with Federal Chancellor of the Republic of Austria Fred Sinowatz who arrived in the Soviet Union today as guest of the Soviet Government. Questions of the economic, scientific and technical cooperation between the Soviet Union and Austria were discussed during a conversation that passed in a friendly atmosphere. Particular attention was paid to tapping the existing reserves for the further development of Soviet-Austrian commercial and economic relations on the basis of equality and mutual advantage.

Meets With Gorbachev

LD021242 Moscow TASS in English 1226 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 2 TASS -- Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, received Federal Chancellor Fred Sinowatz of the Austrian Republic in the Kremlin today. Fred Sinowatz is currently in the Soviet Union as a guest of the Government of the USSR in connection with the opening of an Austrian national exhibition here on the subject "Present-day Industrial Technology of Austria."

MIKHAYLOV QUOTED ON FRG SDI INVOLVEMENT

LD290828 Moscow TASS in English 0822 GMT 29 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow, March 29 TASS -- Two agreements have been signed in Washington on West German involvement in the U.S. "star wars" program, Vladimir Mikhaylov said in PRAVDA today.

He said one regulates West German firms' activities on research into space strike weapons, while the other, "on improving general technology exchanges", defines the procedures for providing Bonn with information from the backwoods of U.S. technology.

The agreements were signed by the economics minister for West Germany and by the defense secretary for the United States, the commentator said, adding: "The Pentagon chief's participation underlines the military nature of the agreements. It is confirmed also by their being classified and not subject to publication."

Bonn's initial plan to wrap up the deal in a general accord on "technology exchanges", Mikhaylov said, was rejected by Washington. The U.S. advocates of an arms race in outer space, he explained, need unqualified backing from the allies.

So nearly all camouflage was brushed aside and the basic intention came to view. It is to harness the West German industrial and research potential to further highly dangerous plans for making near-terrestrial space into another "battleground". This step by the Kohl government is in the opposite direction from the aim it has proclaimed in its European policy, that of "achieving greater security with fewer arms", the commentary said.

"The classified deal between Bonn and Washington followed the deployment of U.S. first-strike nuclear-missile weapons in Western Europe and was summed up in a joint statement by the leaders of the Communist parties of West Germany and the United States as a further step to escalate the arms race," Mikhaylov said.

"Bonn's action cannot be explained by its servility to Washington alone, although there has been much of it as well. Taking a look at who in West Germany pressed from the very beginning for its unconditional joining the SDI will make many things clear. They included a group of politicians led by Strauss and closely connected with the military-industrial complex. They included old companies, manufacturers of deadly weapons of destruction, acting in collusion with new ones. It is they that are reviving the idolatry of weapons in their country in the secret dream of being finally able themselves, under the cover of SDI-related activities, to launch the production of strategic arms of the new, 'star wars' generation as well."

"Regrettably, the Federal Republic of Germany, or more correctly its present government, appears to be now marching away from disarmament and detente. These steps cannot be concealed by any slick rhetoric. People see in them the known, still remembered habits of German militarism which has caused so many calamities in Europe," the commentary said.

Peace Marchers Oppose Ties

[Text] Bonn March 30 TASS -- Anti-war rallies and demonstrations held within the traditional spring "peace marches" were held in more than seventy cities and other populated localities in West German today. Political figures, trade unionists and representatives of mass public organizations demanded that the authorities remove U.S. nuclear weapons from the country's territory and give up participation in the American "star wars" programme.

A protest demonstration, marked by the slogans denouncing preparations for nuclear war, was held near the U.S. Embassy in Bonn. It was simultaneously announced that anti-war activists started a peace march into the region of Hasselbach, the site of American cruise missiles, in protest at the deployment of American first-strike weapons on West German territory.

A statement by the Greens Party Bundestag faction was released here. The party's parliamentarians described as a revolting provocation police outrages against peace marchers in Wackersdorf, Bavaria. A symbolic "peace camp" in that area was crushed and 279 inhabitants of the tent settlement were arrested.

PRAVDA EXAMINES PAPAL SHOOTING TRIAL IN ROME

LD010539 Moscow TASS in English 0527 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow, April 1 TASS -- Put to public examination, the framed-up charge against Bulgarian nationals at the Rome trial began going to pieces, PRAVDA said in an analysis sent from Rome on the course of the papal shooting trial.

It said, among other things: "There is no possibility to dwell on all the trial's absurdities. But here is one example: Agca claimed that he had repeatedly been to Antonov's apartment and that there was a sliding partition there. But the secret services briefing Agca had clearly suffered a lapse on this point. The apartments in the house Antonov lived in really all have partitions. That is, all but Antonov's."

"The more holes there appeared in the 'Bulgarian connection' case, the more distinctly the traces of Western secret services and neo-fascists from the 'Grey Wolves' organization came to view. The prosecutor finally had to drop the charges against the Bulgarians. The trial was ended 'for insufficient evidence'. The implication is: The guilt is there but it simply hasn't been possible to prove it."

"The defense made the last attempt to restore justice in full. But it was a forlorn hope. The time allotted to the defense was cut further all the time. The court began openly to get into a hurry. The verdict was passed right before the Easter holidays. The timing was not fortuitous. By tradition, millions of Roman Catholics on holidays leave to visit their relatives and friends. So the calculation was simple: Behind the festive comings and goings the scandalous flop of a farcical trial will not be so visible and the trace leading to Western secret services will be clean forgotten."

"But the West's reactionary quarters," PRAVDA said in conclusion, "had done everything to set up a disgraceful anti-socialist, anti-Bulgarian campaign and poison the international climate."

Antonov To Leave Italy

LD011452 Moscow TASS in English 1442 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] Rome April 1 TASS -- The Bulgarian citizen Sergei Antonov can leave for home without hindrance. The decision was taken by a Rome penal court which examined the case after numerous delays. As is known, Antonov was acquitted at a recent trial which failed to find any proof of his complicity in an attempt to kill the pope. Certain forces, with links to the CIA and other Western secret services, made, however, frenzied attempts to detain him in Italy.

PUBLIC OPPOSES THATCHER'S SUPPORT OF NUCLEAR ARMS

[Viktor Levin commentary]

[Text] A despatch from London: A mass public protest demonstration against Margaret Thatcher's Cabinet's militaristic course has taken place near the Molesworth military base in Cambridgeshire. Here is Mayak's commentary and Viktor Levin is at the microphone:

Intensive preparations for the siting of the U.S. cruise missiles are under way at the Molesworth military base. The first batch of these first-strike missiles was deployed at the Greenham Common base. The British public is aware that pandering to the U.S. military clique's militaristic plans is turning Britain into the Pentagon's nuclear hostage. The British came out against the cruise missiles at an earlier stage, too. And now that the Soviet Union's proposals have opened up a real path toward ridding Europe completely of nuclear arms the protest movement is gathering special momentum.

It is also with satisfaction that the public has welcomed the USSR's proposals to liquidate medium-range nuclear weapons on the continent and its initiative to put a complete halt to nuclear explosions.

In these proposals numerous Britons justifiably see a real path toward strengthening peace and toward freeing mankind from the threat of nuclear annihilation.

The British Government, however, as evidenced by the statements of its highly placed representatives, not only fails to heed the voice of reason, the demands of its own people, but, with a zeal worthy of a better cause, throws itself into the fray in defense of the U.S. adventurist policies.

Common sense and the national interest alike are being sacrificed here. Judge for yourselves: In an interview with THE TIMES, Prime Minister Thatcher stated literally the following: I do not imagine the world without nuclear arms. Let us be practical about this question. She was blunt about it.

To put it mildly, the British prime minister's practical attitude looks strange. Mankind craves to be rid of nuclear arms, to ban them once and for all -- Thatcher advocates retaining these arms.

The head of the British Cabinet attempts to counter the logic of reason which runs through the USSR's proposal to liquidate nuclear arms over the next 15 years with the distorted logic of military thinking. But, a majority of Britons resolutely reject this logic, if one may call it that. The mass antiwar demonstrations are evidence of this.

PRAVDA COMMENTS ON CYPRUS 'DEADLOCK'

[Text] Moscow March 28 TASS -- PRAVDA dated March 28 carried notes by Vitaliy Korionov, the newspaper's political news analyst. The notes are headlined "The Need To Get Out of Deadlock". Follows the full text:

"Disregard by imperialist powers, by the USA, in the first place, for the will of sovereign peoples and for their striving to protect their vital national interests, leads to the emergence of a kind of bleeding wounds on the body of the contemporary world. The problem of Cyprus is, undoubtedly, among such problems which increase the threat of universal peace."

"As a matter of fact, the problem is in an impasse for the twelfth year. The impasse is an artificial one. It has been deliberately created by those who benefit from maintaining an atmosphere of tension wherever possible, the tension which makes it easier to realise the military-strategic designs of Washington and of its NATO allies".

"Cyprus attracts the attention of the Pentagon first of all because this is the third-largest island in the Mediterranean. U.S. imperialism's and its allies' true 'concern' with regard to Cyprus is to turn Cyprus into a military advanced post in the Middle East and in the eastern Mediterranean, into a springboard for military interference in the affairs of Middle Eastern countries and into a transhipment point for the Pentagon's interventionist 'Rapid Deployment Force'. It is precisely those forces that are interested in a division of the island, in a sharpening of inter-community contradictions, and in the preservation of foreign military bases and facilities on Cyprus. The inspirers of such policy do not like daylight. They prefer to take the Cyprus question into a dark corner and to try to 'close' it through a back-stage deal in the NATO lobby".

"But such approach basically contradicts the vital interests of the people of Cyprus who persistently struggle for the preservation of a united, territorially integral, independent and sovereign state and for a possibility of the pursuance of the non-aligned course chosen by them. The stand of the people of Cyprus is being actively supported by all sincere friends of Cyprus.

"The Soviet Union, which established diplomatic relations with the young Republic of Cyprus two days after it came into being, has been invariably expressing support for the struggle of the people of Cyprus, particularly at moments which were critical for them. Our country firmly and consistently comes out in favour of solving the Cyprus question with due regard for the aspirations of the people of that country". "At the beginning of this year the USSR is known to have put forward detailed proposals 'on the principles of a settlement of the problem of Cyprus and on ways to achieve it'. Inadmissibility of a division of Cyprus in whatever form; a solution to the question of the internal set-up of the state of Cyprus by Cyprus people themselves by peaceful means, through constructive talks; demilitarisation of the island's territory; a solution to the Cyprus problem within the framework of the United Nations Organisation; respect for the status of the non-aligned state of Cyprus -- such are the principles being suggested by the Soviet Union for a cardinal solution to the problem of Cyprus".

"The USSR's proposals have met with a broad international response and have been regarded with interest by many states, including the non-aligned ones. The international public opinion has found them constructive and timely. The parliament of the Republic of Cyprus has unanimously expressed satisfaction with the Soviet initiative".

"Washington has taken up a different attitude to the Soviet initiative. It would like to distort the essence of the Soviet proposals and to divert the attention of international public circles from them. At the same time, the Washington administration is trying to pretend that there are ostensibly some shifts and a certain progress in a solution to the problem of Cyprus. In actual fact, the administration is increasing pressure on Athens, on Ankara, and on Nicosia, seeking to impose a convenient-to-it solution to the problem. The visit of U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz to Greece and Turkey was made use of, in particular, with that that end in view. As a result, the problem of Cyrpus still remains in a dangerous impasse".

"Such a state of affairs does not meet the interests of the Cyprus people -- either Greeks or Turks. The Cyprus people have a legitimate right to become full masters in their own house. Peace-loving states are not satisfied with the current situation on Cyprus. Meanwhile, a balanced approach to the processes of internal and international settlement which could take place simultaneously in the interests of a comprehensive and just solution to the Cyprus problem would facilitate a solution which would meet the aspirations of both the Cyprus people and those forces in the world arena which strive to see the Republic of Cyprus as being a really independent sovereign, territorially integral, demilitarised and peace-loving state".

"The USSR's conviction is that the convocation of a representative international conference within the U.N. framework with the participation of all the sides concerned would become a real step on the way to attaining such a lofty goal. The development of events around Cyprus confirms: The convocation of such a conference becomes an urgent necessity."

"The seat of tension in the eastern Mediterranean should be eliminated. The people of Cyprus should gain a right to manage their internal problems themselves. It is precisely such an all-round viable solution to the problem of Cyprus that the Soviet Union advocates actively and consistently."

PRIMAKOV, KISELEV VIEW MIDDLE EAST SITUATION

PM311700 London AL-HAWADITH in Arabic 28 Mar 86 pp 35-37

[Interview with Yevgeniy Primakov, candidate member of the CPSU Central Committee; and Aleksandr Kiselev, head of Department of U.S. Middle East Policy Studies at the United States and Canada Institute; by Raghdah Dirgham in Moscow; date not given]

[Text] The intricate nature of Soviet relations with the various Arab capitals and parties calls for a reading of all signals, including vague ones, in order to understand Moscow's attitudes, particularly in view of the fact that the Soviet method is still to withhold details and reveal only the broad outlines of the Kremlin's policy.

Many questions remain without a clear answer, but a quick look at the reception accorded to 'Ali Salim al-Bayd, secretary general of the YSP [Yemeni Socialist Party] in the PDRY [Peoples Democratic Republic of Yemen], shows that Moscow is anxious not to identify itself with Aden's campaign against former Yemeni President 'Ali Nasir Muhammad. Yet another example: Monitoring of Soviet reaction to U.S. Vice President George Bush's visit to Tunis shows that Moscow is anxious to pursue the strengthening of its commercial and political ties with Tunisia, such as opening up the Soviet market to Tunisian olive imports or keeping Tunisian ports open to Soviet ships.

Visits by Arab leaders to Moscow are expected shortly, beginning with Algerian President Chadli Bendjedid's visit and, later, a visit by Syrian President Hafiz al-Asad. King Husayn's visit has not yet been decided upon.

Some of the issues, like the Afghanistan question and the Iraq-Iran war, are accorded priority by the Soviets. This, of course, is as far as the Middle East and the Near East are concerned. One must bear in mind that the list of priorities on the international level is topped by Soviet-U.S. relations and other issues before it comes to the Middle East region. Talk about convening an international conference on the Middle East seems to point to the distant future. As for the Soviet attitude toward the Iraq-Iran war, it suggests some sort of admission of Moscow's support for Baghdad at the present stage. But Afghanistan remains the predicament which the Soviets would like to get rid of, provided that any settlement is not at their expense. They support an understanding between Pakistan and Babrak Karmal's government, even if this involves the redemarcation of borders. What is important for Moscow is that the ruling regime in Afghanistan not collapse, while it meanwhile seeks to broaden the base of this rule to include some of those who disagree with the regime in power. Moscow is making serious efforts to convince Pakistan to enter into a direct dialogue with the Afghan Government.

AL-HAWADITH arranged an interview on these issues with a senior adviser to the Soviet leadership on Middle East affairs, Yevgeniy Primakov, who was recently elected [candidate] member of the CPSU Central Committee and who is the former director of the Oriental Studies Institute. He is now director of the World Economics and International Relations Institute. AL-HAWADITH also interviewed Aleksandr Kiselev, head of U.S. Middle East Policy Studies at the United States and Canada Institute (in the Soviet definition, the Middle East extends from Afghanistan to Morocco). The interview revolved around the Soviet concept of U.S. policy in the area and the possibility of an understanding between the two giants. The first interview was with Yevgeniy Primakov.

AL-HAWADITH: What has hindered progress toward solving the problem of Afghanistan, particularly after the Americans, through President Reagan's message to the UN secretary general, offered what were described as guarantees?

Primakov: What kind of guarantees? The Americans want our forces to stay in Afghanistan. They are making efforts to ensure that Pakistan remains distant from an agreement with the Afghan Government because they do not want the former to move toward direct negotiations with the latter. So what kind of guarantees are these? For our part, we have gone as far as laying down a timetable with Afghanistan under which all our forces will be withdrawn. But we need guarantees that would freeze the activities of the forces hostile to the revolution and which use Pakistani territory in particular as their base, as well as those of the Iranian forces. We want guarantees from Pakistan, which I do not believe is operating singlehandedly in this field because the Americans have a strong hand in the matter.

AL-HAWADITH: What about the exacerbation of Pakistan's problems with the Pathan tribes or the Pushtun tribes, and what effect do you expect this to have?

Primakov: Naturally they will constitute pressure on Pakistan's rulers because they realize the problems posed for them by the flow of refugees in large numbers. They also realize that some of the tribes do not wish to be the victims of what is taking place in Afghanistan. Also, if we take the reality into consideration, I believe that Pakistan would be prepared to find a solution if the United States allows it.

AL-HAWADITH: There is talk about the possibility of concluding a deal of reaching an understanding between Pakistan and Afghanistan regarding their common border. Afghanistan would abandon its claim on the Pathan region and in return for Pakistan's cooperation in solving the Afghan problem in a manner satisfactory to Kabul.

Primakov: I do not know the details, but Afghanistan so far does not officially recognize the existing border. Naturally, the two sides can discuss the problem.

AL-HAWADITH: So the redemarcation of borders is an idea that is likely to be agreed upon?

Primakov: Yes, but it should be part of a comprehensive solution. Afghanistan needs guarantees regarding the activities of the forces hostile to the revolution.

AL-HAWADITH: You insist on supporting Babrak Karmal regardless of the price you will have to pay in Afghanistan.

Primakov: He enjoys our support because he is his country's leader.

AL-HAWADITH: In Lebanon, can the Soviet Union play a role that would help to...

Primakov: What help does Lebanon need?

AL-HAWADITH: Syria is trying to play a role to...

Primakov: In our view Syria is making maximum efforts.

AL-HAWADITH: Let us take for example the increasing activities and influence of the Hizballah party. Is Syria unwilling to or incapable of curbing Hizballah's behavior?

Primakov: In my view it is incapable.

AL-HAWADITH: What would that mean in the future, especially if we take into account what is happening on the Iraq-Iran front?

Primakov: This would create conditions even more serious than the present ones. I expect the situation in Lebanon to deteriorate even further if an urgent solution is not reached. Naturally, there is a connection between what is happening there and what is happening in terms of the Iraq-Iran war.

As you know, our attitude toward this war is against its continuation. We are making efforts to stop it, but unfortunately we are incapable of doing so. But we are still utilizing our diplomatic contacts to end the Iraq-Iran war.

AL-HAWADITH: Are you, for instance, trying to influence the DPRK or Czechoslovakia so as to stop the flow of arms to Iran?

Primakov: Do not ask me such questions because I do not know the answers. I speak in general terms. This war is illogical and it also affects Lebanon.

AL-HAWADITH: How would you analyze what happened in Egypt?

Primakov: I do not know much about what happened. I believe that very few people know the truth of what happened. The Egyptians have told us that what occurred was an outburst of feelings by some members of the security forces who are dissatisfied with their conditions of service. But I do not believe that these incidents give the impression that President Mubarak is unable to control the situation. I believe that he is capable of doing that and that the recent events did not rob him of this ability.

AL-HAWADITH: Do you think that a foreign hand was present in those events or were they purely internal developments?

Primakov: I am not in a position to judge that. I am distant from the scene of events and, in any case, I do not wish to interfere in Egyptian affairs.

AL-HAWADITH: What is your attitude toward such operations as the assassination of [mayor of Nabulus] Zafir al-Masri? Do you condemn or approve such actions?

Primakov: How can we endorse an assassination whatever it may be? We are against terrorism.

AL-HAWADITH: How do you view the emergence of a division within the Palestinian ranks and within the PLO as affecting Palestinians in the West Bank?

Primakov: The emergence of a division was an inevitable result and a reflection of the reality of the situation within the Palestinian movement. How can the PLO's actions abroad be separated from the situation in the occupied territories? Any Palestinian division will help Israel.

AL-HAWADITH: What are the broad outlines which the Soviet side will put to the U.S. side when bilateral consultations on the Middle East conflict take place?

Primakov: We will tell them that there is a need to reach agreement on finding a comprehensive solution for the Middle East. Agreement must first be reached on this principle.

AL-HAWADITH: After King Husayn proclaimed the freezing of the Amman accord a Palestinian delegation that did not include Yasir 'Arafat came to Moscow to attend the CPSU congress. What is your attitude now toward 'Arafat?

Primakov: The composition of the delegation was a Palestinian decision. We neither invited 'Arafat nor were we against inviting him. We addressed the invitation to the PLO and they decided on the composition of the delegation. With regard to the Amman Accord, it is known that we have been against it from the beginning, but we are not against rapprochement between 'Arafat and Husayn. In fact we have encouraged such a rapprochement, but the manner in which this took place triggered our negative reaction because it represented a move toward a unilateral deal.

AL-HAWADITH: In his speech King Husayn referred to the U.S. acceptance of the principle of convening an international conference sponsored by the five permanent members of the Security Council and the invitation to the PLO to attend this conference provided it recognizes Resolution 242...

Primakov: We have no such information. Maybe King Husayn has American promises, but I personally have not met recently with U.S. officials and, therefore, I have no such promises. If these promises have been made then they are a beneficial element. Why should there not be a conference attended by the five major powers? Our stand supports the convening of such a conference provided that one single representative participates in it, that is, the PLO... As for recognizing Resolution 242, this concerns the PLO alone. It rejects it not because it entails recognition of Israel but because it regards the Palestinian problem as a question of refugees. Of course, people in the West distort the PLO's stance by concentrating on the issue of recognition of Israel.

AL-HAWADITH: Do you support Yasir 'Arafat?

Primakov: Personally, why not? He is a personal friend of mine despite the method he is following. I fully realize that he follows the method of "detours and evasions," which is not in the Palestinian people's interest.

AL-HAWADITH: How do you view the future of the Syrian-Jordanian rapprochement?

Primakov: We support the rapprochement. For many years in the past I made efforts with a view to influencing people to follow this course. I also support efforts for a Syrian-Iraqi rapprochement because it is of extreme importance. Without Arab unity it is impossible to confront Israeli expansionism.

AL-HAWADITH: How will the Syrian-Jordanian rapprochement affect Soviet-Jordanian relations?

Primakov: Of course, its effects will not be negative.

AL-HAWADITH: How positively will the rapprochement affect Moscow's relations with Amman?

Primakov: As I have already said, we have encouraged rapprochement and we have been looking forward to it. Not only does it help both sides but it will no doubt also help our policy, and it will be in the interests of security and stability in the area.

AL-HAWADITH: Is the United States, in your view, prepared to accept an active Soviet role in solving the Middle East problem?

Primakov: I do not think so... So far the U.S. attitude accepts that we only play a role of providing an umbrella for its policy.

AL-HAWADITH: The Americans say they prefer convening a conference that would be inaugurated by the big powers, after which they would remove themselves so that the actual negotiation would take place directly between the parties and, when an agreement is reached, the big powers would provide the necessary guarantees.

Primakov: We are not against this idea; indeed, we want a conference like this to be convened. After that committees can be set up to deal with particular problems. Also bilateral groups can be formed, such as a Jordanian-Israeli group and so forth.

AL-HAWADITH: You do not accept negotiations between the parties concerned, to be followed by guarantees to be provided by the big powers?

Primakov: If such negotiations lead to bilateral deals between the parties then we are against them... Frankly, we wish to participate in the conference not with the aim of impeding it or preventing its being convened but, instead, to help it succeed. We want to help the parties that want just results from this conference. Militarily, Israel is still much stronger than the Arab countries, and the United States supports it. They want to corner the Arabs so as to dictate their terms to them. We are against this not only because it is unjust but also because it will not lead to a lasting peace.

AL-HAWADITH: Therefore you do not expect any move toward agreement on an international conference.

Primakov: Soviet-U.S. consultations will be held on these matters... I do not know exactly when, but I would expect them to be held at the level of experts. We will exchange views from a standpoint of principle. I repeat that we do not wish to participate and we will not participate in a conference that would be a framework for imposing an Israeli diktat on the Arab world.

AL-HAWADITH: There has been talk in Washington about the Americans seeking to obtain guarantees from the Soviet Union...

Primakov: We are prepared for any kind of guarantees, and we are prepared to discuss all manner of guarantees, but it is the Israelis who are opposing any guarantees other than the guarantee of their military superiority over the Arab world.

AL-HAWADITH: While no progress is being made toward an international conference because of the hard-line stands, serious developments are taking place on the ground. There is the fact that the Palestinian division has extended to the occupied territories, and there are attempts to impose the type of autonomy that Israel wants whether the inhabitants of the occupied territory like it or not.

Primakov: I too believe that there is a need to reach a political solution not only in the interest of international security but also in view of the developments on the ground such as those who have mentioned. But the question is: What kind of solution?

AL-HAWADITH: Our question does not concern the principle but what is happening on the ground while you wait for an acceptable solution. What is taking place is a new reality that might go beyond what you are concentrating upon now.

Primakov: This is true, since the Israelis have often exercised the policy of fait accompli. Naturally, we must stop this, but how? The Arabs have unfortunately been unable to unite their ranks, and it cannot be said that there is now a strategic parity to which 'Abdallah al-Ahmar [assistant secretary general of the Arab Socialist Ba'th Party National Command] referred in his speech at the CPSU congress in Moscow when he said that there will be no solution except on the basis of a strategic balance. Of course, it is better if the equation of strategic parity is achieved, but it does not exist yet and it cannot be achieved between Israel and Syria alone. The Syrians need the support of all the Arab countries if they wish to achieve this equation, but unfortunately they are not being given such support. For this reason I say that the absence of this equation should not be a hindrance to reaching a solution of the Middle East problem, provided that it is a just and comprehensive solution.

AL-HAWADITH asked Aleksandr Kiselev about the details of the Soviet-U.S. disagreement on an international conference and the reason for the change in the U.S. attitude toward accepting the principle of Soviet participation in the conference. He said:

The Americans are pragmatists. Recently they have realized the impossibility of their attempt to solve the Middle East problem singlehandedly. Therefore they are now "trading words" about the possibility of convening an international conference.

AL-HAWADITH: Does the Soviet Union oppose the idea of holding direct negotiations under the umbrella of an international conference?

Kiselev: Convening an international conference means direct negotiations. We support this; we support setting up bilateral negotiation groups under UN auspices. For example, Syria and Israel could sit together without interference by the Americans, the Soviets, or the Chinese in order to discuss the current problem.

AL-HAWADITH: What you are saying is almost identical with the U.S. idea that calls for an international conference under whose auspices the parties concerned will negotiate directly. So where is the problem?

Kiselev: The problem is that we want a comprehensive solution for all the outstanding problems between Israel and the Arab countries. The Americans want separate deals; they are against a comprehensive deal. This is the difference. Israel is not prepared to sit down and negotiate with the Arab countries concerned. It is prepared to sit down with one country only, and the Americans support this.

AL-HAWADITH: U.S. Assistant Secretary of State Richard Murphy has made further visits to the area. What is your analysis of the new U.S. ideas following the freezing of the Amman accord?

Kiselev: What the Americans are now telling everybody is that time is passing quickly, that time is not in favor of the Arabs, that next October Israeli Government will be transferred from the Labor Party to the Likud, and that if no agreement is reached with Peres then it will be impossible to reach an agreement with Yitzhaq Shamir or Sharon. For this reason the U.S. advice to the Arabs is to grasp this opportunity before it is too late. But this every "propaganda" has put the Americans in a difficult corner since they have no new ideas that would encourage the Arabs. For this reason they are waging a large-scale campaign of which Murphy's tour of the Middle East and the trading of words about an international conference are a part. Mr Murphy is trying to convince the Arabs to join a separate deal with Israel, threatening that failure to make a move now means missing an opportunity. But the Americans are unable to make any new proposals.

AL-HAWADITH: Sharon and Shamir wish to get rid of the Arab citizens in the occupied territories as a solution to the occupation problem. While the Labor Party prefers another option which, although similarly negative, does not aim at throwing out the inhabitants but rather at imposing an Israeli autonomy on them.

Kiselev: Both want to annex the occupied territories without the inhabitants. The difference is unimportant for the Arabs.

AL-HAWADITH: While the two superpowers insist on this or that detail which prevents their coming to an understanding, what is happening on the ground is in effect placing in jeopardy the inhabitants under occupation. There is a view that says: Stop clinging to those details that are costing the people concerned further sufferings.

Kiselev: Such words are in the interest of Israel. I also realize that this is, unfortunately, the feeling of some of the Palestinians in the occupied territories. Such a climate does exist, but it is not the prevalent feeling in the Arab world. There is a polarization of the Palestinians' feelings in the West Bank, but they are not in the great majority. There are two views -- one calling for accepting what is now being offered to them so that they will not lose everything, and another calling for the escalation of resistance to Israel so as to secure the acquisition of rights. This means that the situation could deteriorate further, and so the only solution is to find a comprehensive solution. The two superpowers must try to create a suitable atmosphere for a Middle East settlement with the help of balanced, joint Soviet-U.S. efforts.

AL-HAWADITH: In his speech to the CPSU Congress leader Mikhail Gorbachev spoke at length about the question of terrorism without referring to regional conflicts in the world. It is known that the United States concentrates on the terrorism issue; Indeed, this has become a fundamental matter for U.S. policy in the Arab world. How far does coordination and cooperation between the Soviet Union and the United States on terrorism go?

Kiselev: First, politically, ideologically, and practically the Soviet Union is against terrorism. At the same time we are against combating terrorism with terrorism, especially state terrorism. For example, the recent bill adopted by the U.S. House of Representatives empowering the U.S. Administration to combat terrorism against any American citizen in any country effectively gives the United States the right to intervene in the internal affairs of any other country. We are against such stands. We desire Soviet-U.S. cooperation against terrorism, but there is a difference of interpretation on the concept of terrorism.

AL-HAWADITH: Some Soviet-U.S. consultations on the question of combating terrorism have taken place at the level of exports. When will the next round of these talks be held?

Kiselev: We have held such consultations. Why now? This issue is an area of real cooperation between us. If we are prepared to cooperate, this will not be at the expense of the rights of other countries because we are against interference in the affairs of other countries.

AL-HAWADITH: There has been much talk about Soviet guarantees and U.S. guarantees regarding conflicts around the world. While both sides demand guarantees from one another, the conflicts continue.

Kiselev: Washington has turned down all the Soviet proposals regarding joint guarantees to strengthen world security. You might recall that 5 years ago we put forth proposals to boost security in the Gulf. We are prepared to recognize U.S. national interests, but the United States never recognizes the Soviet Union's national interests in the Middle East, for example, which is our immediate neighbor while the United States lies 10,000 km distant. This is a good example of their treatment of us.

AL-HAWADITH: You mentioned "balanced" efforts. Do such efforts exist regarding the Iraq-Iran war? How do Soviet efforts differ from U.S. efforts in this regard?

Kiselev: Verbally, the Soviet and U.S. attitudes are the same: opposition to the continuation of this destructive war. But in practice this war is in the interest of Israel only, the U.S.'s closest ally. It has fought in this war indirectly through arms supplies to Iran.

AL-HAWADITH: It is also known that arms are reaching both sides from the Eastern camp and the Western camp.

Kiselev: When Iraq was occupying Iranian territory there was grumbling against the Soviet Union because of its decision to stop giving arms to Iraq with whom it has a treaty of friendship. But now no such grumbling is being heard. Why? Because it is now Iran that is occupying Iraqi territory.

AL-HAWADITH: So now you support Iraq because Iran is occupying its territory.

Kiselev: We support Iraq because it wants a peaceful settlement while Iran is rejecting it.

AL-HAWADITH: The United States also says that it wants to end this war.

Kiselev: The prolongation of the war is in the Americans' interest. Who will suffer from the war? Iran, which is not a friend of the United States (which seeks to weaken the Iranian regime). Iraq? This war has brought it closer to the United States. The war provides an excuse for keeping U.S. forces close to the Gulf region.

AL-HAWADITH: As long as both sides are bleeding it is somewhat acceptable to many people. But have the Soviet and U.S. stands changed following the recent new developments on the ground?

Kiselev: The United States might now be ready to take steps that would end this bloody conflict.

AL-HAWADITH: A few months ago there was talk about the possibility of allowing mass Jewish emigration from the Soviet Union to Israel in which French President Francois Mitterrand will play a part. There was also talk about the possibility of taking steps to establish diplomatic relations with Israel, beginning with the establishment of relations with the Eastern bloc countries. It is said that Polish leader Jaruzelski played a part in this. Recently such talk has died down.

Kiselev: I do not know. Such talk was neither Soviet nor Polish. It was talk by the West, a Western invention. There is no reason for us to resume relations with Israel. What would prompt us to do so?

AL-HAWADITH: Israeli and American acceptance of effective Soviet participation in an international conference in return for such a step.

Kiselev: Whether they accept it or not is unimportant. What is important that it is impossible to find a solution without the Soviet Union's participation.

U.S. APPLYING PRESSURE ON SUDANESE ELECTIONS

LD011648 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 0230 GMT 1 Apr 86

[From the "International Diary" program presented by Petr Fedorov]

[Excerpts] As REUTER reports from Khartoum, general elections are being held in Sudan today. Today's elections are taking place in difficult conditions. The point is that the Washington administration is trying to apply pressure on the outcome of the elections. The other day the U.S. State Department decided to stop financial aid to that African country. Let us recall that military supplies to Sudan were stopped immediately after the Numayri regime was brought down a year ago. The fact that official Khartoum decisively condemned the aggression of U.S. imperialism against Libya served as grounds for this anti-Sudanese step.

Defense Minister' Uthman 'Abdallah Muhammad, has stated in connection with this that the United States has no right at all to give orders to Sudan about what kind of relations it ought to maintain with one country or another. Sudan, the minister stressed, rejects such advice regardless of who gives it and in what form it is given. It looks as if though there is one less obedient puppet of Washington on the political map.

MOZAMBIQUE'S MACHEL CONCLUDES VISIT TO USSR

Comparison of Gorbachev Speech

Moscow PRAVDA in Russian on 2 April carries in its First Edition on page 2 a TASS report on the speech by Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, given at the Kremlin Palace dinner in honor of Samora Moises Machel, chairman of Frelimo and president of the People's Republic of Mozambique, on 31 March. The PRAVDA report, under the general headline "In a Friendly Atmoshpere," has been compared with the Moscow TASS English version published in the 1 April Soviet Union DAILY REPORT, page J 3, revealing that PRAVDA omits the introductory first paragraph of the TASS English report. Otherwise, the two versions are identical.

Gorbachev, Machel Hold Meeting

LD011425 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 2 Apr 86 First Edition p 1

[Text] Ceneral Secretary of the CPSU Central Committee Mikhail Gorbachev on 1 April had a meeting with the chairman of Frelimo, President of the People's Republic of Mozambique Samora Moises Machel.

Mikhail Gorbachev spoke about the work being done in the Soviet Union to fulfill the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress and about the efforts of the CPSU and the Soviet state to improve the situation in the world, liquidate nuclear arms on earth, and prevent an arms race in outer space.

It was stressed that the Soviet Union firmly and consistently advocates the just political settlement of conflicts in different parts of the world with unconditional respect for the right of every people to choose a road of development.

Samora Moises Machel said that the 27th CPSU Congress was viewed as an event of great international importance by Mozambique, which fully shared the idea of establishing a comprehensive international security system put forward at the congress. He described the work done by Frelimo to mobilize the Mozambican people to repulse the attempts of the imperialists, racists, and their agents to push Mozambique off the road of building a new life.

Samora Moises Machel expressed profound gratitude to the CPSU and the Soviet people for the unselfish assistance to and support for the People's Republic of Mozambique. The participants in the meeting emphasized that the causes of the tense and explosive situation in southern Africa were the policy of intervention and aggression pursued by the racist Pretoria regime backed by imperialist forces with respect to independent African states, the continuing illegal occupation of Namibia by that regime, and the very existence of the inhuman system of apartheid in the Republic of South Africa.

They condemned resolutely the U.S. so-called "constructive engagement" policy with the Republic of South Africa, confirmed solidarity with the courageous struggle for freedom waged by the peoples of South Africa and Namibia under the guidance of the African National Congress and the South West African People's Organization.

The mutual striving for the further development and deepening of relations of friendship and cooperation between the CPSU and Frelimo, and between the Soviet Union and the People's Republic of Mozambique, was expressed during the meeting. A number of concrete measures to be taken in this direction were agreed upon. The general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee declared that in its just struggle the Mozambican people can continue relying on the support of the Soviet people.

Samora Moises Machel conveyed an invitation to Mikhail Gorbachev to visit the People's Republic of Mozambique. The invitation was accepted with gratitude. The meeting was held in a warm and comradely atmosphere.

Machel Lays Wreaths

Departs Moscow

LD011340 Moscow TASS in English 1320 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 1 TASS -- Samora Moises Machel, chairman of the Frelimo party and president of the People's Republic of Mozambique, has left the Soviet Union today upon the completion of a working visit of friendship at the invitation of the Soviet leadership.

The leader of the friendly country was seen off at the airport by Andrey Gromyko, a member of the Politbureau and president of the Presidium of the USSR Supreme Soviet, and Eduard Shevardnadze, a member of the Politbureau of the CPSU Central Committee and minister of foreign affairs of the USSR.

Stops Over in Kiev

LD020851 Kiev Domestic Service in Ukrainian 0230 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Text] On his way home, Samora Machel made a stop in Kiev. At Borispol Airport, decorated with the state flags of the USSR, the Ukraine SSR, and the People's Republic of Mozambique, Samora Machel and officials accompanying him were met by Shevachenko, member of the Communist Party of Ukraine Central Committee Politburo, chairman of the Ukrainian Supreme Soviet Presidium; Merkulov, department head of the Communist Party of Ukraine Central Committee; Kravets, Ukraine SSR foreign minister; Zgurskiy, mayor of Kiev; and other officials.

The guest made a tour of Kiev, acquainted himself with its historical and cultural relics, and visited the memorial complex -- the Ukrainian state museum of the history of the Great Patriotic War 1941-45.

A talk took place between Valentina Shevchenko and Samora Machel. Comrade Shevchenko briefed the Mozambican leader on the active work that is in progress in our republic to implement the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress [words indistinct]. She wished Comrade Machel and the party-state leadership of People's Mozambique successes in building new life, lasting peace, and happiness.

Samora Machel expressed warm gratitude for (?all the hospitality) accorded to him on Soviet soil, and confidence in the further constant strengthening of friendship and fraternal solidarity between Frelimo and the CPSU and between the two states and peoples.

The guest has left Kiev.

MOZAMBICAN FOREIGN MINISTER ASSESSES SOVIET TIES

LD292024 Moscow in Portuguese to Africa 1830 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Interview with Joaquin Chissano, member of the Politburo and foreign minister of the People's Republic of Mozambique, by Igor Potovskiy on the "Interlocutor" program; date and place not given -- recorded]

[Text] [Potovskiy] Good evening. The 9th anniversary of the treaty of friendship and cooperation between the USSR and the People's Republic of Mozambique will be marked on 31 March. We call your attention to an interview given by Joaquim Chissano, member of the Politburo, secretary of the Central Committee of Frelimo, and minister of foreign affairs of the People's Republic of Mozambique.

Comrade Minister, speaking of a most important event in the history of relations between our countries and our peoples such as the friendship and cooperation treaty signed on 31 March 1977, we would first of all like you to give your opinion on the general principles guiding the USSR's relations with those developing countries that have chosen the socialist path, in particular with Mozambique.

[Chissano] The principles guiding Soviet relations with countries that have chosen the socialist option, or that are building socialism, are as the CPSU Program pointed out, principles of solidarity, political and economic cooperation, support in their economic and cultural construction, and the training of cadres to increase their capabilities in defense and other fields. These are principles that deserve our support. They are principles in accordance with proletarian internationalism and socialism. These principles gain more strength when they are based on respect for independence and equal rights and noninterference in the internal affairs of countries. Our country has had long experience with the USSR and is satisfied with the respect that exists for our choices, our independence, and our nonalignment.

The implementation of the principles of the CPSU in relation to our country has allowed for frank and friendly discussions that contribute to the constant expansion of our relations in all areas.

[Potovskiy] Comrade Minister, which areas of Soviet-Mozambican cooperation can you highlight in particular?

[Chissano] Mozambican-Soviet cooperation occurs in nearly all areas of the economic and social life of the People's Republic of Mozambique; it plays an important role in the building of the material and technical base of a socialist society. Recently, on 12 February, we celebrated the 10th anniversary of economic and commercial agreements on air and maritime transport and fisheries. Our bilateral cooperation, which is to our mutual advantage, extends to other areas such as agriculture, with the cotton project in Nampula Province and soil studies in the Incomati Valley in education, with the setting up of technical and professional training schools; in health, with the antimalaria campaign; in culture; in other areas. The joint fisheries firm, Mozapesca, and the naval repair works and the floating dock are also developing successfully. Joint projects are being carried out in the area of mining and geology in oil and gas prospection, and in the establishment of an agricultural tool factory.

The USSR actively participates in reinforcing the defensive capability of our country, particularly in ensuring us the means to confront the aggression from racist South Africa through the armed bandits that are an integral part of its destabilizing and aggressive force in southern Africa.

In the process of the growing development of Mozambican-Soviet relations, a positive role is played by the altruistic and talented work of Soviet specialists working side by side with Mozambican workers in the task of socialist construction in our country. The whole of this joint work is the result of the friendship and solidarity existing between our peoples and sister parties that began during the period of national liberation -- that of the Mozambican people led by Frelimo against Portuguese colonialism. Our ties of friendship and cooperation grow and are consolidated on a basis of solid and common principles -- Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism.

To sum up, our consistent work for the consolidation and development of fraternal relations of cooperation, of friendship and cooperation between our parties, peoples, and sister states, is the living dynamic expression of the materialization of the treaty of friendship and cooperation between the People's Republic of Mozambique and the USSR, as is so well borne out by the facts I have just mentioned.

ARTICLE CHRONICLES DECADE OF ANGOLAN STRUGGLE

[V. Vinogradov article: "The Struggle Continues"]

[Text] When, 10 years ago, at the end of March 1976, the popular forces for the liberation of Angola expelled the remnants of South African troops from the country's territory, the Angolan people could breathe again. In a tough and difficult struggle they had inflicted a crushing defeat on the South African aggressors who had invaded the country and the counterrevolutionary gangs operating alongside them.

For the first time in Angola's history bright prospects for building a new society free from exploitation opened up.

However, from its very first days the young independent state had to devote the greatest attention to defending its borders and safeguarding revolutionary gains. From the territory of illegally occupied Namibia racist South Africa constantly carried out armed provocations against Angola. Over the years the South African Army has repeatly invaded Angolan territory, sowing death and destruction. It is entirely understandable that this state of affairs has seriously complicated Angola's peaceful development. But its people, not relinquishing their arms, have continued to steadily progress along the path of building the new life. The socialist countries, primarily the Soviet Union, have given them substantial support in this.

Recently the situation around Angola has sharply intensified again. The United States, implementing the strategy of "neoglobalism," is setting its sights on escalating subversive activity against the young African state. Not content with setting the racist Pretoria regime against it, Washington has taken the anti-Angolan National Union for the Total Independence of Angola [UNITA] terrorist grouping under its financial wing. The recent "warm reception" given to its ringleader Savimbi in the U.S. capital confirmed the Washington administration's intention to expand the policy of state terrorism against Angola.

In honor of the glorious victory of 1976, 27 March is celebrated as a victory holiday. As they did 10 years ago, the Angolan people are having to celebrate with weapons in their hands in readiness to repulse any provocative actions by South Africa and UNITA with U.S. backing. But the Angolan people are confident that they will win final victory in the undeclared war that the forces of imperialism and reaction have unleashed against them. The struggle continues.

Resolution on Agro-Industrial Management Adopted

PM020914 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 29 Mar 86
Second Edition pp 1-2

[Unattributed report: "In the CPSU Central Committee and the USSR Council of Ministers"]

[Text] The CPSU Central Committee and the USSR Council of Ministers have adopted a resolution "On Further Improving the Economic Management Mechanism in the Country's Agro-Industrial Complex."

The resolution notes that the implementation of the tasks posed by the 27th CPSU Congress to accelerate the country's socioeconomic development requires resolute shifts in improving the activity of agro-industrial complex enterprises and organizations, ameliorating the entire economic mechanism in this most important sector of the national economy, and expanding the independence and increasing the responsibility of kolkhozes and sovkhozes for the results of activity.

The existing major production potential in the agro-industrial complex, the emerging positive shifts in its development since the CPSU Central Committee May (1982) and April (1985) Plenums, and the restructuring of management have created favorable prerequisites for accelerating production growth rates, improving output quality, and ensuring the fullest satisfaction of the population's requirements for foodstuffs and the processing industry's requirements for raw materials.

At the same time the existing economic management mechanism and existing methods and practice of planning and incentives inadequately orient kolkhozes, sovkhozes, and other agro-industrial complex enterprises and organizations and local soviet and economic organs toward the fuller utilization of the existing production potential, the extensive introduction of the achievements of science and advanced practice, the ensuring of the stable development of agriculture and related sectors, the reduction of output losses at all stages of output production, storage, and processing, and the successful resolution of the problems of the social restructuring of the countryside.

Poor use is made of the normative method of planning, financial autonomy, and progressive forms of labor organization and remuneration; disproportions are permitted in the development of individual sectors and regions; and numerous instructions restrict independence and the development of initiative and enterprise in economic activity.

In executing the decisions of the party's 27th congress and with a view to raising the economic interest of labor collectives and ensuring precise and interconnected work by all components of the agro-industrial complex, the CPSU Central Committee and the USSR Council of Ministers have deemed it necessary to carry out a range of measures to improve the economic management mechanism; to extensively introduce new planning and economic incentive methods on the basis of progressive normatives; to expand the rights of kolkhozes, sovkhozes, and other agro-industrial complex enterprises and organizations in resolving economic questions; and to step up the interest and responsibility of labor collectives and all management components for intensifying production, making extensive use of the achievements of scientific and technical progress, and ensuring high end results.

Particular attention is drawn to ensuring that republics, krays, oblasts, and rayons consistently improve food supplies to the population by making maximum use of local resources and the potential of kolkhozes, sovkhozes, citizens' personal subsidiary farms, collective horticulture, and the subsidiary farms of enterprises, organizations, and institutions, and also by ensuring the extensive introduction of waste-free techniques in food and other sectors of the processing industry and raising the quality of food products.

For each of the years of the 12th 5-Year Plan, the resolution sets stable grain purchase plans at the level of the 1986 plan.

With a view to stimulating increases in grain procurements for state resources in 1986-1990, kolkhozes, sovkhozes, and other agricultural enterprises are to be paid for grain sold over and above the average annual level of the 11th 5-Year Plan at the rate of a 100-percent premium to the purchase price provided that the state plans for grain sales are fulfilled (farms exceeding this level but not fulfilling the plan will receive a 50-percent premium). These premiums on the purchase prices of durum wheat grain, buckwheat, peas, millet, beans, mung beans, chickpeas, and lentils are to be paid irrespective of whether the level of grain sales as a whole is exceeded.

For farms that overfulfill the plans for grain sales to the state countersales of trucks, tractors, various types of agricultural machinery, and other resources in heightened demand have been introduced. The USSR State Agro-Industrial Committee [Gosagroprom] has been instructed to create special material resource funds for these purposes.

The provision to republics, krays, oblasts, rayons, and farms of grain seeds from state resources over and above the levels stipulated by the plan will take place, as a rule, on an exchange basis or in the form of a loan which must be repaid from the following year's harvest.

In order to enhance the interest of kolkhozes, sovkhozes, and other agricultural enterprises in increasing production of sunflowers, soybeans, and sugar beet, it is planned that, starting with the 1986 harvest, they will be sold the following for each quintal of crops sold to the state:

— 40 kg of oilseed meal (cake) and 20 kg of mixed feed for each quintal of sunflowers of the "Pervenets" variety (and other similar varieties);

— 10 kg of oilseed meal (cake) and 20 kg of mixed feed for each quintal of other varieties of sunflowers, and 30 kg of oilseed meal (cake) and 20 kg of mixed feed for each quintal sold over and above the average harvest achieved in the 11th 5-Year Plan;

— 30 kg of oilseed meal (cake) and 50 kg of mixed feed for each quintal of soybeans;

— 1.5 kg of molasses, 1 kg of mixed feed, and 60 kg of pulp residues for each quintal of sugar beet, and 5 kg of molasses, 2 kg of mixed feed, and 80 kg of pulp residues for each quintal sold over and above the average harvest achieved in the 11th 5-Year Plan.

It is deemed necessary to pay premiums at a rate of 50 percent of the purchase price in 1987-1990 for sales to the state by kolkhozes, sovkhozes, and other agricultural enterprises of sunflowers, sugar beet, raw cotton (fiber), soybeans, flax and hemp (straw, stock, and fiber), potatoes, leaf tea, hops, mustard, essential-oil crops, poppies (including seeds), livestock and poultry, milk, wool, astrakhan, and velvet antlers over and above the average level achieved in the 11th 5-Year Plan. Table grapes, citrus fruit, onions, garlic, alfalfa, clover, and cereal grasses are included in the list of products for which the aforementioned premiums are to be paid.

It is planned that as of 1987 plans for state purchases of livestock, poultry, milk, eggs, potatoes, vegetables, cucurbits, fruits and berries, table grapes, citrus fruit, and dried fruit will not be set for union and autonomous republics, krays, and oblasts, but that fixed plans will be established for each year of the 5-year plan for delivering the relevant products to all-union and republic stocks (or for deriving subsidies from them) and for delivering pedigree livestock. Rayons and farms will be set fixed plans for purchases of agricultural output under the established procedure.

With a view to increasing local organs' interest in increasing production of food products and improving the supply of these products to the population, it is deemed expedient to leave milk and meat resources and other output after fulfillment of the plans for delivery to all-union and republic stocks wholly at the disposal of councils of ministers of union republics which are not divided into oblasts, autonomous republic councils of ministers, krayispolkoms, and oblispolkoms. Where necessary, the implementation of mutual exchanges of foodstuffs among republics, krays, and oblasts on a contractual basis is authorized, making extensive use of consumer cooperative organizations to this end. It is laid down that the range of foodstuffs produced at enterprises of the USSR Gosagroprom system for local supply is to be determined by the councils of ministers of union republics which are not divided into oblasts, autonomous republic councils of ministers, krayispolkoms, and oblispolkoms.

Total responsibility for the timely delivery of food products to all-union and republic stocks in the volumes and ranges specified shall rest with union and autonomous republic councils of ministers, krayispolkoms, oblispolkoms, union and autonomous republic gosagroproms, and the agro-industrial committees of krays and oblasts. The amounts underdelivered to the aforesaid stocks are to be made good from the resources of the republics, krays, and oblasts in the following quarter or year.

The established procedure is to be strictly followed by farms when using meat and milk for intrafarm needs.

It is deemed necessary for the plans for kolkhozes, sovkhozes, and other agricultural enterprises to be drawn up taking account of the development both of social production and of the personal subsidiary farms of citizens living on their territory. The USSR Central Statistical Administration is instructed to make the necessary additions to accounting and reporting procedures in order to reflect the development of social production and personal subsidiary farms on the corresponding territories.

Planning is to be carried out on the basis of the notified control figures laid down in the established procedure for purchases of agricultural output, capital investment quotas, and deliveries of the main types of material resources, which are determined on the basis of normatives allowing for the economic assessment of land and the availability of fixed production capital and labor and other resources.

After discussion at labor collective meetings, farm plans are referred upward to the immediately superior organ. The total volume of sales of agricultural produce to the state must not be lower than the average annual level reached over the preceding 5 years.

The USSR Gosagroprom and the USSR Gosplan are instructed to ensure that corresponding normatives are drawn up and introduced into planning practice as of 1987.

The resolution lays down that in drawing up long-term and annual plans the USSR Gosagroprom, the USSR Gosplan, and union republic councils of ministers must make provision for the formation of specialized raw material zones and the rational siting of processing industry enterprises, bearing in mind the creation on this basis of integrated agro-industrial associations, combines, and enterprises ensuring the comprehensive utilization of raw material resources, the production of high-quality food products and industrial goods, and the reduction of transport and other costs. At the same time they must ensure the development in farms and consumer cooperative organizations of capacities for storing and processing agricultural products in order to ensure more regular deliveries to consumers.

The USSR Gosagroprom and the USSR Central Statistical Administration are instructed as of 1987 to substantially reduce the number of indicators in plan documentation, annual reports, and the operational returns of kolkhozes, sovkhozes, and other agro-industrial complex enterprises.

It is established that union and autonomous republic councils of ministers, krayispolkoms, oblispolkoms, union and autonomous republic gosagroproms, and kray and oblast agro-industrial committees are fully responsible for providing stockraising with high-quality concentrated feed which is balanced in terms of protein and other components and for ensuring its rational use. It is deemed necessary for the volume of production of mixed feed and protein and vitamin additives and their ranges to be determined by union republic councils of ministers taking account of proposals from local soviet and economic organs. In order to produce this output extensive use must be made of the local raw material resources of kolkhozes, sovkhozes, and other agricultural and industrial enterprises.

The existing procedure for supplying mixed feed to poultry farms, large stockraising complexes, and specialized consumers is retained.

Union republic councils of ministers have been granted the right to introduce countersales of mixed feed, using the funds at their disposal, when purchasing individual types of agricultural output.

The USSR Gosagroprom and its local organs have been instructed to introduce as of 1987 new feed expenditure normatives ensuring a reduction in grain expenditure per unit of livestock product production.

The CPSU Central Committee and the USSR Council of Ministers have instructed the USSR Gosagroprom and union republic councils of ministers to implement a range of measures to increase production of vegetable and animal protein, ensuring complete balance in the feed used in stockraising by the end of the 12th 5-Year Plan. With a view to enhancing the interest of local organs in increasing production of feed protein, it has been established that feed yeast, tankage, whole milk substitute, and other high-protein industrial feed additives produced over and above plan at enterprises situated on the territories of oblasts, krays, and autonomous and union republics (without oblast divisions) will remain wholly at their disposal.

It is deemed necessary to extend to 1987-1990 the payment of premiums on the purchase prices of agricultural products sold to the state by low-profitability and loss-making kolkhozes, sovkhozes, and other agricultural enterprises working in poor natural and economic conditions. These premiums are to be paid at the existing rate and under the procedure laid down in accordance with Paragraph 2 of CPSU Central Committee and USSR Council of Ministers Resolution No 1017 of 25 November 1982.

Union and autonomous republic councils of ministers, krayispolkoms, oblispolkoms, rayispolkoms, union and autonomous republic gosagroproms, kray and oblast agro-industrial committees, and rayon agro-industrial associations are instructed to draw up and implement specific measures for each low-profitability and loss-making farm which guarantee an acceleration of the growth rate of agricultural output, a reduction in unproductive expenditure, a reduction in output prime cost, and an increase in labor productivity and production profitability.

The USSR Gosagroprom, the USSR State Committee on Prices, and the USSR Central Statistical Administration are instructed to step up controls over the changing of prices of industrial products and services for agriculture, the prime cost of agricultural output, and production profitability. Proposals will be made as necessary to the USSR Council of Ministers to maintain price equivalence [tsenovaya ekvivalentnost] by making the corresponding changes to purchase prices in connection with the growth in kolkhoz and sovkhoz overheads engendered by increased prices for industrial output.

Union republic councils of ministers, in coordination with the USSR Gosagroprom and the USSR State Committee on Prices, are authorized where necessary to change the purchase prices of individual types of agricultural products within the limits of the total sum paid for the planned volume of purchases of agricultural products.

In order to reduce losses of fruit and vegetable products and to actively influence the reduction of kolkhoz market prices, union and autonomous republic gosagroproms and kray and oblast agro-industrial committees are empowered to set retail prices for vegetables, fruit, grapes, potatoes, cucurbits, green vegetables, and other highly perishable fruit and vegetable products sold through stores under their jurisdiction.

With a view to stimulating sovkhozes and other USSR Gosagroprom system enterprises to process fruit, vegetable, and other products, wild fruit and berries, and mushrooms and to produce new types of foodstuffs in demand among the population (juices, fruit drinks, jams, preserves, canned goods, and others), they are authorized to sell these products through stores under their jurisdiction at promotional prices set by oblast and kray agro-industrial committees, autonomous republic gosagroproms, and the gosagroproms of union republics (with no oblast divisions). It is established that up to 50 percent of the profits earned from selling these products shall be allocated to the fund for sociocultural measures.

The USSR Gosagroprom and its local organs are instructed to implement measures to further strengthen production contacts between kolkhozes, sovkhozes, and other agricultural enterprises on the one hand and consumer cooperative organizations and citizens' personal subsidiary farms on the other. Kolkhozes, sovkhozes, and other agricultural enterprises are authorized to sell up to 30 percent of the planned volume of purchases of potatoes, vegetables, cucurbits, fruit and berries, table grapes, and any above-plan agricultural output to consumer cooperative organizations and at kolkhoz markets, crediting these sales toward the fulfillment of the plan for prices in accordance with contracts. Farms may also use above-plan agricultural output for other needs at their discretion.

It is established that as of 1986 livestock and poultry raised on citizens' personal subsidiary farms in accordance with contracts will be purchased by consumer cooperative organizations directly or through kolkhozes and sovkhozes and will be sold at cooperative trade prices mainly to ensure local supplies to the population of cities and industrial and rayon centers. The USSR Gosagroprom, together with the USSR Gosplan, the USSR Ministry of Finance, the USSR Central Statistical Administration, and the Tsentrosoyuz have been given 2 months to draw up and ratify a standard contract between consumer cooperative organizations and kolkhozes, sovkhozes, and citizens with personal subsidiary farms for the production and sale of meat and other agricultural products and to specify the procedure for crediting that production toward the fulfillment of the plan for sales to the state and the procedure for incentive payments for kolkhozes and sovkhozes. The point of departure here must be that, as an integral component of socialist agricultural production, citizens' personal subsidiary farms, relying on assistance from kolkhozes and sovkhozes, are called upon to more fully satisfy rural inhabitants' requirements for meat, milk, eggs, potatoes, vegetables, fruit, and other foodstuffs and to sell any surpluses through the cooperative trade system and on the kolkhoz market.

Kolkhozes, sovkhozes, and other agro-industrial complex enterprises are instructed to increase sales to the population of grain forage, coarse and succulent feed, seeds and planting stock, young animals and poultry, and solid fuel. Aid to citizens' personal subsidiary farms in working homestead plots and in agrochemical and veterinary services is to be expanded. The complete satisfaction of the population's need for young hogs and poultry is to be achieved in the next 2 years. Citizens who are working actively in social production and who have personal subsidiary farms are to be encouraged in every possible way.

With a view to reinforcing the principles of financial autonomy in the work of sovkhozes and other state agricultural enterprises, it is established that, as of 1987, wage funds are to be built by the farms themselves on the basis of normatives that will remain stable throughout the 5-year plan per R100 of (gross) agricultural output sold. The USSR Gosagroprom together with the USSR Gosplan, the USSR Ministry of Finance, the USSR State Committee for Labor and Social Problems, and the USSR Gosbank have been given 6 months to draw up and ratify a procedure for establishing normatives for building up wage funds and allocating labor remuneration funds to sovkhozes and other state agricultural enterprises. These normatives are to ensure preferential growth in labor productivity in comparison with wages growth. For output produced over and above the level at which the normative is fixed, for each 1 percent growth in output sales (production) the wages fund is determined on the basis of an amended figure averaging 80 percent of the normative figure. Savings on the wages funds are channeled in equal measure into the farm's material incentive fund and reserve fund; overexpenditure is recouped from these funds or, should these prove inadequate, by reducing the bonuses paid to the farm collective. Should average wage growth rates outstrip labor productivity growth rates, a corresponding proportion of the material incentive fund is reserved by the enterprise for use in the following year in providing incentives for further labor productivity growth and increasing production efficiency or channeled into the fund for sociocultural measures in the current year.

Taking into account the fact that the collective contract and financial autonomy are highly important factors in improving production efficiency, the CPSU Central Committee and the USSR Council of Ministers have set the USSR Gosagroprom and its local organs the task of organizing in the shortest possible period the transition of all production subunits of agricultural, processing, and other enterprises onto a footing of collective contract and financial autonomy. The introduction of the shop structure for production management and of a system for remunerating the leaders of structural subunits and specialists for the end product is to be ensured. The transition of shop, team, livestock unit, and link collectives and of farms as a whole to labor remuneration on the basis of gross revenue is to be more extensively practiced. The USSR Gosagroprom and the USSR State Committee for Labor and Social Problems, together with the AUCCTU, have been given 3 months to approve recommendations on labor remuneration based on gross revenue.

With a view to further enhancing workers' material interest in the growth of output, sovkhoz directors and leaders of other state agricultural enterprises are empowered, within the limit of the approved wages fund (normative), to establish rates of pay for output on the basis of an increase of up to 150 percent in wage scales depending on the growth of agricultural crop harvest yields and of livestock and poultry productivity, without allowing any increase in wage costs per unit of output for the farm as a whole.

The resolution establishes bonus payments for the collectives of subdivisions of sovkhozes and other state agricultural enterprises for savings on the direct costs envisaged in their targets, such payments amounting to 70 percent of any savings effected, while in the event of the prescribed expenditure being exceeded, any such excess is to be reimbursed from funds allocated for the collectives' wages and bonus payments. Kolkhozes are recommended to introduce a similar procedure for bonus payments and the utilization of the wages fund.

Depending on specific production conditions, sovkhozes and other state agricultural enterprises are authorized and kolkhozes are recommended to use family and personal contracts in horticulture and stockraising as one form of collective contract. Moreover, rates of pay for output are to be determined according to the procedure established for collectives working under contract conditions.

Farm leaders are empowered to allow workers in contract collectives to retain as payment in kind up to 25 percent of any output produced over and above the volume set by the contract (if so desired, a payment equivalent to the retail price value of such output can be made). No wage earnings are to be credited in respect of any produce retained.

It is deemed necessary to introduce wage payments to leading workers, specialists, and employees on sovkhozes and other state agricultural enterprises according to pay rates (normatives) geared to sold (gross) output. The setting of pay rates (normatives) must be based on current salary scales and the level of sales (production) of output achieved in the preceding 5 years. An advance payment equivalent to 80 percent of the current salary scale amount can be made pending the calculation of output figures. Kolkhozes are recommended to adopt a similar wages system.

With a view to boosting the interest of leading workers, specialists, and employees on sovkhozes and other state agricultural enterprises in saving material, labor, and other resources and in increasing production efficiency, it is envisaged that the following bonus payments be made to them from the material incentives fund or, in the event of shortages in that fund, from the wages fund:

— up to one-tenth of monthly salary for every percentage point of profitability;

— half of monthly salary for every percentage point of profitability growth over and above the level achieved in the preceding 5 years.

Farms which are planned to incur losses are allowed to link bonus payments to this category of workers with any reduction of planned losses, channeling to this purpose up to 10 percent of the amount by which losses have been reduced in comparison with the average annual indicators for the preceding 5 years.

In the event of farms not fulfilling the plan for sales of grain, milk, livestock, and poultry to the state, and in the case of specialized farms also failing to fulfill their basic sector production plan, and also in the event of wages growth being faster than labor productivity growth, leading workers, specialists, and employees are fully or partially deprived of any credited bonus payments by decision of the rayon agro-industrial association or other superior organizations. The total amount of bonus paid to any worker, including all payments from the material incentives fund and bonuses under special bonus payment systems, must not exceed his basic annual earnings calculated on the basis of rates of pay for output. Kolkhozes are recommended to adopt a similar bonus payments procedure.

It has been established that the total amount allocated for bonus payments to leading workers and specialists on kolkhozes, sovkhozes, and other state agricultural enterprises under the provisions of existing regulations for increasing the output and sales of sugar beet, sunflowers, oil-producing poppies, and groundnuts is to be transferred by procurement and processing enterprises to farms' material incentives funds.

With a view to stepping up the interest and enhancing the responsibility of rayon (interrayon) repair enterprises, enterprises for agrochemical and energy services, and supply bases (offices) for ensuring that kolkhozes, sovkhozes, and other agro-industrial complex enterprises are supplied with the necessary material and technical resources and that contractual obligations are properly fulfilled, quarterly bonus payments amounting to three-fourths of monthly salary have been instituted for leaders, specialists, and employees. In addition to this, they will be paid bonuses on the basis of annual results with respect to any growth in the volume of sales of agricultural produce by the farms they serve in comparison with the level achieved in the preceding 5 years, with such bonuses amounting to up to 3 months' salary per worker. The bonuses will be paid following a decision by the rayon agro-industrial association (agro-industrial committee), provided contracts with kolkhozes, sovkhozes, and other enterprises have been fulfilled. Bonus payments for workers are also envisaged for the prompt and proper fulfillment of the targets set for the team, section, or shop in accordance with the enterprise's contractual obligations, with such payments to be based on quarterly results of work and not to exceed 1.5 month's salary. Bonus payments are to be made from the material incentives fund and the wages fund.

As a result of the introduction of the new procedure for labor remuneration and bonus payments to workers, leading workers, specialists, and employees on sovkhozes and other state agricultural enterprises and also in rayon (interrayon) repair enterprises, enterprises for agrochemical and energy services, and supply bases (offices), all previously established bonuses for increasing production and sales of individual types of agricultural produce together with other bonuses and conditions for their payment are abolished, except for bonuses to workers on sovkhozes and other agricultural enterprises in respect of growth in the sales (production) of agricultural output.

With a view to enhancing the interest and responsibility of management organs in the agro-industrial complex for the end results of production, payments are introduced for leading workers and specialists in the management apparatus of rayon agro-industrial associations, autonomous republic gosagroproms, and kray and oblast agro-industrial committees, with such payments to be made according to rates linked with the volume of output sold. The determination of these rates is to be based on current salary scales and the level of output sales achieved in the preceding 5 years. An advance payment equivalent to 90 percent of monthly salary can be made pending the caluclation of output figures.

Bonus payments are established for leading workers and specialists of rayon agro-industrial associations, kray and oblast agro-industrial committees, and autonomous republic gosagroproms. The total amount of bonus credited to each worker must not exceed 6 months' salary for rayon agro-industrial associations or 4 months' salary for autonomous republic gosagroproms or kray and oblast agro-industrial committees.

The resolution lays down that, as a rule, kolkhozes, sovkhozes, and other agricultural enterprises within the USSR Gosagroprom system effect expanded reproduction and engage in the construction of projects for nonproduction purposes out of their own resources or from USSR Gosbank credits within the credit plan limits. Budget appropriations are allocated to agricultural enterprises mainly for expenditure on the further development of the material and technical base for boosting the production of agricultural output or solving social problems. The size of such appropriations for the years of the 12th 5-Year Plan will be determined, taking the 1986 plan as the starting point, with due consideration for the growth of gross output, the volume of capital investments in the year in question, and the increase in the share of enterprises' own funds for the development of production.

It is deemed necessary to effect during the 12th 5-Year Plan period, as circumstances permit, a transition to the financing of kolkhozes, sovkhozes, and other enterprises and organizations within the USSR Gosagroprom system on the basis of consolidated items of expenditure, as a rule from the budgets of oblasts, krays, or autonomous republics.

The USSR Gosagroprom, union and autonomous republic gosagroproms, kray and oblast agro-industrial committees, and rayon agro-industrial associations are empowered:

— to effect a redistribution of allocated budget appropriations according to the channels of their utilization;

— to amend the quarterly distribution of budget appropriations depending on progress in the fulfillment of plan measures;

— to submit proposals for amendments to appropriations from the budget and payments into the budget without altering mutual relations with the budget as a whole.

State agricultural enterprises are authorized to finance plan measures by utilizing all free financial resources at their disposal regardless of their provenance.

It is deemed necessary that, as of 1987, sovkhozes and other state agricultural enterprises and organizations make payments into the budget from profits, while kolkhozes pay income tax according to normatives which are stable for the 5-year plan years and are established with due consideration for the economic assessment of land and the availability of fixed capital and labor resources. In this connection the USSR Ministry of Finance and the USSR Gosagroprom have been instructed to elaborate and approve within a period of 6 months the normatives for payments into the budget and the procedure for making such payments.

In order to develop interfarm enterprises for the production, processing, and storage of agricultural produce and other specialized enterprises, and also for the purpose of equalizing conditions for economic activity on kolkhozes, sovkhozes, and other enterprises and rendering assistance to farms suffering from the effect of natural disasters, consent has been given to create centralized reserve funds in rayon agro-industrial associations, oblast and kray agro-industrial committees, autonomous and union republic gosagroproms, and the USSR Gosagroprom (for enterprises under union jurisdiction) by transferring funds from sovkhozes, kolkhozes (subject to their agreement), and other state enterprises and organizations within the USSR Gosagroprom system.

Sovkhozes and other state agricultural enterprises are empowered to distribute their profits (after payments into the budget and interest payments on USSR Gosbank loans) at their own discretion, utilizing them to repay USSR Gosbank credits, to develop production and implement other plan measures, to form economic incentive funds (material incentives and social and cultural measures) and farm reserve funds, and to transfer funds into centralized reserve funds. Any surplus of funds belonging to sovkhozes and other state agricultural enterprises and unutilized at the end of the year is not subject to confiscation.

It is incumbent upon the USSR Gosagroprom and union republic councils of ministers, as the economies of kolkhozes, sovkhozes, and other agro-industrial complex enterprises and organizations grow stronger, to transfer their activity to the basis of the principle of self-financing.

It is laid down that credits are granted to kolkhozes, sovkhozes, and organizations within the USSR Gosagroprom system with consideration for the preservation and rational utilization of their own funds and the prompt repayment of credits that are granted.

The USSR Gosbank, by agreement with the USSR Gosagroprom and the USSR Ministry of Finance, has been ordered to elaborate and introduce standard regulations for the provision of short-term credits to kolkhozes, sovkhozes, and other agricultural enterprises and organizations to meet the costs of material assets and production expenditure without subdividing them into projects for which credit is being given and with due consideration for the overall normative of circulating capital, and also to implement measures to further unify the granting of credits to other enterprises and organizations within the USSR Gosagroprom system. During the 12th 5-Year Plan period, when granting credits to kolkhozes which have no funds of their own to ensure expanded reproduction, the USSR Gosbank must use as the normative for own circulating capital the amount of such capital existing as at 1 January 1987 and its planned annual growth.

It is laid down that long-term credits made available under the long-term credit plan to kolkhozes, sovkhozes, and other enterprises and organizations within the USSR Gosagroprom system are granted:

— for the construction, expansion, reconstruction, and retooling of projects for production purposes over a repayment period not to exceed 20 years, with repayments beginning in the fifth year following the granting of the credit; — for the acquisition of agricultural equipment, means of transportation, and machinery not included in construction project estimates, over a period not to exceed 7 years with repayments beginning in the third year following the granting of the credit; — for the construction of projects for nonproduction purposes on kolkhozes for a period of up to 15 years, with repayments beginning in the fifth year following the granting of the credit.

The USSR Gosbank is authorized to grant credits to kolkhozes, sovkhozes, and processing and other enterprises and organizations within the USSR Gosagroprom system for the construction, expansion, reconstruction, and retooling of projects for production purposes (in excess of the capital investment quota) for a period of up to 6 years, with repayments to be made from additionally earned income, such loans being subject to a 3-percent annual interest charge.

It is deemed necessary to reschedule the outstanding debts owed by low-profitability and loss-making kolkhozes, sovkhozes, other state agricultural enterprises, processing enterprises, and interfarm construction organizations in respect of USSR Gosbank loans due for repayment in 1986-1990, making them repayable over a period of 10 years beginning in 1995. The enterprises and organizations in question are released from making payments of interest in respect of USSR Gosbank loans whose repayment has been rescheduled in accordance with this resolution.

With a view to creating stable financial conditions for normal operation by kolkhozes, sovkhozes, and other agricultural enterprises suffering from the effect of natural disasters or other adverse weather conditions, it is deemed necessary as of 1986 to increase the level of insurance compensation to 60 percent of the value of the shortfall in the harvest of agricultural crops.

The CPSU Central Committee and the USSR Council of Ministers have made it incumbent upon the USSR Gosagroprom, the USSR Ministry of Finance, and the USSR Gosbank to step up their monitoring of the production-financial activity of kolkhozes, sovkhozes, and other agro-industrial complex enterprises and organizations, the preservation of their own circulating capital, the efficient utilization of credits granted to them, and the prompt repayment of such credits. It is laid down that enterprises which systematically fail to fulfill their plans; incur above-plan expenses, nonproduction expenditure, and losses; violate financial discipline; and fail to ensure prompt repayment of credits, are made subject to special credit regulations by USSR Gosbank offices in accordance with established procedures.

The CPSU Central Committee and the USSR Council of Ministers consider that the most important tasks in the sphere of capital construction are:

— to further enhance the effectiveness of capital investments and channel them into meeting the priority requirements of the development of the production, processing, and storage of agricultural produce, reconstructing and retooling existing enterprises, ensuring the construction of enterprises and projects strictly in accordance with established norms for the duration of construction work and the commissioning of planned capacities, and accelerating the social restructuring of the countryside as a most important factor for the creation of stable labor collectives;

— to enhance the role and responsibility of all components of the agro-industrial complex for the acceleration of scientific and technical progress on the basis of introducing into planning and construction practice highly efficient energy- and resources-saving technologies and new equipment, automating production processes, and making extensive use of robotic complexes and flexible automated lines ensuring substantial growth of output and labor productivity;

— to strengthen in every way and further develop the material and technical base of the USSR Gosagroprom's construction organizations, further expand the integration of the own-resources and contractual methods of construction, build up the capacities of construction industry enterprises, increase the degree of prefabrication of articles and components produced, make extensive use of advanced structural components and local materials in construction, and reduce the costs and considerably improve the quality of planning and construction and installation work.

With a view to expanding the rights and enhancing the role and responsibility of enterprises and organizations within the agro-industrial complex system in the implementation of capital construction, it is laid down that as of 1987 all capital construction plan indicators will be set by sovkhozes and other state enterprises and organizations within the limits of notified capital investment and construction and installation work quotas, and by kolkhozes taking into account the same indicators notified to them and backed up by material and technical resources. Provision must be made here for adhering to the normative schedules for project construction.

On the basis of the plans of kolkhozes, sovkhozes, and other enterprises and organizations, rayon agro-industrial associations, oblast and kray agro-industrial committees, autonomous and union republic gosagroproms, union republic councils of ministers, and the USSR Gosagroprom will elaborate consolidated plans for capital construction within the agro-industrial complex and will submit them in line with established procedures.

Sovkhozes, processing enterprises, and other state enterprises and organizations within the agro-industrial complex system are authorized, seeking out their own funds and material resources, to engage in the construction of projects for production and nonproduction purposes, and also to incur expenditure on perennial planting and the acquisition of machines, equipment, and agricultural technology in excess of the state capital investment quotas set for them in annual plans.

Kolkhozes, sovkhozes, and other enterprises and organizations within the agro-industrial complex system are empowered to elaborate (order) planning and estimate documentation for the retooling and reconstruction of projects for production purposes, with an estimated cost of such works of up to R500,000 (or up to R2.5 million for the retooling of existing processing industry enterprises); and to commit themselves to standard-design buildings and equipment, housing, and other projects for social and consumer services purposes with an estimated cost of up to R200,000 without prior coordination with territorial planning institutions. These works are to be financed out of funds envisaged for capital construction. Planning organizations within the USSR Gosagroprom system are authorized to carry out planning and surveying work under contract for kolkhozes, sovkhozes, and other agro-industrial complex enterprises and organizations in excess of the plans set for them.

It is laid down that itemized project lists for planning and surveying work and new construction projects for production purposes within the USSR Gosagroprom system will be approved as follows according to estimated costs:

— up to R1 million by leaders of kolkhozes, sovkhozes, and other enterprises and organizations;

— between R1 and R2 million by rayon agro-industrial associations;

— up to R4 million by kray and oblast agro-industrial committees and autonomous republic gosagroproms;

— up to R8 million by union republic gosagroproms;

— R8 million and above by the USSR Gosagroprom (with the exception of particularly important construction projects to be approved by the USSR Council of Ministers).

Design plans for the construction of enterprises, buildings, and equipment within the USSR Gosagroprom system with an estimated cost of R10 million and over are to approved by the USSR Gosagroprom (for all construction projects within its system); and those with an estimated cost of up to R10 million, according to procedures to be laid down by it. Documents governing the acceptance of projects for commissioning are to approved by the body which sanctioned the itemized project lists for their construction.

It is laid down that, in order to obtain construction finance, enterprises and organizations within the agro-industrial complex system will submit to USSR Gosbank offices itemized project lists and itemized intraproject lists for construction projects, financing plans, and contracts for the performance of subcontracted work.

Rayon agro-industrial associations and other management organs in the agro-industrial complex are empowered to channel in the second half of any year any funds allocated by the state plan for capital construction and not utilized by individual enterprises and organizations under their direct jurisdiction (with the exception of their own funds) into the financing of design planning and construction and installation work on projects included in the plan and into payments for machines, agricultural technology, and equipment.

It is laid down that wage computation in construction work done by sovkhozes and other enterprises and organizations in the agro-industrial complex system by the own-resource method will be in accordance with USSR Council of Ministers and AUCCTU Resolution No 87, dated 24 January 1985, on the basis of the normative labor-intensiveness and wages for construction and installation work specified in the construction estimates. Pending the transition to this system, computations must be worked out on the basis of the volume of work envisaged in the planning and estimate documentation and calculations of labor expenditure and wages in accordance with the schedule of works.

For the purpose of further improving design planning and creating an integrated system of design planning organizations within the agro-industrial complex system, it is deemed expedient to transfer agriculture-oriented design planning institutes from the jurisdiction of union republic gosstroys to the jurisdiction of union republic gosagroproms in 1986.

The USSR Gosagroprom, USSR Gosplan, USSR Gossnab, and USSR Gosstroy are instructed to elaborate and approve by 1 August 1986 normatives for material and technical resources for the repair and current maintenance needs of kolkhozes, sovkhozes, and other enterprises and organizations within the agro-industrial complex system, including normatives for such resources for the maintenance of farm roads. Its is incumbent upon the USSR Gosplan and USSR Gossnab, as of 1987, to make provision in plans for the allocation of all necessary material and technical resources for the repair and current maintenance needs of agro-industrial complex enterprises and organizations according to the normatives in question.

Sovkhoz directors and leaders of other state enterprises and organizations within the USSR Gosagroprom system are empowered, by agreement with trade union organizations and labor collectives, to provide from economic incentive funds payments for materials acquired by workers in these enterprises and organizations to build individual homes by their own efforts, with such payments not to exceed 50 percent of the cost of these materials. Kolkhozes are recommended to use their own funds to provide identical payments for materials acquired by kolkhoz members to build individual homes.

It is incumbent upon the USSR Gosagroprom and its local organs to step up the attention they give to the work of enterprises in the meat, dairy, and food industry which have transferred to new conditions of economic management in accordance with earlier USSR Government decisions, and to ensure their further improvement with due consideration for enhancing the interest and responsibility of labor collectives for obtaining high end results from the activity of enterprises and organizations.

It is deemed necessary to pay pensions equivalent to 100 percent of the established norms to pensioners who are permanent residents in the countryside and are involved in agriculture.

It is incumbent upon the USSR Gosagroprom, together with interested USSR ministries and departments and union republic council of ministers, to expand and deepen the conducting of comprehensive economic experiments for the further improvement of the agro-industrial production management, planning, financing, and incentive system. Experience in the implementation of measures envisaged by this resolution and also the results of economic experiments must be systematically generalized. Proposals must be elaborated by 1990 for the improvement of the agro-industrial complex economic machinery in the 13th 5-Year Plan period and must be submitted for examination by the USSR Council of Ministers simultaneously with the draft plan for economic and social development in 1991-1995.

The CPSU Central Committee and the USSR Council of Ministers emphasized in particular that the implementation of the measures to restructure management and improve the economic machinery demands substantial changes in the style and methods of leadership of the agro-industrial complex and a substantial rise in the level of all organizational and political work. This work, as the 27th CPSU Congress demands, must be aimed primarily at strengthening party, state, and technological discipline; developing the initiative and enhancing the labor activeness of labor collectives; and inculcating in each worker a sense of lofty exactingness and responsibility for fulfilling the plans and achieving the highest possible end results.

The most important task for union republic Communist Party central committees and councils of ministers, party kraykoms, obkoms, gorkoms, and raykoms, krayispolkoms, oblispolkoms, gorispolkoms, and rayispolkoms, and the USSR Gosagroprom and its organs is to further reinforce all sectors of agro-industrial production with skilled cadres capable of running it efficiently on the basis of the latest achievements of scientific and technical progress.

In order to successfully fulfill the set tasks it is necessary to raise the standard of cadres retraining, making sure that they fully master modern methods of management and principles of work on the principles of the collective contract and financial autonomy and that they acquire profound knowledge of intensive, energy-saving, and other advanced technologies and the ability to make thrifty and rational use of resources.

It is necessary to considerably step up the attention given to improving the skills of cadres in the mass trade, making sure that every worker masters the fundamentals of economics, has a perfect knowledge of the job entrusted to him, and is capable of ensuring in practice high labor productivity and production efficiency.

Proceeding from the new and higher demands made on cadres, the USSR Gosagroprom and the USSR Ministry of Higher and Secondary Specialized Education are instructed to make the relevant changes to study plans and training programs in higher and secondary specialized education establishments which train specialists for agro-industrial complex enterprises and organizations.

The CPSU Central Committee and the USSR Council of Ministers express firm confidence that the labor collectives, party, trade union, and Komsomol organizations, and leaders and specialists of kolkhozes, sovkhozes, and other agro-industrial complex enterprises and organizations will make full use of the new favorable conditions of economic management, achieve a significant increase in the return from existing potential and allocated resources, an acceleration of the rate of production growth, and an improvement in output quality, and thus make a fitting contribution to the fulfillment of the 27th CPSU Congress decisions and the further enhancement of the Soviet people's prosperity.

'Inertia' Delays Agro-Industrial Improvement

[Commentary by Professor Grigorevich Ushachev, deputy director of the All-Union Institute of Agricultural Economics]

[Text] The CPSU Central Committee and the USSR Council of Ministers have, as is known, adopted a decision on further improving the economic mechanism of management in the country's agro-industrial complex. At the microphone is our regular commentator on economic matters, Professor Ivan Grigorevich Ushachev, deputy director of the All-Union Institute of Agricultural Economics:

The main idea in this decision is to give full range to economic methods of running farms. I would like to stress the word "full range" [prostor]. As is known, the main element in the economic mechanism is planning. Therefore, it is primarily intended to implement a number of measures directed at further improving this element. It is planned, beginning in 1987, to establish plans for the purchases of agricultural produce for kolkhozes and sovkhozes and other agricultural enterprises according to quotas [normativ] which will be based on the quality of land, on the degree of provision of fixed production assets, on the availability of labor, and on other resources. It is precisely the quota method of planning that makes it possible to form equally intensive plans which will make it possible to significantly increase the responsibility for their fulfillment, and to better utilize the available production potential. That is the first point.

Second, it is envisaged in the planning sphere to greatly cut the number of plan indicators, which are approved by the kolkhozes and sovkhozes and the enterprises in other industries of the agro-industrial complex, from above. It is intended to set up a stable year-by-year plan for grain purchases in the 12th 5-Year Plan, instead of the present purchase plan being approved, which accumulates over the years of the 5-year plan. With the aim of enhancing the personal interest and responsibility of local bodies for improving the provision of food products to the population, this decision plans to establish for union and autonomous republics, krays, and oblasts only plans for supplies to union and republican funds [fond] and also subsidies [dotatsiya] of meat and meat products, milk and milk products, eggs, potatoes, vegetables, fruits, berries, and grapes. What is more, the plans for supplies and grants are outlined as stable for the 5-year plan with a breakdown [razbivka] over the years, which is very important. Produce after the fulfillment of plans for supplies to union and republican funds remains at the disposal of local bodies. The kolkhozes and sovkhozes are allowed to sell to consumer cooperative organizations and at kolkhoz markets, in accordance with the agreement, at prices of up to 30 percent of the plan purchases for potatoes and fruit and vegetable produce and all above plan agricultural produce on account of [s zachetom] fulfilling plans for its sale to the state. [sentence as heard] The decision determines measures for intensifying the agricultural enterprises' personal economic stake in the growth of production and the sale of grain to the state. On fulfilling the state plan for the sale of grain, farms will be paid supplements to the purchase prices to the tune of 100 percent for the entire quantity sold above the average yearly level of the 11th 5-Year Plan. Besides this, for farms overfulfilling plans for grain purchases counter sales [vstrechnaya prodazha] of automobiles, wheeled tractors, construction, and other materials in short supply are on offer.

Plans for the purchases of sunflowers and sugar beet have not been fulfilled in recent years. With the aim of providing an additional incentive to achieve a growth in their production, it has been recognized as expedient to carry out, without allocation certificates [beznaryadnyy], the release or sale of this produce — sunflower seed oil or oilcake, beet pulp, and molasses — in the form of supplying goods under contract [otovarivaniye] to farm-suppliers.

In doing this, there will be an increased supply of goods under contract for oilseed and sugar beet produced above the level of the preceding 5-year plan. The implementation of the proposed measures for improving the economic machinery will make it possible to more fully use the agro-industrial complex' potential, as well as the possibilities of each region to increase the production of foodstuffs produce and to improve supplies to the population.

And so the positions have been marked out. The state decisions will go to the executors. It is now important to fulfill these decisions accurately. There is nothing to be gained by concealing how much was left unfulfilled in the not so distant past or, as it was customary to put it in mild terms, was not completely fulfilled. And now, what has been hindering the local organs of the agro-industrial complex from utilizing their new and considerable rights more rapidly and more effectively? In many places, alas, restructuring is being delayed too long. Inertia, the former narrow departmental approach, a craving for instructions from above are still providing an obstacle. It is more tranquil when these things are present. There is a fear of socialist enterprise, for this also represents a kind of risk. The qualifications of cadres in a whole number of professions are poor. It seems important to us that the old methods of management are renounced as soon as possible.

Need To Improve Machinery Repair Work Viewed

[Yu. Grachev "Agricultural Review": "Bring Feed Harvesting Machinery Into Full Readiness!"]

[Excerpts] During these days workers in the rural engineering service are devoting much attention to preparing vehicles and machines to be taken out into the meadows and fields. They realize that this work must be dealt with as soon as possible. Because once the sowing begins, there will simply be no opportunity to successfully complete repairs of feed harvesting machinery.

On those farms that are fully aware of what complex, responsible work is to be done in the feed fields, they are trying to utilize workshops to full capacity. Specialized enterprises of the State Agro-Industrial Committee are also involved in repairs of feed harvesting machinery; the supply services seek to provide rural repair workers with the necessary spare parts and subassemblies. And there are already many farms where, as a result of harmonious operations, all of the feed harvesting machinery is in readiness.

Unfortunately, it appears that not everyone knows the true value of time in haymaking. Central Statistical Administration figures show that despite the relatively good situation regarding the preparation of feed harvesting machinery in the country as a whole, people are not hurrying to do this very important work in a number of rayons and oblasts.

Thus, this year in the North Kazakhstan Oblast, where one-third of the tractor mowers were unprepared for the green harvest last year, the farms are again lagging behind the planned schedules for repairing haymaking machinery. It appears that they have not profited from last year's lesson. Nor has the proper conclusion been drawn from last year's errors on many farms in Turkmenia, Tajikistan, and Aktyubinsk, East Kazakhstan, Semipalatinsk, and Volgograd Oblasts, where the haymaking time begins much earlier than in other regions of the country, but the readiness of the machine pool leaves something to be desired.

Even for the rural collectives in the country's more northern oblasts, delay can hardly be permitted. Some complacency can be observed, for instance, on farms in Ryazan, Kirov, Chelyabinsk, and Sverdlovsk Oblasts and the Udmurt Autonomous Republic, where by mid-March no more than 65 percent of the tractor mowers, the same proportion of tractor rakes, and 70-80 percent of pickup balers had been prepared.

A subject of special concern must be the repair of complex feed harvesting machinery: type KSK-100 and Ye-281 combines. So far, their readiness in the country as a whole is less than 70 percent. And in the Kazakh SSR only around one-half of these machines are ready to go. KSK-100 and Ye-281 combines are being repaired at a slow pace in a number of oblasts of the Ukraine, Moldavia, Tajikistan, and the RSFSR.

It must be stressed that the repair of complex feed harvesting machinery gives the rural workers even more trouble because in some places they have not succeeded in using the potential created for this purpose by the formation of the agro-industrial complex. Specialized enterprises are not sufficiently involved in the restoration of these complex machines; the supply of spare parts and subassemblies to workshops is not always efficiently organized. Local engineering services do not always carry out timely fault detection work on combines, and they are slow to deliver them to the specialized workshops. The renovation of components for this machinery has not been organized everywhere; this is of great significance in organizing the repair of the machinery and its timely preparation for the feed harvest.

At specialized enterprises of the Moskovskiy Rayon Agro-Industrial Association in the Kirghiz SSR, special sections have been assigned to carry out comprehensive repairs on complex feed harvesting machines.

In the Lithuanian SSR five specialized enterprises of the State Agro-Industrial Committee are involved in repairing complex feed harvesting machinery. In Belorussia such enterprises have managed to organize the renovation of more than 170 types of the scarcest components. In some places the collectives of local industrial enterprises are involved in manufacturing them. It is now a matter of disseminating this experience widely.

Evidently we cannot get by without more active, purposeful assistance from the industrial collectives responsible for supplying the countryside with material and technical resources. There are still many shortcomings in the supply of spare parts to workshops and enterprises of the State Agro-Industrial Committee. The editorial office constantly receives complaints from rural repair workers about the collectives of the Kirghiz SSR agricultural machinery plant named for Frunze, the Lyubertsy Zavod Imeni Ukhtomskogo production association, the Gomselmash production association, the Syzranselmash plant, the Sosnovyy Bor machine plant in Leningrad Oblast, and a number of other enterprises of the Ministry of Machine Building for Livestock Raising and Feed Production.

Despite the frequent criticism, this department has not yet succeeded in organizing its plants' work in such a way as to fully satisfy the requirments of rural workers for reliable feed harvesting machinery and spare parts.

Rural machine operators make justified complaints about the quality of KSK-100 combines. The design shortcomings of these machines are affecting the development of feed production. Yet the Ministry of Machine Building for Livestock Raising and Feed Production appears quite unable to organize the production of more up-to-date, more productive machinery at its enterprises. Yet there was plenty of time and resources to do this.

"Treat feed crops like grain!" This slogan, which rural workers are adopting everywhere, must be the pivot of the forthcoming green harvest. Carrying out the harvest to a high organizational standard is the concern of all components of the agro-industrial complex.

Further on Lizichev Report on Ideological Training

[Unattributed article: "Proceeding From Life and Exerting Influence Upon Life"]

[Text] As has already reported, a conference of chiefs of propaganda and agitation sections of political directorates of branches of the Armed Forces, districts, groups of forces, and fleets; editors of district, group, and fleet newspapers; and chiefs of district, group, and fleet officers' houses was held at the M.V. Frunze Central House of the Soviet Army. The participants focused their attention on questions of how to implement in practice the 27th CPSU Congress' demands on ideological education work.

A report was delivered to the conference by Army General A. Lizichev, chief of the Soviet Army and Navy Main Political Directorate. The 27th CPSU Congress decisions, he said, require us to direct cadres toward new tasks and to channel the creative potential of the personnel and every military collective toward carrying them out.

The scale and innovatoriness of our work require that we resolutely dispense with stagnant thinking, the purely didactic thrust of many propaganda measures, their isolation from the grassroots, and ideological cadres' attachment to outmoded forms. The task of establishing professionalism in the organization of ideological activity is becoming more pressing than ever before. What must be overcome here is the formal bureaucratic, quantative approach where emphasis is placed solely on impressive plans and large-scale measures and agitational campaigns. This must be guarded against by the establishment of a strict system of objective work which must be targeted at achieving definite end results.

What must he organizers of ideological work and the ideological aktiv have at the forefront of their minds? The speaker stressed that we possess an undoubted moral and political superiority over our likely opponent and must augment it. Ideological influence on the attitude of cadres and all servicemen to combat training and its quality must be stepped up. The quality of combat training is above all a problem of people, of their combat mood, and of critical and exacting evaluation of the results of their work.

All ostensibly familiar questions must be looked at through fresh eyes and new approaches to them must be determined. In fact, all "traditional" tasks have become more complex today and require in-depth consideration and creative effort to find solutions. And it is now time to move away from words and wishes to deeds, to specific organizational and educational measures capable of yielding an appreciable return in the results of martial labor in the very near future.

Molding in military servicemen a scientific, Marxist-Leninist world outlook and a high level of ideological commitment is the central task of our ideological efforts, the speaker stressed. It is important not to forget that this is not a process of offering abstract truths. The utterly concrete nature of the molding of communist ideological commitment and the fact, stressed at the congress, that "you cannot be an ideologically committed person "if you are not honest, conscientious, upright, and self-exacting," must be remembered. It is necessary to eradicate manifestations of pedantry in the Marxist-Leninist training of officers, to vigorously introduce a heuristic teaching method into their studies, to analyze in depth pressing issues from the standpoint of the theoretical tenets and program demands of the party, and to closely link the material being studied to the practical tasks of instructing and educating subordinates.

There must be a more practical thrust to ensigns' and warrant officers' political studies. It is necessary to analyze more often during political classes with soldiers, sailors, sergeants, and petty officers their service and attitude to duty, instances of unhealthy phenomena in military collectives and in the conduct of some servicemen, and the circumstances underlying them. It is necessary to proceed from life and exert influence upon life.

Participants' attention was drawn to problems of ideological and political education work aimed at enhancing the level of organization and strengthening regulation order and military discipline. The inculcation in cadres of the ability to see the political point of all their activity and to take account of the moral consequences of their actions is of great importance here. There are still officers who do not correctly understand the crux of the concept of closeness to people. It is not a purely formal closeness but a lasting spiritual and moral unity that is meant. Quite frequently there is neglect of questions such as the manifestation of concern for servicemen's daily life and their cultural growth, fair demands on subordinates, the personal example of a superior, intolerance of toadying and servility, and the ability to listen and show respect to opinions expressed — questions, that is, which, when resolved, create an atmosphere of closeness.

The desire of some commanders and political workers to conceal negative features does not help to strengthen discipline. It diminishes their authority and generates passivity in eradicating breaches. There must be more realism in assessment and more persistence in the struggle for discipline, and a lot can be done here by means of ideological influence. There must be no slackening of effort to establish a sober life style. It is necessary to boldly shift the focus of all ideological education work toward exerting daily ideological influence on the combat training activity of troops and naval forces, stepping up socialist competition, and counterpropaganda. The tasks confronting the military press organs bound up with the need to restructure in the spirit of present-day party demands on the mass media were detailed, and there was a discussion of ways to improve the activity of cultural enlightenment establishments and make skillful use of technical propaganda means in ideological work. Considerable attention was paid to improving work with propaganda cadres. Measures to organize in depth study of the 27th CPSU Congress documents with the personnel and carry out its decisions were examined in specific terms. It was stressed that ideological work is by its very nature inseparable from organizational work and that their close organic link must always be ensured in everything. Therein lies the key to success, to ensuring the effectiveness of party political work, and to enhancing its influence on the resolution of the Armed Forces' training tasks.

The following spoke at the conference plenary session: Colonel A. Sidorenko; Captain First Rank V. Sivograkov; Colonel G.

Shevchenko; Colonel B. Chistov; Colonel V. Nikolaychuk, Lieutenant Colonel A. Kostin; Lieutenant Colonel V. Ivlikov; Colonel N. Gusarov; and Colonel A. Yevdoshenko.

Work in sections took place and a seminar was held as part of the conference. Conference participants attended a number of lectures.

P. Slezko, first deputy chief of the CPSU Central Committee Propaganda Department, participated in the conference's work.

Vladivostok Draft Organization Flaws Discussed

PM010858 Moscow KRASNAYA ZVEZDA in Russian 19 Mar 86 Second Edition p 4

[Unattributed article under the rubric "After KRASNAYA ZVEZDA Spoke Out": "Before Beginning Service"]

[Text] On 5 December 1985 KRASNAYA ZVEZDA published a report by Captain First Class Yu. Timoshuk entitled "He Did Not Arrive On Time," which discussed shortcomings in the preparation of young people in Vladivostok's Frunzenskiy Rayon for military service and in the organization of their draft into the Army and Navy.

The editorial office received a reply signed by Major General I. Podgorny, first deputy chief of staff of the Far Eastern Military District, who reports that the article has been discussed at a joint conference of workers of the CPSU gorkom, gorispolkom, and kray military commissariat. A joint plan of work was adopted to improve young people's military patriotic education and organize the prompt registration of citizens at recruitment centers and their draft for active military service. The soviet krayispolkom has resolved the question of transferring a building to the kray military commissariat for housing the kray assembly center. Thequestion of equipping the Frunzenskiy Rayon military commissariat recruitment center was also resolved.

Lieutenant Colonel G. Kulik, rayon military commissar, has been disciplined for violations permitted in the work of organizing the draft of young people. The military prosecutor has also warned him about the impermissibility of breaches of the law. Lieutenant Colonel A. Yablonskiy, section chief of the kray military commissariat, was severely reprimanded for laxity in monitoring subordinates' activity.

Colonel of Justice V. Kaunin, military prosecutor of the Pacific Ocean Fleet, reported to the editorial office that the Maritime Kray military commissar has been informed about breaches of the USSR Law "On Compulsory Military Service." Replies signed by senior legal counsellors I. Sinegubov and A. Kolesnikov, deputy prosecutors of the Maritime Kray, report on measures aimed at stepping up prosecutor's office supervision of the execution of this law.

Unfortunately when the author was preparing the report for publication, certain facts connected with circumstances of student E. Itskevich's draft were not properly checked. As a result Doctor A.M. Krasnykh was unjustly criticized. In this connection the editorial office offers its apologies to A.M. Krasnykh. The author of the report has been severely reprimanded.

'TOP PRIORITY' EXAMINES U.S. ATTITUDE TO TEST BAN

LD022102 Moscow in English to North America 2300 GMT 1 Apr 86

["Top Priority" program presented by Pavel Kuznetsov, with Dr Radomir Bogdanov and Dr Sergey Plekhanov from the Institute for United States and Canada Studies]

[Text] Speaking on Soviet television last Saturday, General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev once again confirmed that this country would prolong its unilateral moratorium on nuclear tests beyond March 31 if the United States refrained from its own nuclear testing. The Soviet leader proposed a meeting with President Reagan in London, Rome, or any other European capital to discuss the most crucial problem of banning nuclear testing. With the survival of humanity at stake the Soviet moratorium was dictated by the urgent need to seek new approaches to international security in the spirit of responsibility. However, the Reagan administration is against halting nuclear tests, one of the reasons being the need to build new weapons, both nuclear and those in space, the X-ray laser in particular.

On Saturday 22 March the United States detonated a nuclear device in Nevada, and according to press reports from Washington, intends to carry out another nuclear explosion shortly. In today's edition of Top Priority, leading experts from the Moscow-based Institute for United States and Canada Studies Dr Radomir Bogdanov and Sergey Plekhanov take a look at some official American arguments on nuclear testing. Moderating Top Priority is Pavel Kuznetsov of our staff.

[Kuznetsov] President Reagan invited Soviet scientists to come to Nevada and watch new American equipment to monitor nuclear testing in use. He added that he had offered to share with this country, that is with us, this new technology that would allow both nations to verify compliance with treaties limiting nuclear testing. But at the same time the Reagan administration is dragging their feet on renewing talks on a comprehensive test ban treaty. I don't see how the two things can go hand in hand, I mean this passion for compliance with (?unratified) treaties and at the same time their unwillingness to resume talks on a comprehensive test ban.

[Bogdanov] Pavel, you are right, you are right. My difficulty with that is also along the same lines, but I would like to add to that some illogical, you know, points which are in the proposals of the Reagan administration. What I mean by that: We suggest to this administration that we stop testing. But this administration suggests to us: you join us in improving the level of testing. You know, that's the no 1 point of illogical behavior in that. It looks like that, I'm sorry for that, that you invite somebody to train in robbing somebody, to improve the level of robbing somebody's pockets instead of stopping robbing somebody. It looks like that, it's the same, you know. So I don't know why we should accept Reagan's invitation to send our people and just to bless by that the resuming and continuation of nuclear testing. So it means that they take us for such a silly people that we will by one hand suggest stop testing but by the other hand join them in improving (?them).

[Kuznetsov] And bless them.

[Bogdanov] And bless them, and bless them. And, you know, what is really a propaganda trick, that's exactly what the Reagan administration suggested to us -- without, of course, any hope that we will accept it -- but they were rather suggesting that for their own people, uninformed people, to show how they are, you know, generous to the Soviets and ready even to share their new technology but (?the Soviets) don't accept it.

[Kuznetsov] In a (?Senate) report since 1984 the United States Administration has recently accused the Soviet Union of violating its arms control treaty commitments. Like I said, similar charges were made in 1984 and '85. Is there any connection between these regular charges with the official American position on nuclear testing?

[Plekhanov] Well, of course, I think there is a connection; it's part of the same policy, trying to prevent any progress in Soviet-American relations on arms control. You see, there is so little that can be used as ammunition against the idea of banning all nuclear tests that you need whatever ammunition you can find in other quarters. But also, I think, the recent report is also connected with the continued attempts by the extremist forces in the Reagan administration to undermine the ABM treaty of 1972, and the SALT-II treaty; they have been doing it for several years. They have been trying, coming up with new ploys, new attempts to break out of those treaties, to destroy them, and they haven't given up. So it's not just connected with the business of testing. But what they did come up with, on the basis of what I have been able to read in the press, is the same old list of complaints, which have been rejected before by very responsible sources in the administration itself. For instance, Admiral Chain, who until recently was head of the bureau of political military affairs at the State Department, stated a year ago in connection with the previous report, which contained virtually the same charges, stated that actually he did not agree that the Soviet Union violated the existing treaties, that those charges are not very well grounded. And one must say in fairness that in most of those so-called cases that the -- that have been included in those reports, the administration is talking about possible violations that they have grounds to think that -- (?violations)...

[Kuznetsov] (?Violations likely) ...

[Plekhanov] So (?they need an escape clause) because you really don't want to be -- to get caught brazenly lying in public. You also must be aware, you know we can't say -- we're not 100 percent sure, but there's enough...

[Kuznetsov] [ords indistinct]

[Plekhanov] Yeah. But for the public, which doesn't go into detail, and for the 2-minute newscast, you know, news points -- news spots -- in the -- on television.

[Kuznetsov] Or radio?

[Plekhanov] It does sound like -- yes, well, the Soviets are cheating, and the administration is trying to catch them, you know. That's very harmful.

[Kuznetsov] As far as I know, an intelligence estimate made public by the Joint Chiefs of Staff contradicts President Reagan's assertion that the Soviet Union has violated the key arms control provision, and that was carried by THE NEW YORK TIMES news service in February, and this report refers to similar accusations made by the Reagan administration in 1985. And the independent scientists and experts said that it appears gravely irresponsible for the administration to have formally charged the Soviet Union in December with a violation of the SALT-II overall numerical limits when the Joint Chiefs of Staff order of battle now shows them to be well within the required limit.

[Plekhanov] Well, of course, honoring such important treaties as SALT I and II treaties is in the interests of the Soviet Union. We are not interested in breaking out of treaties which serve our interests.

And we are firmly convinced that they, those treaties, are also in the interests of the United States, and that they should observe those treaties scrupulously, and not try to undermine them, to break out of them.

[Kuznetsov] Our moratorium was described by administration officials as propaganda. Why is it that we have neither seen nor heard any such propaganda, in quotation marks, from them? Dr Bogdanov, why haven't they stopped their testing for at least 2 or 3 months?

[Bogdanov] It's clear for me why they didn't. They have suggested to the Congress a huge military budget, you know, for '87. Now, if they stop testing, if they join us in moratorium, the congress will put a very reasonable question to them: What the hell you are spending billions and billions on those toys while you stop (?nice little) the Soviet Union; you join them. Why do you need all this money? That's another reason why they are building up tension around Congress; first of all to my mind, around Congress. And if you look at the American scene, it's a very unfortunate, you know, development. Very unfortunate time in the sense that the military budget is in the Congress now, and they have to convince their Congress counterparts that the evil empire guys are so badly behaved that Americans have only one answer to that, to spend another billions and billions and billions. How they can stop now testing?

And you know, there's another point. There, I still have a question: Defense Guidance of 81 [words indistinct]

[Kuznetsov] Produced in 1982?

[Bogdanov] There were two Defense Guidance, but (?basics as they say) to build up such an American, such American nuclear might, that they will prevail in the Soviet Union, over the Soviet Union, and they will finish the military conflict on the terms favorable for America. Now, my question is: Is is valid for this administration or not? If you judge by the Reagan-Gorbachev communique after Geneva summit, where it is said that no side is aiming at the nuclear superiority, and where it is stated that the nuclear war is not winnable; so, my question is how that correlates to the American behavior when they don't stop testing? [sentence as heard] So where is the truth? Are the Defense Guidances still valid?

[Kuznetsov] I think...

[Bogdanov] Interrupting or these statements, very important statements in the joint communique are still valid or there are several American policies; one is for the public and one is for the Congress and that last one for the American Administration. I have no answer to that.

[Words indistinct due to multiple speakers]

[Plekhanov] I think those Guidances, I think those Defense Guidances are still valid, because they were drawn up by Caspar Weinberger, the defense secretary, and he says he is not signatory to any Soviet-American accord; he is just pushing ahead with star wars, with nuclear testing, with modernizing the arsenals and it fits; it perfectly fits into those Defense Guidances. You were absolutely right, they were drawn up in 1982, and I remember comments in THE NEW YORK TIMES: (?We) were bewildered, numbed, astonished, because actually those Guidances put the United States on a permanent war footing in peacetime with the Soviet Union because of this relentless military drive.

[Kuznetsov] Our time is running out. I'd like to conclude with this: On Radio Moscow we have a program called "Opinion Forum," on which we read the reaction of our listeners to the Soviet disarmament program announced by Mikhail Gorbachev, and also on our policy on nuclear testing. Thus far we haven't received a single letter praising the arms race, and well, I've brought some letters with me. They are from (Eric Milner) of Austin, Texas, they are from Mrs (Lynette Williams) of Oakland, California.

[Bogdanov] You have so many letters on this, I (?think) maybe this one?

[Kuznetsov] In his proposal, Mikhail Gorbachev addressed this problem where he pointed to the need to change the caveman mentality in which security was to be sought in a bigger stick or a heavier stone. Mikhail Gorbachev is absolutely right. Nuclear arms are not sticks and stones, and piling up more and more of them serves to (?diminish) rather than enhance security. And this is typical of responses that we get. And yet in the White House they cite national policy, national policy concerns, national security, and all that as a justification for the relentless military (?drive). And we know from the latest opinion polls in the United States that the majority of the Americans reject this build-up, this military drive. How can anyone talk about this military drive being in national interests if the people reject it?

[Plekhanov] Well, there is that old traditional approach coming from the Roman Empire, and it was striking to hear this approach referred to again. The ancient Romans, being quoted by Ronald Reagan, said that now, if you want peace, prepare for war, and he also mentioned that nobody ever crossed Jack Dempsey. Well, apparently because Jack Dempsey was a boxing champion, and he could beat the hell out of anyone who would cross him. But if you project it onto the military situation today with nuclear weapons, it would look as if Jack Dempsey would have deterred others not by his fists or his muscles or his reputation, but by just carrying a bomb around and threatening to explode it on (?himself). Because really it's very dangerous, very misleading to apply the obsolete dogma to the nuclear age, to this world of ours today which is so dynamic, so full of change, and so interdependent and so fragile that we really must work out a new approach to security. This is a difficult business; it involves changing a lot of ingrained attitudes. It involves a lot of dropping of old assumptions. We have started the process of updating and modernizing our approach to security, making it more enlightened, more in line with the realities of the world, and we are hoping to try to involve the American side in that process. And we are hoping that the common sense on that side will finally prevail. Otherwise there is no hope for survival.

[Kuznetsov] And we openly admit that there can be no Soviet security without that of the United States.

[Plekhanov] Obviously, obviously. Not only that there must be security on the American side, there must be just as much security. America must be able to feel as secure as we are, and vice versa. There must be equal security.

[Bogdanov] Yeah. Less American security means less Soviet security, because if they feel less secure they will do something to fill the gap. And that will provoke us, you know, for another reaction to that. So that's why that form of less security for one means less security for the other. I think it's very important [words indistinct]. Now, the last part of your question about public opinion polls. It's another example (?of) how this administration manipulates polls. When they have polls in their favor, they, you know...

[Kuznetsov] Advertise?

[Bogdanov] Advertise that at all levels as something very much proving and supporting this administration [as heard]. But if they have polls just contradicting their policy, they just don't mention them as they [as heard] were not existing at all. It's another example of a very high skill of manipulation, in this administration.

[Kuznetsov] Thank you, Dr Bogdanov; thank you Dr Plekhanov. You've heard "Top Priority" from the studios of the North American service of Radio Moscow. "Top Priority" is a weekly panel discussion, and I am Pavel Kuznetsov, your host. Goodbye till a week from now.

CHERNYSHEV COMMENTS ON U.S. NUCLEAR TESTS

Treaties Seen As 'Obstacles'

PM030853 Moscow KRASNAYA ZVEZDA in Russian 29 Mar 86 Second Edition p 5

[Observer on military questions V. Chernyshev "TASS Commentary for KRASNAYA ZVEZDA": "Who Is Hampered by the Treaties"]

[Text] The world is indignant at the provocative militarist actions of the U.S. Administration which despite the repeated calls of the Soviet Union and other countries and the broad public in the United States itself, has sanctioned another nuclear weapon test. The explosion carried out on the Nevada testing range 22 March is one more testimony to the fact that Washington's real aims is not the reduction and elimination of nuclear armaments but on the contrary their buildup and the creation of new types of nuclear weapons.

The new explosion and the refusal to resume talks on the total prohibition of nuclear tests are also evidence that the present U.S. leadership views the commitments previously adopted and the treaties and agreements signed as no more than obstacles in its desire to achieve military-strategic superiority for the United States.

Thus U.S. Assistant Secretary of Defense R. Perle, addressing a subcommittee of the Senate Armed Services Committee, frankly called for a large-scale ABM system with space-based elements to be deployed irrespective of "whether or not the Russians agree to conduct talks on reviewing" the ABM Treaty. According to him, in the meanhwile, even at the present stage of fulfillment of the "star wars" program which Washington makes out is a "research" program, it is necessary to adopt a "broad interpretation" of this treaty in order to carry out arms tests. As is well known, according to this "broad interpretation," invented in the United States only 6 months ago, despite the understanding which the Soviet Union and the four preceding U.S. administrations had of the ABM Treaty, it is claimed that developments [razrabotki] and tests of systems and so forth -- are not banned at all.

Consequently, in his address to the legislators Perle unabashedly set forth a program for the disruption of the ABM Treaty.

A threat also looms over the SALT II treaty. In May this year the U.S. Navy plans to launch the eighth Trident nuclear missile-carrying submarine -- the "Nevada." Unless the United States takes compensatory measures, for instance, unless it dismantles two old submarines with Poseidon missiles, then the limit set by the SALT II treaty for MIRV'd missile launchers.

But there are already figures in Washington who oppose the continuation of the United States' fulfillment of this treaty and the apologists of "star wars" have been in the front ranks of its opponents.

The leadership of the organization to implement the "Strategic Defense Initiative," for instance, is obstinately fighting for the conservation of existing missile-carrying Poseidon submarines in the Navy's fighting strength, because according to the Pentagon's plan they should become "ideal launchpads" for "exotic weapons" -- nuclear-pumped X-ray lasers. The "star warriors" are thus hampered not only by the ABM Treaty but also by the SALT II Treaty and they are calling for the renunciation of the fulfillment of its provisions.

All this shows that some people in Washington are obstinately seeking to think in old, hidebound categories. This has all happened before. Take just the now published recommendations for President H. Truman in the secret report prepared for him on U.S.-Soviet relations: "The United States with its military potential, consisting primarily of highly effective armaments, should not support any disarmament or arms limitation proposals." These are the "recommendations" which official Washington is now trying to follow, forgetting that it is not 1946 now.

It is time the U.S. leadership finally realized that this policy merely entails new dangers to the peoples, including the U.S. people. After all, security in our time can only be mutual. And that requires from everyone new thinking and an understanding of the fact that a global catastrophe can only be prevented by political means, on the path of talks and the conservation of accords already reached.

Reagan's Reasoning 'Far-Fetched'

PM011553 Moscow KRASNAYA ZVEZDA in Russian 1 Apr 86 Second Edition p 3

[Article by military observer V. Chernyshev entitled "Inveterate Thinking in the Nuclear and Space Age"]

[Text] "The situation requires immediate action. It is not yet too late to halt the nuclear arms race. The first major stride in that direction is needed. Putting an end to nuclear testing by all, first of all by the Soviet Union and the United States, as well as by the other nuclear powers, could become such a step. We attach tremendous significance to the solution of this task which concerns the destiny of all people," Mikhail Gorbachev said in a Soviet TV address.

The question of ending nuclear testing assumed great importance in conditions when huge stockpiles of nuclear material have been accumulated in the world. Specialists the world over declared outright that the problem of moratorium on nuclear explosions is the touchstone to verify the real attitude of the leadership of any nuclear power to the very idea of nuclear disarmament. For an end to nuclear testing is the most real way to put an end to the arms race, since without such tests nuclear weapons cannot be refined, nor can new types of nuclear weapons be created.

Since 6 August 1985 the Soviet Union has abided by its unilaterally announced moratorium on all nuclear explosions and declared that it will not conduct nuclear explosions in the future if the United States does likewise. The USSR has proposed beginning talks without delay on a total nuclear weapon test ban, including questions of verification. M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, has voiced readiness to meet with U.S. President R. Reagan in the very near future in any European capital to reach agreement on ending nuclear tests.

Thus, the Soviet side has done everything to promote the immediate reaching of an accord on this question.

And what about Washington? The U.S. Administration hastened to reject the Soviet initiative again. Its representatives declared that the White House has no intention to call of another nuclear explosion planned for mid-April and the President has no wish for a meeting on this question. What Washington plans to send to humanity is not a signal of peace but another shudder of nuclear explosion.

The U.S. side continues making references to verification problem in an effort to "substantiate" its negative stand. "In the field of nuclear testing, as in arms control generally, effective verification is a central element. It has also long been one of the most difficult problems to resolve," President Reagan declared. This reasoning is clearly far-fetched.

In the United States itself prominent specialists declared last year that the present-day level of the development of seismology and existing technical means of monitoring seismic waves give ground for confidence that secret nuclear explosions, even with a yield of not over a kiloton, can be promptly detected with the use of a network of seismic stations. Resolution No 3 endorsed by the House of Representatives of the U.S. Congress on February 26 of this year says that substantial progress in methods of detection of underground nuclear explosions by seismic and other methods has been achieved.

Moreover, the Soviet Union declared that it is prepared to use any forms of verification -- by national technical means, with the use of international mechanisms, on-site inspections. Should doubts about the observance of commitments arise, let Americans go to the USSR and carry crates with equipment along, it declares. Adversaries of nuclear disarmament who made references to the problem of verification can no longer resort to their only remaining "argument". It has now become clear to the whole world that doubts about verification are false. The British newspaper THE TIMES wrote that the Soviet Union's readiness to ensure on-site inspections removed the West's objection to concluding a nuclear test ban treaty, the objection the West was regarding the most important one, and placed the USA in an extremely awkward position from the viewpoint of morality.

The arguments usually advanced in support of the United States rejecting the Soviet moratorium on nuclear testing are in the sphere of nuclear mythology, this is how the American BALTIMORE SUN commented on the stand of the White House. The Reagan administration put the U.S. policy on nuclear testing topsy turvy, THE NEW YORK TIMES wrote.

Camouflaging its obvious unwillingness to stop nuclear explosions, the White House pays lip service to "readiness" to the quest of the ways to ensure effective verification. "I urged the Soviet Union to join us without delay in bilateral discussions on finding ways to reach agreement on essential verification improvements of the Threshold Test Ban (TTBT) and Peaceful Nuclear Explosions Treaty (PNET)", the President of the United States loudly proclaimed.

The White House invited the USSR to send Soviet experts to observe a nuclear test at the Nevada test site in the third week of April to be able to discuss verification methods.

In this connection one cannot but recall the assessment given to a similar invitation by THE WASHINGTON POST newspaper.

It wrote that while the Soviet Union invites the President of the USA to a peaceful dinner, the American President invites the Soviet Union to a nuclear luncheon. The White House is really inviting the USSR to be an accomplice in a nuclear crime against the world. Neither the Soviet Union nor all other peoples need "nuclear shows". The Soviet Union's stand is clearcut and easy to understand by the whole world: Let us stop explosions first, so as to engage in verification later as much as possible and in every way conceivable.

The point of the matter is that the Soviet Union proposes disarmament and appropriate verification of it, while the United States talks about verification of the arms race. The Soviet Union proposes the verification of a complete end to testing, while the USA declares for the verification of testing. Washington has adopted the course at replacing the ban on nuclear explosions with their continuation and would also like the presence of Soviet representatives watching U.S. explosions to signify the Soviet Union's official consent to that U.S. challenge to peoples, to its ostentatious contempt for the world public opinion. The USA is showing neither a sense of reality nor a sense of responsibility.

It seems that they in Washington got accustomed to nuclear weapons and are linking with them their plans in the international arena. Still, whether U.S. politicians want it or not, they will have to answer the question if they are prepared to give up nuclear weapons at all.

ASIAN-PACIFIC SECURITY CONFERENCE ADJOURNS

PM021437 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 29 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 5

[Unattributed report: "Meeting in Ulaanbaatar"]

[Text] A consultative meeting of representatives of the parliaments of Vietnam, Cambodia, the DPRK, Laos, Mongolia, and the USSR was held in Ulaanbaatar on 26-27 March.

The meeting discussed the question of the parliaments' role in strengthening peace and security in the Asian and Pacific region. The meeting, which was held in a friendly atmosphere, confirmed the full mutual understanding and identity of views of the countries represented on the questions under discussion.

The meeting participants highly appreciated and unanimously supported the Soviet Union's proposal aimed at ridding mankind of the threat of nuclear war and of all kinds of weapons of mass extermination before the end of this century and at providing the preconditions for constructive and creative cooperation by all states and peoples. They are convinced that the forces of peace and reason can and must erect a firm barrier against the military preparations that are being implemented by the most aggressive militarist circles and that a responsible and serious approach by all states and peoples to the problem of war and peace would help to overcome the dangerous development of the international situation. To consolidate the positive foundations laid at the Geneva meeting between the Soviet and U.S. leaders it is particularly important that such an approach be manifested by the United States and its closest allies.

The meeting expressed concern at the complex and tense atmosphere created in various parts of Asia and the Pacific and Indian Oceans by the policy of the opponents of peace, international security, and the peoples' independence and sovereignty.

The participants in the meeting urge the parliaments of all countries to step up as much as possible the struggle on a national, regional, and world basis to end the arms race on earth, prevent the militarization of space, and fundamentally improve the international situation. They believe that the most urgent present-day task is for all peace-loving democratic, and progressive forces to pool their efforts in the struggle for mankind's peaceful future.

The meeting stressed the need for the expansion of cooperation among the Asian countries' parliaments in the struggle against the threat of war, for peace, and for the preparation and subsequent convening of a pan-Asian forum to resolve security questions. It also stressed the importance of more active cooperation among parliaments and parliamentarians in implementing the foreign policy initiatives of the socialist and other states, aimed at strengthening peace and security in the Asian and Pacific region including proposals on a comprehensive approach to the problem of security in Asia; the application of confidence-building measures in the Far East; the conclusion by the Asian and Pacific countries of a convention on mutual nonaggression and the nonuse of force; the removal of all types of nuclear weapons from South Korea, the improvement of the situation on the Korean peninsula, and its transformation into a nuclear-free peace zone; the development of dialogue between the ASEAN and Indochinese countries and the creation of a zone of peace, stability, and cooperation in Southeast Asia; and on creating a peace zone in the Indian Ocean.

The implementation of these and other constructive proposals would be contribution to fulfilling the idea of an all-embracing international security system, put forward by the 27th CPSU Congress.

The participants expressed satisfaction at the results of the exchange of opinions that held and recognized the usefulness of continuing to hold such meetings with the aim of coordinating further efforts to strengthen peace, security, mutural understanding, and cooperation among the states and peoples of the vast and diverse Asian and Pacific region.

The participants in the meeting resolutely condemn the entirely unprovoked U.S. armed action against sovereign nonaligned Libya and demand that the United States immediately end its aggressive actions, which represent a serious threat to peace and security in the region and throughout the world.

GORBACHEV DISCUSSES DOMESTIC, INTERNATIONAL ISSUES

PM021627 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 3 Apr 86 First Edition pp 1, 2

["M.S. Gorbachev's Answers to the Algerian Journal REVOLUTION AFRICAINE" -- PRAVDA headline; first two grafs are unattributed introduction.]

[Text] The Algerian journal REVOLUTION AFRICAINE has asked M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, to answer a number of questions and also to receive and talk with Zoubir M. Souissi, chief editor of REVOLUTION AFRICAINE, the Algerian weekly organ of the National Liberation Front Party. The conversation took place on 31 March 1986. A.N. Yakovlev, secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, took part in it.

Question: The CPSU has just passed a turning point in its development. The 27th congress was a congress of innovation and bold strategy both as far as the life of the party is concerned and in relation to the development of the economy and Soviet society. Could you tell us about the factors prompting these plans?

Answer: Well, we probably have reason to agree with your assessments of the character of the 27th congress. For Soviet Communists, it really has been of historic significance because we are dealing with the resolution of the imposing task of achieving a NEW QUALITATIVE STATE OF SOVIET SOCIALIST SOCIETY [uppercase passage published in boldface]. So the present moment really is a turning point in the country's life.

Only we must be clear here. Apart from professional anti-Soviets, no one any longer seems to deny our achievements. I believe that your journal's readers will know the road that our country has traveled. It is the road from a backward, ruined country to a leading power in both sociopolitical and economic terms.

Our revolution had many enemies -- too many. I have in mind not only the imperialist plunderers who did everything possible to turn us back to the semicolonial past. I also have in mind the mass illiteracy, the poverty, the age-old oppression that people felt. But that is the fate of a true people's revolution, which always meets resistance from the forces of the world. You know that in your country from your own experience.

The most severe tests have fallen to our people's lot. Suffice it to recall the fascist invasion that carried off millions and millions of human lives and left our cities and countryside in ruins. Yet even that was overcome by the Soviet people's heroic labor. In a matter of years the country was truly reborn.

Today we have a powerful production potential at our disposal and our national economy is marching steadily upward. In the last quarter-century alone the country's fixed production capital has increased sevenfold. Our industry has progressed at double the pace of the developed capitalist states. Soviet people's prosperity has increased radically. Real per capita income has increased 2.6 times in a quarter-century.

I know that people in the West like to talk about the Soviet Union's so-called lag so far as the development of modern science and technology is concerned. I would suggest that the outstanding discoveries and accomplishments of Soviet scientific-technical thought in the most varied spheres speak more eloquently than any denials. Suffice it to recall the first earth satellite and the Yuriy Gagarin flight, which opened the space age, and the success of the recent "Venus-Halley's Comet" project. This unique research venture fused together the achievements of Soviet physics and machine building, mathematics, and instrument making, and other spheres of science and technology with the professional skill of the working class.

However, I do not intend to enter into empty polemics with people who would be prepared to slander even themselves, provided they were well paid. Simply, I know that in all spheres of knowledge we have highly trained specialists and excellent production workers at our disposal. Our engineers, technicians, workers, and doctors have been working in Algeria for many years now, incidentally, and as far as I know they are working successfully. Their Algerian colleagues consider such cooperation extremely useful.

Of course, the question may be asked: If Soviet society has been developing successfully in the past decades, why the profound changes which have been outlined by the 27th party congress? Well, you see, while paying due tribute to what has been done, we want to move forward more rapidly, on a new qualitative basis. Socialism's creative potential is such that we can resolve tasks more complex and on a larger scale than in the past. Complacency goes against the very nature of the Communist Party, against the nature of socialist society and of our morality.

And that is why the 27th congress openly and honestly discussed not only the achievements but also our mistakes and blunders. To a certain extent we have been set at our ease by the development potential lying, so to say, on the surface. The economy has developed to a significant degree on an extensive basis, through the recruitment of additional labor and material resources into production. The structure of national economic management had not changed for decades, even though the development of production forces dictated the need to restructure production relations. Hence a slowdown in growth rates and insufficient energy in assimiling the latest scientific-technical achievements in our economy.

Our straight talking about shortcomings was necessary and is aimed at the maximum mobilization of the advantages of socialist production, which by its very essence is capable of constant renewal and improvement. I would remind you of the words of K. Marx, who said of revolutions back in the 19th century that they "constantly criticize themselves..., return to what appears to be already fulfilled so as to start afresh once again, and ridicule with merciless thoroughness the half-baked nature, the weak aspects, and the worthlessness of their first attempts...." Forcefully put, and well put.

So, to put it as briefly as possible, at the congress we soberly assessed our forces and our potential and we saw that we could work better. That is the main motive prompting the need to accelerate the country's socioeconomic development.

As far as the international aspects of the acceleration strategy are concerned, the following needs to be stressed. Socialism is not developing within the boundaries of some isolated island. A competition is in progress between two social systems -- the socialist and the capitalist. That competition -- and we want it to be peaceful and only peaceful -- of itself obliges us to show concern about accelerating socio-economic development. Socialism does not have the right to lag behind. With today's resources at its disposal -- and that means not just production and scientific-technical potential but, above all, people who love their country and are ready to do everything necessary to enable it to flourish -- the party has set a course with every reason and confidence toward the acceleration of the country's development.

Question: One gets the impression that questions concerning the economy and the USSR's social development are the object of your main concern among all the problems which you broached at the congress. The strategic avenues of development have been mapped out with due consideration for the process of acceleration which you initiated. What are the basic directions, means, and objectives of the new policy?

Answer: I have, to a certain extent, already answerd this question. But it is perhaps necessary to emphasize once more: The economy and, of course, social policy are the main concern of the Communist Party as a ruling party.

As regards the acceleration strategy, it encompasses all aspects of society's life: the economy, science and technology, the social sphere, and society's spiritual life. In some cases directly, in others, indirectly.

We have embarked on reconstruction of the national economy on the basis of the latest achievements of scientific and technical progress and will create the most favorable conditions for the development of science, both fundamental and applied. We are changing the structural and investment policy with a view to ensuring accelerated growth of machine building and other leading sectors of industry. I want to stress that these are not intentions or wishful thinking, but an organic element of our present work.

Radical economic reforms and restructuring of the economic machinery constitute another important element of economic strategy. Its essence is to harmoniously combine the advantages of centralized planning with expansion of the independence and enhancement of the responsibility of production associations and enterprises. And the thrust is obvious: To subordinate our entire production to social needs and to orient management toward enhancement of efficiency and quality. To put it briefly, to arrange matters so that the entire national economy functions dynamically, as if in accordance with a self-regulating system.

For us the strategy of acceleration also means development of the political system, the system of socialist democracy under which all power belongs to the people. We perceive it as our task to deepen the people's socialist self-management and to involve working people most fully in the running of state and social affairs. Essentially speaking, broad democracy provides the obligatory climate which creates conditions for the fullest display of the creative potential of both society and the individual. It begins with intraparty democracy, with free open discussion of all problems perturbing society, as it happened during the precongress discussion and at the 27th congress itself.

A discussion about socialist democracy cannot, of course, be complete in a relatively brief answer. Here it would also be necessary to speak in detail about our state and social institutions, of how the work of soviets of people's deputies, with their millions-strong aktiv, is organized. Now I would like to draw attention to the following: The congress urgently raised the question concerning publicity in the activity of state, party, and other public organizations. We consider that there cannot be varying degrees of truth. There is just one truth, and it must be total.

We are speaking openly about everything because we have faith in our strength and know now just what has to be done but also how it is to be done. Let me note that the party's prestige grows only when it is capable of setting correct tasks and is able to heed well the working people's voice, to be aware of their opinions, and to fearlessly evaluate its mistakes.

And of course, the core of the acceleration strategy is a strong and comprehensive social policy. Production does not exist for its own sake. Production exists for the people. It cannot be otherwise under socialist conditions, where there is no private ownership and where all enterprises belong to the people and serve the people's needs. After all, in our country we have no rich people who would subordinate production to their own interests.

Let me add to what I have already said that when we tackle the restructuring of secondary and higher education, aim at improving health care services, and embark on the construction of a new network of sanatoriums, rest homes, cultural centers, and sports complexes -- all this ultimately boils down to the creation of proper material conditions for the harmonious development of the individual and for people's creative work. A work that not only makes society richer, but also enriches man spiritually.

Question: You advocate new approaches toward questions concerning the organization of production and the assessment of the labor factor, bearing in mind the enhancement of their efficiency. This leads to a restructuring of habits and reorientation of views. How is the CPSU preparing for this new situation?

Answer: An interesting question although, in my view, the necessary answer has already been given in the 27th congress decisions.

As regards the organization of labor, our orientation is as follows: establishment of financial autonomy, ensuring profitability and self-financing in all urban and rural enterprises, broad utilization of economic incentives, correct utilization of the instruments of goods-money relations, encouragement of socialist enterprise, and establishment of direct ties between producers and consumers.

When we undertook the implementation of economic experiments in the national economy -- and they are now being expanded -- we were able to see for ourselves that the very first steps yield high returns. There is a double gain here: Society gains by receiving larger quantities of essential and high-quality output; the labor collective gains since it has been empowered to utilize a large proportion of the income it receives at its own discretion.

As regards the assessment of every man's labor and labor efforts, we are guided by the well known Marxist formula: "From each according to his ability, to each according to his labor." This is the meaning of social justice, when everyone receives the quantity of benefits he has earned by his work.

You spoke in your question about a turnabout in habits and views, and asked how the CPSU prepares for this new situation. We have declared war on conservatism, bureaucracy, economic mismanagement, breaches of discipline, and sluggishness in everything. It seems to me that the party's entire activity since the CPSU Central Committee April (1985) Plenum, during the period of preparations for the 27th party congress, and the course of its work show convincingly that our course encounters understanding and energetic support by Communists and the broadest masses of working people. There is, of course, much work to be done and the leaders and all working people -- workers, peasants, and the intelligentsia -- must orient themselves toward new approaches.

Question: You make no secret of your financial difficulties as regards the attainment of objectives concerning the process of accelerating the USSR's socioeconomic development. If international relations do not change in a way more favorable for the cause of peace and cooperation, how do you intend to obtain the resources necessary for the transition to this qualitatively new stage?

Answer: Something is not quite right here. We are not complaining about our financial situation, although we have no superfluous resources. Moreover, in the light of the challenging imperialist policy, we have to divert part of our resources to the strengthening of our country's defense capability. We will continue to do this: The peaceful labor of the Soviet people and of our friends and allies will continue to be reliably protected.

But we do have the necessary resources to ensure the acceleration of the country's socioeconomic development. We are orienting ourselves primarily at internal accumulations. This is the only reliable way. I do not know about others, but we are aware that imperialism has introduced in the practice of modern international economic relations such uncivilized methods as various forms of discrimination, sanctions, economic blockades, embargos, trade bans, and so on.

We do have sufficient material potential to implement our plans. The course of retooling and reconstruction of existing enterprises on which we have embarked not only demands expenditure but also creates additional resources. There is obviously no need to prove that society develops and progresses on the basis of growing labor productivity and rising production efficiency. The acceleration of resources turnover will yield much. Not to mention the application of energy-saving technologies, fundamental improvement of capital construction, and so on.

There can be no disputing that we will also utilize our extensive economic ties with foreign countries in the interest of development. This is a normal phenomenon. Let me repeat, however, that we are not making our plans dependent on the intentions of other states toward our country. Although, of course, we have been and remain convinced advocates of broad international business ties.

Question: Military competition with the West and in particular the "star wars" project are, no doubt, the major obstacle for your economic and social plans. But the Geneva summit meeting and your 15 January 1986 statement sought to offer prospects for the more peaceful and favorable development of all mankind. What is to be expected from your forthcoming meeting with the head of the White House?

Answer: Very well, let us revert to the Geneva meeting. We approached it seriously. On the eve of the meeting we came out with constructive proposals. Let me recall them.

The Soviet Union introduced a 6-month unilateral moratorium on all nuclear explosions as of 6 August last year. We proposed that Washington follow our example in order to make the moratorium permanent, eternal. The answer was an invitation to attend the next nuclear test in Nevada.

On the eve of the New Year, 1986 -- which has been proclaimed to be Peace Year by the United Nations -- we declared an extension to the moratorium on nuclear explosions for a further 3 months. The answer was given by U.S. nuclear explosions.

Finally, quite recently, in connection with the appeal from the leaders of six states, we made the decision to adhere to the moratorium until the first nuclear explosion by the American side. But the Pentagon immediately speeds up the holding of new nuclear tests. We shall have to draw conclusions from this. I have no doubt that other peace-loving countries and the international public will also draw conclusions. It is particularly clear today who is who in world politics. Militarism, the ideology of which holds sway in the leading imperialist countries, has utterly exposed itself.

Now to turn to our proposals of 15 January this year. I shall not recall their content. It is common knowledge. This is something more than an invitation to serious dialogue. We expounded an integral and honest program of how to make the world safer, deliver it from nuclear weapons, to prevent an arms race in space, and to substantially cut back conventional arms.

The United States reflected for a long time, for more than a month. I have already had occasion to speak about the American response. We have heard neither a clear "yes" nor constructive ideas from the administration regarding overcoming the evil logic of the arms race.

Moreover, let us consider the initiative on the elimination of medium-range missiles in Europe which in a certain respect has something in common with former U.S. opinions on this problem -- that too is being ignored. We discover -- and this is happening not only at the Geneva talks, but others as well -- that as soon as we take a step in the direction of the U.S. stance, the United States takes a step back from that stance.

Is an improvement of Soviet-American relations really possible outside of practical decisions on curtailing the arms race? Is it really possible to proceed toward trust while at the same time replenishing arsenals with increasingly sophisticated instruments of war? We are convinced that another road leads to peace, the road away from the arms race toward disarmament.

For this, it is necessary to renounce the old way of thinking whereby even today the leaders of imperialism regard the postulate to the ancient Roman legionaires -- "If you want peace, prepare for war" -- as applicable to international relations.

The summit meeting opened slightly the door leading to a world of hope. But how the people connected with the U.S. military-industrial complex took fright at this ray of light! How forcefully they leaned on that "door" in order to slam it!

Both I and my comrades in the party leadership are trying to fathom what the U.S. Administration is in fact striving after. Is it war? But I think that Washington has a good idea as to what nuclear war is. So what is the meaning of all these attempts to perpetuate confrontation and still more, to kindle it, and what is the meaning of the latest outburst of bellicose rhetoric? The actions of the United States in Nicaragua and against Libya and Afghanistan, the violation of the USSR's territorial waters by warships, the support for the troglodytic regime of apartheid in the Republic of South Africa, and much else that today characterizes the international behavior of the United States -- where is all this leading and what specific interests does it serve?

We also are familiar with the calculations on exhausting the Soviet Union in the arms race. They are extremely long-standing and, I shall say bluntly, foolish. Nothing will come of this and so the Americans are expending to no purpose both their money and their strength on the implementation of a doctrine that failed long ago.

But these calculations do not just concern the Soviet Union. They also strike at the interests of the developing states and affect the United States' own allies. And the United States itself is being plunged increasingly deeply into a maelstrom of problems, both domestic and foreign that have been engendered by their imperial, militarist policy.

Washington's actions contradict accords that have been reached. An anti-Geneva syndrome is intensifying there which, of course, is creating no small difficulties in the development of Soviet-American relations.

Question: Peace does not mean just the elimination of nuclear weapons and their nonsiting in space. For many peoples who are still oppressed it begins with gaining the fundamental right to national sovereignty. However, numerous peoples who have been waging the struggle to liberate their motherland for decades cannot achieve the satisfaction of their aspirations because of a lack of more active and consistent support in the international arena. How can you explain the current decline in the national liberation movement in the world?

Answer: A little history. Recent decades have seen the collapse of colonial empires, the upsurge of anticolonial revolutions, and the rebirth and emergence of dozens and dozens of new states. Today the liberated countries account for almost half of mankind, and they determine the nature and course of world events to a great extent. I am confident that their role and the role of the Nonaligned Movement in international affairs and in determining the routes that civilization will follow in the future will grow. Thus, the results of the national liberation movements are of abiding significance. The Soviet Union and the other socialist countries state frankly that our sympathies are fully on the side of the peoples struggling for freedom, national independence, and social progress.

We have rendered and will continue to render them extensive support -- political, moral, and material. Let me stress that the Soviet Union seeks no one-sided benefits for itself here -- political or economic.

Something else is also true. Having gained political independence and seized their destiny in their own hands, the liberated peoples have been compelled to wage a difficult struggle to overcome economic backwardness and poverty and strengthen their sovereignty. In order to crush the liberated countries and halt the course of history the forces of imperialism, primarily American imperialism, resort to everything -- economic subversion, political provocations, direct strong-arm pressure. This course is underpinned with the hastily devised "new globalism doctrine." In general terms there is nothing new here; an attempt is being made to return to the old, classical -- so to speak -- system of brigandage.

What if not the old "gunboat policy" are the piractical U.S. actions off the shores of Libya? This is how it is interpreted throughout the world. Evidently past lessons have not benefitted Washington, which has repeatedly had to pay for its military adventures. The United States' anti-Libyan actions are not something in isolation. What fantasies have American politicians not dreamed up about the USSR and Cuba to justify the expansion of the military adventure against Nicaragua.

The American Administration has taken into its embrace Afghan dushmans, National Union for the Total Independence of Angola bandits in Angola, and the South African racists alike. And all, it transpires, for the sake of asserting the ideals of peace and freedom. I have no doubt that without American interference in other states' internal affairs regional conflicts would become a thing of the past and would be resolved much more simply and justly.

Exceptional importance is attached to the fact that there is a growing understanding of the organic interconnection between the solution of the problems of strengthening international security and the guaranteeing of the reliable, confident, and independent development of the liberated states.

Question: The world economic crisis has not bypassed anybody, particularly the "Third World" countries. The decline in oil prices, the continuing decline in the prices of other raw materials, and the shortage of food in the world are all problems threatening an increase in the dependence of the countries of the "Third World," which is burdened by big foreign debts. The USSR is also affected by certain manifestations of this crisis. What role will the Soviet Union be able to play in seeking ways to overcome it?

Answer: I agree with you. The position of the developing countries is alarming, while that of some of them is even tragic.

For what is happening? Keeping these countries in an inequitable position, imperialism is shifting onto them the consequences of the disorder in its own economy. Hence the lowest raw material prices in 50 years, the fall in oil prices, and the food shortage.

Imperialism is making a fortune and getting rich by exploiting young states. It is financing the arms race largely at their expense. And so it turns out: On the one hand, the developing countries' trillion-dollar debt and, on the other, the superprofits of multinational corporations and banks.

This imperialist policy is well known in Asian, African, and Latin American countries and also throughout the world. It is a fact that developing states spend more than $100 billion a year just on paying interest on foreign debts. They pay more than they receive in new credits. Or another expressive fact: For every dollar invested in Latin America, American multinational corporations put $2.5 in profits into their own pocket. Cruel bookkeeping, but imperialism knows no other.

The Soviet Union is far from indifferent to this state of affairs. We for our part exert a stabilizing influence on the markets for many commodities, including those exported by developing countries, through our foreign trade. The USSR's economic and technical assistance to these countries works in the same direction, helping to shape the national base of science and industry and to modernize agriculture. Our credits are repaid by developing young states' exports, and therefore no drama of indebtedness arises here. Of course, events on world markets also affect us to a certain degree. Crises in the West reduce the demand for our exports. Inflation makes imports more costly.

How to cure the world economy? Together with the developing states, we advocate restructuring international economic relations on just, democratic bases. It would be possible to begin such a reorganization by implementing the most important points in the program for a new international economic order. Our concept of ensuring the economic security of states is fully consonant with it. It provides for all forms of discrimination to be excluded from international practice, the problem of debts to be settled fairly, and the efforts of all countries to be pooled in solving global problems, including, of course, the problem of development.

I wish to repeat: Peace and development are indivisible, and the fundamental interests of the socialist and the developing countries coincide in achieving them.

Question: Our countries have much in common in their approach to the cause of the struggle for the peoples' liberation and for peace. Relations were established between us very long ago, and the time has come to sum up in order to assess their significance objectively and to outline real paths for further development. What is the future holding for us in this sphere?

Answer: Precisely this was the subject of the substantive and fruitful talks that I had with President C. Bendjedid of the Democratic and Popular Republic of Algeria [DPRA]. I am sure that during these days the USSR and Algeria have shown once again how useful and full cooperation built on the principles of equal rights and strict respect for each other's sovereignty can be.

What lies ahead? In accordance with the Long-Term Program for Economic, Trade, Scientific, and Technical Cooperation Between the USSR and the DPRA new scope will be imparted to Soviet-Algerian economic ties. The power industry, ferrous and nonferrous metallurgy, the oil and gas industry, geology, metal working and machine building, agriculture, water resources, forestry, fishing -- this is a far from complete list of the sectors in which it is planned to implement interesting joint projects.

We are convinced that our cooperation in training national cadres is supremely promising. Knowledge, culture, and experience are all vitally important both for the present and even more so for the future.

The Soviet-Algerian talks provide further convincing proof that in the struggle to preserve peace our countries are not fellow travellers but real partners. This applies equally to the assertion of a new just economic international economic order and to the overcoming of conflict situations on the basis of strict respect for each people's right to determine its own path to the future. In a word, we are completely satisfied with the results of the talks and believe that the accords reached will serve well interests of our countries' peoples and the interests of peace and social progress.

M.S. Gorbachev: I welcome you, I am glad to meet you, make your acquaintance. I am particularly pleased to do this now, immediately after the visit to the Soviet Union by your republic's president, Comrade Chadli Bendjedid. It was a great event in our relations and I think also on the international plane, a major event on a truly world scale.

It seems to me that we parted equally convinced that this visit to our country by the President would lend new impetus to our relations, which are already of a high level.

You have obviously been familiarized with the content of the replies to your questions. Despite the fact that I have virtually no time, I considered it my duty to respond to your request, taking into account the friendly relations between our countries and the fact that your journal addresses a wide audience in the country, in Africa, and indeed in Europe.

Zoubir M. Souissi: Yes, we are indeed also read in Europe.

M.S. Gorbachev: If you still want to ask something in addition to the questions that you put in written form, I am at your service.

Zoubir M. Souissi: Yes, I would indeed like to ask you two questions prompted by your speech on Soviet television on Saturday.

The first question is: After the United States rejected the unilateral moratorium proposed by the Soviet Union, the Americans are now also rejecting your proposal for a meeting in a European capital, justifying this by your alleged refusal to come to the United States in Accordance with your promise. How do matters stand in reality and will this meeting take place in the United States or elsewhere?

M.S. Gorbachev: In my speech 2 days ago I did indeed appeal to President Reagan not to delay but to meet in the very near future in a European capital for one purpose -- discussing urgently the sole question of halting nuclear tests. That is not in place of our meeting in the United States, which we discussed in Geneva and which in this case I did not touch on.

The whole world, not only the Soviet Union, but all peoples including the U.S. people, are worried that in such a fundamental issue of war and peace as the arms race and the reduction of nuclear arms there are virtually no positive advances. The talks are under way. Yes, they are under way. But so far they have produced no results.

The Soviet leadership believes that some major step is needed to lead the nuclear arms reduction talks out of their deadlock and thus initiate movement toward the goal on which it seemed to us we and the Americans were agreed: to wit, gradually moving to the reduction of nuclear weapons in order to eventually destroy them completely.

When on 15 January, in the statement with which you are familiar, we proclaimed our specific program for the elimination of nuclear weapons, the U.S. President said he welcomed our further step in this process and recalled his similar statements in 1983 and since. Indeed, in Geneva we also agreed that nuclear war is impermissible and that there can be no winners in it.

That means that the result is that we are saying one and the same thing fundamentally. But we are quite incapable of moving from a standstill at the Geneva talks in order to begin real headway toward the goal that the Soviet and U.S. sides proclaimed.

We believe that halting of nuclear explosions and beginning talks on an agreement to ban them in all spheres could be the first step in this direction.

Our idea is simple: We are constantly seeking ways and means to initiate headway with the Americans and other nuclear powers along the path of reducing nuclear armaments, but first of all with the U.S. Administration.

The conclusion of an agreement on halting nuclear tests between the Soviet Union and the United States would be of enormous real importance because it would erect an obstacle to the improvement of nuclear weapons and the creation of new types of these weapons. But this step would also have tremendous political and indeed moral importance as an example of joint actions by the two great powers which have a special responsibility.

Although we did not immediately hear a negative statement in response to this new appeal of mine to the President -- actually, the U.S. Administration repeated what it had said earlier -- we nonetheless hope that the President and his immediate entourage and Congress will give this proposal of ours further consideration.

As for my visit to the United States, this question is kept in sight by the Soviet and U.S. sides.

That perhaps answers your first question.

Zoubir M. Souissi: Allow me to turn to the second question. Is dialogue still possible between the Soviet Union, which advocates peace, and the U.S. Administration, which is of a revanchist and unyielding frame of mind?

M.S. Gorbachev: You are asking a complex question. But we have now made it a rule and a principle -- in our domestic and foreign policy -- not to avoid difficult questions or any problems. Proceeding from that premise, I will also answer your question.

I would emphasize the fact that dialogue between the leadership of the Soviet Union and the U.S. Administration is essential. Without the normalization of Soviet-U.S. relations, without joint efforts by the Soviet Union and the United States to end the arms race with a view to eliminating nuclear weapons and normalizing international relations -- political, economic, trade, and cultural relations -- it is difficult to count on normalizing the international situation. We have always emphasized that. And this is evidence of the seriousness of our intentions.

For all the importance of the Soviet Union and the United States and the part they play, we must also take into account the fact that hundreds of states and peoples live in the world and want to live better lives and are building their plans for the future. The Soviet leadership and the U.S. Administration must take that into account.

I believe that what we said at the 27th party congress about our attitude toward international affairs and international cooperation is a persuasive argument for a respectful attitude toward all peoples and is evidence of our understanding of our responsibility for preserving and strengthening peace and normalizing international relations not only to our people but also to other people. So for all the importance of Soviet-U.S. relations, we cannot fail to take that into account.

Nonetheless, by virtue of objective reasons, the role and therefore the responsibility of the Soviet Union and the United States for the state of affairs in the world are great. I repeat that we are seeking to be equal to this responsibility. But matters in the world will proceed more rapidly and confidently along the path of normalization if the same understanding and the same responsibility attend the U.S. Administration as well. We invite the President, the U.S. Government, and Congress to display the practical will and seek ways to normalize and develop Soviet-U.S. relations, ways to improve the situation as a whole.

Our assessment is that there is now a difficult period in these relations. But we do not look at these relations without hope and, for our part, we are trying to do what depends on us, proceeding from definite real, practical steps to create an appropriate atmosphere for improving relations and political dialogue.

Zoubir M. Souissi: I thank you for the great honor given to our journal and for the opportunity to convey through it your message of peace to the Algerian people and all freedom-loving and peace-loving peoples. Peace is now the most important thing.

M.S. Gorbachev: We are convinced of that. Anyone who has followed the work of our congress and is familiar with its documents knows that that is precisely what we want to bring to the whole world -- a message of peace from the Soviet people to the whole world. Peace must be struggled for. "If you want peace -- struggle for peace!"

Please convey through your journal best wishes to the friendly Algerian people and all readers of your journal.

COMMENTATORS VIEW ISSUES ON 'STUDIO 9' PROGRAM

OW290936 Moscow Television Service in Russian 0521 GMT 29 Mar 86

["Studio 9" program presented by Professor Valentin Sergeyevich Zorin, political observer of Soviet television and radio with Academician Georgiy Arkadyevich Arbatov, director of the United States of America and Canada Institute of the USSR Academy of Sciences; and Vitaliy Ivanovich Kobysh, political observer]

[Text] [Zorin] Hello, comrades: We are beginning our traditional "Studio 9" discussion at Ostankino television center. The discussion is devoted to current problems in world politics. Today's "Studio 9" guests are: Academician Georgiy Arkadyevich Arbatov, director of the United States of America and Canada Institute of the USSR Academy of Sciences, and political observer Vitaliy Ivanovich Kobysh.

Since the end of the 27th CPSU Congress, world interest in that event has not diminished, on the contrary the ideas outlined and the decisions adopted at the congress have increasingly influenced the course of the political process in the world. It is impossible not to notice that the events during the weeks following the congress as well as in the last few days show everyone the scope, correctness, and volume of the analysis of the world political process made by our party's 27th congress. I think that in our discussion today, or at any rate within the framework of the discussion, we shall deal with some of the most important general propositions advanced at the congress, as well as the light being shed by the congress resolutions on events taking place now in the international arena. I would like to begin our discussion with the following: Since the end of the congress there have been reactions by political parties, movements, statesmen, governments, mass media organs -- significant, important, and interesting reaction -- and I would like you, Vitaliy Ivanovich, to characterize this reaction however briefly, in a condensed manner.

[Kobysh] The world received the 27th CPSU Congress as the most important milestone toward a future-oriented process and as decisive in the life of our country, the meaning and content of which were determined at last year's April CPSU Central Committee Plenum. Reaction to the congress was of course varied, yet it had a common denominator -- increased interest. The socialist community's attitude was clearly formulated by Poland's Wojciech Jaruzelski on his return home from Moscow.

He said: Addressing its entire essence to peace and social programs, socialism today demonstrates with renewed vigor the youth, viability, creative power, and capability to achieve new frontiers. There has been a huge response to the 27th CPSU Congress resolutions, and first of all the program for peace, the proposal to create a comprehensive system of international security in the so-called Third World -- the developing countries -- adopted at the congress.

By the way, the same can be said about reaction to the congress in many Western capitalis countries. There, the Draft Basic Guidelines for the Economic and Social Development of the USSR for 1986-1990 and the Period Through the Year 2000 as approved by the congress are being carefully studied in direct relation to the potentials they open for their own economies. A very different view of past events, of what is happening now, and of our targets -- all that was so clearly illustrated at the congress -- has been shown to those who watch our life with very unfriendly eyes. I refer first of all to the Washington administration and to NATO. They not only follow most carefully what happens in our country, but also clearly experience some discomfort and concern while doing so. Let us ask ourselves a question that inevitably arises: Why did the U.S. President send an ambiguous yet official reply to the Soviet proposals of 15 January, 2 days before the opening of the congress? Apparently there was a desire not only to reject the most important problems raised in our proposals, but also somehow to divert attention from the work of the congress, to switch attention to something else. Some other questions arise. Why is it that precisely after the congress, the Washington administration became so active? Why did it proceed with all of its provocations, the muscle-flexing game? Why did the event on the southern coast of Crimea occur? Why have U.S. aggressive actions intensified around Nicaragua? And finally, what has happened in Libya? We shall talk about these reactions.

[Zorin] Georgiy Arkadyevich, we have in our hands considerable material for analysis. Beginning with international reaction to the 27th CPSU Congress, which has now become sufficiently clear, I would like to ask you how you assess the main points of the 27th congress' international significance.

[Arbatov] I would point out two things, and I would like to begin with what may seem somewhat unexpected in a discussion on the international significance -- on the foreign political significance of the congress: The most important point was the amount of attention to the congress paid to accelerating the country's social and economic development, the determination to expose defects, and the reports on obstacles to progress, that is, the determination displayed at the congress to overcome all of these obstacles and to quickly and successfully move along the path of social and economic development outlined by the congress. And you know, if we talk frankly about our enemies, especially the most inverterate ones, they fear most of all the prospect of Soviet, Cuban, and Nicaraguan attacks on the United States through Mexico. They use that to frighten their public, the man in the street, but they themselves hardly fear it, just like the notorious Soviet move toward warm seas. What they fear most of all is the successful development of socialism, a new system, the successful development of socialism first of all in our country and other socialist countries.

They are not only frightened because that evidently increases our foreign political possibilities, and here I include defense of course, and the possibilities for exerting economic influence on international events, the course of international development. Our enemies, more than anyone else, know very well the true power of the example of socialism, and the significance of the growing prestige of the new social system. And, precisely because of this, they placed great hopes on the shortcomings which accumulated in our country, the difficulties we experienced, and now, when it has become very evident to all that we have made serious efforts to put an end to these shortcomings and move forward, this has caused very serious concern among our enemies. This very great anxiety is the most important point in all our enemies' reaction to the congress.

[Zorin] Georgiy Arkadyevich, well, here we have a certain element, circumstance. Strong self-criticism of our defects has been and is being voiced, and this self-criticism is used by enemy propaganda to cause harm to our country, for open slander against socialism. This fact...

[Arbatov, interrupting] You know, yes, that is a fact, and bourgeois propaganda has used, is using, and will continue to use, our self-criticism. But the issue here goes much deeper. When shortcomings exist, they are evident whether or not you criticize them. The study of statistics, the study of exports and imports, even the state of your accounts in foreign banks tell much. And specialists see much, and there is no need to criticize oneself for the world to have an idea about the quality of equipment and machines we manufacture, about the existence of interruptions in supply; have an idea about what we purchase and what we sell. Much has been said about this. I would say that it is something different when nothing is said about defects, when there is unrestrained self-praise and defects are not mentioned. I think this is what filled our enemies with serious hopes about things going downhill, so to speak. And now I would add that I read the press carefully and have had meetings with many foreigners since the congress, and I firmly believe that the flow has not at all increased because of this self-criticism; I would say that there has even been a reduction in these hostile, sensational statements against the Soviet Union...

[Zorin, interrupting] Fewer sensational statements, less material...

[Arbatov] Of course. You understand that, when things have been said over a long period of time, even about something that did not exist, let alone what does or does not exist, the moment the ban on the obvious is lifted, it ceases to be an object of speculation.

[Zorin] Georgiy Arkadyevich, there is another version or idea going around. According to this idea, the greater our successes, the more frenziedly they struggle against us, the greater the mobilization of the West's propaganda machine and politicians and therefore, supposedly, a growth in our successes brings the threat of a growth in this campaign.

[Arbatov] Well, you know, I think this is a very simplified view; in reality, the picture is different. In reality you see, it is precisely when we show weakness, when there is a weakness somewhere, that great hopes appear in our enemy and he begins to intensify his attacks against us.

In fact, I would add that this hardening of U.S. policy and the predominance in it in recent years of the ideas and ideals of extreme right-wing circles is no coincidence. It was not by chance that this coincided with that fairly difficult period in our lives. So, you see what is happening: It is only when we are developing successfully that the other side, capitalism, is forced to seriously consider that this is a reality with which it must get along, with socialism I mean. And it must learn to get along with it in peace. In fact, a successful and normal life and development of socialism is an inalienable element in peaceful coexistence. It cannot be otherwise. If this were not so, why would capitalism need to think about under what conditions it must coexist with socialism. It would be faced with another task; to wait and nudge us, and make our life more difficult.

In fact, this is precisely where the matter lies. I even think there is something else. What we have seen in recent weeks, this completely hysterical hardening of U.S. policy, is possibly an expression of a desire to complicate the implementation of our plans. To complicate, and somehow make more difficult, what we have undertaken in all seriousness. It is a singular form of interference in our internal affairs.

[Kobysh] I would like to say a couple of words in this regard. Generally, if we talk about the United States, a power cult exists in that country, as you know. Power is respected and held in regard there. This is a reply to your question, so to speak.

[Zorin] Another thought: Generally, throughout the first half of the 1980's efforts were made to exhaust the Soviet Union economically by spiralling the arms race. The fact that the 27th congress proposed such far-reaching and gradiose programs based on practical and real possibilities, naturally, was like a cold shower for those who nurtured plans to ruin and undermine the Soviet economy with the help of an exhausting arms race.

Georgiy Arkadyevich, when you began your response to my question you mentioned two points, yet you spoke of only one. I would like you to return to point two.

[Arbatov] Yes, I think the second point is that a very big impression was made on the world by the Soviet perception of it, a picture and idea of the world outlined by the congress, particularly in the Political Report, as multifaceted and diverse, full of contradictions yet interdependent and integral. This is a picture of and for mankind.

This is not a sectarian or narrow view of things. In fact, at a time when mankind has met for the first time in its history with such an absolutely universal and general threat to its very existence, this was expected and it was most desirable, to rise even above what I would call a narrow class perception of the world. This is completely a class approach to the world and an entirely Leninist attitude. Lenin emphasized that the Marxist idea lies in the fact that the interests of social development are even higher than the interests of the proletariat. This is natural because the proletariat is the highest thing created by human civilization throughout its history, on the social level, and its preservation is an immutable condition for all future progress and development of socialist socity, and human society in general.

This is particularly evident against the backdrop of the U.S. attitude. We are witnessing a corruption of U.S. policy to the most primitive black and white perceptions of the world, a world in which everything is laid out as either good or evil. The good, of course, are the Americans and those who support them unconditionally, while we and everyone else, of course, are the evil.

This wretched approach is so incompatible with the real gravity of the problems with which mankind must cope. I have in mind the problems of war, peace, and the desperate situation in which the overwhelming majority of mankind finds itself in -- there are more than 2 billion people living in the developing countries whose alienation from the developed countries is constantly increasing -- the growing ecological problem, and many, many others. Against this backdrop there are also the crusades and sallies launched against Grenada, Nicaragua, or Libya with their demagoguery and attempts to villify and lump together all of those that government detests, this of course makes a very sorry impression, although we should not forget that this is dangerous.

[Zorin] An important part in the work of the 27th congress was occupied by the question of political and economic cooperation of the socialist community countries. Let us briefly return to and look at the impetus the congress gave to this cooperation. Will you say something about this, Vitality Ivanovich?

[Kobysh] Let us begin with the fact that this cooperation became muce more active even before the congress. In December last year, the CEMA member-countries adopted the complex program of scientific and technical progress until the end of the century which encompases five priority directions. I will not list them now but will note that the strategy of acceleration is embodied in them.

The 27th CPSU Congress gave this strategy a powerful impetus. Generally, the decisions of the congress were in complete harmony with the processes presently occurring in the socialist states. These processes are extremely interesting. Consider the Cuban phenomenon, which was clearly revealed at the recent party congress in Havana.

A historically backward country, a country with a single-crop system, as you know, has now become before our very eyes an agrarian-industrial state. The task has been set to transform Cuba in the near future into an industrial-agrarian country. Just think about it. Remember what Cuba was like just a short time ago -- 30 years ago, -- before the revolution.

I could cite many examples. Presently, complete harmony with our congress can be seen at the 17th CPCZ Congress being held in Czechoslovakia.

What is important is that in absorbing our experience, the experience of the world's first socialist country -- an experience that is unique in many ways, though many aspects are universal -- every member-state of the socialist community draws support from its own experience which in turn, is valuable to us and to others. They proceed from their own history and distinctive features. Therefore, there is no one laboratory of socialism. It is unique in each country, but together we are engaged in a common task.

Other socialist countries that are not members of the socialist community followed the work of the 27th CPSU Congress with the greatest attention. Our cooperation with these states is also becoming increasingly diverse and close. Of course, particular interests, and in some quarters an unhealthy and alarmed interest, is evoked by expansion of Soviet cooperation with the PRC.

[Zorin] Georgiy Arkadyevich, returning to an analysis of the results of the congress, I would like to ask you: What is the main thing the congress yielded in the foreign policy sphere?

[Arbatov] In our immediate foreign policy?

[Zorin] Yes.

[Arbatov] This of course is our concept of a universal system of international security proposed in Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev's Political Report. This concept is not simply an idea, it is a political platform which must operate for years and generally it is difficult to imagine an alternative for it.

[Kobysh] It is a formula for mankind's survival.

[Arbatov] Of survival, and generally it is an essential condition for mankind's existence and progress. The strength of the idea lies in the fact that it reflects certain urgent requirements of society. Here for the first time it was revealed in the form of an integral concept or political platform. It is not an ultimatum, we are prepared to discuss any other proposals. Such is the style of our policy. But this is an agenda for worldwide discussion which is urgently needed today.

[Zorin] Continuing that you have outlined in a conceptual and general way I would like to ask a question from many of our television viewers' letters to "Studio 9" recently. The question, in brief, is as follows: What is happening with the post-Geneva process?

[Arbatov] Well, I would say that everything that was achieved in Geneva is being dismantled fairly rapidly by the Americans. In the west, I would say, no one is prepared to blame us for this.

[Zorin] Now you have told us what is happening. The next question is, naturally, why is this happening?

[Arbatov] Various suggestions are being made. One of them is that the U.S. President, while signing the statement in Geneva, did not plan to fulfill it, that this was a politically insincere act and a calculated maneuver of some sort.

Another suggestion is that during the 5 months since Geneva some changes have occurred among the President's entourage and in U.S. ruling circles. The correlation of forces has changed and the extreme right wing has gained the upper hand. Mentioned in connection with this are the resignation of McFarlane and the increased role of Patrick Buchanan, the President's main speechwriter, a truly strange person who has publicly bragged that one of his favorite historical heroes is Senator McCarthy and another is Generalissimo Francisco Franco, the bloody butcher of Spain.

I would not exclude one or the other of these versions although I would not put my name to them. Other factors may also be operating, but I fully concede that the matter may be more simple, that President Reagan really did want to do something positive. After all, it is most pleasant to be a peacemaker. This is liked, it is popular, and he may have sincerely gone to Geneva for this and spoken about it proudly on his return from Geneva. Perhaps at the time he simply did not imagine that in order to become a peacemaker many changes and corrections to U.S. policy needed to be made.

Now when he saw that this was necessary -- not only he, I have the entire administration in mind -- when they saw that these corrections were necessary and, moreover, when they saw that the entire situation and course of developments after Geneva demand these changes with increasing persistence, then they were taken aback or gave certain people and circles a chance to jump back a long way in the opposite direction.

I think this demonstrated another thing, a most revealing one, it seems to me. It showed that the entire situation in which the administration found itself was uncomfortable, somehow awkward, and it felt devoid of tension, without an arms race, without that constant chain of political adventures -- it felt like a fish out of water. And because of this there was a rapid reaction in the opposite direction. If we consider the situation today we cannot of course over-dramatize things. It is all occurring in real life. But if we consider the past couple of weeks, they have been worse than the weeks before Geneva.

[Zorin] In this connection, Georgiy Arkadyevich, question naturally arises: Is it time for us to reassess Geneva?

[Arbatov] I do not think so. When we first assessed the results of the Geneva summit, we constantly said that the scope of the success and the actual success or failure will be determinedby the development of events afterward, by the actual implementation of the ideas on which an agreement seemed to have been reached and which had been mentioned in the statement during the summit meeting. Of course, we hoped and thought things would proceed precisely that way, that the understandings would be converted into obligating agreements and would be implemented. We were also ready for a different course and we then said that there is another course.

Second, I would like to say that if what we actually see today is the last word of the current U.S. Administration, though we would not like it to be true, the Geneva meeting has been very useful just the same. It was a useful event. The administration has long said very different things, and it appeared that different people had spoken, although it was the same man or the very same people who spoke. But they said totally different things which inevitably had to be checked out. And actually there is no other way to check the possibility of coming to an agreement on anything with this administration, than to begin negotiations and enter into serious and summit talks with it. We could not pass up that opportunity. We could not miss it because of purely domestic positions and especially for our people. For them the issue of war and peace is always the object of special sensitivity; priorities play a special role and they expect no opportunity to be ignored or missed.

In addition, it was also very important for the entire world. You can see it is possible to verbally expose as much as you wish. The Americans can teach for they are experienced master polemists.

It has to be said that the administration knows how to manage propaganda, the art of using words, and it is fully conversant with verbal propaganda. But when people show their deeds, when it is no longer possible to avoid a direct answer on a very specific political issue, the situation changes, when it says yes or no about its attitude toward nuclear weapons...

[Zorin interrupting] ...and the moratorium...

[Arbatov] ...and the moratorium of course, nuclear weapons, and horrors about which the President was willing to speak: His desire to make nuclear weapons obsolete, to deliver humanity from them, and the moratorium on nuclear tests...

[Zorin interrupting] And this is what, despite the general attitude in the world, they have resumed testing...

[Arbatov] And this is actually a test by actions. Test of the nuclear issue about nuclear weapon testing has become a test by deed, a test of the administration's intentions. The same applies to intermediate-range weapons and a lot of other issues. You see, on the whole I would say that a result of Geneva, one of the consequences, was the very recent political leaf shedding, so to speak, when there was a massive fall of fig-leaves which uncovered the shame of a large number of political leaders.

[Arbatov] You see, naturally it would have been far better if we were close to or could sign an agreement, say to reduce by 50 percent the nuclear armaments and intermediate-range weapons in Europe, to completely ban nuclear testing, and so forth, but you see we had that in mind. We proposed that, we did not engage in propaganda, And now see what followed Geneva. It was not a wave of propaganda. Deeds followed. First of all, the 15 January statement of Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev. That was an idea which struck the imagination of everyone in the world. You see, that is a concrete plan for finally eliminating nuclear arms, solving a lot of problems involving the world of militarization, a militarization which is becoming both dangerous and beyond the power of humanity.

Yet at the same time it must be understood that the declaration of true intentions is not just propaganda, it is a very important policy, it is diplomacy, that very open diplomacy which Vladimir Ilich Lenin actually mentioned on the day after the October Revolution when the decree on peace was adopted. By the way, Comrade Gorbachev dealt with it in much detail during his interview with the French Communist newspaper L'HUMANITE. You see, the heart of the matter is that there are types of policies, or using Lenin's expression -- there are abominations and villainies which cannot tolerate publicity, cannot tolerate truth like mold cannot stand sunlight. And in this aspect, military allocations reflecting the full meaning of huge military spendings, plans for bloody adventures, can be achieved in the present world only when supported by a thick wave of deceit, of universal duping. In this way a very great contribution is made by this always present element of that very important policy. You understand, it is not just talk but decisions that will either push in certain directions or force the truth to be exposed.

At the same time, this open diplomacy is also important in another aspect. It presupposes a very clear, convincing, realistic position by the one who simply conducts it, and in this aspect, the Geneva and the post-Geneva process have helped us greatly. Comrade Gorbachev has spoken about this. He allowed us to come more boldly and more determinedly to the preparation of new proposals and new initiatives. In a word, it can be said it has given powerful impetus to the complicated and very important process. And this process will continue. You know, whichever way the situation goes, however much it tends to the pre-Geneva situation, there is no return.

New ideas, new proposals, new concepts about the arms race, and methods for fighting the arms race, a new kind of rearrangement of forces in public movements are beginning to take root. And all that means a struggle, and all that is complicated, yet it is alive and active, so I think that, on the whole, events are developing in a complicated manner. Yet, we have no justification for reassessing what was really a very major and serious political event.

[Zorin] Yes, the political process is moving, Georgiy Arkadyevich, but excuse my insistence. I would like to ask you the following question: Will it be possible to achieve anything substantial if the other side does not move from its position, and keeps to its previous position?

[Arbatov] You know of course that, in order to achieve an agreement, you have to negotiate with somebody, and there must be the willingness of the other side for this. I would say that the administration has many times changed its position, unfortunately more often for the worse than for the better, but there have been instances to the contrary. I think the main point lies somewhere else. At any rate, the political behavior of any government is determined by some kind of objective factor, which generally operates in the direction of a logical approach to the realities of the world. And then, of course, we should not forget and I have already mentioned it in this studio, that the history of Soviet-U.S. relations did not begin with the Reagan administration, and that it will not end with it. Actually the administration has less than 3 years left. That is not a short period. But the signs of apparent damage coming at full speed I think are manifest in the political situation which we now observe.

The hysterical splash of the last few weeks in U.S. policy is explained by some observers as the beginning of the 1988 presidential electoral campaign, its first battles, battles connected in particular with the extreme right-wing circles fearing to lose their position after Reagan, wanting to preserve and strengthen these positions. And for this purpose, they naturally need anti-communist hysteria and a military-psychotic atmosphere. Of course, there is the question of whether they will succeed or not and, frankly speaking, after spending 18 years at the institute which studies the United States, I have become very cautious about making any kind of forecast. In the United States, anything is generally possible, yet at the same time I find it very difficult to see how the United States will be able for several more years to stand military spending similar to that in the last 5 years, and the budget deficit and state debt associated with them; how it will be able to preserve intact the huge bag of falsifications and eyewash concerning military programs and many other political falsehoods, open lies which have actually become one of the cornerstones of the entire foundation of current U.S. policy; and how it will be able to keep the United States for several more years in a state of almost general conformism, silent in the face of this kind of high-handed pressure.

[Zorin] I do not think that the right-wingers will have it easy.

[Kobysh] I think there is another significant and interesting aspect. The political leaf-shedding Georgiy Arkadyevich spoke about has led to the emergence in the United States within the top leadership, and even within the administration, of a certain discord, and we even suspect there is a fight going on about very substantial problems — first of all, those connected with the approach to the problem of arms control. This is, of course, primarily what was stated by Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev on 15 January in our proposals. All this had placed the U.S. ruling circles, the administration, in a very difficult position, and they are now, in the full meaning of the word, fighting back in the political, propaganda, and diplomatic fields, while being practically in a political blockade in the world, and all that is the result of Geneva and the actions following Geneva.

[Zorin] Georgiy Arkadyevich, I would like to return directly to the discussion of Geneva and ask you a question which cannot fail to arise. In Geneva, an agreement on the next summit was agreed upon...

[Arbatov interrupting] On the next two meetings...

[Zorin] Yes, but particularly about the meeting this year. What is the prospect of this agreement in the light of the current situation: in light of what we have discussed?

[Arbatov] The question is important of course. It is a question which, frankly speaking, I cannot answer. The answer has to be given officially, at the appropriate level and in the appropriate manner. I can only make some observations in connection with this. My observation lies in that the main point agreed on at Geneva, it seems to me, was the intention and I quote the statement signed by Comrade Gorbachev and President Reagan: To improve Soviet-U.S. relations and improve the international situation in general. And it is for this purpose that the talks must be held. For this purpose summit meetings were planned and the main motive for making decisions, I think, will be whether the new summit meeting planned for this year, and planned last year during the Geneva meeting, will serve these purposes.

[Zorin] Thank you. At the congress, the deep historic changes taking place in developing countries was reported on. The kind of answer the imperialists are trying to give to this question has been shown once more and in a very substantive way by the events of the last few days. I would like to ask you, Vitaliy Ivanovich, to speak on this subject.

[Kobysh] I think you have in mind the events that developed off the Libyan coast. Well, they are shameful actions by the Washington administration and probably will not be forgotten for a long time. It sent several dozen warships, including 3 aircraft carriers with 240 combat aircraft on board, to the shores of this far-from-large military power and achieved what it wanted, it used arms against Libya. The talk is not concerning some sort of incident. This was a punitive operation, planned and prepared in advance. Of interest is the admission made recently by the U.S. State Department spokesman. While explaining this act of U.S. aggression against Libya, he said: The current training exercise in the Mediterranean is part of our program for implementing the rights of free navigation. And then: Similar training has been conducted recently near the Crimean shores. That is the point. From the southern coast of Crimea to the Libyan shores, there are armed provocations everywhere, a military muscle game. They can hardly expect to frighten us. Their purpose with us is different. They want to bring new, independent, developing states from Libya to Nicaragua to their knees; halt their development. The matter went as far as the U.S. President stating at first that the U.S. founding fathers were also contras. The CIA is now arming the former surviving Somozists, oppressors, and cutthroats with funds obtained from the U.S. taxpayers, and then he went as far as to say: And I count myself as a contra.

[Arbatov] Well that may not be too far from the truth.

[Kobysh] Maybe he probably...

[Arabatov interrupting] It seems to me, Vitaliy Ivanovich, there is another design in all that is happening. It is related to the domestic situation in the United States, with the budget struggle that is developing there, and on a whole range of other important decisions. It seems to me that the administration needs the shooting to start. In particular, I think about them coming close to the Crimea, somebody may have had the intention, I shall not say that it was the President, but whoever made the decision, not just for an intelligence operation, but for a confrontation, some kind of conflict. And, if a couple of shots had been fired there, that is what is now needed to really make the atmosphere very tense.

[Kobysh] In order to push...

[Arbatov] In order to push everything through, for everybody's heart to sink, and for all to actually feel that a war is on, that there is almost a war, and that under such conditions there is no room for any kind of objection, under a state of emergency. And this state of emergency is needed for all the administration's policies now being conducted.

[Kobysh] I would like to return to what we began with, the developing countries starting from the premise that the United States does not represent the entire world, though the current U.S. Administration is giving the world many troubles, often unjustified, senseless, and unnecessary. The developing countries have many burdens. Of course, current U.S. policy, the games of the administration leaders, has its significance here, yet the general U.S. course with respect to liberated states -- developing countries which represent almost half of the world's population -- is a powerful course intended to keep them submissive and put some on their knees and this is what has become very clear in U.S. actions with respect to Libya. Generally, it is an attempt to stop the progress of history. I think that this is the purpose of the regional conflicts being fanned by the United States.

[Arbatov] The United States wants to save the world at any cost, but it turns out that the world must be saved from the rich United States.

[Kobysh] But it is saving the world in a strange kind of way, a very singular selection is occurring. For some reason it was not saving the world when Somoza was committing outrages in Nicaragua. He was not blockaded and U.S. instructors were not sent against him. For some reason, guarded criticism is now being levelled against the Pinochet regime apparently for fear that he will go under and they are somehow trying to anticipate this event. But it is not sending U.S. Navy ships to the coasts of Chile.

[Arbatov] It is interesting. What if Soviet Navy ships held maneuvers near Chile or South Africa...

[Kobysh interrupting] Yes, one can imagine it...

[Arbatov] ...what kind of reaction there would be by the Americans.

[Kobysh] One can imagine what would happen.

[Zorin] This dual political bookkeeping is Washington's political style.

[Kobysh] Yes, but generally, this is imperialism, this is an imperialist policy, and it is under this imperialist banner that Washington has begun its campaign, or little campaigns [pokhodiki] as we have said, against the developing states that have recently achieved their freedom.

This campaign is naturally doomed to failure. We have repeatedly noted in this studio that history cannot be stopped, but the threat it holds to the cause of peace -- I have in mind that irresponsible policy that often places mankind on the brink of extremely dangerous events -- this threat greatly troubles the cause of peace and the security of peoples and all mankind.

[Zorin] Throughout the world attention was directed to the fact that at the 27th congress of our party, besides speaking about the difficulties of the world today, and the complex problems of our world, a great profound historic optimism was demonstrated. This is a characteristic feature of the 27th party congress. Georgiy Arkadyevich, in your opinion, what is this optimism based on?

[Arbatov] First of all, I think on a confidence in one's own abilities and in the prospects for our society. You understand this is a very realistic confidence that is based on an understanding of problems and difficulties and at the same time on a very clear perception of the enormous reserves that we have and the great, limitless opportunities revealed to our society if we very consistently and persistently follow this path.

On the other hand if we speak of foreign policy I think that we have every reason to look to the future with confidence because our policy, our political platform, expresses the fundamental and basic requirements of international development, not only ours but those of all other countries, the whole world, including us of course. And we want to play an active and positive role in these processes today.

After all, the class struggle in the world arena is developing in extremely singular ways, and one of these for example is a which society... it is competition, peaceful competition, competition to see which system will permit the construction of a society which satisfies to the fullest extent the requirement of people and the demands of progress.

There is a second aspect: what system, what society -- socialism or capitalism -- will propose a realistic plan to the world, a realistic answer to the questions facing the world. A very important line of struggle runs through this today, not a simple struggle between one country and another or even between systems. It is also a struggle between old and alienated-from-life notions of how the problems facing mankind should be solved and this new thinking that has been elevated to a realization of the new realities in the world and proposes new and realistic [solutions] truly capable of bringing both survival and an opportunity for human society to develop successfully.

Without concealing from us the fact that everything will come in a very sharp and very complicated struggle, it seems to me that all this nevertheless makes us optimists.

[Zorin] Thank you. Our time has run out. It remains for me to thank you for taking part in our discussion today and to thank our television viewers. And so, until our next meeting here in our Studio 9; thank you.

FOREIGN MINISTRY VIEWS VIENNA TALKS, LIBYAN ISSUE

PM021914 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 26 Mar 86 Second Edition p 4

[TASS report: "Press Center Briefing"]

[Text] A briefing for Soviet and foreign journalists on current international questions was held at the Press Center of the USSR Foreign Ministry in Moscow on 25 March.

Speaking at the briefing, V.V. Mikhaylov, head of the Soviet delegation at the Vienna talks on the limitation and reduction of armaments and armed forces in central Europe, reported on the results of the latest round of talks. He noted that the United States and its NATO allies are continuing to erect barriers in the path of a real reduction in the level of military confrontation in central Curope and arbitrarily manipulate monitoring [kontrol] and verification [proverka] measures. The Western side has reduced to a minimum the number of troops subject to reduction. The West categorically refuses to reduce arms to the same extent [naravne] as armed forces.

Dwelling on the provocative U.S. actions against Libya, V.B. Lomeyko, chief of the USSR Foreign Ministry Press Department, noted that Soviet people express solidarity with Libya and resolutely condemn the aggressive actions by the U.S. military which pose a threat not only to the situation in the Mediterranean but also to universal peace and international security. They demand that these actions be immediately terminated.

COMMENTATORS CONSIDER BUSH, WEINBERGER TOURS

Shalnev on Purpose of Bush Trip

LD021056 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 0724 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Text] Washington, 2 Apr (TASS) -- TASS correspondent A. Shalnev reports: U.S. Vice President George Bush is setting out on 3 April on a 10-day trip to the countries of the Near East and the Persian Gulf. He will visit Saudi Arabia, Oman, Bahrain, and North Yemen. As Bush himself has stated, in the course of the trip -- which is to be carried out on the personal instruction of President Reagan -- he will discuss with the leaders of those countries "a wide circle of questions relating to the sphere of security."

Informed observers are regarding the vice president's trip in the context of the efforts being undertaken by the Washington administration within the framework of the notorious doctrine of neoglobalism. For example, it emerges from the utterances of a highly placed State Department representative that the Bush mission will, to a significant degree, be subordinate to the aim of preserving U.S. access to military installations in certain countries of the region. As is known, Washington has succeeded in obtaining for itself the "right" to use such installations in Oman and Bahrain which, in the Pentagon's calculations, would become base points for the "Rapid Deployment Force," which has been specially created in the United States for the implementation of its gendarme operations in the Persian Gulf region.

The task of preserving these "rights" is in the meantime turning out to be increasingly complex. As the vice president himself admitted at a news conference in Washington, the countries in the region "did not take a very benevolent attitude" to the recent armed action by the United States against sovereign Libya. In the estimation of observers, there is an increasing fear in those countries that the military installations might be used by Washington against the Arab states themselves under the fabricated pretext of "fighting international terrorism."

Speaking about the aims of the trip, the vice president reported that he intends to discuss the situation around Afghanistan. At the same time the State Department representative admitted that Bush will not be presenting any fresh proposals or ideas of the administration in this sphere. In other words, discussion of the "Afghan question" will virtually be reduced merely to attempts by the Washington emissary to urge certain Arab countries to provide even more active support for the bandits who are carrying out raids on the territory of the DRA from Pakistan.

Further evidence of the direction of Bush's trip might also be the fact that, in the words of the vice president, he will not be taking with him "anything that is specifically new" also concerning a settlement of the situation in the Near East. It emerges from this that Bush, who on the eve of the visit met S. Peres, the Israeli prime minister, in Washington, will once again attempt to win the Arab countries over to support the old and bankrupt policy of separate deals.

Pravdin on Weinberger's Seoul Talks

LD022200 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1645 GMT 2 Apr 86

[From the "International Diary" program presented by Sergey Pravdin]

[Text] Peres, the prime minister of Israel, who is in the United States on a visit, is today continuing talks with Vice President Bush and Secretary of State Shultz.

Technically, Peres has come to the United States in connection with the 50th anniversary of the Zionist organization of the World Jewish Congress but in fact he is discussing questions of strengthening military and political cooperation between the two countries with leading U.S. figures. The talk is first and foremost about increasing U.S. military and economic assistance to Israel and also joint actions against independent Arab countries, especially against Libya. Peres' visit ends on 3 April, and on that same day Bush, the American vice president, is himself flying to the Near East. As the REUTER agency reports he will visit three countries in the Persian Gulf: Saudi Arabia, Bahrain, Oman and also the Yemen Arab Republic. It has been officially announced that the aim of the visit is the U.S. intention to demonstrate its friendly attitudes to the aforementioned countries. The agency notes that in actual fact Washington is striving to once more confirm the presence of its special interests in that strategically important and oil-rich region. It is also reported that Bush will visit the Enterprise aircraft carrier, which is now in the Indian Ocean with a group of other American warships. Incidentally, Bush is not the only high-ranking Washington representative to be carrying out a voyage abroad at the present time.

On 2 and 3 April Weinberger, head of the U.S. Defense Department, will be holding talks in Seoul with leaders of the military junta. According to the UPI, the main question likely to be discussed will be American-South Korean military-strategic cooperation and also the creation of a new military bloc in Asia, or, the so-called Washington-Tokyo-Seoul triple alliance. Certain questions on the internal situation in South Korea will also be considered, in particular the firmness of the position of the Seoul dictator himself, Chon Tu-hwan. It is known that the popular movement for democratic transformations and for holding early direct presidential elections has recently intensified significantly in the country despite brutal repression. Despite a ban by the authorities, signatures are being collected throughout the whole of South Korea for a petition demanding democratic reforms. Opposition forces plan to collect 10 million signatures on it. A 100,000-strong demonstration by opponents of the Chon Tu-hwan regime took place in the South Korean city of Kwangju. Many comrades probably saw photos of this demonstration on the Vremya program. The Seoul authorities deal harshly with their political opponents but the Seoul dictator's throne is rocking more and more strongly, and in Washington they are asking themselves the question whether it might not be time to get rid of the odious figure of General Chon, as was done quite recently with Duvalier in Haiti or Marcos in the Philippines.

REACTION CONTINUES TO EVENTS IN GULF OF SIDRA

U.S. Planned To Invade Libya

LD031004 Moscow TASS in English 0912 GMT 3 Apr 86

[Text] Washington April 3 TASS -- TASS correspondent Nikolay Turkatenko reports:

The recent attack of the U.S. Navy on Libya was only an element of Washington's plan to mount a major act of aggression against that country. This conclusion is prompted by a WASHINGTON POST report on April 2. Quoting well-informed sources in the USA and the Egyptian newspaper AL-AHRAM, THE WASHINGTON POST says that one option envisioned a massive strike at Libyan territory by the U.S. Air Force. The drafting of such plans was supervised by the presidential national security adviser, John Poindexter, and the Pentagon top brass. Washington tried to provoke an armed conflict between Libya and Egypt on three occasions to have a pretext to send in U.S. troops "to help out the Egyptians." The Government of Egypt, however, refused to participate in such a dangerous act of provocation.

The word "Grenada" figured prominently in discussions on plans to attack Libya, the newspaper says, which means that an action similar to the invasion of that island was planned against Libya as well. However, THE WASHINGTON POST stressed, the U.S. Defense Department came to the conclusion that Libya was not a small defenseless country like Grenada.

Vinogradov Views Clash

PM021355 Moscow KRASNAYA ZVEZDA in Russian 29 Mar 86 Second Edition p 5

[Article by observer V. Vinogradov under the Rubric "Seats of Danger of War": "Having Taken the Bit Between Their Teeth"]

[Text] U.S. television, without evident rapture, has shown -- repeatedly -- the same footage: clouds of smoke at debris flying into the air above the outskirts of the Libyan city of Surt. This bloody orgy took place during what the White House had declared were "peaceful" exercises that the U.S. Navy has just completed in the Gulf of Sidra off Libyan shores.

I recall that during these "peaceful" exercises carrier-based aircraft carried out headlong incursions from U.S. aircraft carriers into Libyan airspace above the Gulf of Sidra.

Tripoli is well aware of what these incursions bring: Back in August 1981, when the Pentagon was carrying out similar exercises, two Libyan fighters were shot down. That is why Libya's air defense weapons opened fire on the violators. This was followed by what was shown by U.S. television. The latter-day pirates under the Stars and Stripes delivered a missile and bomb strike against Surt and sunk several Libyan cutters.

Television is only television, but Washington itself has attempted to present this aggressive action as some kind of "incident that arose suddenly." Lies! The facts attest irrefutably to the opposite. It is a case of a preconceived and preplanned "punitive" operation.

Libya did not become a target for Washington just today. For a number of years that sovereign state has been subjected to various forms of pressure from the United States for its firm anti-imperialists stance. Here the provocative, threatening maneuvers by U.S. Navy groupings off the Libyan coast have become almost constant. But that did not seem enough for U.S. ruling circles. In July 1985, THE WASHINGTON POST reports, a special conference was held in the White House in the presence of the President. It decided to "toughen" its policy with respect to Libya. This, the newspaper points out, was followed by "numerous discussions, studies, interdepartmental conferences, and the assessment and even preliminary selection of targets on Libyan territory." Moreover, according to THE WASHINGTON POST there was a thorough study of the question of "delivering preemptive strikes against Libya."

The order to carry out the new series of provocative exercises off Libyan shores with the participation of aircraft carrier formations was given in January this year. Washington had a good idea where this was supposed to lead. As THE NEW YORK TIMES points out in this connection, citing official administration spokesmen, "Reagan decided to send aircraft carriers to the Gulf of Sidra after he had been told that this would inevitably lead to military confrontation with Libya." In other words, the United States deliberately decided to provoke Tripoli into a clash.

Thus three aircraft carriers -- the Coral Sea, the Saratoga, and the America -- and over 30 escort ships including the modern cruisers Yorktown and Ticonderoga immediately appeared off Libyan shores. It was this armada with 240 carrier-based aircraft which took part in the recent "peaceful" exercises. The Pentagon incidentally, had already declared that even after they had ended not a single U.S. ship would leave the south Mediterranean region.

The United States' rash actions off Libyan shores could not fail to cause the gravest alarm among the world public. The Arab League, the OAU, and many international organizations have denounced the U.S. fleet's piracy. Here special emphasis was placed on the fact that the U.S. armed provocation in the Gulf of Sidra is the result of the U.S. strategy of regional destabilization.

Within the framework of this strategy the White House, ignoring the Latin American countries' desire to achieve a peaceful settlement in Central America, is building up support to the anti-Nicaraguan forces and seeking from Congress an even bigger increase in military aid to the "contras." And "credit" also goes to the United States for the fact that the situation surrounding Afghanistan is in no way being stabilized. Earmarking funds amounting to many millions, the United States is trying to effect a further escalation of the undeclared war against the Afghan people that it is waging at the hands of inveterate bandits and mercenaries.

The expansion of the conflict in southern Africa, where people's Angola has been obliged to repel the joint efforts of the Republic of South Africa's racist regime and the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola is also entirely on the U.S. conscience. By its support Washington is unleashing the former and the latter on Angola. And what would have happened to the Pol Pot holdouts had it not been for Washington's all-around patronage?

Yes, the list of regional conflicts is still great, unfortunately. Pointing to the importance of this question, at the dinner in the Great Kremlin Palace in honor of C. Bendjedid, president of the Democratic and Popular Republic of Algeria and general secretary of the National Liberation Front Party, M.S. Gorbachev, general secrectary of the CPSU Central Committee, said: "As well as serving as the catalyst for local and international tension, regional problems have significance in themselves of vital importance for all world development. For all the diversity of the specific conditions at the basis of each of them there ultimately lies the question of the peoples' right to determine their own fate. And these problems should be resolved without imperialist interference, in an atmosphere of respect for the peoples' independence and the legitimacy of their desires."

It is absolutely clear that the United States' actions against the Libyan Jamahiriyah are a challenge to the entire world public and flout universally recognized civilized relations. This policy not only provokes but also creates regional conflicts and jeopardizes international peace and security. It is directed against all independent peoples and is meeting with a mounting rebuff from them.

As for the Soviet Union's position with regard to the unrestrained U.S. pressure on Libya, the USSR resolutely denounces the U.S. aggressive anti-Libyan actions. The Soviet Union is in solidarity with the Libyan people defending their sacred right to freedom and independence against imperialist encroachments. This principled position is meeting with the full support of the other socialist countries and entire peace-loving public.

Bovin Scores U.S. Actions

PM031053 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 1 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 5

[Article by IZVESTIYA political observer A. Bovin: "Irresponsibility"]

[Text] It is difficult to accuse the present American Administration of an excess of friendly sentiments and actions in relation to the Soviet Union. Nevertheless Washington's markedly unfriendly, hostile, and provocative actions that we have recently encountered manifestly break the average statistical norms even for American arrogance.

I have in mind Washington's demand that the number of employees working as USSR, Ukrainian, and Belorussian representatives to the United Nations be reduced by 105 persons. I have in mind the passing of U.S. warships through USSR territorial waters off the southern Crimean coast. I have in mind the blatant detonation of a nuclear device carried out a few days before 31 March -- the declared expiration date of the unilateral Soviet moratorium.

Speaking on television on Saturday, Comrade Gorbachev qualified the White House's actions as devoid of both a sense of reality and a sense of responsibility. Nevertheless, showing both restraint and patience, the Soviet Union gave the United States one more chance to take a responsible decision and join the moratorium. The Americans did not ponder very long. They rejected our proposal.

A noteworthy coincidence. The day before, on Friday, the White House once again urged Congress to remove the ban on testing ASAT systems (antisatellite weapons). The same old faulty logic -- the more weapons, the better and greater the security.

No, Washington does not wish to learn, does not wish to reckon with the demands and limitations of our time. Hence the reliance on force, unscrupulousness, and the promotion of unrealistic, unrealizable aims. The Americans adore adopting such majestic, statuesque poses and solemnly pontificating virtually in the name of the Good Lord himself. But these pompous poses and speeches strangely contract with the nerviness, provincial bravado, with the constant fear of showing weakness and being surrounded by "Reds" -- the Cubans will attack Florida, the Nicaraguans will occupy Texas, and the Libyans will seize California. It's a good thing that at least Grenada has been calmed down, otherwise the state of Iowa would be in tears....

The constant hysteria surrounding Nicaragua, the use of 100 percent McCarthyite methods, and the crude abuse addressed to the Sandinists -- this is not so much politics as medicine. After its defeat in the House of Representatives, the administration is rejoicing over its victory in the Senate: 53 senators to 47 voted in favor of allocating money to assist the "contras." In a special procedure the U.S. President is financing the airlifting of Honduras troops to Nicaraguan borders using American helicopters with American pilots.

It would be interesting to find out how many hundreds of millions, how many billions of dollars the United States spent in order to save its South Vietnamese puppets. And so what? It's as I say. I repeat, they do not wish to learn.

They do not wish to learn and they sent three aircraft carrier formations to Libyan shores. Why? To defend navigation freedom in the Gulf of Sidra, they say.

But first, Washington cannot help but know that in international naval law there exists the concept of the "historical gulf." (paragraph 6, page 7 of the Convention of the Territorial Sea and Continuous Zone signed in Geneva on 29 April 1958) A gulf which, by virtue of historical tradition, special geographical conditions, defense significance, and so forth, is regarded by a coastal state as its own inland sea waters is termed an "historical gulf." Examples of this are: Zalif Petra Velikogo (USSR), the Bristol Channel (Great Britain), Hudson Bay (Canada), Chesapeake Bay (United States), and the Golfo di Taranto (Italy).

Other states may or may not recognize the "historical" status of the gulf in question. But -- and this is the second point -- the UN Charter and present-day international law require disputes that may arise to be resolved exclusively by peaceful means. By shelling Libyan territory, carrying out rocket attacks on Libyan patrol boats, and killing Libyans, the Americans have tried to prove (and have proven) their devotion not to freedom of navigation, but to freedom of brigandage, violence, and irresponsible use of force.

Sending a special message to members of the 6th Fleet, the U.S. President said: "You have demonstrated to the whole world that the United States has will have that it can protect the interests of the free world. Thanks to the determination you showed and your tireless opposition to the threat posed by Libya, our world has become safer... On behalf of all Americans I say: Thank you for all that you have done, we are proud of you. We wish you success and good luck!" In my opinion, any comment is superfluous here. One observation, however. Black may be called white. People may be urged to be proud of something that should give rise to bitterness and aversion. But in the ordinary world, not the world of distorted political and moral consciousness, black will nevertheless remain black.

America is conjecturing how it can explain the recent series of provocative decisions and actions by the White House. I will cite two of the most frequently encountered explanations.

First, Reagan believed it necessary to justify himself before his even more right-wing supporters for the fact that he behaved too soft in Geneva. And second, Reagan has altered the Soviet-American balance of forces in the favor of the United States, and, consequently, he can throw down a Somewhat bolder challenge to Moscow.

The first point. Let us consider this a private affair of the administration. But for ourselves we will draw a conclusion which, incidentally, we have already drawn more than once: Our American partners are too unreliable, because they make principled questions of big politics dependent on petty political intrigue. But we cannot get away from this. We have to do business with those with whom history and fate present us.

Point two. I am afraid that neither this U.S. President nor any other will succeed in breaking the existing balance of forces between the United States and the USSR. And the Americans are making a mistake when they identify our cicumspection and responsibility for indecisiveness.

From a technical viewpoint it would have cost nothing to send the American warships near Lastochkino Gnezdo to the bottom of the sea. But responsible political decisions are not only determined by technical potential. The Americans were allowed to go home. And for reasons unclear to me, the U.S. President did not congratulate them on their success. But he could have done. And, without fail, on behalf of "all Americans." I do not feel I have the right to speak on behalf of all "Russians." For myself I will say: We do not have an inferiority complex. We are sufficiently civilized to react to provocative intrigue adequately and without hysteria. We will not slam the door.

I quite allow that the political pressure applied by the U.S. President will give him certain tactical pluses and will increase sympathy for him on the part of conservative, chauvinistically minded strata of American society and among world reactionaries. But strategically the White House is clearly losing. Even the U.S. allies shrink in fear, finding out about the latest feats of Rambo who, of course, is fighting for freedom. "Let us immediately get rid of a basic ambiguity," the Italian newspaper PAESE SERA notes, "the American fleet is not waging battle for the sake of ideals of freeodm. Gunboats will never bring freedom." Exactly. By setting force in motion and talking about freedom the Americans can still intimidate some people and deceive some people. But the number of the intimidated and the deceived is becoming smaller and smaller. And consequently a strategy calculated to intimidate and deceive has no future.

Quite recently in THE WASHINGTON POST there appeared the following characterization of the U.S. President: "Demagogy and willingness to sweep aside the truth and achieve his aim by any means are characteristic of Ronald Reagan. He can treat facts offhandedly, cunningly twist words, and he is prepared to repeat a lie or a debatable fact until they begin to be accepted as the truth. He is a very adroit propagandist and a very bad president." I am grieved by this characterization. After all, the U.S. President is our main, basic partner as long as it is a question of preserving peace and preventing a universal thermonuclear catastrophe. We would like a little less demagogy, a little less propaganda, and a little more politics.

At present the following must be said. Of all the vast multitude of epithets used to describe White House foreign policy -- tough, arrogant, forceful, energetic, global, risky, defiant, and so on and so forth -- I have never encountered the word "responsible."

OFFICERS REPORT ENCOUNTER WITH U.S. SHIPS OFF CRIMEA

[Interview with Commander P. Zhuravlev, commander of the patrol ship Ladnyy, and Colonel V. Kuznetsov, commander of an air subunit, by Subcommander V. Pasyakin: "Off the Crimean Coast"]

[Text] As already reported in the press, on 13 March this year American warships flagrantly violated the USSR state border in the region to the south of the Crimean peninsula for the purpose of carrying out intelligence activity. Displaying high combat readiness, self-control, and sangfroid, the patrol ship Ladnyy, border vessels of the USSR KGB, and naval aircraft made them leave Soviet territorial waters.

Subcommander V. Pasyakin, our permanent correspondent in the Red Banner Black Sea Fleet, met with Commander P. Zhuravlev, commander of the patrol ship Ladnyy, and Colonel V. Kuznetsov, commander of an air subunit, and asked them to describe the actions in that complex situation.

Commander P. Zhuravlev: On 10 March our ship was performing a combat training mission at sea. In the afternoon, with the help of radio aids and, later, visually, we discovered that two American ships -- the guided missile cruiser Yorktown and the destroyer Caron -- had entered Black Sea waters through the Bosporus Strait. I at once reported this to the Black Sea Fleet Command and received orders to continue surveillance.

It must be said that American naval warships have repeatedly entered the Black Sea in the past in attempts to carry out reconnaissance. Therefore the crew was ready for any surprises.

The American ships crossed the Black Sea, emerged in the region to the soutwest of Novorossiysk, began maneuvering, and then headed for the Crimean peninsula. At 1111 on 13 March they entered our territorial waters. We warned the American commanders of this and demanded that they immediately leave USSR territorial waters. This reply came from the American ships: Warning received. But they were clearly in no hurry to react appropriately to our demand. On orders from our command we were ready for the immediate fulfillment of a combat mission for 2 hours and 21 minutes. This was a serious test of the crew sailors' self-control, coolness, and professional skill.

Probably the greatest load fell on the combat information center and the combat control unit under the command of Subcommander D. Pavlov.

The sailors of the electromechanical combat unit headed by Subcommander S. Kobelev also did excellent work. The American ships tried repeatedly to evade our relentless surveillance. But the mechanics made skillful use of the shipboard machines' potential.

In short, through the efforts of the entire crew we endeavored to make it clear to the commanders of the American ships that we were ready for the most decisive actions and that their continued presence in our waters could have grave consequences. At 1332 they left Soviet territorial waters.

Col V. Kuznetsov: Planned exercises were taking place in our air unit. Suddenly the alarm sounded. We had to fly to the region south of the Crimean peninsula and be ready to fulfill a combat mission. Crews took off under the command of Major V. Tsyganenko and Captain P. Zherebyatyev, military pilots first class. These experienced aviators have hundreds of combat training flights under the most diverse conditions to their credit.

Captain V. Ivanov, the navigator declared the subunit's best navigator on the eve of the 27th CPSU Congress, guided the aircraft to the prescribed region by the shortest route. The first to detect the American ships that had intruded into our territorial waters was the crew headed by Maj V. Tsyganenko.

Soon, evidently having evaluated the situation that was taking shape through their fault, the American ships' commanders realized the threat posed by their continued presence in Soviet territorial waters. They abruptly changed course and headed for the open sea.

I do not know what the American ships' commanders and their superiors were trying to achieve by that "operation," but I am sure that they achieved just one thing: They have once again demonstrated to the whole world the U.S. Navy's aggressive essence.

REPORTAGE ON VISIT BY DPRK'S YANG HYONG-SOP

Meeting With Gromyko

LD021626 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 1631 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow, 2 Apr (TASS) -- Andrey Gromyko, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and chairman of the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium, received in the Kremlin today a delegation of the DPRK Supreme People's Assembly led by Yang Hyong-sop, chairman of the Assembly's Standing Committee.

In the course of the conversation the current international situation was reviewed. Aggressive actions of imperialism in recent weeks are making the situation increasingly complicated. Andrey Gromyko stressed that the USSR is continuing its peace-loving efforts.

The banning of nuclear weapons tests could be the first step along this path. The USSR is ready to start immediate talks on this question at any level. This was stated in the appeal from the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium to the U.S. Congress.

The USSR considers the speedy cessation of nuclear weapons tests to be a question of primary importance. This thought permeated the 29 March television statement made by Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee. He announced the USSR's decision to refrain from carrying out nuclear tests after the ending of the period of the unilateral moratorium -- 31 March this year -- if the United States also does not carry out such tests. The USSR is prepared to attend a Soviet-U.S. summit meeting in Europe in the very near future in order to reach agreement on ceasing nuclear tests.

However, the USSR has not received a positive reply to its proposals even though the present day requires the most serious approach to policy, and understanding of the complexities of the present world, and a deep penetration into its problems. In general it requires a new way of thinking. This leads to the logical and convincing conclusion that mutual security can be ensured only by means of political decisions and not by saber-rattling or stocking nuclear warheads.

Soviet people, Andrey Gromyko stressed, invariably show solidarity with the just struggle of the Korean people for an improvement in the situation of the Korean peninsula and for creating favorable conditions for a peaceful democratic unification of the country. The desire of the CPSU and the USSR to strengthen fraternal friendship with the Korean Workers Party and the DPRK on the basis of the principles of Marxism-Leninism remains constant. The celebration this year of the 25th anniversary of the USSR-DPRK Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Aid Treaty undoubtedly demonstrates the resolve of the two countries to intensify cooperation in the interests of socialism and peace in the Far East, in Asia, and throughout the world.

Meeting With Tolkunov

LD022041 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1546 GMT 2 Apr 86

[From the "Novosti" newscast]

[Text] A delegation of the Supreme People's Assembly of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, led by Yang Hyong-sop, chairman of the assembly's Standing Committee, had a conversation at the USSR Supreme Soviet today.

Comrade Tolkunov, chairman of the Soviet of the Union of the USSR Supreme Soviet, told of the tasks of the supreme body of state power of the Soviet Union in implementing the tasks for the social and economic development of the country set by the 27th CPSU Congress.

There was an exchange of information on the activity of the parliaments of the two countries, and matters of the further development of their ties were discussed. It was stressed that the danger of a nuclear catastrophe occurring requires that the efforts of all states, parliaments, and peoples be stepped up in the interests of the strengthening of peace on earth.

EXCHANGE ACTIVITIES WITH JAPAN REPORTED

OW012337 Moscow in Japanese to Japan 1200 GMT 31 Mar 86

[From the "Friendship and Good-Neighborliness" program]

[Excerpts] First, we will report on USSR-Japan exchange news:

The Japan-USSR Society, one of the Japan-USSR friendship organizations in Japan, concluded its 30th plenary session in Tokyo yesterday. The action program for this year adopted at the meeting includes various activities to promote the development of friendship and cooperation between the Soviet and Japanese people, as well as to activate struggles for peace and the abolition of nuclear weapons in Japan. The action program highly appraised Soviet initiatives for disarmament as being of epoch-making significance.

A delegation from Sarukutsu village in Hiroshima Prefecture, led by Mr Kasai of Sarukutsu village, is currently on the second day of its visit to Volgograd, Hiroshima's sister city. The delegation has been visiting the USSR since 25 March at the invitation of the Union of Soviet Societies for Friendship and Cultural Relations With Foreign Countries and the USSR-Japan Society.

A delegation of Komeito's Organ Bureau led by Susumu Haji arrived in Tashkent, capital of Uzbekistan on 31 March.

MOSCOW SEES U.S. INVOLVEMENT IN GULF ARMS RACE

NC021300 Moscow in Persian to Iran 1700 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Unattributed commentary]

[Excerpts] In his toast at a recent reception for Algerian President Chadli Benjedid, who is in the Soviet Union on a friendly visit, Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev said that the arms race is an ever-growing obstacle to progress and development. Mikhail Gorbachev stated that the militaristic principle underlying the constant acquisition of arms should be replaced with the principle of disarmament, for the sake of progress and development.

The implementation of this principle in international life would certainly be in the interest of the Persian Gulf countries, which are currently the targets of an unending flood of arms from the West. The U.S. Administration continues to maintain its leading position among the merchants of death and arms exporters to the Persian Gulf countries and to the Middle and Near East.

Among the West European countries involved, both France and Great Britain are of note. In recent decades these three governments have exported some $70 billion in arms to countries in this region. In fact, a large portion of these arms shipments were exported in the last 5 years, which reflects the increased efforts in this area by the imperialist governments.

Until the Islamic Republic of Iran was founded, the United States was the major arms exporter to Iran, doing its best to strengthen the role of gendarme played by the shah's regime in the Persian Gulf. After the 11 February 1978 revolution other Western imperialist countries, including Great Britain, the FRG, Italy and others, have been trying to fill the vacuum created in the arms market.

Given the ongoing Iran-Iraq war, the arms race in the Persian Gulf may be particularly dangerous. It effectively prevents the two hostile countries from restoring normal relations through peaceful means and exacerbates tension in the region in general. This arms race may draw neighboring Persian Gulf countries into the War, which would then escalate. The millions used to purchase expensive arms constitute increased military expenditures that are an unbearable burden on the shoulders of these countries' workers.

In the Persian Gulf, Saudi Arabia spends the most for military purchases, followed by Iran and Iraq, in that order. Saudi Arabia's military expenditures constitute more than one-third of the military expenditures for the entire region. Between 1975 and 1983 these expenditures more than trebled. Military expenditures began to increase significantly at the outset of this decade, and by 1984 they comprised about 30 percent of these countries' budgets. The military expenditures per capita are the highest ever among the region's countries.

Iran's military expenditures during the seventies were extremely high. This was because of the escalation in military preparations carried out by the shah's regime. However, after the Islamic Republic of Iran was founded, the new regime sought initially to reduce these expenditures, though they again began to soar with the Iran-Iraq war. Between 1975 and 1983, Iran spent almost $60 billion for military purposes. A major part of this was spent to pay for arms exported to Iran from the West.

Iraq's military expenditures are also noteworthy. In (?1984) Iraq's military expenditures were proportionally second only to those of Saudi Arabia. They had increased eightfold in comparison to 1975. Iraq's total military expenditures from 1975 to 1983 surpassed the $41-billion mark.

On the whole, the total amount of military expenditures by Persian Gulf countries between 1975 and 1983 was about $260 billion, or more than 70 percent of the total military expenditures by all of the Near and Middle East countries. The amount spent by the Persian Gulf countries for arms purchases alone increased at nearly the same rate.

Thus, the neocolonialist policy pursued by the Western imperialists, primarily the United States, in the Near and Middle East and especially in the Persian Gulf has turned this region into a huge arsenal of lethal weapons and has rendered it a powderkeg that might explode at any moment, creating numerous calamities for the region's countries. All of this produces valid concern and anxiety among the region's people.

KARMAL CITES CPSU CONGRESS, DRA POLICY AT PLENUM

PM021121 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 2 Apr 86 First Edition p 4

[TASS report: "Widening the Social Base of the Revolution: B. Karmal's Report at the PDPA Central Committee Plenum"]

[Text] Kabul, 1 Apr -- The report of B. Karmal, general secretary of the PDPA Central Committee and chairman of the DRA Revolutionary Council, entitled "The Historic 27th CPSU Congress -- a Congress of Peace, Progress, and Creation -- and the PDPA's Next Tasks," which he delivered at a routine PDPA Central Committee plenum held in Kabul the other day, has been published here.

Major, crucial events, B. Karmal said, occur in history. One such event was the historic 27th CPSU Congress, which was an outstanding demonstration of the international cohesion of communists and revolutionaries throughout the world. It formulated the program goals of Lenin's party and defined the nature of Soviet society's progress along the path of communist creation. The congress' strategic decisions will actively promote the strengthening of socialism's positions and the stepping up of the struggle of all progressive mankind to avert the danger of nuclear war.

The 27th congress did tremendous, fruitful work. Its core was the Political Report of the Central Committee, which was delivered by M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee. The Political Report to the congress is an outstanding document of creative Marxism-Leninism and a vivid example of what the revolutionary outlook and class approach mean in present-day conditions. It embodied the collective intelligence and experience of the CPSU, set forth the basic principles of the new way of political thinking, and spread an impressive canvas of creative activity. The report reinterprets a whole range of questions of party and state life, convincingly demonstrates the strengthening potential of the world system of socialism, and reflects an objective picture of the revolutionary process. This document arms all fighters for peace and social progress with a modern strategy and tactics for the struggle and with theoretical and practical instructions of great mobilizing force.

The 27th CPSU Congress decisions, B. Karmal pointed out, again confirm that only a party which lives by the people's interests and has a scientifically substantiated program can implement tasks on such an enormous scale.

The main idea running through the entire congress was that of entering the 21st century without nuclear, chemical, or other weapons of mass destruction; delivering mankind from the constant fear of the future; and transferring to peaceful purposes the vast resources spent on the arms race. The CPSU's foreign policy course is also a course of solidarity with the forces of social and national liberation; close cooperation with countries of a socialist orientation, with revolutionary democratic parties, and with the Nonaligned Movement; and the expansion of ties with all who are against war and in favor of international security. The main delegate to the 27th congress was peace, the Afghan leader stressed.

The Afghan people, he went on, watched the congress' work with unremitting attention and took to their hearts the report of M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, and especially what he said about our country. Only a true friend and brother can display such a principled stance, such concern for our country. On behalf of all the Afghan people, we say a great thank-you to the 27th CPSU Congress and to the working people of the Land of the Soviets for the all-around international assistance, thanks to which revolutionary Afghanistan lives, fights, and conquers.

The PDPA warmly approves and supports the decisions of the historic 27th congress and wishes the fraternal people of the Land of the Soviets, Lenin's party, the Central Committee, and M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, great successes in implementing them.

The PDPA Central Committee Politburo has decided to publish in Dari and Pashto the CPSU Central Committee Political Report, the new edition of the CPSU Program, and other congress documents. Let the PDPA members master more profoundly the powerful weapon of revolutionary theory and learn to apply in practice, in our complex, unique conditions, all the wealth of the CPSU's experience and ideas.

The present plenum, B. Karmal went on, sums up the last Afghan year, a year filled with important events. The building of the new type of armed forces continued and their combat might strengthened. Last year will go down in history as the year of the Loya Jirga (the supreme council of the DRA) and the high Jirga of the Border Tribes, which wholly and fully supported our domestic and foreign policy. The country's socioeconomic development gathered speed.

The party Central Committee, the Revolutionary Council, and the government focused efforts on widening the social base of the April Revolution. The last PDPA Central Committee plenum explained the essence of the new approach to this, defined concrete tasks, and set about their implementation. The widening of the composition of the Revolutionary Council and Council of Ministers, the continuing democratic elections to local organs of state power and administration, the creation of new public organizations -- all these are measures which confirm that the party fulfills its decisions and the promises made to the people. It is gratifying that more and more Afghans are returning home. The party's growth continued. Today there are more than 150,000 members and candidate members of the PDPA. The number of primary party organizations increased.

B. Karmal went on to dwell on certain aspects of the country's military-political situation. He noted that in general much work has been done to strengthen state power locally, although much work remains to be done in this sphere.

B. Karmal called for work in rural regions to be stepped up. Party workers, he noted, when on local visits, should study the peasants' needs more deeply and help fulfill the decisions adopted.

We must shift the center of all the party's political and socioeconomic activity to the countryside, to where the majority of the country's population lives and works.

Along with political measures, socioeconomic measures play a leading role in the implementation of the new approach to widening the social base of the revolution. A very important event in the country's life was the elaboration of the draft Basic Guidelines for the Economic and Social Development of the DRA for the next 5 years. Ordinary people, B. Karmal stated, can compare what the April Revolution offers the ordinary people with what has been imposed, for instance, on the Pakistanis by the military regime of Ziaul Haq. They have plans for aggression and the export of counterrevolution. We have plans for peace and creation.

Political methods and means, the speaker noted, must take the dominant place in work with the masses. This gives rise to an urgent need for a restructuring of party political work. Here what is most important is to make the transition from words to deeds and to step up control. A businesslike, concrete, exacting approach and dedication in the work of every party member and the entire PDPA -- that is the purpose of the current restructuring. Great significance is given to the stepping up of the work of women's, youth, and other mass public organizations in the ideological and patriotic education of the young generation. The struggle against illiteracy and the expansion of the public education system remain important avenues.

B. Karmal then set forth the tasks facing the country. He pointed out, in particular, that in the military sphere it is necessary to complete the implementation of measures to protect the state border, step up the struggle against banditry, and ensure peaceful, secure labor for the Afghans. In the domestic policy sphere, elections to local organs of power must be completed by the end of the Afghan year. By the same time the draft DRA Constitution must be prepared, ready for approval after nationwide discussion. B. Karmal cited as the main task in the spiritual sphere in the rallying of the people, military-patroitic education, and the stepping up of attention toward the development of the culture of all the peoples living in Afghanistan.

In the foreign policy sphere, B. Karmal stresses, all efforts must be directed toward achieving a political settlement of the Afghanistan situation. Following its peace-loving policy, the DRA has made every effort to achieve this goal through talks. Thanks to the DRA's efforts, and in particular the 14 May 1980 statement and the August 1981 statement, the way was opened for talks between the DRA and Pakistan. From the very beginning of the Geneva talks, the DRA, displaying good will and political realism, has done everything possible to ensure their successful progress. But unfortunately Pakistan, under pressure from imperialism, hegemonism, and reaction, adheres to a negative stance and, on various pretexts, evades direct, constructive dialogue. Therefore, although there has been some progress at the talks, they are still progressing too slowly.

In all spheres -- in party, state, and public life and in international affairs -- we must work better, selflessly, and with greater dedication, B. Karmal said in conculsion.

DRA PROTESTS PAKISTANI ARTILLERY SHELLING

LD030908 Moscow TASS in English 0833 GMT 3 Mar 86

[Text] Kabul, April 3 TASS -- The Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Afghanistan handed Pakistan's charge d'affaires in Afghanistan a statement, which reads:

Despite repeated protests, Pakistan continues to intervene in the internal affairs of the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan. Between March 10 and 23 this year, troops of the Pakistani Army and gangs of Afghan counterrevolutionaries opened missile and artillery fire on several occasions at the Chamkani, (Darzakheyl), (Marakheyl) and (Bangesh) areas in Afghan territory, killing or wounding more than 100 African citizens and destroying 50 homes and 4 mosques.

The Government of the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan strongly protests with Pakistan over these acts of aggression and demands the immediate termination of inhuman actions, which are aggravating tension on the border between the two countries.

A spokesman for the Afghan Foreign Ministry denied the groundless claims of Pakistan that the Armed Forces of Afghanistan opened fire at Pakistani territory between March 22 and 29 and demanded an immediate end to the spread of such falsehoods.

PAKISTAN ENVOY PRAISES USSR AID, PEACE MOVES

LD232043 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1530 GMT 23 Mar 86

[From the "Vremya" newscast; talk by Shahid Mohammad Amin, ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan to the USSR to mark Pakistan's National Day; recorded talk in English with superimposed Russian translation]

[Text] Dear Soviet friends: Pakistan became an independent country only 39 years ago. The territory it occupies is a cradle of one of the world's most ancient civilizations. For millenia grand cultures flourished here; among the most significant were the Gandahara culture, widespread in our country's northern regions and the Islamic culture, which exerted considerable influence on the development of the whole country.

This has helped form a special national identify and prerequisites for our great leader Mohammad 'Ali Jinnan's historic 23 March 1940 appeal for an independent motherland of Pakistan in which our people would be able to live in freedom and develope in accordance with the Islamic faith. A nation born in conditions such as these could not but embrace the ideals of freedom, sovereign equality of states, and opposition to colonialism and neocolonialism in all its manifestations.

The Islamic brotherhood is an important principle of our foreign policy. The second principle is support for Third World countries. Pakistan pursues an independent foreign policy based on the principles of nonaligment. There are no foreign bases whatever -- nor will there be any -- on its territory. Striving for peace and friendship with all peoples and, in particular, with its neighbors, Pakistan has no wish to be dragged into confrontation. We support all steps toward disarmament and we welcome the USSR initiatives in this area.

Since independence was proclaimed in 1947, Pakistan has gained considerable successes. The growth of the economic potential amounts to 6 percent, the per capita income in our country is South Asia's highest. Not only is the country self-sufficient in food it is also one of the world's biggest exporters of rice and cotton produce. Pakistan possesses a developed production base, more than 70 percent of exports comprise industrial goods.

We would have been unable to achieve such successes without help from our friends. We are grateful to the USSR for aid in constructing industrial projects and, in particular, the recently commissioned Karachi metallurgical works.

We are confident that there are extensive opportunities for fuller cooperation between our countries in the economic and trade fields. The USSR is one of our neighbours and we sincerely want to maintain cordial and friendly relations with it. The cultural heritage of our countries have much in common, especially as far as the history of Pakistan's culture and the history of culture of the Soviet Central Asia are concerned. Our countries hold the same viewpoint on numerous international questions.

We are sure that the good-neighborly relations, based on the principles of the UN Charter, correspond to our mutual interests. Thank you.

INDIA ATTEMPTS TO GUARD BORDER WITH PAKISTAN

LD030735 Moscow TASS in English 0730 GMT 3 Apr 86

[Text] New Delhi, April 3 TASS -- Indian security forces have taken additional measures to guard the border with Pakistan.

The measures, PTI News Agency said, aim to prevent agents of Pakistani secret services from penetrating this country to try and destabilize the situation in the strategically important State of Punjab and other Indian districts.

Last month alone 20 spies and saboteurs attempting to infiltrate into Punjab to commit acts of terrorism there were killed in shoot-outs with Indian frontier-guards.

Four of the border violators were arrested.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON BULGARIAN PARTY CONGRESS

Zhivkov Address

LD021316 Moscow TASS in English 1246 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Text] Sofia April 2 TASS -- Todor Zhivkov, general secretary of the Bulgarian Communist Party Central Committee, has addressed a speech to the 13th Congress of the Bulgarian Communist Party, which has opened here today. He set forth the fundamental issues of the party's policy of further building a developed socialist society in Bulgaria and its foreign policy activity.

The congress, Todor Zhivkov said, will center on problems pertaining to Bulgaria's development for the next fifteen years. "The main thing to us is to carry out a revolution in science and technology and develop on that basis the advantages of the socialist social system, socialist democracy and meeting ever fuller the material, social and spiritual requirements of the people".

Bulgaria has achieved high and stable economic growth rates, Todor Zhivkov said. Over the period from 1956 to 1985, the value of the fixed assets in the country's economy increased ten-fold, the productivity of socialized labour -- 8.4-fold and national income -- eight-fold. There have been far-reaching changes in the structure of industry. Such important industries for the country's economy as metallurgy, machine-building, the chemical and power engineering industries have developed at priority rates. High development rates are characteristic of electronics, microelectronics, robtics and the manufacture of battery-powered trucks.

"Our perspectives are part of the general perspectives of the socialist world," Todor Zhivkov stressed. "They are part of the general social progress, the struggle of peoples for a better and just life. We are convinced of the triumph of the communist ideals and firmly believed that our today's intentions and plans for the future, when the Bulgarian people will meet the third millenia, will become its present."

Todor Zhivkov went on to say that in the field of international relations the Bulgarian Communist Party will centre on the "cardinal problem of preserving peace and life on earth, of saving human civilization. The weapon's race whipped up by imperialism's most reactionary circles confronts mankind at the end of the 20th century with the alternative: to be or not to be, to survive or to perish in the flames of nuclear war."

The speaker stressed the important role of the 27th Congress of the CPSU "for a dynamic economic and political development of the world socialist system, implementation of the Leninist policy of peaceful coexistence of states with different social systems, cooperation and peaceful competition for mankind's benefit." Todor Zhivkov expressed support for the new Soviet initiatives. "To us, Communists, the prevention of a nuclear catastrophe and preservation of universal peace is the supreme goal, an expression of humanism and high moral standards of our ideology and our system," Todor Zhivkov said.

Bulgaria, Todor Zhivkov continued, will further make her contribution to strengthening the unity and cohesion of the fraternal socialist countries, to the implementation of the platform of the Warsaw Treaty member states adopted in Sofia for joint actions in the struggle to eliminate the nuclear threat and effect a turn for the better in the European and world affairs; for international cooperation in resolving the global problems of the present.

Todor Zhivkov stressed the great significance of the comprehesive program for progress in science and technology of the CMEA member countries, Bulgaria's interest in its implementation.

The speaker continued that the Bulgarian Communist Party is developing and will tirelessly deepen its links with the international communist and working class movement. It favours a further strengthening of cooperation and solidarity with the various trends in the working class movement. Its positions in relations with developing countries are invariable. "We make common cause with the struggle against imperialism and neocolonialism, against racism and apartheid," he said. We fully support the demands of developing countries for a restructuring of international relations on a just and democratic basis, for establishing a new international economic order.

Todor Zhivkov said that Bulgaria favours equitable and mutually beneficial relations with the developed capitalist countries, a political dislogue, economic, scientific technological and cultural cooperation without discrimination, in the interests of peaceful coexistence. The Bulgarian Communist Party devotes considerable attention to mutual relations with the Balkan states. "We believe that the need is ripe for the Balkan nations to draw up and sign a treaty on the ecological protection of the Balkan peninsula and adopt on that issue an appeal to all countries and peoples of the European continent", he said. In that connection, Todor Zhivkov stresses, "we will further work for the sake of implementing initiatives aimed at turning the Balkans into a zone free from nuclear and chemical weapons."

"We declare again that our people, which is engaged in a creative labour effort, most of all need detente and peace, goodneighbourly relations, trust and mutual understanding," the general secretary of the Bulgarian Communist Party Central Committee stressed.

Ryzhkov Outlines Moratorium

LD021421 Moscow TASS in English 1358 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Test] Sofia April 2 TASS -- "The ssolution of the new tasks that have been set by the 27th CPSU Congress and that are being set by the 13th Congress of the Bulgarian Communist Party is directly connected with the utilisation of the tremendous possibilities of cooperation and interaction by Bulgaria and the USSR, by all of the socialist community in various fields by public life and in international affairs," it was stated by member of the Political Bureau of the CPSU Central Committee. Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the USSR Nikolay Ryzhkov, who is heading the CPSU delegation at the 13th Congress of the BCP. He delivered a speech today at the forum of Bugarian Communists.

Nikolay Ryzhkov stressed that the tasks of the present stage of cooperation demand the use of new approaches and forms of joint work, a bold research for effective solutions. It is this that provides the possibility to switch our cooperation to the intensive road of development, to raise it to a qualitatively new level, imparts a powerful impulse to the further expansion of our trade, economic, scientific, technical and other ties.

"We are convinced of socialism's ability to solve the most complex tasks", the head of the CPSU delegation said. "An ever more active interaction of countries of the community, which serves as a sitmulant of accelerating the general advance, it vitally important for this".

"The fraternal countries are at one in their approach to all the main questions of international life. The community of our positions vividly manifested itself in the unanimous support given by the fraternal countries to the programme of fully liquidating all arsenals of nuclear and chemical arms before the end of the present century, of prohibiting strike space arms, set forth in the statement by the general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee on the fundamentals of creating an all-embracing system of international security was received with full approval".

"The ending of nuclear tests is an important measure that could have a favourable influence on the political climate in the world. We have already extended twice our unilateral moratorium on all nuclear explosions in the hope that the American Administration would display at long last a responsible approach to this problem of concern to mankind. But the United States displayed a cynical disregard for the aspirations of the peoples, for the possibility to make a real step towards scaling down the arms race. The new nuclear explosion set off by the United States has given rise to the legitimate indignation and a wave of protests in the whole world", Nikolay Ryzhkov stressed. "All this only makes more urgent the task of stopping nuclear arms tests, and it must be solved without delay. The Soviet Union, as it was stated recently on Soviet television by Mikhail Gorbachev, will not depart from the course of preserving and strengthening peace. Our undertaking not to conduct nuclear explosions even after the expiration of the moratorium on March 31 shall remain in force, if the United States does not continue tests".

"Mikhail Gorbachev", the leader of the CPSU delegation recalled, "suggested that a meeting with President Ronald Reagan of the United States be held urgently in order to reach agreement on this matter". "It is to be only regretted that the above-mentioned proposal has not met with a positive response. Washington has again displayed the lack of political will for a solution to this major problem which affects the destiny of all peoples. The international situation remains tense and dangerous as a result of the imperialist power politics, the development of the arms race, and interference in the internal affairs of other states. The situation requires high vigilance and everyday preparedness of all us to defend the peaceful labour of our peoples".

"It is uncharacteristic of the Communists to sink into pessimism. The more so as the Soviet Union, the socialist community possess everything necessary to prevent a military-and-strategic superiority over themselves. This strengthens our confidence that, despite the resistance of the aggressive forces, there is a possibility to ensure a turn for the better in European and world affairs", Nikolay Ryzhkov stated.

Further Ryzhkov Remarks

LD022249 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1800 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Speech by Nikolay Ryzhkov, secretary of the CPSU Central Committee and chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers, to the 13th BCP Congress in Sofia on 2 April -- recorded; from the "Vremya" newscast]

[Text] Congresses of the ruling Communist parties and workers parties of fraternal countries have vast importance in the development of our whole community. Their role is particularly great at this present abrupt historical turning point when life is putting forward for the socialist countries large-scale tasks which concern us all to a great extent, when our parties are conducting an energetic and creative search for effective ways to carry them out. In these conditions the importance of the mighty potential of the collective wisdom of the fraternal parties and their joint efforts to accelerate our common progress is greater than ever.

The report of the Central Committee of the Bulgarian Communist Party, the opening speech made by Comrade Todor Zhivkov and the speeches of the congress delegates reveal an impressive picture of all-around progress of the Bulgarian People's Republic. Its socialist achievements are a convincing confirmation of the correctness of the historical choice which was made by the Bularian people in the memorable days of September 1944.

From the rostrum of your congress a high assessment has been given of Soviet-Bulgarian cooperation. Kind words have been spoken about our Leninist party and the USSR. The basis of our friendship is socialist internationalism. It is a powerful factor in the development of every socialist country and in strengthening the positions of socialism in the world. Questions of the multifaceted Soviet-Bulgarian links are constantly in the purview of the Central Committees of our parties. They have become a direct and vital affair of millions of working people in Bulgaria and the USSR.

Much attention was paid at the 27th CPSU Congress to questions of strengthening the socialist community and developing cooperation among the fraternal countries. The fate of peace and social progress, as was stressed in the Political Report of our party to the congress, are today linked more closely than ever with the dynamism of the economic and political development of the world system of socialism.

Comrades, the fraternal parties are united in their approach to all the major questions of international life. The proposals put forward by the socialist countries at the conference of the Political Consultative Committee of the Warsaw Pact member-states in Sofia in October 1985, are aimed at solving the most urgent and cardinal problem of our time -- removing the threat of nuclear war. The common nature of our positions was clearly displayed in the unanimous support of the fraternal countries for the program for the total elimination of all arsenals of nuclear and chemical weapons by the end of this century and for the ban on space-strike weapons that was put forward in the statement of the general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee of 15 January this year. The proposal of the 27th CPSU Congress on the basis for the creation of an all-embracing system of international security was received with complete approval. The halting of nuclear tests is an important measure which could have a favorable effect on the world political climate. However, the United States has displayed a cynical disregard for the hopes of the peoples and for the opportunity to take a real step in curtailing the arms race. The new nuclear blast carried out by the United States has aroused justified indignation and a wave of protest throughout the world.

All of this only intensifies the urgency of the task of ceasing nuclear weapons tests and it must be tackled without delay. Comrade Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev has proposed an urgent meeting with President Reagan in order to reach agreement on this question. One can only regret that this proposal has not met with a positive response. Washington has once again displayed an absence of political will to solve this very important problem which concerns the fate of all peoples.

The USSR highly evaluates the role of the Bulgarian Communist Party and the Bulgarian People's Republic in defending our common foreign policy positions and in our joint struggle to resolve key questions of disarmament and international security. We value and support your efforts aimed at the development of relations of good-neighborliness in the Balkans, at turning this region into a zone of peace free from nuclear and chemical weapons. Your active foreign policy activity is a weighty contribution to the general cause of the struggle for peace.

Dear comrades, we are deeply convinced that the results of the work of the congress will have a favorable effect on the economic and social development of your wonderful country, on the all-around cooperation between our parties and peoples and will promote the strengthening of the might and cohesion of the whole socialist community. We wish you great success in carrying out these responsible and noble tasks. [applause]

MORE ON SOLOMENTSEV'S CPCZ CONGRESS SPEECH

PM021446 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 26 Mar 86 Second Edition p 4

[TASS report: "17th CPCZ Congress: Speech by Comrade M.S. Solomentsev"]

[Text] Prague, 25 Mar -- CPSU delegation head M.S. Solomentsev, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and chairman of the CPSU Central Committee Party Control Committee, who was warmly welcomed by those assembled, addressed the 17th CPCZ Congress today. He said:

Esteemed Comrade Husak!

Esteemed delegates to the 17th CPCZ Congress!

Accept cordial and fraternal greetings and wishes for complete success in the work of your congress from the CPSU Central Committee, Soviet Communists, and all working people in our country.

We heard with great interest the CPCZ Central Committee Political Report delivered by Comrade Gustav Husak. This profound and meaningful document sums up the results of the work done by your party and people in the last 5 years and in the entire period since the 16th CPCZ Congress.

The social practice of these years testifies to the absolute correctness and effectiveness of the political course taken by you. Czechoslovakia today is a state with highly developed industry and agriculture and a firm link in the socialist community.

It enjoys respect and prestige in the international arena. We are sincerely gratified by the fact that the Czechoslovak comrades have succeeded in substantially building up the country's economic potential, scoring remarkable achievements in the development of science and culture, and ensuring further growth of the population's living standards.

All this does honor to the policy of the Communist Party and to the labor and talents of fraternal Czechoslovakia's working class, cooperativized peasantry, and people's intelligentsia. All this constitutes a valuable contribution to strengthening the might of world socialism and enhancing its prestige.

The CPCZ Central Committee, evaluating what has been done on its merit, critically analyzes shortcomings and omissions in its report. Particular attention is given to the quest for effective ways for your society to advance toward greater heights of economic and social progress.

This approach is understandable and close to the hearts of Soviet Communists. Being demanding, exacting, and objectively criticizing evaluations of its activity -- these are signs of the party's health. They also provide a reliable guarantee that it will successfully cope with the new tasks.

Despite all the differences in the Soviet Union's and Czechoslovakia's specific conditions, we share a common need. The need to accelerate our pace, impart greater dynamism to socioeconomic development, and reveal more fully the enormous potential inherent in socialism.

The strategy of acceleration put forward for the first time by the CPSU Central Committee Plenum in April last year formed the core of the decisions by our party's 27th congress. The importance of the congress is determined by the very meaning of the crucial stage at which our country finds itself. One of its typical features is the bold, innovative, and truly revolutionary approach toward the complex problems facing us on the threshold of the 21st century. Held in a spirit of creative Marxism-Leninism and Bolshevik traditions, the congress armed Communists and all Soviet people with a clear vision of the prospects of social development.

The ideas contained in the new edition of the CPSU Program, the Central Committee Political Report delivered by Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev, and the other congress documents and materials encountered a broad response in the world. A high assessment of the forum of Soviet Communists and wishes for the fulfillment of all plans have been expressed from this rostrum. Thank you, dear comrades, for these kind words and for your invariable solidarity with our party and people!

We have embarked on the implementation of large-scale, complex, and multifaceted plans. We are talking about doubling the country's vast economic potential by the end of the century, about qualitative changes in all aspects of Soviet society's life. This presupposes a fundamental renewal of the material and technical base of production on the basis of the acheivements of the scientific and technical revolution. The entire system of the planned management of the economy must be radically improved.

Profound changes will occur in the nature of labor and in the material and spiritual conditions of Soviet people's life. There will be furher improvements in social relations; discipline, responsibility, and order will be strengthened. The struggle against bureaucracy and various antisocial phenomena is being stepped up.

The implementation of the congress decisions demands a substantial exertion of efforts and extensive organizational, ideological, and educational work, because the human factor is the main one here. Ultimately everything depends on people -- on their attitude toward labor, on their conscientiousness, energy, and initiative. This is why the CPSU's policy is aimed at developing Soviet democracy and socialist self-management in every way and creating the best conditions for revealing man's creative potential.

The 27th congress literally roused the country and met with the ardent support of the entire people. The CPSU Central Committee put on the agenda the task of consolidating the atmosphere of creative enthusiasm and bringing the essence and spirit of the congress decisions to every Communist and every Soviet person. And the main thing is to ensure that they are fulfilled. We have not doubt that our party and people will manage to implement what has been planned and to take a major stride in communist building!

Comrades!

The 27th congress program documents reflect the CPSU's determination to continue to steadily expand and deepen cooperation with the fraternal countries' Communist and workers parties and to make every contribution to strengthening their unity. There is no need to mention how great the significance of this unity is in the present-day situation. And it is gratifying that relations between the CPSU and the CPCZ are a lofty example of socialist internationalism.

New and graphic proof of this was provided by the recent Moscow meeting of the two parties' leaders -- Comrades Gorbachev and Husak -- which took place in an atmosphere of cordiality and complete unity of views.

Our countries' interaction now covers all spheres of social life. The volume of economic ties in the 5-year plan period which has just begun is expressed by a colossal figure -- more than R70 billion. We are pooling our efforts in raw materials extraction, the construction of gigantic power industry enterprises, and the building of major transport arteries. Our joint labor is invested in the "Soyuz" gas pipeline, the Jaslovske Bohunice and Dukovany nuclear power stations, and the Prague subway. Czechoslovakia is playing an active part in construction projects on USSR territory -- the construction of the Yamburg gas pipeline, the Krivoy Rog mining and enriching combine, and the Urals gas complex.

No one, however, would be so bold as to say that Soviet-Czechoslovak economic, scientific, and technical ties have reached their limit. On the contrary, we share the belief that major reserves exist for the deepening of cooperation, and primarily its most promising forms -- specialization and production sharing. The tasks facing the Soviet Union, Czechoslovakia, and the entire socialist community today and the acuteness of the competition with capitalism demand a qualitatively new level of integration between the fraternal countries.

There is now a particularly great need for direct ties between industrial enterprises and for the establishment of joint firms and science-and-production associations. The Program for Long-Term Economic, Scientific, and Technical Cooperation Between the USSR and the CSSR for the Period Through the Year 2000 which was adopted last year and the Comprehensive Program for CEMA Countries' Scientific and Technical Progress provide for the pooling of efforts along the most important priority avenues of science and technology. The dynamics of economic and social development depend on this to a decisive extent.

The scientific and technical revolution is significantly changing the face of the modern world. Communists perceive its achievements as an effective means for the material and cultural progress of all peoples. Rockets and computers, earth satellites in space and interplanetary craft -- all these must be used for the benefit of mankind and not as instruments for its destruction.

Quite recently we witnessed a brilliant experiment -- the study of Halley's Comet by spacecraft created and equipped through the efforts of the Soviet Union, Czechoslovakia, and a number of other countries. This is an example of how advanced technological thinking has found and must find a fitting humanitarian application!

As yet, however, there are only isolated examples of this kind. Unfortunately, human reason and vast material resources are being wasted on other things. Aggressive imperialist circles continue to whip up the arms race on earth and have not abandoned their intentions to transfer it into space. It is quite natural that, until an end is put to this, mankind will be unable to feel secure.

The Soviet Union and Czechoslovakia, together with the other fraternal countries, are waging a consistent and persistent struggle for a radical change for the better in the European and international situation. This is the goal pursued by many of our joint peace initiatives, including those put forward at the Prague and Sofia conferences of the Warsaw Pact states' Political Consultative Committee.

An enormous response was generated in the world by the 15 January statement by the general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, which contained a program for the phased liberation of the world from nuclear weapons by the end of this century. These proposals were developed by the 27th CPSU Congress, which formulated the foundations for the creation of an all-embracing system of international security.

This enabled the peoples again -- for the umpteenth time! -- to see for themselves that the terms "socialism" and "peace" are inseparable. On the other hand, life and political practice show who is actually opposed to the cause of disarmament.

Particular mention must be made of the problem of the termination of nuclear tests. It is well known that the Soviet Union, in accordance with the interests and appeals of all peace-loving forces, annouced a unilateral moratorium on nuclear explosions, and for almost 8 months now has not conducted any such explosions. And how did Washington respond to this important action? On 22 March the world reacted with indignation to the challenging militarist actions by the U.S. Administration which, despite numerous appeals by the Soviet Union, other countries, and the broad public in the United States itself, conducted a nuclear weapon test. This is yet further proof that Washington's real goal is not to reduce and eliminate nuclear weapons but, on the contrary, to build them up and to create new and even more destructive varieties.

An indication of this can also be seen in the U.S. Government's attitude toward our proposal to eliminate Soviet and U.S. medium-range missiles in Europe and in its stubborn desire to push through the "star wars" concept and present it as a "defensive alternative" to nuclear weapons. In other words, the U.S. Administration is striving by all means to change to its own advantage the prevailing approximate equilibrium of forces between the USSR and the United States and between the Warsaw Pact and NATO.

It is clear that the socialist states will never agree to this and will not allow their sovereignty, their revolutionary gains, and peace on the continent to be threatened.

Utmost vigilance toward the schemes by the opponents of international cooperation and social progress is required in the complex international situation, when imperialism is not ceasing its attempts to fan existing seats of tension and create new ones.

The Soviet Union will utilize any opportunity to break the trend toward the growth of the military danger. In this noble cause, as before, we will act in close unity with socialist Czechoslovakia and the other faternal countries and will cooperate actively with all progressive and peace-loving forces. Our sympathies and the socialist community countries' solidarity and support will remain on the side of peoples struggling for their freedom and independence.

Our countries' working people deem it their patriotic and international duty to build socialism and uphold the cause of peace. These lofty goals are pursued by the domestic and foreign policies of the CPSU and the CPCZ and of the Soviet Union and the CSSR.

We wish you, dear comrades, and also all Communists and the entire Czechoslovak people, great successes in fulfilling the 17th CPCZ Congress decisions!

We will coninue to strengthen the all-around interaction between our fraternal parties and to deepen the relations of comradeship and friendship between the Soviet and Czechoslovak people!

Long live socialism! Long live peace!

CPCZ CONGRESS CONFIRMS PARTY'S 'CORRECTNESS'

PM031009 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 31 Mar 86 First Edition p 1

[Editorial: "The Great Strength of Socialism"]

[Text] This year is a special year in the life of many socialist countries. It is the year of the ruling Marxist-Leninist parties' congresses, a year marked by great political and labor enthusiasm and increased creative activeness of the broad masses. The Soviet people are working persistently to implement the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress which put forward bold but realistic tasks in accelerating the country's socioeconomic development and strengthening world peace. Its documents and ideas continue to attract profound interest, to exert a beneficial influence on the political atmosphere in fraternal countries, and to inspire Communists and millions of working people to selfless labor for the sake of consolidating the might of socialism and social progress and ensuring lasting peace and peoples' security.

The strength of the fraternal countries' communist and workers' parties lies in their fidelity to Marxism-Leninsim and socialist internationalism, in their ability to learn constantly, to draw on mutual experience, and to solve promptly and creatively the problems raised by life. This has again been convincingly demonstrated by the 17th CPCZ Congress which was held in Prague recently. It summed up the results of the vast amount of work carried out by the party and the people over the past 5 years and during the entire period since the 14th CPCZ Congress and it defined the tasks for the next stage of the building of developed socialism. The congress convincingly confirmed the unquestionable correctness and effectiveness of the political course implemented by the party.

The supreme forum of the Czechoslovak Communists was held in a businesslike, workerlike atmosphere under the banner of the mobilization of the party and the people in an effort to achieve high results in all spheres of economic, social, and cultural building. It was marked by an exacting, demanding approach toward the analysis of the work done and the definition of future plans, by resolve to achieve the set aims, and by confidence that this will be done. This testifies to the political maturity and health of the party and its loyalty to Lenin's behest that it should view its activity critically, boldly implementing increasingly complex tasks, and sumounting shortcomings and difficulties which can arise in the implementation of an innovative task on such a colossal scale as is the creation of the communist civilization.

The latest CPCZ congress took place on the eve of an important event, the 65th anniversary of the CPCZ. It has traveled a long and glorious path. Under its leadership profound socioeconomic changes have been worked in the country. Present-day Czechoslovakia is a country famed for its large-sclae industry, efficient cooperative firming, and developed science and culture. In socialist Czechoslovakia real rights and freedoms and a high level of the people's prosperity are ensured in practice and broad opportunities are provided for the satisfaction of people's spiritual requirements and the development of their creative talents.

Now the republic is to scale new important heights. The 17th congress has approved a program for further socialist building in the CSSR during the Eighth 5-Year Plan and the period through the year 2000. The congress emphasized that the key task is the acceleration of the socioeconomic development of the society and a substantial enhancement of the efficiency of the national economy. The party regards the further improvement of the people's well-being, the strengthening of their social guarantees, and the creation of conditions for the deepening of the socialist way of life as its main task on which it must above all concentrate its efforts.

On the basis of an analysis of the potential and the requirements of the country's development through the end of the century, high aims have been set: National income is to be increased by more than two-thirds over 15 years while the materials- and energy-intensiveness of production is to be substantially reduced. The way to achieve this is to enhance social labor productivity in every way and to swiftly apply the achievements of science and technology in practice.

A reliable guarantee of the implementation of the outlined plans is Czechoslovakia's active collaboration with the fraternal community countries and its participation in the implementation of the Comprehensive Program for Scientific and Technical Progress of CEMA Member-Countries. Economic ties between Czechoslovakia and the Soviet Union are developing dynamically. In the current 5-year plan their volume totals the vast sum of more than R70 billion. However, the potential for the further deepening of cooperation is far from exhausted. The interests of accelerated economic development and life itself suggest the need for expanded international division of labor, specialization, production sharing, the establishment of joint firms and science-and-production associations, and a qualitatively new level of economic integration of the fraternal countries.

The congress noted that the current stage of socialist building demands from party committees and organizations that they constantly improve their leadership of economic and cultural building, quest for new forms and methods of work, and ensure greater efficiency and self-criticism. They are called upon to persistently equip Communists and broad strata of the population with a Marxist-Leninist world outlook and to pay attention to the education of young people.

Together with the other fraternal socialist countries, the CSSR is actively contributing to the struggle for ridding mankind of the threat of nuclear war and for lasting peace. Delegates and representatives of the fraternal parties and of other revolutionary and progressive organizations and movements who attended the congress noted the increased importance of the socialist community countries' peace-loving policy. They expressed full support for the comprehensive Soviet peace and disarmament program put forward by the 27th CPSU Congress, the idea of establishing an all-embracing system of international security, and the plan to eliminate nuclear weapons by the end of this century.

Soviet people value highly the fraternal relations with Czechoslovakia's working people and express the wish that the latter may successfully attain the a new high goals set by the 17th CPCZ Congress and that they may, in single combat formation with the peoples of all the community's fraternal countries, constantly strengthen the might and the positions of world socialism.

The 17th CPCZ Congress marks an important milestone in the life of the fraternal country and our entire community.

[Text] The Austrian national exhibition, Modern Austrian Industrial Equipment, opened in Moscow today. Fred Sinowatz, federal chancellor of Austria, spoke at the opening ceremony. He noted that Austrian-Soviet trade and economic relations are distinguished by a special stability and are not affected by any outside influences.

Comrade Talyzin, first deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers and chairman of the USSR Gosplan, said in his address that multifaceted Soviet-Austrian cooperation, which is based on the firm foundation of the 1955 State Treaty and the law on the permanent neutrality of Austria, is developing fruitfully overall. Comrade Talyzin stressed that the maintenance and strengthening of good-neighborliness with all countries in the world, including the Republic of Austria, is a consistent position of principle for the USSR endorsed by the 27th CPSU Congress.

The many exhibits on show from over 180 Austrian firms are evidence of Austria's considerable achievements in the development of various branches of industry, in science and technology, in transport, and in agriculture.

Report on Gorbachev Talks

LD021741 Moscow TASS in English 1726 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 2 TASS -- The General Secretary of the CPSU Central Committee Mikhail Gorbachev today received in the Kremlin the Federal Chancellor of the Austrian Republic Fred Sinowatz, who is staying in Moscow on the occasion of the opening of an Austrian industrial exhibition.

Mikhail Gorbachev and Fred Sinowatz discussed a wide range of questions in a businesslike and wellwishing atmosphere. Satisfaction was expressed with the successful development of all-round ties -- political, social, cultural -- between the USSR and Austria which base themselves on the 1955 State Treaty and the status of the permanent neutrality of the Austrian Republic. This is a convincing example of fruitful peaceful coexistence of states with different social systems. The attained level of economic cooperation was praised and the striving was expressed to bring this cooperation to a new stage with the aim of its further development along the ascending line, with the use of new forms and with due consideration for the long-term interests of both countries.

In this connection Mikhail Gorbachev outlined the main ideas and plans of the large-scale transformations of the economic mechanism that have been started in the Soviet Union and shared his views on the problems that will have to be solved in the course of the Soviet society's perfection.

A deep exchange of views was held on topical international questions. In the course of the frank conversation Mikhail Gorbachev assessed the situation that has developed after the Geneva summit meeting, the policy of the West in questions of nuclear disarmament and security, and informed Fred Sinowatz of the line which the Soviet state intends to pursue in conditions when the United States Administration, judging by everything, is not inclined to stop the material preparation of war. Mikhail Gorbachev stressed the important role of Austria, to other neutral and non-aligned countries in the efforts to preserve peace and improve international relations. At the present extremely important moment of international development the active position of the public, political parties, including the social democracy, acquires an ever greater

The federal chancellor noted the constructive nature and peaceableness of the Soviet initiatives and expressed hope that a breakthrough will take place at long last at the Soviet-American talks and the hopes generated worldwide by the meeting in Geneva will not be in vain.

The mutual intent to facilitate actively the continuation of the all-European Helsinki process was confirmed.

REPORT ON TALKS BETWEEN ANTONOV, FRG'S BANGEMANN

LD031237 Moscow TASS in English 1111 GMT 3 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 3 TASS -- The 14th session of the intergovernmental Soviet-West German Commission for Economic, Scientific and Technological Cooperation has opened here today. It is chaired by Alexey Antonov, deputy chairman of the Council of Ministers of the USSR. The West German delegation is led by Economics Minister Martin Bangemann.

The participants in the session will review progress in the fulfilment of accords on economic cooperation between the two countries and the functioning of mixed experts groups on engineering, ferrous and non-ferrous metallurgy and consumer goods. In addition, the West German delegation will be supplied with information about Guidelines for the Economic and Social Development of the USSR in 1986-1990 and in the Period to the Year 2000.

It was said at the opening meeting of the session that the development of economic contacts between the USSR and West Germany had a positive effect on the entire complex of relations between the two states. The leaders of the delegations noted in their speeches the readiness of the two sides further to extend business contacts in the economy, science and technology, which met mutual interests.

During the past 10 years, West Germany has been topping the list of the Soviet Union's Western trade partners. Last year trade between the two countries was worth 7.1 billion roubles. The well-known "Gas for Tubes" according is making a major contribution to the development of bilatreal trade" West Germany has got 106 billion cubic metres of Soviet natural gas during 13 years under that agreement.

The Soviet business community believes that the improvement of trade turnover patterns is an important factor of the further expansion of trade and economic cooperation between the USSR and West Germany. To do this it is necessary first and foremost broader to use diverse forms of contacts in addition to trade [sentence as received] These may include, for instance, the joint development, production and marketing of machinery, equipment and other goods, "buy-back" deals, and joint ventures on the markets of third countries. The partners have already accumulated some experience in that field. One-fourth of the Soviet experts of machinery and equipment from West Germany, for instance, is made up of output produced under co-production and "buy-back" deals.

APN COMMENTS ON BERLIN-SDI RELATIONSHIP

LD311655 Hamburg DPA in German 1612 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] Berlin, 31 Mar (DPA) -- The Soviet Union views the inclusion of Berlin in any work connected with SDI as a violation of the four-power agreement. In a commentary carried by APN in Berlin on Easter Monday it says that it is well known that "West Berlin has demilitarized status." And on those grounds alone it can not be included in any work which has the aim of creating weapons. The United States knows that for that reason it has not wanted any "Berlin clauses and formulas" and has only agreed to them after long hesitation.

APN continues, it is "patently obvious" that any work in West Berlin which in the end contributes to the creation of weapons systems which could be used against one of the parties to the agreement is not permitted and could result in complications.

SDI supporters in the FRG tried to justify their actions by saying that West Berlin is allegedly included in the technology agreement and not in the agreement concerning the participation of companies in SDI. However, this is nothing more than an "inappropriate excuse." The technology agreement which was concluded simultaneously and in direct connection with the SDI agreement has to touch on security interests and consequently belongs to those international treaties and agreeements whose validity the FRG could not extend to Berlin, as it says unequivocally in the four-power agreement.

"All evasions," such as firms participating in SDI will deal with the Economics Ministry and not the Defense Ministry, are not relevant in this respect. It remains a fact that West Berlin is to be included in work which was 100 percent part of the security field, "or to put it more exactly, is aimed at undermining security and stability."

GREEK FOREIGN MINISTER VIEWS RELATIONS WITH USSR

PM271509 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 24 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 4

[Article by G. Shakhunyan: "Strengthening Peace and Independence"]

[Excerpts] Athens -- The Greek capital and the cities and villages of Hellas are in festive attire. Lykabettos mountain rising over Athens is also adorned with dark blue and white banners, and it is from its peak that the traditional gun salute early in the morning on 25 March will proclaim the arrival in the country of a glorious Greek holiday -- Independence Day. In the postwar decades, right up to the fall of the military dictatorship's regime in 1974, Soviet-Greek relations were put to considerable test. However, no "cold winds" could chill the feeling of mutual sympathy between our people or their traditional desire for cooperation and friendship.

Precisely this friendship has today become a firm foundation for the development of Soviet-Greek relations, which are an example of how states with different social systems can and must cooperate.

Greece expresses satisfaction with the multifaceted, equal ties between our countries and notes the fruitfulness of meetings between statesmen and parliamentarians, the exchange of delegations between municipalities and city councils, and the development of tourist and sports ties.

"Deep, multifaceted relations have long been established between our countries," K. Papoulias, Greek foreign minister, said in a conversation with our correspondent. "Our political, economic, and cultural relations have taken a great step forward in the last 5 years, since the government of the Panhellenic Socialist Movement has been in power. Developing on a traditional basis, they have become sincere and truly friendly. We have discovered great potential for dynamic, mutually profitable cooperation. Both sides have spoken very clearly in favor of further strengthening our relations. The exchange of visits by the two countries' heads of government that has taken place during these years is evidence of the ongoing development of our political relations. Our relations are based on the common interest of the peoples of the Soviet Union and Greece in strengthening peace, in mutually striving to develop the process of detente and disarmament, and broad international cooperation." "In this connection," the minister said in conclusion, "I would like to stress that the Greek Government has responded positively to the new Soviet proposals aimed at eliminating all types of nuclear weapons by the year 2000, which were set out in M.S. Gorbachev's statement of 15 January, and that it supports as a whole the new Soviet peace initiatives put forward during the work of the 27th CPSU Congress."

TURKISH REFUSAL OF MORE NUCLEAR ARMS VIEWED

PM020811 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 28 Mar 86 First Edition p 5

[Dispatch by own correspondent A. Stepanov: "Turkey's Position"]

[Text] Ankara, 27 Mar -- At the recent session of the NATO Nuclear Planning Group in the West German city of Wuerzburg, the Turkish representative stated that his country does not intend to assume additional nuclear commitments within the framework of this military bloc.

As is well known, the Honest John missiles now on Turkish territory are being replaced with Lance missiles with a far larger radius and a plant for the production of modern F-16 fighter bombers is being constructed with U.S. aid. At the same time, talks are under way on Turkey's acquisition of Tornado combat aircraft of joint European production.

In Wuerzburg the United States and the FRG tried to get Turkey to agree to equip the Lance missiles with nuclear warheads. The NATO strategists also want to provide nuclear weapons for the aircraft which will be at the service of the Turkish Air Force. However, the newspaper CUMHURIYET writes, citing the Turkish Foreign Ministry, that at the Nuclear Planning Group session, Ankara refused U.S. and NATO demands, stressing that those conditions contradict Turkey's national interests and would cause serious damage to its relations with neighboring countries, primarily the Soviet Union.

TASS VIEWS U.S. MOTIVES BEHIND ANTONOV TRIAL

LD022333 Moscow TASS in English 2236 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 2 TASS -- By TASS political news analyst Aleksey Grigoryev.

So, at last Bulgarian citizen Sergey Antonov could leave for home. So, a totally innocent man, who had spent more than three years under arrest, was acquitted by an Italian court of law. So, there was no "Bulgarian connection" of any kind in Rome's St. Peter Square. Q.E.D.

Buy why, properly speaking, did it take so long to prove that evident and irrefutable fact? Why did Italian justice in the person of investigating Judge Ilario Martella and prosecutor Antonio Marini disregarded the testimony provided by 57 witnesses from eight countries who did not give the court a single clue against Sergey Antonov and two of his compatriots, but instead kept listening intently, as if spellbound to the delirious speeches of Turkish neofascist Agca who gave the court 123 false accounts and even personally admitted 56 of them to be false? And finally, why did prosecutor Marini use a casuistical formula "acquitted for lack of evidence" with respect to Bulgarian nationals Sergey Antonov, Todor Ayvazov and Zhelyo Vasilev?

There is only one answer to this and many other questions concerning the Rome trial. Imperialism, primarily U.S. imperialism, that announced the Soviet Union to be an "evil empire" and equated communism with terrorism, was desperately in need of such a trial. A pistol, not a knife, was put into the hands of "Gray Wolf" Agca and as soon as the pontiff's blood dropped to the stones of St. Peter Square a feverish search for a suitable candidate for the role of a "communist organizer of the attempted murder" began. Any other citizens of Bulgaria, not necessarily Antonov, Ayvazov and Vasilev, or nationals of some other socialist country for that matter could well have fallen victim to that conspiracy engineered by CIA agents, like Paul Henze, who pass themselves off as journalists, or journalists, like Claire Sterling, who are payrolled by the CIA.

For the motives behind the provocation were as follows: The United States will do everything within its capabilities to uncover the communist conspiracy to murder Pope John Paul II.. This is what U.S. President Ronald Reagan said at the Conseravtive Political Action Conference in Washington at the end of 1982.

Indeed, the United States did everything within its capabilities. There can be no slightest doubt about Bulgaria's participation in the attempt on the life of the pontiff, U.S. Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger used to say. There is enough evidence to conclude that Bulgarians, and hence the Soviets, were involved in the assassination attempt, former U.S. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger said in his turn. A campaign in Italy to call public attention to Bulgaria's participation in the attempted murder of Pope John Paul II is a possibility and a promising undertaking, Maxwell Rabb, U.S. ambassador in Rome, informed the U.S. Department of State in August 1982.

As if following a command (and properly speaking, following a command, indeed) the "free", "independent", "pluralistic" Western press, and not only the tabloids but serious papers and magazines catering to intellectuals as well, started a real uproar -- the objective was to "pillory communism." And for this end elementary norms of journalistic ethics were trampled upon, all logic was forgotten and facts were replaced with insinuations and claumny.

Popular wisdom has it that any and every comparison is imperfect. And still there is no escaping a parallel between the Rome farce of a trial of three Bulgarians in 1983-1986 and the Leipzig trial of Georgy Dimitrov and his compatriots back in 1933. The Nazi charged the communists with setting the Reichstag building on fire, and the charges rested on the ravings of a moronic agent provocateur Van der Luebbe, the present-day suppressors of progress charged citizens of a socialist country with staging an attempt in the life of the pontiff, and the charges were founded on the ravings of a murderer and agent provocateur Agca.

Both in Leipzing and in Rome the objective was the same, as were the methods. The provocations were a flop both in Leipzing and Rome with persons in the dock and in the judges' seats changing places in the end.

The "Antonov case" collapsed, despite all the efforts of its initiators to the contrary. The CIA went into a huge record of crimes that shall sooner or later provide material for judgement.

Still, there is one more conclusion from the anti-communist farce of a trial in Rome. Western propaganda experts put themselves out to show how human rights are upheld in their "free world." Well, they are indeed upheld. Like the hanged man's body by a rope.

MEMOIRS OF FORMER U.S. ENVOY TO FRANCE VIEWED

PM271026 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 25 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 5

[Own correspondent Yu. Kovalenko "Pertinent Remarks": "Let Us Imagine Ourselves in the NATO Bunker..."]

The Stock Publishing House in Paris has just published a work by Evan Galbraith, who was U.S. ambassador here from 1981 through 1985 and has recently left France. It is a kind of "fusion" of memoirs, admonitions, and political science fiction or rather figments of imagination.

The former ambassador begins by stating his diplomatic creed: "Detente is dangerous... If the U.S. forces were to leave West Europe it would be captured by the Soviets." Following which Mr Galbraith abandons himself with great pleasure to reminiscing about how, while serving as ambassador, he interfered in France's internal affairs, which resulted in his being called to order on four occasions by the Ministry of External Relations. The first time was when he declared that French Communists are supposedly "tools" in Moscow's hands: "I disliked the very idea that they had joined the government." The former diplomat describes in detail how Washington pressured Paris in an attempt to ensure that French firms abandon their participation in the construction of the Siberia-West Europe gas pipeline, and how he tried to muffle French indignation in connection with the U.S. aggression in Grenada and support for the "contras" in Nicaragua.

He lectures, he offers advice: France will pull itself out of crisis only if it is governed according to transatlantic formulas -- complete freedom for dismissals, the cutback of expenditure for social needs, the reduction of taxes on large fortunes, and so on. And the main point is alignment with Washington: France and the United States, Galbraith insists, "must maintain solidarity in the face of the ruthless common enemy -- the Russians."

E. Galbraith's favorite hobbyhorse is, without any doubt, the "Strategic Defense Initiative" (SDI). In the final chapter, entitled "Prospects," the "hard-hitting envoy" paints in broad strokes the future of France which, in 20 years' time, must -- in his words -- become "the bulwark of European defense," while West Europe either develops [razrabotat] its own SDI and acquires an ABM shield or -- even better -- buys it from the Americans.

But Galbraith has decided to share his innermost thoughts with his readers in appendices to the book's main text. Let us imagine ourselves in the year 2000, not just anywhere, but in...the bunker of the NATO Supreme Allied Commander Europe, where strategists are preparing to repulse a Red attack. This is the time when SDI comes in handy! The United States and West Europe are totally invulnerable, the Russians are powerless, and they retreat. The year 2000 is the start of the decline of the Soviets, the transatlantic Cassandra prophesies (how many such disgraced prophets have we already seen!). The West hardens its stance, declares a military and naval blockade of Cuba, Castro capitulates. And all this thanks to SDI.... The former ambassador's neoglobalist visions are intertwined with imperial fantasies.

Having read the book, I telephoned the U.S. Embassy and was told that this work has been published only in France, with a U.S. edition planned for "later." "If you have any questions to ask Mr Galbraith," I was advised by the embassy, "call him in New York." Following the completion of his diplomatic mission, he became one of the directors of the Morgan Stanley Investment Bank. I was given the telephone number. I did not bother to call. In actual fact, I had no questions to ask, everything was evident anyhow.

There is just one puzzling aspect: In offering the book, the publishing house informs readers in a note that "Galbraith loves France very much...." How is it possible to evaluate as a demonstration of "love" the former ambassador's revelations about how, following Washington's instructions for 4 years, he interfered in France's internal affairs and did everything to force Paris to follow the lead of the United States?

REPORTAGE, COMMENT ON SHIM'ON PERES' U.S. VISIT

Seeking U.S. 'Hand-Outs'

LD021417 Moscow TASS in English 1400 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow, April 2 TASS -- Follows commentary by TASS writer Grigory Vasilyev:

Israeli Prime Minister Shim'on Peres, who is currently on a working visit in the USA, has held talks with U.S. Vice President George Bush, U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz and other high-ranking U.S. Administration officials. As the Israeli prime minister said, the talks covered, in particular, some "new ideas as regards a revival of the peaceful settlement process."

There is no doubt that whatever these "new ideas" may be, they are being discussed in the old context of the policy of separate deals, which Washington and Tel Aviv have long tried to force on the Arab countries. The scenario remains the same -- it is the intention to split the Arab countries and draw them in direct negotiations with the Israeli aggressors in conditions of the continuing occupation of the Arab lands, to bar the Palestine Liberation Organization from the settlement process and supplant it by such figures, who actually do not represent anybody.

Obviously, the point at issue at the talks is a further strengthening of the American-Israeli strategic alliance militarily and economically. It is not accidental that one of the main aims of the Israeli emissary is to get from the USA new dollar hand-outs to prop up the staggering economy of Israel, which is going through a severe crisis as a result of its militarization, of aggressive sorties and expansionism vis-a-vis the Arab neighbours. In the conditions when Washington and Tel Aviv are flouting the norms of international law and are continuing their crude armed interference in the affairs of sovereign Arab states, as was recently in Libya and as has been happening for a long time in Lebanon, the "new" American-Israeli ideas can be only new steps on the way of aggression and expansionism taken by the partners in the criminal anti-Arab alliance.

'Foisting Capitulatory Deals'

LD020837 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 0606 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Text] Washington, 2 Apr (TASS) -- TASS correspondent Igor Borisenko reports:

Shim'on Peres, the prime minister of Israel, who is in the U.S. capital on a working visit, has had talks here with the U.S. Vice President George Bush, Secretary of State George Shultz, and other representatives of the administration.

At a press conference organized after these meetings, the Israeli prime minister extolled the piratical actions of the 6th Fleet against sovereign Libya as "a timely, responsible, reasonable, and necessary action". It is revealing that Peres repeated Washington's "arguments" practically word for word about some sort of "terrorist threat" from Libya to justify U.S. interventionist policies in the Mediterranean. Libya is not the only country against which the weight of the "strategic axis" of Washington-Tel Aviv is directed. Prime minister of Israel also made thinly veiled threats toward Syria.

As was apparent from his words, they are hoping in both Washington and Tel Aviv that the current economic difficulties being experienced by the Arab oil-producing countries in connection with the sharp fall of oil prices on the world market will have a "certain effect" on the political situation in the region. Peres stated that, during his talks with representatives of the Washington administration, "some new ideas on regenerating the process toward a peaceful settlement" were discussed. In other words, the United States and Israel are not abandoning their hopes of foisting capitulatory deals on the Arab countries with which Washington intends to strengthen its strategic position in the Near East.

BUSH'S MIDEAST TRIP SHOWS U.S. 'NEOGLOBALISM'

LD030922 Moscow TASS in English 0850 GMT 3 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow, April 2 TASS -- By TASS commentator Georgiy Kuvaldin:

U.S. Vice-President George Bush is to leave Washington tomorrow on a tour of several Middle East countries. The trip is scheduled to take him to Saudi Arabia, Oman, Bahrain and the Yemen Arab Republic.

It should be noted that the Washington emissary sets out on another voyage right after a series of provocations and a direct armed intervention in the affairs of the Libyan Jamahiriya staged by the U.S. Administration within the framework of its anti-Libyan campaign of an unprecedented scale.

Washington's aggressive action caused an angry reaction and was widely condemned in the Arab world. It is indicative that even so-called moderate Arab countries stated at a high level their solidarity with Libya.

U.S. actions were assessed as a direct threat to the entire Arab East, primarily to those forces which are unwilling to follow the U.S. course obediently, which resist aggressive American and Israeli scheming in the region and consistently work toward a just settlement in the Middle East.

There is no doubt that the attempt to bring psychological pressure to bear on the Arabs, to justify the act of overt aggression and prepare public opinion in Arab countries for new possible armed attacks is one of the main purposes of the trip and the talks to be held by the high-ranking U.S. emissary.

It is also clear that the present tour falls within the framework of Washington's notorious doctrine of "neoglobalism" which enables it to declare regions situated thousands of kilometers away from American territory to be a "sphere of vital interests" of the United States. This doctrine which underlines the U.S. foreign policy, including its policy in the Middle East, is at a basic variance with the cause of peace and security of nations.

POLYAKOV MEETS SYRIAN, PLO OFFICIALS IN DAMASCUS

Talks With Syria's Al-Asad

LD031128 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1030 GMT 3 Apr 86

[Text] President al-Asad of Syria received Polyakov, member of the Collegium of the USSR Ministry of Foreign Affairs and head of the Near Eastern Countries Department of the USSR Ministry of Foreign Affairs, who is in Damascus. Greetings from Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, were conveyed to the Syrian head of state.

During the conversation, the situation in the Near East and questions of mutual interest were discussed. Hafiz al-Asad expressed satisfaction with the relations of cooperation between the USSR and Syria and confirmed his country's steadfast adherence to the principled policy of opposition to the plans of imperialism and Zionism. [Damascus Domestic Service at 1115 GMT on 2 April in a similar report adds: "Vice President 'Abd al-Halim Khaddam received Polyakov earlier, at 0930 today, in the presence of the USSR ambassador. This discussion dealt with the situation in the region and matters of mutual concern."]

Meets Syrian Ministers

LD020917 Moscow TASS in English 0822 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Text] Damascus, April 2 TASS -- Vladimir Polyakov, member of the Collegium of the USSR Foreign Ministry and head of the department of the Middle East countries of the USSR Foreign ministry, who is currently on a visit here, has met with Fraq al-Shar', Syrian minister of foreign affairs, and 'Islam al-Na'ib, minister of state for foreign affairs of Syria.

In the course of the meetings, which proceeded in an atmoshpere of friendship and cooperation characteristic of the relations between the two countries, issues pertaining to the international situation were discussed. In an exchange of views on the Middle East situation, the sides reaffirmed the need for holding an international conference on Middle East settlement with the participation of all sides concerned and of the USSR and the USA.

Meets Palestinian Leaders

JN021255 Paris Radio Monte Carlo in Arabic 1200 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Louis Faris dispatch from Damascus]

[Excerpt] President Hafiz al-Asad today received Vladimir Polyakov, chief of the Near Eastern countries department in the USSR Ministry of Foreign Affairs, with USSR Ambassador Fedotov attending. Vice President Khaddam received the Soviet official earlier today and discussed with him issues of joint concern. Polyakov also held talks yesterday with Foreign Minister Faruq al-Shar'.

Polyakov and his delegation met with Mayif Hawatimah, secretary general of the Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine [DFLP], and his assistant Salih Ra'fat. DFLP sources said that the meeting dealt with PLO internal affiars, Middle East issues, and the future developments in light of Israeli threats. The Soviet official stressed the Soviet position on the need to restore PLO unity as soon as possible and noted Moscow's readiness to contribute toward restoring Palestinian national unity. He stressed Arab solidarity on the basis of the Fes summit plan and on convening an international conference on the Middle East that would ensure the PLO's right of independent and equal representation with other sides.

ALGERIA'S BENDJEDID SPEAKS AT KREMLIN DINNER 26 MARCH

[TASS report on speech delivered by Algerian President Chadli Bendjedid at 26 March Kremlin dinner in his honor under general heading. "In a Friendly Atmosphere"]

[Text] Comrade general secretary!

Allow me first of all to express profound thanks for the friendly words you addressed to the Algerian people and me personally. I want to thank you sincerely for the warm reception rendered to me and the delegation accompanying me.

In connection with the fact that my visit to your hospitable capital is taking place directly after the completion of the 27th CPSU Congress, I want to take the opportunity to convey to you on behalf of the National Liberation Front [FLN] party and its leadership ardent congratulations on the successful completion of the work of your party forum of such importance.

The fact that I am among you today is evidence of the vitality of the friendship linking our peoples and of the respect which Algerians feel for your political leadership.

We want this visit to be an outstanding milestone in the development of multifaceted cooperation between our countries and to help to lend new impetus to this cooperation in order to raise it to an even higher level in accordance with our peoples' aspirations.

At the same time I would like to note that our meeting provides a good opportunity for the broad exchange of opinions and assessments on the basis of the goals and principles to which each of our countries adheres on international problems in the present complex international situation.

Regular summit meetings between Algeria and the Soviet Union fully attest to the high level and firmness of the harmonious relations existing between our countries to their mutual satisfaction. They are an expression of the will of both countries to seek persistently and consistently, on the basis of the common elements in our history and political activity, to expand mutual fruitful dialogue and cooperation.

Algerian-Soviet relations are indeed marked by a spirit of friendship and mutual understanding. They are based on political trust and are characterized by the positive dynamics of economic and scientific-technicalities.

Firm businesslike contacts have been established between our parties and governments and regular consultations are held in the constructive spirit inherent in Algerian-Soviet relations as a whole.

The numerous successes we have achieved in the practical implementation of the goals and projects of cooperation between our countries are evidence of the effectiveness of the existing mechanism of our bilateral ties.

A role of great importance on this plane is played by personal contacts and cultural exchange, which strengthen the basis of mutual understanding existing between us and open up new horizons before us. In this connection it is also apposite to express our satisfaction at the assistance which your great country is rendering to Algeria's efforts in the field of cadres training.

While expressing satisfaction at the nature and volume of Algerian-Soviet cooperation, we believe at the same time that not all reserves here have yet been used and not all opportunities have been exhausted. That is why we must continue to expand this cooperation and seek to ensure that it complies with our countries' economic potential and development rates.

We are seeking to improve our cooperation with a consideration for the friendly nature of Algerian-Soviet relations with a view to implementing our development plans and protecting them from the adverse influence of the situation which has formed in present international economic relations.

I emphasize that under conditions when negative tendencies are increasingly dominant in international relations, it is essential to improve our cooperation qualitatively, seeking new successes.

The development of present-day international relations as a whole, both political and economic, causes us profound concern. A highly dangerous situation has now formed on earth as a result of political and economic instability.

At the same time we can see that the problems of peace and development, whose solution is a very important task of our time, are being consigned to the background.

The present profound crisis of international relations is thus having a pernicious effect on the conditions of the existence of the peoples, whose right of life, security, progress, and independent national development is being flouted and jeopardized.

The arms race is undermining man's security still further and depriving him of valuable resources essential for ensuring universal properity. The maintenance of tension and the aggravation of conflicts in various parts of the world contradicts the peoples' desire for peace and prosperity. The conservation of hotbeds of imperialist and racial domination shows most obviously the degree of abnormality of the situation existing in the international community and attests to the deepening of the breach in development conditions.

All this leads to the point where the specter of famine is reappearing in various parts of the world at the very time when man's genius is taming nature and opening the way to plenty. The encroachment on states' independence and sovereignty is destabilizing the international situation, undermining the efforts in the field of national building, and contradicting the principle of each people's free choice of their political, economic, and social system.

In this complex international situation, which can only improve if the efforts of those who spare no effort to rid mankind of the differences which are tearing it apart prevail, Algeria sees its duty in promoting a positive change in the present nature of international relations is seeking the establishment of peace and security and the triumph of freedom and justice.

In pursuing a policy of genuine nonalignment, Algeria is fulfilling the undertakings it has assumed in the Nonaligned Movement, remaining loyal to the principles tempered in the crucible of the national liberation war.

The completion of the process of the elimination of colonialism, the establishment of a new international economic order, the safeguarding of collective security on a world scale, the assertion of the principles of peaceful settlement of conflicts, the elimination of tension -- those are the foundations on which Algeria's activity in the international arena rests.

I am pleased to note the coincidence of our two countries' desire to achieve these goals. I also want to express Algeria's high assessment of the positive initiative which the Soviet Union has put forward in the vitally important field of disarmament, where your country has great responsibility.

The Nonaligned Movement, which is seeking to make a substantial contribution to the quest for a genuine solution to international problems, will use all its political and moral weight at its forthcoming forums to return to concord and the normalization of the international climate by confirming the goals and principles on which rests the prestige of this movement among the community of nations.

In this connection Algeria is most concerned by the present events in the Mediterranean. The use of methods of violence and aggression has acquired new scope in this region.

As yesterday in Tunisia, so today in Libya the Arab nation is being subjected to threats and aggression.

Algeria denounces the aggression prepetrated against Libya. It is in solidarity with the fraternal Libyan people at this their hour of difficulty.

The lesson which should be drawn from the present events is obviously that the Mediterranean must become a zone of peace and cooperation. Algeria has always made efforts to achieve this goal, and the present alarming development of events merely strengthens it is this aspiration.

The Third World peoples are carrying the unbearable burden of the world's economic crisis and tension.

At the same time hotbeds of tension and crises also exist in the Southern Hemisphere where they have arisen as a result of ignoring the principles of the United Nations and pursuing a policy of force and diktat.

In our region the conflicts in the West Sahara, which has continued for more than 10 years, is undermining the sacred principle of the poeples' right to self-determination and independence and is preventing the ensuring of peaceful conditions essential for building a unified Greater Maghred. In solidarity with the West Saharan people's lawful struggle, Algeria is sparing no effort to achieve a political settlement in this region in accordance with the peace plan elaborated by the OAU and approved by the United Nations and the Nonaligned Movement.

On the other hand, Africa, whose will in the matter of definitive liberation and entry into the era of progress and development is expressed by the OAU, is being subjected to natural disasters such as drought and the encroachment of the desert and is countering the Pretoria regim's aggressive actions. In the struggle it is waging on various fronts, Africa hopes for increasingly effective solidarity from those members of the international community whose main concern is the dignity of man and the peoples and who advocate the elimination of the regime of racial discrimination and the attainment of Namibia's independence and the safeguarding of security and stability in the southern part of the continent.

By virtue of its natural assocation to Africa and to the Arab world, Algeria lives by the problems of these two regions and proceeds from the close interconnection of their struggle. We know the obstacles which the liberation process is encountering in the Near East and in southern Africa as a result of the aggressive nature of the racist and expansionist regimes which are imperialism's ally and bulwark.

The Palestinian people have suffered countless casualties in the long struggle for their self-determination and against the aggression of Zionism, which denies its rights.

The fraternal Arab countries have frequently been subjected to aggressive attacks, whose consequences persist to our day. One flagrant example is the tragedy of Lebanon.

The Near East, which has become a region of constant tension, is in a state of crisis, fraught with a threat to international peace and security. To settle this crisis it is necessary to convene an international conference with the full participation of the PLO, which is the sole representative of the Palestinian people fully empowered to discuss their fate.

Under the present complex conditions of the struggle to establish lasting, just peace in the Near East, it is essential to unite the ranks of the Palestinian resistance and rally all Arab countries around it. It is to implement this aim that Algeria is acting with every conviction.

The war now being waged between Iran and Iraq has brought untold losses at a time when it is so essential to pool all efforts for the sake of the Palestinian people's sacred cause. This war is against nature when you consider the spiritual ties uniting the fraternal peoples of neighboring countries -- Iran and Iraq. It is essential for reason to prevail as rapidly as possible and for these countires to definitively renounce resorting to force to resolve their disputes and to seek a future based on good-neighborliness and cooperation, guided by everything which unites them.

Comrade general secretary! Dear friends!

I am very glad of the opportunity to hold talks with you on questions of bilateral relations and topical international problems, and I am convinced that they will have a beneficial effect on the expansion of Algerian-Soviet cooperation and the consolidation of ties of friendship and mutual understanding between our countries and peoples.

Expressing profound thanks for the cordial reception and attention, C. Bendjedid proposed a toast to the development and expansion of friendship and cooperation between the Algerian and Soviet peoples, to the health of Comrade M.S. Gorbachev, the health of the members of the eminent Soviet political leadership, the progress and flowering of the Soviet people, and the health of all friends present here!

DEPARTURE CEREMONY HELD FOR ALGERIA'S BENDJEDID

PM011036 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 29 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 1

[TASS report: "Visit Over"]

[Text] Chadli Bendjedid, president of Algeria and general secretary of the National Liberation Front, and his wife left Moscow on 28 March. He had been paying an official friendly visit to our country at the invitation of the CPSU Central Committee, the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium, and the Soviet Government.

Before the departure a farewell ceremony was held in the Great Kremlin Palace's Georgiyevskiy Hall.

M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, and his wife bade farewell to the Algerian leader and his wife.

Taking part in the farewell ceremony were A.A. Gromyko, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and chairman of the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium, and his wife; E.A. Shevardnadze, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and USSR foreign minister, and his wife; S.L. Sokolov, candidate member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and USSR defense minister; and A.F. Dobrynin, secretary of the CPSU Central Committee.

From the Kremlin the motorcade accompanied by an honorary escort of motorcycles set off for Vnukovo Airport. The streets and squares along the motorcade route were decorated with the Algerian and Soviet state flags and banners bearing greetings.

At the airport C. Bendjedid and his wife were seen off by A.A. Gromyko and his wife, E.A. Shevardnaze and his wife, S.L. Sokolov, N. V. Talyzin, and A.F. Dobrynin.

Taking part in the sendoff were R.-B.I Songayla, deputy chairman of the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium; V.S. Murakhovskiy, first deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers; T.N. Menteshashvili, secretary of the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium; T.B. Guzhenko, V.A. Kinkov, Ye.A. Kozlovskiy, and G.A. Yagodin, USSR ministers; K.F. Kutushev, chairman of the State Committee for Foreign Economic Relations; S.A. Losev, general director of TASS; V.T. Saykin, chairman of Moscow Gorispolkom; K.N. Brutents, deputy chief of the CPSU Central Committee International Department; L.F. Ilichev, USSR deputy foreign minister; V.N. Taratuta, USSR ambassador to Algeria; and other officials.

The sendoff party included A. Allahoum, Algerian ambassador to the USSR, the heads of the diplomatic missions of a number of countries accredited in the USSR, and Algerian students attending VUZes in the capital.

The guests was also seen off by representatives of Moscow working people.

At the airport the Algerian and USSR state flags were raised, an honor guard was mounted from the three branches of the USSR Armed Forces -- the Ground Forces, the Air Force, and the Navy -- and a band played the two states' national anthems.

A.A. Gromyko and C. Bendjedid reviewed the Soviet servicement.

The solemn farewell ceremony ended with a march past by the honor guard.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON VISIT OF SAMORA MACHEL

More on 31 March Kremlin Talks

PM021351 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 2 Apr 86 First Edition pp 1-2

[TASS report: "Soviet-Mozambique Talks in the Kremlin"]

[Text] Soviet-Mozambican talks were held in the Kremlin 31 March. Taking part were:

On the Soviet side -- A.A. Gromyko, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and chairman of the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium; E.A. Shevardnadze; S.L. Sokolov, candidate member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and USSR defense minister; A.F. Dobrynin, secretary of the CPSU Central Committee; B.I. Aristov, K.F. Kuatushev, and other officials;

On the Mozambican side -- S. Machel, chairman of the Mozambique Liberation Front [Frelimo] party and president of the People's Republic of Mozambique; J. Chissano, M. Machungo, A. (Pangene), S. Vieira, A. Branco, J. dos Santos, and other Mozambican officials.

In the course of the talks, which took place in a friendly atmosphere, the Soviet leaders briefed the high-ranking Mozambican guest on the main avenues of CPSU economic and social policy approved by the 27th party congress. It was noted that the Soviet people are fully determined to implement a comprehensive program of action based on the CPSU's strategic course, approved by the congress, of accelerating the country's socioeconomic development.

The Mozambican side's attention was drawn to the CPSU's international activity in the conditions of the world situation, which has been sharply exacerbated through the fault of the militarist circles of imperialism. It was stressed that the struggle against the nuclear danger and the arms race and for the preservation and strengthening of universal peace is the pivot of the foreign policy of the CPSU and the Soviet state.

The historic significance of the Soviet nuclear disarmament program put forward in the 15 January 1986 statement by M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, was noted. The implementation of this program would make it possible to halt the arms race on earth and stop it from spreading into outer space and to redirect considerable resources toward development needs and the elimination of hunger, illitercy, poverty, and disease in the liberated countries. It was noted that the Soviet nuclear disarmament program is a key element in the all-embracing system of international security, the idea for which was put forward by the 27th CPSU Congress. The fundamentals of this system cover all spheres of international relations -- military, political, economic, and humanitarian.

S. Machel reaffirmed Mozambique's support for the Soviet Union's foreign policy initiatives, whose implementation would make it possible to radically improve the situation in the world. He stated that this support applies above all and in full measures to the Soviet nuclear disarmament program set forth in the CPSU Central Committee general secretary's statement and to the creation of an all-embracing system of international security.

At the present stage the Soviet Union regards the need to seek an immediate end to nuclear weapons tests as a matter of paramount importance.

The Mozambican side welcomed the Soviet Union's decision to refrain from carrying out nuclear explosions after 31 March of this year unless the United States carries out such explosions. It also expressed approval of the Soviet proposals to hold a Soviet-American summit meeting in Europe in the near future so as to reach agreement on ending nuclear tests.

It was stated that the Soviet Union values Mozambique's contribution to the struggle against imperialism and racism and to the cause of ensuring universal peace and international security.

In the course of the discussion of the main international problems, the identity or similarity of the positions of the Soviet Union and Mozambique was reaffirmed.

The sides expressed serious concern about the acute conflict situations in various parts of the world, which are used by imperialist circles to whip up tension and increase the danger of war and to interfere in the internal affairs of sovereign states. The USSR and Mozambique call for the political settlement of conflicts and disputes between states on a just footing, without outside interference.

In the course of the talks the sides again declared their solidarity with the people of Libya and sharply condemned the aggressive U.S. actions against that sovereign African country.

During the examination of the situation in southern Africa it was stressed that the responsibility for the crisis situation that has developed there rests above all with the Pretoria regime. By means of aggression and subversive actions, it is trying to impose its will on the neighboring African countries and maintain the illegal occupation of Namibia, and it seeks to save the racist apartheid system from collapse by pursuing bloody terror and repressions against the majority of the South African population.

It was noted that the policy of complicity and "appeasement" of South Africa pursued by Western countries, above all the United States, encourages the racists to engage in new acts of aggression against independent African states and bloody new repression against those who fight against apartheid. The puppet bandit groupings made up of mercenaires and traitors have become the tool of the racists and imperialists. The Soviet side declared its unswerving solidarity with Mozambique and Angola, the victims of aggression from the forces of imperialism and racism that seek to make those independent countries abandon their chosen path of development.

The participants in the talks came out in support of the world public's demand for sanctions against South Africa in accordance with Chapter VII of the UN Charter.

The sides expressed solidarity with the courageous liberation struggle of the African National Congress (ANC) and the South-West African People's Organization (SWAPO), and supported the course of the "Frontline" States toward strengthening their unity an cohesion. The urgency of a political settlement in Namibia was noted. The sole internationally recognized basis for such a settlement is the relevant UN decisions in their totality, including UN Security Council Resolution 435.

In the course of the talks the important role of the Nonaligned Movement as an influential force in the international arena was noted. The sides attach importance to its contribution to the struggle against imperialism and colonialism and for the preservation and strengthening of universal peace and the development of political and economic cooperation between peoples on the basis of equality and justice.

The two sides supported holding concrete, businesslike talks within the UN framework with the participation of all states, with a view to the global solution of the most important economic problems. Such talks must be aimed at establishing a new international economic order, eliminating economic backwardness, and settling foreign debts.

There was a high assessment of the activity of the OAU. For the African countries, this organization is an important instrument in the struggle against imperialism and for the total liberation of the continent and the solution of its acute socioeconomic and political problems.

Bilateral Soviet-Mozambican relations were discussed. The sides expressed satisfaction with the level of friendly cooperation achieved between the CPSU and Frelimo and between the Soviet Union and Mozambique and reaffirmed their determination to continue to develop bilateral ties on the basis of the Treaty on Friendship and Cooperation Between the USSR and Mozambique. The Soviet side stated that it will continue to give Frelimo and the Mozambican people assistance and support in their efforts to implement a program of socioeconomic transformation and to strengthen the country's independence and defense capability.

In conclusion, the useful and fruitful nature of the talks was noted. The two sides expressed the mutual conviction that meetings between the leaders of the Soviet Union and Mozambique are a significant contribution to the strengthening of relations of friendship between our two countries.

More on Machel Dinner Speech

PM030925 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 2 April 86 First Edition p 2

[TASS report on speech delivered by S.M. Machel, chairman of Frelimo and president of Mozambique, at the 31 March Kremlin dinner in his honor, under the general headline "In a Friendly Atmosphere"]

[Text] Dear comrades and friends!

Lasting fraternal relations are developing between Frelimo and the CPSU, relations based on the principles of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism that determine the harmoniousness of relations between our countries and states. That is why today, 31 March, we mark with great joy the ninth anniversary of the Treaty on Friendship and Cooperation that unites our countries.

In the most diverse spheres of our country's life we receive material, scientific, and technical assistance and support from our Soviet comrades. This includes such spheres as defense and security, geological research, industrial construction, agriculture, fisheries, ship repairs, education, and health care. This support is also important in providing the people with agricultural produce and supplying them with consumer goods, as well as in providing free aid to the victims of natural disasters.

Solidarity from the USSR means the work of Soviet people who encounter difficulties on Mozambique's soil and make sacrifices in the name of support for our people's efforts to defend the fatherland and in the struggle for further successes in building socialism.

Our visit to the Soviet Union is a friendly, working visit. In a fraternal atmosphere, we are to sum up the results of more than 10 years of cooperation between the People's Republic of Mozambique and the USSR.

We see the prospects and future of our relations, which are the guarantee of our development and are based on mutual interests. They promote the implementation of our common ideals in the struggle for peace and socialism.

Our visit is taking place at a noteworthy moment soon after the 27th CPSU Congress. Our party watched with great attention the preparations for and progress of the congress. We took part in the congress' work. We all felt the atmosphere of renewal and hope, the spirit of revolutionary enthusiasm and determination, which promote confident progress along the path mapped out toward the new century, the new millenium in mankind's history. The 27th congress enhanced still further the prestige of the cause of socialism in the world. Its decisions reflect the deepest aspirations of the Soviet people and all mankind in the struggle for peace, progress, and socialism.

The re-election of our esteemed friend Mikhail Gorbachev to the post of general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee confirms your party's determination to support a man who represents the interests of Soviet Communists and thereby ensures the dynamism of your party's ideological efforts and revolutionary actions in the modern era.

The Mozambican people greeted with joy the successful results of the congress and Comrade Gorbachev's re-election. The struggle for peace is indisputably the main concern of all citizens of our planet.

For us Mozambicans, who 21 years ago became victims of unceasing aggressive actions by imperialism, peace is the dream that we would like to turn into reality. Peace and a peaceful life are urgently necessary for us to be able to channel our energy and efforts into the economic, social, and cultural development of our country and into overcoming poverty, hunger, and illiteracy.

The apartheid regime is the basic cause of the violence and the threat of war in southern Africa. Apartheid is a manifestation of imperialism's fascist, militarist policy in our region.

The colonization of Namibia, the occupation of a section of Angolan territory, armed banditry against Mozambique, and support for the puppet groupings in Angola are the external continuation of the apartheid regime's terrorist policy against the South African people.

Certain Western circles that continue to advocate the nonviolent resolution of conflicts in our region are doing little in practice to destroy apartheid -- the cause of the violence. Equal responsibility is often imputed to aggressors and victims.

The independence of Namibia, which should be free like the other former German colonies, was linked in the early sixties to problems that have nothing to do with the attainment of that goal. Those same circles that are opposed to sanctions against South Africa do nothing when its ruling regime in effect imposes sanctions against Mozambique and other neighboring countries.

War and the threat of war also ravage other parts of the world, such as Central America, the Near East, North Africa, the Horn of Africa, and Asia.

The people of the earth demand an end to the threat of mankind's destruction. They refuse to live with the threat of nuclear war, the threat of the use of weapons of mass destruction. All mankind demands an end to the arms race. It demands that outer space and the ocean depths be used for development and not for military purposes, which will lead to nothing less than the destruction of our planet.

Frelimo, the Mozambique Government, and our people consider the continuation of the USSR-U.S. dialogue that began in Geneva to be important to the relaxation of international tension. In this context we welcome the constructive proposals put forward by the Soviet Union. We highly value the Soviet Union's recent decision not to carry out nuclear explosions after 31 March if the United States adopts the same position.

The time has come for scientific and technical achievements and resources to serve progress, not death and destruction. Like the whole world, we want the entire scientific, technical, and financial potential and all material resources to be used exclusively with a view to improving people's lives, educating children, providing people with food, clothing, and shelter, and satisfying their needs, both material and spiritual.

We have come here to strengthen the foundations that form the past and present of our relations. We have come here to deepen and develop our multifaceted cooperation. Our parties have already defined the basic political guidelines. Our governments must promote their attainment.

In conclusion, S.M. Machel wished good health to M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, and his wife; A.A. Gromyko, chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers, and his wife; and all those present and proposed a toast to the constant strengthening of the friendship and fraternal solidarity between Frelimo and the CPSU, to the deepening of cooperation between the two states, to peace and cooperation between nations, and to success for the Soviet people.

BRIEFS

AID FOR SUDAN -- Khartoum, 27 Mar (TASS) -- An Aeroflot plan flew into Khartoum today with a load of food, medical supplies and essential items earmarked for the population of this African country stricken by cruel drought and hunger. Al-Jazuli Daf'allah, chairman of the Sudan's Council of Ministers, expressed gratitude to the Soviet people on behalf of the government for the assistance provided. This humane act, he said, testifies to the strength of the ties linking the peoples of the two countries. [Text] [Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 2030 GMT 27 Mar 86 LD]

MORE ON U.S. REJECTION OF TEST MORATORIUM

PRAVDA Editorial

PM031618 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 4 Apr 86 First Edition p 1

[Editorial: "There Is No Time To Lose"]

[Text] Peace has been maintained in Europe for more than 4 decades. This is to socialism's inestimable credit and is the common success of other peace-loving states and all forces of reason.

It should, however, be clearly seen that a threat to the cause of peace persists. Despite all the USSR's efforts, there is virtually no positive progress at the talks on such a cardinal question of war and peace as the curbing of the arms race and the reudction of nuclear arsenals. A major step is needed to overcome the deadlock at the talks. It is the Soviet leadership's conviction that the ending of nuclear tests, above all by the Soviet Union and the United States, but also by all other nuclear powers, could be such a step. The CPSU and the Soviet state attach paramount significance to solving this task.

Ending nuclear tests means paving the most real way to halting the arms race, for without such tests it is impossible either to improve or the create [sozdavat] new types of nuclear weapons. The ending of tests would open up the possibility of overcoming the deadlock in the whole nuclear disarmament process. The tremendous political and moral significance of such a move can hardly be overestimated.

The Soviet Union advanced an initiative of exceptional importance in 1985: As of the 40th anniversary of the tragedy of Hiroshima and Nagasaki, it announced a moratorium on all nuclear explosions. How difficult it was to take that step can be seen, for example, from the fact that we took it unilaterally and under conditions of continuing tension in the international arena. But the leadership of the CPSU and the Soviet state displayed the political will and took that step because it was confident that that decision would be supported by the Soviet people, who sincerely strive for peace. We also knew that the USSR's actions would be supported by other peoples because they accord with their most vital interests.

And, indeed, the Soviet country's good initiative met with understanding and approval everywhere. Very broad sections of the world's population regarded the Soviet leadership's step as irrefutable confirmation that the USSR has no intention other than to put an end to the policy of nuclear confrontation. In the well-known statement of 15 January this year, the Soviet Union advanced a specific, realistic program to eliminate nuclear weapons from the planet. The USSR extended its unilateral moratorium on all nuclear explosions to 31 March this year.

What is more, it was announced that the USSR would not carry out nuclear explosions even after 31 March, if the United States did likewise. Our country urged the United States to follow its example so as to make the moratorium permanent and eternal.

Washington's reply is well known. Ignoring the will of the overwhelming majority of mankind and even disregarding the position of broad sections of the American people, the U.S. Administration hurriedly carried out a nuclear explosion in Nevada. These actions can only be viewed as a demonstrative challenge to the world community. The U.S. ruling circles have shown once again that they value above all else the self-seeking interests of military-industrial magnates who are making fantastic profits out of the arms race unleashed by them. Certain U.S. circles absolutely refuse to realize that strong-arm methods do not work in our age and, in terms of a country such as the USSR, are simply absurd.

With regard to the arguments of those opposed to ending nuclear testing, they are far-fetched and do not stand up to criticism. No contrivances can disguise the fact that the American militarists need these tests simply to modernize their existing nuclear weapons and create [sozdaniye] new ones, including for use in space.

In this situation the Soviet Union has once again convincingly demonstrated its desire to alter the course of events for the better. Speaking on television 29 March, the Soviet leader stated his willingness to meet with the U.S. President in the immediate future to urgently discuss one question only -- the question of nuclear tests. The great positive response which this speech has aroused in all corners of the earth once again confirms that world public opinion regards the USSR's actions as fully corresponding to the peoples' aspirations.

The worth of statements on the readiness to eliminate nuclear weapons which have been made more than once by the White House is now being determined not in words but in practice. If Washington really has such a desire, then now is the very time to prove it by acting. The Soviet Union hopes that the President, his closest associates, and Congress will once again consider our proposal.

As yet, unfortunately, all that is coming out of Washington are reports on the preparation of a new nuclear explosion at the Nevada test range. Does this mean that the U.S. Administration intends to spurn the chance given to it once again by the Soviet Union? The question also arises of how one is to treat those statements made by the head of the U.S. Administration at the Geneva summit meeting? Does Washington understand that by its present actions it is taking upon itself the entire responsibility for the future course of events?

If matters continue to move in the same direction the Soviet Union will be forced to resume tests, because it cannot waive either its own security or the security of its allies.

In a situation where the world is at the stage of crucial decisions, the policy of the CPSU and the Soviet state is particularly clearly perceived by all mankind. "We," M.S. Gorbachev said, "will not abandon our course aimed at preserving and strengthening peace, a course very clearly reaffirmed by the 27th CPSU Congress. Fulfilling the will of its people, the Soviet state will continue to increase its efforts to ensure universal security. We will do this by interacting with all countries and their peoples."

The Soviet Union is filled with determination to continue its persistent, painstaking work to implement its integrated program to prevent a thermonuclear catastrophe and create a safe world. And we know that in this noble cause the peoples of the world will be with us.

LD032302 East Berlin Voice of GDR Domestic Service in German 1605 GMT 3 Apr 86

[Interview with Nikolay Shishlin, head of advisory group to CPSU Central Committee Secretariat by Klaus-Juergan Fischer, Voice of GDR Moscow correspondent; Shishlin speaks in Russian with superimposed German translation -- recorded]

[Text] Mikhail Gorbachev stressed in his interview with the Algerian magazine REVOLUTION AFRICAINE, published today, that the Soviet Union is maintaining its proposal that the USSR and the United States should immediately introduce a joint moratorium on all nuclear tests.

The offer to meet the U.S. President as soon as possible in Rome, London, or another European capital to negotiate these questions also remains in effect. In his talk yesterday with the Austrian Chancellor Fred Sinowatz, Mikhail Gorbachev suggested the possible choice of Vienna as the scene of the special summit. Our Moscow correspondent Klaus-Juergen Fischer had a talk in this connection with the head of the advisory group to the CPSU Central Committee Secretariat, Nikolay Shishlin:

[Fischer] What are the reasons for the proposal to U.S. President Reagan to meet as soon as possible to negotiate the question of a nuclear weapon test moratorium?

[Shishlin] The main task is tc achieve a change toward trust. This change toward trust cannot be achieved through words but only through deeds. A deed which could easily be effective and at the same time would carry weight would be to stop all nuclear weapon tests. Both through international control measures and through the own national means of the United States and USSR, the maintenance of the moratorium could be verified with a 100 percent guarantee. The significance of such a step for the international climate can hardly be exaggerated. We could enter a completely new dimension with room for maneuvering toward further construction solutions.

[Fischer] Mikhail Gorbachev said at the 27th CPSU Congress that there are circles in the United States that want to make the Soviet Union close the door to negotiations. Would you include the intransigent U.S. attitude on the moratorium question and the demonstrative explosion of a further nuclear charge in March in such attempts?

[Shishlin] You are absolutely right. It is true that the United States would like to create the conditions in various directions under which it would be simply too complicated to achieve sensible compromises because the movement to a sensible compromise can only be bilateral. But I believe that it is worth also mentioning that the Soviet Union has strong nerves, and the strategic line of the Soviet Union to strengthen peace, and to ensure international security is not a fluctuating one but a long-term policy. I do not believe that the Soviet Union will lack self-control, patience, persistence, or goodwill to overcome this cold wind that blows today from Washington.

[Fischer] But will the Soviet Union now slam the door if there is another explosion of a nuclear charge in the United States, despite all the international protests?

[Shishlin] No. The Soviet Union will, of course, keep open the door for negotiations, for dialogue with the United States. I am convinced that there are in the United States political circles that are even further right than the President, even if it is difficult to be further right than Reagan. These circles want the continuation of the nuclear tests in the United States to be the shove that leads to the dialogue between the the USSR and the United States being interrupted for a long time. It seems to me, however, that objectively not only the USSR, but the United States is also interested in continuing the Soviet-American dialogue. I therefore believe that the U.S. nuclear tests and the position now adopted by the administration are not Washington's last word.

[Fischer] The Soviet Union has made it clear that it will have to resume its nuclear tests if the United States, despite all the protests throughout the world, explodes another nuclear charge.

[Shishlin] Well, if the United States continues its series of nuclear tests, the USSR will have no alternative but to resume its tests. What is important however, is above all that the Soviet Union has made its choice for a complete stop to all nuclear tests in the world. We will continue to stick to that.

The resumption of nuclear tests would not mean that this problem would then be pushed to one side. No, the Soviet Union will always return to this problem, because without solving this problem the improvement of the political climate in the world is unthinkable.

[Fischer] In the United States there have been attempts to insinuate that the Soviet Union wanted to replace the visit by Mikhail Gorbachev to the United States agreed on in Geneva with its proposal for a special summit on the question of the nuclear test moratorium in Europe. What can one say about that?

[Shishlin] As far as the Soviet-American summit in the United States is concerned, this question remains open. The Soviet Union is interested in this meeting, but the Soviet Union is of the opinion that it must not be a cosmetic meeting, not a meeting to resume acquaintance, but a meeting to discuss the fundamental problems connected with international security. So, much will now depend on how the U.S. position on the content of this meeting develops. Such a meeting is necessary.

Sukhin Cites Gorbachev

LD031645 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 1552 GMT 3 Apr 86

["Concern Over the State of Soviet-U.S. Relations," -- TASS headline]

[Excerpt] Moscow, 3 Apr (TASS) -- The answers of Mikhail Gorbachev CPSU Central Committee General Secretary to the Algerian weekly REVOLUTION AFRICAINE were published today. I would like to draw your attention to some evaluations of the international situation contained in this interview at this meeting, Valeriy Sukhin, deputy chief of the USSR Ministry of Foreign Affairs Press Department said. He spoke today in the press center of the USSR Ministry of Foreign Affairs at a briefing for Soviet and foreign journalists.

The USSR Ministry of Foreign Affairs representative in particular focused attention on Mikhail Gorbachev's words to the effect that the conclusion between the Soviet Union and the United States of an agreement on the cessation of nuclear explosions would have an enormous real significance because it would be a barrier to perfecting nuclear weapons and to creating new forms of them.

Although we immediately heard a negative statement in response to the new address by the Soviet leader to the President of the United States, we nevertheless hope that both the President and his immediate circles and the Congress will still consider this proposal.

Hundreds of states and peoples live in the world and want a better life. The leaders of the USSR and the United States bear the responsibility for preserving and strengthening peace not only for their own, but also for all other peoples, Valery Sukhin stressed.

U.S. Breaks Word

LD032253 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1700 GMT 3 Apr 86

[Talk by APN political observer Gennadiy Gerasimov; from the "Vremya" newscast]

[Text] Hello, comrades. As you know, the treaty on banning nuclear weapons tests on the ground, under water, and in space was signed by the United States.

The treaty was concluded in Moscow in 1963 and its participants expressed the determination, and I quote: to strive to achieve for all time the halting of all nuclear weapon test explosions and to continue talks for this purpose. That was the promise. Yet again the United States gave its word in 1969 when it signed the treaty on the nonproliferation of nuclear weapons, which reaffirms the promise of 1963.

The value of the word given by the United States and of how much it is worth is in question. One could continue this parade of promises up to the present day. Recently the head of the U.S. delegation at the Geneva disarmament conference reiterated ritually: For the United States a ban on tests remains a goal that is due to be achieved at the appropriate time, but he did not specify the time. Twenty-three years have elapsed since the first promise, and 17 years have passed since the second. Moreover, these promises should be regarded as legal commitments. When will this appropriate time be? Is it not receding to infinity?

The White House statement on Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev's television speech of 29 March opens with a complaint about the difficulty of verification. But we also are in favor of verification. However, the fact is that from the technical viewpoint, monitoring and verification have ceased to be a problem.

Recently a work was brought out on this subject, prepared by a staff member of the Stockholm International Peace Problems Research Institute. The book is entitled "Verification: How Much is Enough?" [by Allan S. Krass] It tells of the quite superlative technical facilities for detection and monitoring, and draws the conclusion that the main obstacle is a political one -- that is, the absence of the desire and will, which is aggravated by psychological obstacles. It says that to get out of this impasse it is necessary to cooperate for the achievement of some common goal. As the book says, this inverse relationship and this interrelationship shows that disarmament and trust go hand in hand.

Indeed, we have invited the United States to cooperate in overcoming the evil logic of the armaments race, as Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev said in his replies to the Algerian journal REVOLUTION AFRICAINE. We invite the United States to follow our example and to make the moratorium on tests everlasting.

But it seems that the Pentagon has a timetable for explosions. There are 16 scheduled for this year; let the world be indignant, let legal commitments be broken -- explosions are more important for the United States.

Administration 'Forced To Maneuver'

LD031815 Moscow TASS in English 1742 GMT 3 Apr 86

[Text] Washington April 3 TASS -- TASS correspondent Nikolay Turkatenko reports: Is it possible to reach such a limit of cynicism as to claim that continuing nuclear arms testing... strengthens international security and even prevents a proliferation of nuclear weapons? It turns out that it is possible. It is precisely such claims that are contained in a letter published here of Frank Guffney, U.S. deputy assistant secretary of defence, addressed to Edward Markey, member of the U.S. House of Representatives. The congressman turned to the Pentagon for explanations of the administration's stand on the issue of a general and complete ban on nuclear arms testing.

This problem is now in the foreground of political life in the USA as a result of the initiative of the Soviet Union, which has introduced a unilateral moratorium on all nuclear explosions. Broad U.S. public circles have come out in support of the Soviet proposal and demanded that the U.S. Administration follow the USSR's example. Under the pressure of such sentiments the U.S. House of Representative has recently adopted a resolution urging the While House to open talks immediately with the aim of concluding a treaty of a general and complete prohibition of nuclear arms testing.

Considering these sentiments, the U.S. Administration, which is building up the arms race for the benefit of the military-industrial complex, is forced to manoeuvre. Its representatives claim that they are in general for such a treaty, yet not now, but some time in the future -- the more distant future the better. This theme is echoed in the above-mentioned letter from the representative of the Pentagon. It is the long-term aim of the United States, the letter said, to conclude a treaty on general and complete prohibition of nuclear arms testing. After paying lip service to that lofty aim, the author of the letter returns to its Pantagon positions. So far, it said, nuclear testing is necessary, since its termination would allegedly lead to a swift build up of nuclear weapons by the nuclear powers in order to "make sure that these weapons are efficient. [no closing quotation mark as received]

One cannot help being amazed by such a distorted logic of the high-ranking officials of the U.S. Administration, which is using sordid methods in order to confuse public and carry on nuclear testing at all costs and at an even higher rate. Thus, right after the underground blast of a nuclear device in a Nevade test range on March 23, the White House was in a hurry to announce a forthcoming new nuclear blast. As American experts and the press admit, this testing is connected above all with the feverish build up of its arsenals of the latest nuclear weapons by the USA and the "star wars" programme. It is not accidental that the draft military budget of the USA for the 1987 fiscal year provides for a 24 per cent increase, as compared with the current year, in appropriation on research to create new nuclear arms systems alone. This, as the BULLETIN OF ATOMIC SCIENTISTS points out, makes the growth of spending on these aims very swift. On top of that, as the "TIME" weekly says, big additional sums are granted to the Pentagon under "covert articles." Such covert appropriations on research, development and purchase of secret weapons increased from 892 million dollars in 1981 to 8.6 billion dollars planned for next fiscal year, the journal stresses.

Adelman Remarks Criticized

[TASS report: "K. Adelman Statement"]

[Text] Washington, 29 Mar -- Despite the world public's persistent damands to Washington to accede to the USSR's unilateral moratorium on all nuclear explosions the Reagan administration intends to continue nuclear tests. This was confirmed in an interview given to AP by K. Adelman, director of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency [ACDA].

"By means of nuclear tests we should guarantee the maximum reliability of nuclear weapons," he stated. It is common knowledge that the theme of verifying the "reliability" of the U.S. nuclear potential is a propaganda ploy used to camouflage Washington's unwillingness to end nuclear explosions.

According to the U.S. press, this position taken by the administration is connected primarily with plans to modernize and build up the nuclear arsenals and also with the "star wars" program. During the interview, Adelman hinted that the tests at the Nevada range are aimed specifically at creating [sozdaniye] new types of nuclear warheads.

The U.S. ACDA director again put forward absurd fabrications about alleged "violations" by the Soviet Union of treaties signed by it in the arms limitation sphere. However, Adelman's own comments show who has actually chosen the path of violating and undermining the joint Soviet-U.S. accords in this sphere. For example, the administration representative bluntly stated that Washington is considering the question of expanding its nuclear submarine fleet in such a way as to exceed the limitations imposed by the SALT II treaty on the number of strategic missiles with multiple warheads.

'Restraint' Not Infinite

PM040848 Moscow NOVYE VREMYA in Russian No. 12, 21 Mar 86 pp 12-13

[Article by Lev Semeyko, deputy chairman of the Soviet Peace Defense Committee Disarmament Commission: "USSR-United States: Mutual Examples Are Needed"]

[Excerpts] Now that a real possibility of ending the madness of the arms race is being opened up, new tasks are facing not only governments but also the peoples' movement for peace: They must define their position, elaborate forms and consistency of actions, and begin to act. The peace champions' unity of purpose also gives rise to a common approach to achieving it. This is the chief thing. Of course, owing to the complexity of the problems of war and peace and the multifarious compostion of the movement of peace-loving forces, its members have different viewpoints on how the disarmament process should proceed. But one difference here is of a fundamental nature.

Many peace champions in the West believe that it is necessary to begin with the USSR's unilateral disarmament. Why? Because they sincerely hope that the United States will without fail follow the Soviet example, and then the way to general and complete disarmament will be clear. Moreover, representatives of certain antiwar organizations have repeatedly assured us that, if the Washington administration and NATO do not immediately meet the USSR halfway, then the fighters for peace will make them do so by their mass actions.

On 15 January 1986, guided by the desire to take one more practical step in the context of the program to rid the planet of nuclear weapons by the beginning of the next millennium, the USSR extended its unilateral moratorium on all nuclear explosions by 3 months. This moratorium would continue in force if Washington followed it. However, U.S. Defense Secretary C. Weinberger at once declared that the Soviet proposal for a moratorium on nuclear explosions was unacceptable to the American side. Moreover, in its reply to the new Soviet initiative as a whole Washington in fact displayed a negative attitude to the very idea of eliminating nuclear weapons.

Only Together

An example from recent history is significant in this connection -- the U.S. Administration's attitude toward the Soviet-American joint statement on agreed principles of disarmament talks (1961). Soon after President Nixon entered the White House in 1969, the USSR proposed resuming the talks on general and complete disarmament on the basis of the statement.

But the U.S. President refused. Recalling that period, the well-known U.S. scientist and public figure C. Price says that, astounded at that refusal, he turned for an explanation to F. Ikle, then director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency. "I was even more astounded," Price points out, "When Doctor Ikle, that product of the military-industrial complex, told me I was naive: We never intended to take the agreed statement seriously. It was simply propaganda to counter Russian propaganda!" Not satisfied with that reply, Price tried to get an explanation from W. Foster, who headed the agency at the time the joint statement was drawn up. This is what he replied: "Jack Kennedy and I were sincere in our support for the aims of the statement that was being drawn up," but after the USSR agreed to those aims, "our most difficult negotiations were not with the Russians but with the Pentagon."

The present situation must not repeat that described by Price. The Soviet-American joint statement in Geneva last November must not be regarded as a new model of a U.S. propaganda concession. The American public and sober-minded circles in Washington still have to deal a serious rebuff to the U.S. forces (and they are the same forces as 15 years ago) which oppose the practical realization of the provisions of the Geneva statement and the concept set forth once again at the 27th CPSU Congress of curtailing the nuclear arms race, eliminating nuclear arms, and preventing the militarization of space.

The Soviet Union cannot endlessly display unilateral restraint, particularly with regard to nuclear tests. If the United States and its allies continue to totally ignore examples of our country's love of peace and, moreover, respond to them by stepping up the arms race, the Soviet Union will be faced with the need to take countermeasures to ensure its security and that of its allies.

It is still not too late to avoid a new twise to the arms race spiral. At the same time, the antiwar movements do not have so much time left at their disposal to change the present situation with the help of such vigorous mass actions as forced the United States in the recent past to abandon its planned deployment of neutron bombs in Western Europe.

Chervov on Test Ban

LD021830 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1700 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Interview with Colonel General Nikolay Fedorovich Chervov, directorate chief of the USSR Armed Forces General Staff, by unidentified correspondent, date and place not given; live or recorded -- from the "Vremya" newscast]

[Text] [Correspondent] Nikolay Fedorovich, as we know, a routine nuclear blast was carried out in Nevada on 22 March. The press have reported that new tests are being prepared. That is, it is clear that the U.S. Administration is refusing to cease nuclear tests. At the same time Washington declares that the United States has allegedly fallen behind the USSR in this sphere and, therefore, must continue its tests. What can you say about this?

[Chervov] Such statements by the leaders of the U.S. Administration do not accord with reality. Facts show that the United States has carried out more nuclear blasts than all the world's nuclear powers put together. Compared with the USSR, the United States has carried out approximately one-third more nuclear blasts. And the United States has carried out more nuclear blasts in each individual environment -- in the atmosphere, under the ground, and under water.

If one looks at the situation over the past 2 years, the picture here is thus: In 1984, the United States and the USSR carried out approximately equal numbers of tests of nuclear weapons; in 1985, the United States carried out 18 nuclear blasts while the USSR, before the introduction of the moratorium, that is, before 6 August, carried out only 9 nuclear blasts, and 2 of these were for peaceful aims -- thus, virtually only half the number. These are the statistics. As you can see, there can be no question of any falling behind by the United States in this sphere. On the contrary, during the time that the moratorium has been in operation, the gap in favor of the United States has increased even further. Therefore, those who say that the United States has allegedly fallen behind the USSR would in fact like to secure this position for the United States in which they should and would have the opportunity to continue nuclear tests, to create new types of nuclear weapons, to build up nuclear arsenals, and thus initiate a nuclear arms race. The real reason for the unwillingness of the U.S. Administration to renounce nuclear blasts lies in its wish to destroy the military balance in its own favor. It is preciaely toward this that the program of creating [sozdaniye] nuclear charges for various purposes for space-strike weapons according to the"star wars" plan and also the programs for creating [sozdaniye] and deploying new strategic armaments -- in particular the ballistic missiles MX, Trident II, and Midgetman -- are aimed. There are simply no other reasons. Such is the truth.

[Correspondent] Thank you.

ESTIMATES OF SOVIET TESTS CONTAIN 'FALSE DATA'

LD040542 Moscow in English to North America 2200 GMT 3 Apr 86

[Text] THE NEW YORK TIMES reported on Wednesday that the CIA had changed its estimates of the yield of Soviet nuclear explosions on which the alleged violations of the 1974 threshold test ban treaty had been long based. Our observer Vladislav Kozyakov comments:

It's not for the first time that the American allegations against the Soviet Union with regard to observance of arms control treaties appear to be absolutely groundless. The USSR strictly observes all obligations taken. This fully applies to the two treaties on nuclear blasts which were signed by the leaders of the USSR and the United States in the mid-seventies and which were never ratified by the United States.

Here is what Roger Batzel, director of the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory in California said in a written testimony to Congress: Based on our assessment of the relationship between yield and seismetic magnitude for the Soviet test site and the pattern of Soviet testing, we have concluded that the Soviets appear to be observing a yield limit. Roger Batzel said. Now the CIA itself is compelled to admit that it's previous estimates of the yield of Soviet explosions were too high. This means that the accusations against the USSR were based on false data.

It's not difficult to understand what were the reasons for spreading the anti-Soviet allegations which were completely groundless. By doing so, the American policymakers have been blocking for a decade the ratification by the United States of the treaties on the limitation of nuclear explosions signed in 1974 and 1976. In fact, there is no problem whatsoever regarding the strict control of a nuclear test ban as far as the Soviet Union is concerned. The USSR is open to control.

The Soviet Union has not held a nuclear explosion, either military or peaceful, since last 6 August when it declared a unilateral moratorium on all nuclear explosions and asked the United States to join it in a total test ban. The moratorium expired on 31 March, but the Soviet Union will refrain from conducting tests if the United States does the same.

In case a Soviet-American test ban agreement is concluded, all methods of verification will be used to ensure a most reliable control. The USSR is prepared to accept any control procedure, including on-site inspection. The only thing needed now to solve the issue is Washington's readiness to meet Moscow halfway so as to make jointly the first and very important step toward nuclear disarmament.

U.S. RESPONSE TO SOVIET INITIATIVE EXAMINED

PM031324 Moscow KOMSOMOLSKAYA PRAVDA in Russian 29 Mar 86 p 1

[Article by Chief Marshal of Artillery V. Tolubko: "Command of the Times"]

[Text] More than 2 months ago, on 15 January 1986, our country put forward a program of universal security through disarmament. The 27th CPSU Congress defined the struggle to implement that program as the central direction of the USSR foreign policy. The heart of the Soviet program, as the message from M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, to UN Secretary General J. Perez de Cuellar states, is the plan for the stage-by-stage elimination of nuclear weapons with a ban on space strike arms. All the world's peoples greeted the Soviet proposals with optimism.

As was pointed out at the 27th CPSU Congress, in the American message "positive statements are submerged in various kinds of provisos, 'linkages,' and 'conditions' which in fact block the resolution of fundamental questions of disarmament."

It is known that individual responsible representatives of the U.S. Administration make various references in the mass media to allegedly vague aspects of individual sections of the Soviet statement. It has even been candidly stated that the United States cannot stop developing SDI.

It is becoming obvious that the USSR's humane course is countered by a fundamentally different U.S. course based on a desire to turn space into a military bridgehead from which it would be possible to achieve supremacy and dictate American will to all mankind by using space strike weapons. The Pentagon's allegation that the USSR long ago developed [razrabotat] space weapons and has them in orbit is far from the truth. At the present time neither the USSR nor the United States has weapons in space. A dangerous stage for mankind could come about if strike means are put into space to hit targets in space or on the earth from space, or if means are established on earth to hit space targets. It is this that would signify the start of a space arms race.

The Soviet leadership adopted a decision to extend by 3 months the unilateral moratorium on all nuclear explosions and, after the expiry of that time, until the first nuclear explosion in the United States. By that humane act our party and government gave the American side extra time to realistically assess the situation which had taken shape in the world. But the United States, ignoring the will of the peoples, threw down an insolent challenge to mankind and conducted a nuclear explosion in Nevada.

Reports are coming from the United States, from Washington, that the U.S. Administration is allocating more and more funds to arms. In 1986, spending on the SDI program is increasing 80 percent, and the programs to create MX and Midgetman missiles, Trident submarines, and B-1 bombers are in full swing. [People on the other side of the ocean are now speaking increasingly frequently is to be guided in its foreign policy.] What kind of concept is this? It is none other than the granting of rights to the U.S. Administration to interfere on a global scale in the affairs of other sovereign states. To put it more simply -- to conduct overt and covert subversive operations against governments not to U.S. liking, to prepare and carry out undeclared wars against such states, and to implement a policy of state terrorism. The whole purport of "globalism" consists in achieving world supremacy on the basis of militant anti-Sovietism and struggle against states pursuing a policy not to U.S. liking. The latest example of this policy is the undisguised U.S. aggression against sovereign Libya. It is time to realize at last that the times are different now and that the sovereign rights of peoples and states, of medium and small countries cannot be disregarded. The opinion of states and peoples cannot be ignored now. At the 40th UN General Assembly Session, 151 states voted for a resolution calling for the arms race in space to be prevented. The United States abstained from voting for that resolution.

The Soviet Union has proposed to the world's countries and peoples that they enter the 3d millennium without nuclear arms and without "star wars." We also consider it a perfectly realistic task to get rid of all chemical weapons completely in this century. To ban the development and creation of weapons based on new physical principles. It is a question of weapons which have never been used before -- beam, radio wave, subsonic, and genetic weapons. Peace can be preserved, but space can be used only for peaceful purposes. This is the demand of the times, and there is no other alternative. Over to the U.S. Administration.

WHITE HOUSE SEEKING ASAT TEST BAN REPEAL

PM031313 Moscow SOTSIALISTICHESKAYA INDUSTRIYA in Russian 30 Mar 86 p 3

[TASS report: "White House Demand"]

[Text] Washington, 29 Mar -- Displaying utter reluctance to make real progress in the arms limitation sphere, the White House has demanded of Congress the "speediest lifting" of the ban on tests of ASAT antisatellite weapons. This demand is contained in a special statement published by the White House. The lifting of the ban, it states, "will enable us to bring the ASAT program up to operational readiness."

As is known, under the decision adopted by Congress last year, the Pentagon is prohibited from testing antisatellite weapons against real targets in space. That decision, approved on the initiative of sober-minded legislators under pressure from American and world public demands, was adopted with a view to helping to prevent the militarization of space and promoting progress at the arms control talks. Moreover, literally the other day the influential Congressmen L. Aspin and G. Brown called on the Untited States to end the ASAT program altogether. Right from the start the stand taken by Congress was given a hostile reception by the White House and the Pentagon, which, as confirmed once again by this statement, would like to have unlimited freedom of action to realize their very dangerous plans, including plans for the militarization of space. According to expert assessments, the ASAT pogram is of "value" to the Washington administration, in particular, because it is in essence one of the key elements of the "Stragegic Defense Initiative" which the United States is now developing at an accelerated pace.

PRAVDA REPORTS CEMA COMMITTEE DELIBERATIONS, AGREEMENTS

PM031448 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 29 Mar 86 First Edition p 4

[TASS report: "CEMA Committee Session"]

[Text] A regular session of the CEMA Committee for Scientific and Technical Cooperation was held in Moscow 26-27 March. Representatives of Bulgaria, Hungary, the SRV, the GDR, the Republic of Cuba, Mongolia, Poland, Romania, the USSR, the CSSR, and also the SFRY participated in it.

The committee concentrated its attention on questions connected with implementing the Comprehensive Program of the CEMA Countries' Scientific and Technical Progress Through the Year 2000, on improving the committee's activity, and on implementing the resolutions of the 41st (Extraordinary) Sitting of the CEMA Session and the CEMA Executive Committee's corresponding decisions and outlines specific measures to fulfill them.

It was pointed out that in the last 5-year plan scientific and technical cooperation embraced important new spheres of physical production and drew into its sphere a large number of new scientific research organization and scientists and specialists of the CEMA countries.

Devoting great attention to promoting the accelerated development of science and technology in the SRV, Cuba, and Mongolia, the committee examined the progress in implementing the agreements, programs, and plans for the development of science and technology in those countries for the period through 1990.

The committee examined the general detailed program of the CEMA countries' cooperation for 1986-1990 in the sphere of conserving and imporving the environment and the associated retional utilization of natural resources.

General agreements were signed on multilateral cooperation in the sphere of new materials and techniques for producing and processing them and in the sphere of biotechnology.

The session took place in an atmosphere of friendship, mutual understanding, and constructive comradely cooperation.

COMMENTARY ON U.S. UN BUDGET, PAYMENTS

Perez de Cuellar Cited

PM031327 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 26 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 5

[TASS report: "United Nations"]

[Text] New York, 25 Mar -- UN Secretary General Perez de Cuellar has stated that the nonpayment by a number of UN member-states, including the United States, of their annual fees to that major international organization's budget may have political consequences. What is actually involved, he said, is those countries' attitude toward the UN Charter. Speaking to members of San Diego City's Foreign Relations Council, the UN secretary general stressed that the U.S. debt to the United Nations had already reached $80 million.

U.S. at 'War'

LD032307 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1900 GMT 3 Apr 86

[Vladimir Beloshapko commentary]

[Text] The Reagan administration arbitrarily has ceased paying fees, which are due from the United States, for the work of the United Nations center on Transnational Corporations [TNC]. This has been reported by Peter Hansen, the center's director. Vladimir Beloshapko is at the microphone;

As is known, the present U.S. Administration is continually talking about some noble mission of the TNC in the developing world; about the fact that they are all but the only carriers of scientific knowledge, advanced technology, and finance and are allegedly ready to share them generously with the states of Asia, Africa, and Latin America.

Studies being carried out by the UN center on TNC's completely demolish such claims. They prove that the Western, and most of all U.S., corporations are in reality parasitizing on the labor and natural resources of the states which have become free. But no one likes to be caught lying in this way. That is why Washington's boycott of the UN center on TNC's was not unexpected.

The question is a different one: How far can the impatience of the U.S. ruling circles be taken by their intolerance of the slightest manifestations of dissidence, be it in world politics or economics; by their haughty unwillingness to take into account the interests of other countries, if only in some way. The sanctions against the UN center for TNC's are by no means an exception. In response to the UNESCO criticism of the U.S. aggressive militarist course, Washington left this organization.

It refused to take into account the opinion of the International Court of Justice in The Hague when Nicaragua's complaint was examined there.

U.S. diplomacy also is not favoring individual members of the international community. To what, for instance, does their recent decision to reduce staffing levels of the UN missions of the Soviet Union and a number of other states amount? Among the developing countries -- and this was said openly -- only those states that vote at the United Nations together with Washington can count on a benevolent attitude and more importantly on U.S. aid.

Thus, comrades, the U.S. Administration's boycott of the UN center on TNC's is only an episode from the war it has declared against the United Nations organizations. But, as one can imagine, the prestige and the international authority of the United States itself will become the first victim in this war.

ZHOLKVER COMMENTS ON GORBACHEV INTERVIEW

LD031726 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1500 GMT 3 Apr 86

[Political observer Aleksandr Zholkver commentary]

[Text] Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev's replies to the Algerian journal REVOLUTION AFRICAINE have found a wide response not only in Algeria itself, but also far beyond its borders. The reason for this is that the problems touched on are so acute and so important. What is at stake is nothing more nor less than the prevention of nuclear war, which is a threat to the very existence of the human race.

As long ago as the beginning of this year -- which has been proclaimed International Year of Peace -- our country proposed a complete program for how the world might be made safer and how to rid the world of nuclear weapons, prevent an arms race in space, and seriously cut back conventional armaments. Talks on these questions are in progress; but as yet, they have made practically no headway. Moreover, no sooner do we take a step to meet the U.S. position than the United States takes a step back. Meanwhile, Washington is pressing ahead with the implementation of its hastily developed doctrine of neoglobalism -- from actions against Libya, Afghanistan, and Nicaragua to the new nuclear blasts in Nevada.

Faced with such a situation, what is one to do -- slam the door? It is not impossible that some of those who wish us no good are goading us to do just that. But to do so would be, at best, irresponsible; and, guided precisely by the sense of responsibility, our country has undertaken an important new peace initiative. Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev has appealed to Reagan to meet him in the very near future in one of the European capitals for urgent discussion on the question of stopping nuclear tests. This is in no way meant to replace the meeting in the United States agreed on in Geneva. It is more a matter of undertaking some major step to get the talks on reducing nuclear armaments -- on which agreement has been reached, also in Geneva -- out of deadlock. A cessation of nuclear explosions by the Soviet Union and the United States would not only block the development of ever more advanced nuclear weapons, but would also be a good example of joint responsible actions by the two great powers.

It is true that, as so often before, Washington is, so far, adopting a negative stance. Nonetheless, as Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev said in his replies to the Algerian magazine, our hope is that the President, his closest advisers, and the Congress will give our proposal further thought. The Soviet Union does not regard the present situation as hopeless, and will, for its part, in accordance with the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress, do all in its power to promote healthier international relations, and will take real and practical steps to achieve this.

SOVIET DELEGATE ADDRESSES UNESCO MEDIA CONFERENCE

LD031027 Moscow TASS in English 0932 GMT 3 Apr 86

[Text] Copenhagen April 3 TASS -- By TASS correspondent Yegeniy Kiselev:

The problems connected with the realization of a new international information order are in the focus of attention at the U.N. and UNESCO-sponsored roundtable discussions started here.

Representatives of about thirty nations, numerous observers from international non-government and professional organizations, information and communication experts and world press representatives are taking part. The participants exchanged views of the role and place of the mass media in today's world, of the journalists' responsibility and their part in promoting the development of their countries.

The speakers pointed to deepening inequality in the world information exchanges. The Western news services, it was stressed during the debate, were imposing on developing countries not only biased information, but also their concepts and ideas. Representatives of several countries drew attention to the fact that technological progress in the mass media facilitated in recent years the ever greater penetration of the West, specifically American television, into the daily life of developing and several Western European countries.

The new international information order, stressed Kaarle Nordenstreng, chairman of the International Organization of Journalists (IOJ), should contribute, in line with the UNESCO decisions, to strengthening cooperation and security and be built on generally recognized norms of international law.

The socialist countries, he stressed, were actively backing the activity of the United Nations and UNESCO directed at establishing a new international information order which would help strengthen the independence of developing nations and improve mutual understanding between the peoples.

In the current nuclear age, new approaches, a new way of thinking are required in that and in others of the foreign policy activity of the states.

CORRESPONDENT VIEWS BERNE CSCE CONSULTATIONS

LD021208 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 0925 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Text] Berne, 2 Apr TASS -- TASS correspondent Yuriy Vykhodtsev reports:

Preparatory consultations began here today for the conference of the Helsinki process. It is to discuss a wide range of matters of cooperation in the field of developing contacts between people, institutions, and organizations of the states participating in the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe. These problems are directly linked with strengthening friendly relations between peoples, and so make a certain contribution to the cause of peace and the creation of an atmosphere of trust and mutual understanding.

The USSR accords exceptional importance to the development of the European process, was stressed once again at the 27th CPSU Congress. All the principles of interstate relations inscribed in the Helsinki Final Act are reflected in the USSR Constitution.

The countries of the socialist community taking part in the European process express the hope that the Berne conference of experts will take place in a constructive spirit. They consider that for success to be achieved faulty practice -- when individual states strive to foist on others their views and unacceptable concepts -- must be renounced.

SOVIET JOURNAL EXAMINES SECURITY IN ASIA

LD011635 Moscow TASS in English 1618 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 1 TASS -- The concept of Asian security is called upon to respect in full measure the realities of the present nuclear-missile age, the journal INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS says. The Asian nations are seriously worried by Washington's plans to put together to the east and south of the Soviet Union a multilateral military-political alliance, like NATO in the West, and to establishin East and South Asia and in the Pacific and Indian Oceans, Washington Asian shores, a staging area for forward-based nuclear systems, similar to that in Western Europe and the Atlantic. About 350 American weapons are deployed at them and the territories of socialist and non-aligned countries of Asia are within their reach.

A quantitative and qualitative freeeze on nuclear weapons, consistently advocated by the Soviet Union, could become an effective step towards their reduction, the journal says. The initiative of the heads of state and government of six countries -- India, Argentina, Greece, Mexico, Tanzania and Sweden -- formulated in their declaration in 1985, evoked much interest in Asian countries. The Soviet Union spoke highly of that initiative.

The socialist countries and many non-aligned nations of Asia are giving unconditional support to the constructive stand of the USSR at the Soviet-American talks on nuclear and space weapons in Geneva, specifically to the Soviet proposal that agreement be reached on a complete ban on space strike weapons and on truly radical reductions in the nuclear armaments reaching each other's territories. The Asian countries are aware that the question of Asian security depends to a considerable extenton progress at those talks.

The Soviet concept of Asian security, which envisions a joint search for ways to ensure peace in Asia through pooling the efforts of all the states in the continent, big and small, with due regard for the experience accumulated by the Asian countries themselves and by nations in other continents, is a solid foundation for furthering understanding and cooperation among Asian states and for establishing a lasting peace in that region, the journal concludes.

SPOKESMAN ON POSSIBLE REAGAN-DOBRYNIN MEETING

LD031518 Moscow World Service in English 1500 GMT 3 Apr 86

[Text] There has been a news conference in Moscow for Soviet and foreign journalists. A Soviet Foreign Ministry spokesman, when asked about the possible meeting between a secretary of the Soviet Communist Party's Central Committee Anatoliy Dobrynin and President Reagan during his future trip to the United States, said that he did not rule out that issues connected to a future Soviet-American summit will be discussed in this or that forum. The Foreign Ministry spokesman said that the date of such a meeting was not of great importance to the USSR. It's not the date of the meeting but what the two sides will bring to the meeting that counts. The Soviet position is well known. The question is what the United States would bring to the summit.

SHEVARDNADZE RECEIVES U.S. AMBASSADOR HARTMAN

[Text] Moscow April 4 TASS -- Eduard Shevardnadze, member of the Political Bureau of the CPSU Central Committee, minister of foreign affairs of the USSR, received Thursday U.S. Ambassador to the USSR Arthur Hartman at his request. During the conversation the sides discussed some questions connected with Soviet-American relations.

COMMENTARY EXAMINES AIMS OF BUSH MIDDLE EAST TOUR

LD031755 Moscow International Service in Arabic 1430 GMT 3 Apr 86

[Unattributed commentary]

[Text] It was announced in Washington that George Bush, the U.S. vice president, is to visit from the 3d to the 12th of this month Saudi Arabia, the Yemen Arab Republic, Bahrain, and Oman.

What brings the second ranking personality in the United States to the Middle East? A White House spokesman said, while explaining the aims of the visit, that one aim is to show the U.S. desire to assist in guaranteeing the security of this region. Yes, this is its logic! The White House, which has dealt a blow to sovereign Libya, is today interested in the security of the Arab countries. Washington is trying to depict itself as the guarantor of Arab security and to conceal the essence of its anti-Arab Middle Eastern policy with verbal statements. Thus it is possible to say that Bush's task is to try to calm the indignation stirred up in the Arab world not only by the open aggression of the United States itself against the Arabs, but also the piratical and thievish actions of its strategic ally, Israel.

Washington is also becoming anxious about the trend toward the development of relations between the USSR and the Gulf countries whose conviction in the firm policy of the USSR aimed at supporting the Arabs' just cause is growing. The myth of the so-called Soviet danger that Washington used to spread has burst like a soap bubble. Recently, Oman and the United Arab Emirates established diplomatic relations with the USSR. Some of the other Gulf countries have also expressed the desire to develop relations with the USSR as soon as possible. Reports from Washington say that among the main tasks of Bush's visit is to abort this trend.

There is another task for Bush that does not do him much honor: The United States does not find comfort in the independent anti-imperialist policy of the People's Republic of Yemen [PDRY]. Therefore, U.S. supporters of neoglobalism have tried and continue to try to bring down the democratic leadership in the PDRY, which they dislike. They also tried to exploit the recent internal conflict, but they failed. Now, the U.S. vice president will, as one can conclude from his statements, attempt anew to influence the PDRY. It becomes clear from the U.S. media that in this Washington is wagering on stirring up differences between the PDRY and its neighboring Arab countries. The Arab countries have repeatedly noticed that tension, and at times conflict, follow the footsteps of the U.S. pilgrims. The U.S. vice president is not different from those pilgrims. Therefore, the Arabs should be on full alert.

FURTHER REACTION TO RECENT U.S.-LIBYAN CLASH

Arabs Unite Against U.S. Acts

LD301520 Moscow TASS in English 1508 GMT 30 Mar 86

["Arab Unity -- Effective Weapon in Struggle for Durable Peace in the Middle East" -- TASS headline]

[Text] Moscow March 30 TASS -- TASS commentator Georgiy Kuvaldin writes:

Wasington's gangster action against the sovereign Libyan Jamahiriyah sparked off anger and outrage among broad circles of the international public. It touched off scathing denunciation also in all Arab countries without exception. The League of Arab Countries, whose council has recently ended its session in Tunisia, Algeria, Syria, the Yemen Arab Republic, the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen, Morocco and many other countries stated their solidarity with the Jamahiriyah.

The communist and workers' parties of the Arab East issued a statement which emphasizes, among other things, that the U.S. aggression against Libya is unseverably linked with Israel's expansionist designs in the region and is aimed both against the Jamahiriyah and the entire Arab liberation movement.

The Arab East was not befuddled with the speculation by the U.S. Administration on Libya's alleged "complicity" in terrorist acts in Europe. The U.S. actions were described as an attempt to overthrow the regime unsuitable to the White House, the regime which steers an independent anti-imperialist course, firmly and consistently advocates a fair and lasting settlement in the Middle East, opposes the attempts by Tel Aviv and Washington to force imperialist and Zionist will on Arabs.

It is not by chance that the U.S. aggressive action was approved by Israel's Zionist ruling hierarchy. To undermine the unity of the Arab ranks and deal a blow to those forces in the Arab world which decisively oppose Washington's policy of neo-globalism and its imperial ambitions are a foremost purpose of the partners in the notorious anti-Arab strategic alliance. It is precisely within this framework that the shrill and malicious anti-Libyan campaign should be viewed, a campaign which was unleashed by the United States and mounted to the point of direct armed interference in Libya.

Washington, which would like to project himself [as received] in the eyes of the Arabs as a "peacemaker", was unmasked. It has become more obvious than ever before that one should not wait for the United States to bring just peace, that it took care, above all, of its own hegemonic interests and also of satifying the expansionist appetites of the Tel Aviv "hawks."

The unanimous condemnation of the aggression and solidarity with the Jamahiriyah expressed by Arab countries showed that Arab unity was and remains an effective tool in the struggle to ensure the Arab peoples' lawful interests and establish a truly durable and just peace in the Middle East.

Events Show 'Neoglobalism'

[Lieutenant Colonel Yu. Soldatenko "International Notes": "Piracy in the Guise of Exercises"]

[Text] U.S. Defense Secretary Weinberger and Admiral Crowe, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, have held a Pentagon briefing in connection with the recent U.S. 6th Fleet exercises off the Libyan coast. During the exercises the Americans used weapons five times against naval targets, as a result of which two Libyan coastal protection vessels were sunk and three others damaged. Other Libyan targets were also hit. With impudent smugness the leaders of the U.S. military department assessed as "very successful in all respects" this act against a sovereign country pursuing an anti-imperialist independent course in the international arena.

Stressing that the 3 aircraft carriers and 27 other warships operated continuously in the Gulf of Sidra for 75 hours and aircraft carried out 1,546 flights in this period, Weinberger and Crowe bragged that the "exercises have demonstrated... the U.S. right to operate in international waters." They claim that over the last 7 years the United States has carried out such "demonstrations" in the waters of 35 countries, "including waters which the Soviet Union has declared its own."

The bandit actions of the U.S. military off the Libyan coast and the violation of the USSR's state border by U.S. warships in the Black Sea are part and parcel of a unified plan coordinated in Washington for provoking so-called "low-intensity conflicts."

These actions by the Pentagon are a vivid manifestation of the imperial ambitions of U.S. militarist circles, which strive for the practical implementation of the notorious "neoglobalism" concept. It is to that end that the United States has even created a special group -- the "208 Committee" -- consisting of ranking officials from the CIA, the State Department, the Pentagon, and other organizations. Its task is to plan and draw up various types of provocations -- including those of a military nature -- in order to achieve U.S. global military-political goals in the developing countries, and provocations aimed at undermining the Soviet Union's international prestige. The activity of the "208 Committee" has been seen most clearly in the punitive U.S. actions in the Gulf of Sidra.

Essentially, as follows from Weinberger's statement, the Gulf of Sidra was used by the U.S. Navy as a test for rehearsing combat tasks "in a modern battle situation and for testing new weapons -- HARM and Harpoon missiles."

The U.S. provocations against Libya, as is well known, failed. They did not succeed in the Libyan people to their knees or making that country's government submit to U.S. diktat. The entire world received with anger and alarm the news of the piratical U.S. attack on independent Libya. This aggressive act is an overt reflection of the policy of state terrorism and disdain for the UN Charter and an attempt by force of arms to impose the U.S. will on other peoples and destabilize the situation in states that have embarked on the path of independent development.

Ignoring protests from the world public, the U.S. military leaders stressed that the U.S. Navy will continue to hold exercises in international waters "at its discretion." And they indicated that repetitions of the punitive action against Libya are not ruled out.

Clearly, the U.S. Administration, with no heed for contemporary realities, is continuing to rely on force and the impunity of its actions, which run counter to the generally accepted norms of international relations. This dangerous illusion is fraught with a threat to universal peace. We recall that even the U.S. President once admitted that regional conflicts carry the "seeds of larger wars."

There is no doubt that the U.S. provocations against Libya and in other parts of the world are a threat to international peace and security. The recent Soviet proposal to turn the Mediterranean into a zone of stable peace and cooperation evoked a broad response worldwide. However, when Weinberger was asked at the briefing how he assessed the 26 March 1986 proposal by the general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee on the mutual withdrawal of Soviet and U.S. ships from the Mediterranean, the Pentagon leader shamelessly stated that, taking into account the existing correlation of the two countries' naval forces in the region -- 4 Soviet and over 45 U.S. warships -- "this proposal, like many Soviet proposals, seems somewhat unbalanced." The obvious question is: For what purpose is this armada of U.S. ships located so many miles from U.S. shores?

Many recent cases provide convincing evidence that in resolving all international questions the United States places primary stress on force. By using weapons against sovereign Libya U.S. imperialism has once again clearly revealed the imperial piratical face of its neoglobalist policy.

U.S. ATTITUDES TOWARD LIBYA, NICARAGUA VIEWED

PM021311 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 29 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 4

[Own correspondent L. Koryavin dispatch: "Advocates of the Rule of the Fist: Washington Fuels the Atmosphere of Chauvinism"]

[Text] Washington -- After the sensational combat reports sent in from those parts of the Medierranean and Central America where the United States is carrying out aggressive actions against independent states, the U.S. press is now publishing articles summarizing what is going on. What is its view of the events that are taking place?

Primarily it is trying to justify this international banditry. However, the commentaries of the advocates of America's imperialist plans do not tally. Libya is accused without justification of supporting "terrorists." But the United States has undertaken an overt act of state terrorism against it by striking against Libyan territory.

This was not just a blow against Libya, it was also an ominous signal to the developing states that have chosen a course displeasing to the United States. This idea is being openly expressed in U.S. political circles. In a televised discussion Edward Luttwak, a leading foreign policy expert from the Georgetown University think tank, directly indicated that the action against Libya should be viewed in the "broad context." He cited the fact that the U.S. Navy is now trying to play the part of "ruler of the waves," a role previously assumed by Britain. However, Washington is more ambitious than that. Luttwak paraphrased the well known cry of "Britannia, rule the waves!" as "America, rule the oceans!"

Attempts have been made to conceal the U.S. 6th Fleet's aggressive action by a smokescreen of "military maneuvers." It is noteworthy that both in the Mediterranean and in Central America -- in Honduras, to be precise -- the permament deployment of U.S. divisions is being called "maneuvers." Those maneuvers last months or years. As recent events have shown, this word has a synonym -- military banditry. Furthermore, a whole series of hawks are letting it be known that an "undeclared war" is being waged against Libya. "It cannot be halted," they cynically state, "there can only be a temporary 'cease-fire'."

An important conclusion that emerges from these generalizing reports is that the aggression against Libya and the threat to invade Nicaragua are closely linked with America's general militarist plans. In recent days the discussion of the Pentagon's military program has been continuing in Congress. Lieutenant General J. Abrahamson, leader of the organization implementing the "Strategic Defense Initiative," and R. Perle, assistant defense secretary, spoke in defense of the "star wars" program at the same congressional subcommittee. Real Admiral Gene La Rocque, retired, director of Washington's Center for Defense Information, accurately characterized their speeches and the events that have unfolded when he stressed that the U.S. Administration has been provoking armed clashes in an attempt to "force through" Congress its military budget uncut.

The United States is deliberately creating centers of tension, provoking "small-scale wars" as they are known here, so as to whip up a new wave of chauvinsim in the country similar to that which swept across the United States on the eve of the Grenada invasion. The aim is clear -- Washington needs a "small-scale victorious war", the administration wants to give the public consciousness another infusion of chauvinism. After all, the United States has recently begun considering the expediency of colossal military spending. This trend has become particularly noticeable since the Geneva summit, when hope of finding a way to reach an accord in the disarmament sphere appeared. It was that which caused open discontent within America's militarist circles, which tried to wreck the process of improving the international climate. Furthermore, there are congressional elections coming up, and the hawks want their stooges to win. With that aim in mind they are trying to convince the potential voter that America's "security" is organically linked to the concept of a "strong America," that is, that the path to peace can only be found through the "superarming" ["sverkhvooruzheniye"] of the United States.

Recently Washington has been heating the atmosphere around imaginary "Libyan "terrorists" who, it is alleged, "may appear at any moment in the U.S. capital and other cities in America." The U.S. authorities needed that smokescreen for the same reason -- to justify the act of military banditry in the Mediterranean. The protection of government buildings has been stepped up, airports are being kept under close observation, and the FBI is constantly shadowing Arab citizens.

Unfortunately, many people in the United States have fallen into the propaganda trap. It is noticeable that the wave of chauvinism, preaching the doctrine of a "strong America" and U.S. "total license" in the international arena has again fooled the Americans, as they did during the aggression against Grenada. The piratical action has been supported by the leaders of the main factions in Congress and by many senators and congressmen. Ordinary Americans, interviewed on the streets by reporters, most often view the events off the Libyan coast and on the Nicaraguan border from the vantage point of the "Grenadan victory" rather than the depths of the Vietnamese disgrace. The reply of one American -- Patricia Spalding -- to an ABC correspondent is indicative: "I want it all to go as it did on Grenada, not as it did in Vietnam."

At the same time there are some Americans who view the events soberly and who see in the provocative U.S. actions against Libya and Nicaragua a grave danger. Antiwar movement activities in Des Moines, Iowa, for example, held a protest demonstration against the aggression that the United States is committing against Libya. They held placards bearing works that accurately express the essence of the events taking place: Stop the terrorism!"

U.S. 'NEOGLOBALISM' AT WORK IN CENTRAL AMERICA

[Major V. Laptev "Military-Political Review": "Ideology of Piracy, Policy of Aggression; Belligerent Ruckus in Washington; Central America Is 'Touchstone" of Neoglobalism; Dangers of Provocation Against Nicaragua"]

[Text] The raucous anti-Nicaraguan campaign launched by Washington has reached fever pitch. Without mincing words the White House has issued an ultimatum to Congress to ratify the administration's request for military and financial aid to the tune of $100 million for the "contras."

The result of the House of Representatives vote is well known: It rejected the President's demand by 222 votes to 210, thereby essentially delivering a vote of no-confidence in the administration's interventionist line in Central America. The BBC termed the vote "the biggest political defeat for the White House incumbent in all his time in office." However, this by no means sobered up the administration.

The White House resorted to a tried and tested means -- whipping up an anticommunist mentality. At the dawn of the "cold war" the American journalists. Lens wrote: "For the country to go on spending heaps of money on arms it is important to bring the idea of the 'communist threat' to the forefront of people's consciousness." Washington is trying to prove that little Nicaragua poses a terrible "threat" to the national interests and very existence of the United States itself. And if the congressmen reject the appropriations for the "contras," they are allegedly supporting communists. Give it time,they say, and "Soviet military bases" will appear in Nicaragua and with their help the communists will take over Central America and then establish domination in the Caribbean. [The following boxed quotation is inserted at this point: "We do not want to impose our system of government on anyone, but neither do we want to be attacked; we are striving to ensure the right to exist and develop within our own borders." Sergio Ramirez, Nicaraguan vice president] Then the United States would not be able to defend Western Europe or Israel, and the "Russians" would take control.

Impressed? Not everyone is. THE WASHINGTON POST terms "all these hackneyed fables about Soviet subversive activity and a Nicaraguan plot aimed at overrunning neighboring countries and blocking off Western trade" as "incoherent and pathetic." However, sober voices are drowned out in the powerful anti-Nicaraguan chorus. Ranking administration figures are citing more and more fabrications about the Sandinists' "subversive activity," alleging that they support "left-wing insurgents" in a number of Latin American countries, particularly Brazil and Argentina. Official denials from the Brazilian and Argentine Governments followed immediately. But by no means did all U.S. newspapers report them, and those that did report them did not, naturally, give them prominence.

The administration's psychological attacks are already bearing fruit. The House of Representatives agreed to discuss so-called "alternative options" to aid for the "contras."

One of these envisages the immediate allocation of 25 million for the bandits to acquire weapons, communications equipment, and ammunition. The remaining 75 million will reach the "contras" in 90 days. But after tense and protracted debates the Senate only voted by a majority of six to grant additional aid to the Somozists. The prominent Democratic Senator Leahy assessed this decision as a "major step toward direct participation in a war in Central America."

And all this to "return Nicaragua to the fold of freedom and the West." Everyone knows how the Somozist cutthroats are going about it. Last year alone they killed more than 1,100 officers and men of the Sandinist People's Army and people's militia fighters and almost 300 peaceful inhabitants. [The following boxed quotation is inserted at this point: "All the attempts by the "contras" to win the support of the Nicaraguan population have failed. For Nicaraguans they are still the hated national guards of the ousted dictator." NEWSWEEK magazine]

All these and many other facts attest that the foreign policy course of the current U.S. Administration is the same as before. It is a course of "rolling back communism" and stifling national liberation movements. Washinton has decided to slow history down and make it move in a capitalist circle at the center of which would be the United States, "chosen for this purpose by the Lord God himself."

The notorious doctrine of neoglobalism is part of this aggressive policy. Its essence is total disregard for the generally accepted norms of international relations, infringements of states' sovereignty, and the same old futile attempts to deprive peoples of the right to build their lives as they wish. Although this concept was publicized relatively recently, the Reagan administration has to all intents and purposes been guided by it from the moment it came to power. And the "touchstone" of neoglobalism, in the words of U.S. Secretary of State Shultz, is precisely Central America.

We recall that in Novemeber 1981 the White House sanctioned the CIA's organizing of paramilitary formations of former Somozists encamped in Honduras to combat the Sandinist government. Thanks to the Washinton administration's material and financial support, the "contra" gangs grew to 15-18,000 people and are now waging an undeclared war against Nicaragua. The U.S. military presence in Honduras has grown sharply during the Reagan administration's rule. The number of U.S. military personnel on Honduran territory is now around 3,000 and 17 Pentagon military bases are located there. Punitive operations under the leadership of U.S. instructors against Salvadoran patriots have expanded. At the same time U.S. "Green Berets" have appeared in Costa Rica. Subversive "contra" operations for the territory of that country against Nicaragua have been stepped up.

By bringing the neoglobalism concept out into the open its creators were pursuing two goals. First, to justify their imperial policy aimed at suppressing national liberation movements and regimes not to their liking under the banner of the struggle against "communist expansion." Second, to divert the peoples' attention away from the comprehensive Soviet peace initiatives, to heap responsibility for international tension on the USSR, and simultaneously to attempt to pressure it by whipping up regional conflicts. It was no accident that the U.S. President assessed the congressional vote on granting aid to the "contras" as an important event for all U.S. foreign policy and the U.S. ability to show "strength and firmness" toward the USSR. The Washington administration's policy in Central America wholly accords with these aims. The piratical policy pursued by the "contras" and similar cutthroats is a policy now rejected not only by the peoples but by the majority of statemen in the region's states.

Oscar Arias Sanchez, president-elect of Costa Rica: "We do not want to tolerate the enemies of the Sandinist government or allow them to use our territory for military activity."

Carlos Montoya, president of the Honduran Congress: "It is time for U.S. troops to leave the country... Honduras will defend Hondurans..."

Vinicio Cerezo, Guatemalan president: "We favor political rather that military solutions..." [The following boxed quotation is inserted at this point: "The United States needs 'dirty little wars' to reinforce its vitally important interests on various continents." TIME magazine]

Alarmed at the growth of anti-imperialist sentiments, the White House is trying to pressure ruling circles in the Central American countries. The trip to the region by Habib, the U.S. President's special aide, was devoted to this purpose. In Costa Rica he attempted to make the country renounce the agreement with Nicaragua President Monge agreed, but President-elect Arias disavowed him.

In Honduras, soon after Habib's departure, U.S. troops based in the country started military maneuvers code named "(Tosta) '86" with no official notice. These maneuvers are being held just a few kilometers away from the Nicaraguan border. It is typical that the 82d Airborne Division, "famed" for its crimes against the Grenadian people, is taking part in the exercises. The administration is thus trying to scare Nicaragua's revolutionary government and force it to enter into talks with the "contra" ringleaders.

And not only to scare them. Without waiting for a final decision by Congress, the United States is granting Honduras urgent military aid totaling 20 million -- in addition to the 400 million which it has received over the last 5 years. General Galvin, head of the U.S. southern command, has left on an urgent mission for that country. U.S. troops in Honduras, which have long awaited the order to invade Nicaragua, are being placed on heightened combat readiness. Over a dozen U.S. military helicopters are transferring Honduran troops to the Nicaraguan border.

The impudent provocations against sovereign Nicaragua and the danger of direct U.S. military intervention against the land of Sandino are leading to a serious exacerbation of the situation in Central America. The neoglobalist ideology of piracy is resulting for the umpteenth time in a criminal policy of aggression.

ADMIRAL MIKHAYLIN VIEWS U.S. NAVAL POLICY

PM031305 Moscow KRASNAYA ZVEZDA in Russian 29 Mar Second Edition p 5

[Interview with Admiral V.V. Mikhaylin by correspondent Captain V. Kuzar: "They are Perpetrating Tyranny and Piracy" -- date and place not given]

[Text] The challenging act of provocation by the U.S. warships off the Crimean shores of the Soviet Union... The aggressive U.S. action against sovereign Libya... The whole planet is indignant at the adventurist activity of Washington, which by its policy of state terrorism is placing the world on the verge of catastrophe. And THE WASHINGTON POST recently published statements by U.S. Secretray of the Navy J. Lehman on... "the mounting Soviet naval threat."

"I familiarized myself attentively with this publication," Adm V.V. Mikhaylin said in a talk with a KRASNAYA ZVEZDA correspondent. "Frankly, I found nothing new in its content. Western propaganda is constantly fabricating various stories about the Soviet Navy. Any steps by out country to defend its maritime borders and safeguard its security from maritime salients areexploited by them for fabrications about 'the Soviet military threat.'

"In my view the account of Lehman's statements in THE WASHINGTON TIMES is merely another link in the chain of propaganda actions that are being undertaken in the United States and other NATO countries with a view to diverting world public attention from imperialism's aggressive designs and weakening the influence of the major Soviet foreign policy initiatives. But the tone of the U.S. Navy secretary's outpourings goes beyond the framework of what is now customary. And it is simply impossible to overlook the statements of this unbridled 'hawk.'

"There is not a word that Lehman says that is not a lie and an impudent fabrication." "Yes indeed," the admiral continues, "The Soviet Navy has undergone a qualitative change in recent years. It has become an oceangoing navy and Soviet ships can undertake long voyages and resolve the tasks set them in various parts of the world's ocean. But the Soviet Navy has not as a result lost its defensive function. Like the other branches of the USSR Armed Forces, it is guided by Soviet military doctrine whose defensive nature was emphasized once again at the 27th CPSU Congress.

"I also want to note that Soviet seamen will never allow themselves to commit the kind of shameless provocation perpetrated by U.S. ships off Crimean shores. I say this with a full knowledge of the matter, because I have given over 50 years of my life to the Navy, served as a Red Navy seamen, rising to the rank of admiral, and have been a ship, formation, and fleet commander. And after all the Americans' recent act of provocation is not isolated."

I ask Adm Mikhaylin to assess the U.S. so-called "ocean strategy."

"Its aim was revealed by the U.S. President at the ceremony to launch the destroyer New Jersey. 'Supremacy at sea,' he said at the time, 'is a necessity for us.... We must be able to control the air, the surface of the sea, and the underwater expanses in order to ensure access to all oceans of the world.' Washington's claims to rule the world's ocean are displayed primarily in the rapid buildup of naval armaments. By the end of this decade it is planned to build over 80 warships, bringing their total number to 600. The Pentagon has covered all 'vitally important' regions of the world's ocean with a web of naval bases. The U.S. Navy is used in virtually all local conflicts, perpetrating tyranny and piracy on the seas and oceans. Evidence of this is provided by the piratical actions of the armada of U.S. ships, including three aircraft carriers, off Libyan shores. Indeed in the actual WASHINGTON TIMES article we find confirmation of the use of the Navy as a tool of the U.S. policy of state terrorism. In particular it discusses the preparation of 'Seals' -- inveterate cutthroats from a special subunit. As is well known, this subunit is designed for subversive actions and the capture of ships at sea. As for the Navy Department's slanderous fabrications of the 'Soviet military presence' in Central America, Washington needed them to justify the expansion of the undeclared war against Nicaragua. The U.S. Navy plays far from the least role in this war.

"The spearhead of the 'ocean strategy' is aimed against the Soviet Union. It is Lehman again who has frequently stated openly that it is necessary 'to turn the Soviets into a world island so that the United States can rule the rest of the world.' Those are the militarists' true intentions. But who will allow them to do that?!"

I ask Adm Mikhaylin about the Soviet proposals for reducing the level of confrontation at sea.

"In recent years the Soviet Union has put forward a number of initiatives in this direction. They include proposals for limiting the boundaries within which missile-carrying submarines patrol, for extending confidence-building measures to the seas and oceans, particularly to those regions through which the busiest sea routes pass, for completely demilitarizing the Indian Ocean, and for withdrawing ships carrying nuclear weapons from the Mediterranean. And now our country has suggested resolving the question of halting the naval presence of the USSR and the United States in the Mediterranean on a permanent basis. The acceptance of the Soviet initiatives would promote the reduction of tension in the world arena. But instead of a constructive reply to these proposals, the United States and its closest allies are continuing the arms race at sea.

"So," the admiral concludes our conversation, "those who are brandishing the 'naval stick' off the shores of Libya and in other parts of the world's ocean have no cause to shift the blame. Slander will not help them."

WEINBERGER'S 'POLICY-SETTING' ARTICLE CRITICIZED

LD041035 Moscow TASS in English 0927 GMT 4 Apr 86

[Text] New York April 4 TASS -- TASS correspondent Nikolay Setunskiy reports: U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger has published what can be described as a "policy-setting" article in the FOREIGN AFFAIRS journal, which formulated guidelines for U.S. military policy in the 1990s.

Crediting the Reagan administration with "rebuilding American military might", he said its policy is based on "four pillars", namely the "Strategic Defense Initiative" combined with "nuclear deterrence"; uses of military force and "conventional deterrence"; "A strategy for reducing and controlling arms"; and "competitive strategies".

The very order in which these Washington's priorities were listed shows that the highest importance is attached to the crash "star wars" effort. Significantly, the policy of militarizing outer space is seen by the administration as supplementing the nuclear arms race on earth.

Weinberger admitted, in words, that nuclear war cannot be won and must never be fought. But the very spirit of his article and the "nuclear deterrence" concept it promoted make one doubt whether the admission was sincere, the more so as, it follows from the article, the administration is not going to abandon its first-nuclear-strike doctrine.

The Pentagon chief claimed the administration's "right" to use military forces under the pretext of protecting "U.S. vital interests" in any part of the world. Situations will arise in the world, he said, "in which it may be appropriate to commit U.S. military forces to combat". This makes essential, he added, "this administration's determination to build up our conventional military capabilities".

Touching on the "strategy for reducing and controlling arms" and in this connection on Soviet-U.S. talks, the defense secretary alleged, without adducing any proof, that the Soviet Union has been increasing its nuclear arsenals, while the United States has been reducing its nuclear armories. But he conceded that the United States maintains the lead in the total number of strategic nuclear warheads.

It is indicative that the article did not say a single word about the Soviet program for abolishing all nuclear weapons by the year 2000.

MIROSLAV MEDVIO RESPONDS TO U.S. CONGRESSMAN

LD031321 Moscow TASS in English 1146 GMT 3 Apr 86

[Text] Lvov April 3 TASS -- Miroslav Medvid, 26, a seaman of the Soviet Marchant Marine, has received a letter from Fred Eckert, member of U.S. Congress. He described the letter as a "provocative message". "One gathers the impression that some U.S. senators and representatives do not have important state affairs: They have been busy bandying my name about for almost half a year," Medvid has told a TASS correspondent.

Through the efforts of U.S. mass media, the Medvid story has hit world headlines. On October 24, last year, Miroslav Medvid, electrician of the Soviet dry cargo ship "Marshal Konev", fell over borad owing to carelessness when the ship was lying in the roads of New Orleans harbour. Then, against his will Miroslav Medvid was taken away from the Soviet ship to a Coast Guard boat and brought a U.S. naval base where secret services tried to persuade the seaman to remain in the United States. Only after the USSR Embassy in the USA intervened, he was released, and went back home.

"What has angered me," Medvid said, "is that the U.S. congressman distorts the incidents which occurred at New Orleans harbour. He calumniates my native land -- the Soviet Union". The seaman pointed out that U.S. propaganda fabrications are reiterated in Fred Eckert's version of what happened in New Orleans harbour. "My fellow countrymen", Medvid said, "laugh at the broadcasts of the "Voice of America" and other Western radio stations which have repeatedly stated that I died and then asserted that I was imprisoned. When my father, a coalminer, heard that U.S. experts had questioned the authenticity of our family photographs taken by newspaper photographer Boris Krishtul after my return to the parents, he said: 'Have they gone mad over there that they talk such nonsense?'"

"If I decided to remain in the USA, as is being asserted in the West", Medvid went on to say, "I would have done so easily. During the meeting with the U.S. side it was enough for me to tell this to a representative of the immigration authorities and to put my signature to a statement 'on behalf of Medvid' which had been prepared in advance by U.S. secret service. But I had the only desire: to return home as soon as possible".

"Some American newspapers asserted that when I fell overboard I had with me a glass jar which allegedly contained important papers -- my documents. This is what means to tell reckless lies." "My docoments, just as the documents of the other members of the crew were at the time in the first mate's strong box as is customary among the Soviet seamen", Medvid explained.

"If Mr Eckert or any other of his fellow-countrymen wish to visit me in the Ukrainian village of Selts, I will show them a birth certificate, a graduation certificate and other documents kept in the family archives", Medvid said. "I would like guests to show how all this can be squeezed into a glass jar invented by the U.S. press.

"If Mr Eckert really wants an improvement of relations between the USA and the USSR," Miroslav Medvid said in conclusion of the interview, "it would better for him take up other really important and urgent problems. It would be better to use the two hundred thousand dollars, which have been allocated for the propaganda campaign against the USSR in connection with the so-called 'case' of mine, in the interests of starving people in America, and in the interests of the struggle for peace or other lofty purposes".

U.S.-CARIBBEAN NAVAL EXERCISES VIEWED

LD041025 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 0830 GMT 4 Apr 86

[International affairs journalist Aleksandr Baryshev commentary]

[Text] The Pentagon has announced large naval maneuvers in the Atlantic code named "Ocean Venture." Here is international affairs journalist Aleksandr Baryshev:

This is not first year that war games in the Caribbean and Atlantic waters have become a regular event. Nevertheless, the current "Ocean Venture" maneuvers draw attention to a number of points.

First, they are being carried out at the same time as the exercises of the U.S.-Honduran ground troops that are deployed near the Nicaraguan border. They have also apparently coincided with the acute exacerbation of the situation on the Nicaragua-Honduras border. Just before the start of "Ocean Venture," the U.S. naval forces began transferring Honduran units to the Nicaraguan border, having falsely accused Nicaragua of aggression. The ships that are being used in "Ocean Venture" will be able to threaten Nicaragua's eastern coastline. At the same time, accompanied by the noisy anti-Nicaraguan campaign, Reagan's request for $100 million to be allocated for arming the Nicaraguan contras, which had been previously rejected, by the House of Representatives, was dragged through the Senate. And $20 million in emergency funds were assigned to the Honduran regime.

The second point that gives cause for alarm is connected with the fact that armed formations of pro-U.S. Caribbean regimes -- Grenada, the Dominican Republic, St Christopher and Nevis, Antigua and Barbuda, and Jamaica -- are taking part alongside U.S. units in "Ocean Venture." The general staff of the so-called regional security and defense system is also involved in the war games. This military-political bloc of a number of eastern Caribbean island states was knocked together under the aegis of the United States in order to suppress national liberation movements of the Caribbean peoples.

The threat of war games like "Ocean Venture" to the cause of peace cannot be doubted. By becoming increasingly a part of Washington's neoglobalist policy they are also capable of exacerbating an already tense international situation, as demonstrated during the provocative U.S. maneuvers off the Libyan coast that have just ended.

TASS REPORTS ISRAELI SPIES' ACTIVITIES IN U.S.

LD022113 Moscow TASS in English 1516 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Text] Washington April 2 TASS -- TASS correspondent Nikolay Turkatenko reports:

While the spy mania whipped up by official Washington during an anti-Soviet campaign is running high in the USA, more and more information comes to light which shows that accusations of spying are clearly placed at the wrong door. To the embarrassment of the administration and secret services, it is established that there exists a wide spy ring in the USA which has been created and is maintained by the United States closest "strategic ally", Israel.

For several months now, the secret services, the Department of Justice and judiciary bodies of the USA have been investigating the case of spy ring of former servicemen, certain Walker brothers and their accomplices.

According to the official version aimed at inciting in the public hostility to the Soviet Union and its representatives in the USA, the Walker spy ring supplied secret information to the USSR. But many press bodies from the very start pointed to the fact that the most important link was missing in the chain of "proofs" of the Walker brothers' ties with "Soviet agents" that have been supplied by the special services to the court, namely to whom it is precisely that the Walker brothers passed on secret information? For if FBI agents discovered not far from Washington a cache with secret information set up by the Walker brothers, then why is it, reporters wondered, that they had not managed to trace down a contact for whom the content nor representatives of the Attorney-General Office, nor the court wished to provide the answer to this question so far.

The reasons for this silence became clear on March 31 during the hearing of the case of a certain Jerry Whitworth arrested on charges of participating in the Walker spy ring. The UPI news agency reported that nurse Myra Barns, who had been in intimate relations with one of the Walker brothers, when testifying to the court, declared that back in 1977, she asked Whitworth in a bar in San Diego what was the source of the brothers' wealth. He answered that they earned a lot by selling classified military information to Israel. Myra Barns' testimony created a sensation. Representatives of the Attorney-General's Office, however, refused to comment on M. Barns' testimony, the UPI reported. The FBI headquarters in Washington gave no comment either.

It is not for the first time that it turns out that Israel spares neither efforts nor dollars, by the way, received in the U.S. aid framework, for espionage against the USA, its "best friend and ally". The case of the agent of the U.S. naval intelligence Jonathan Pollard is well remembered here. He was arrested by FBI agents in November 1985 literally on the doorsteps of the Israeli Embassy in Washington. Pollard was carrying a case full of top secret documents he had stolen from his department.

It was established that Pollard had been spying for Israel against the USA for a number of years. Though he has been held in preliminary detention since the time he was arrested, there is no decision yet to put him on trial. Aren't they fearing that Pollard's contact with the Walker brothers might come to light during the trial, or even more revealing information on the scopes of Israel's spy ring in the USA might emerge? Such information would surely interfere with the whipping up of hysterical allegations about "huge network of Soviet spies in the USA" by means of which Washington tries to justify its demand for cuts in the personnel of the Soviet mission to the United Nations, the demand that contraditts the United Nations Charter.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON CONGRESSMAN FASCELL'S VISIT

Completes Leningrad Tour

PM031332 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 2 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 4

[Unnamed TASS correspondent, TASS reports under general headline:"U.S. Visitor's Stay"]

[Text] Leningrad, 1 Apr -- D. Fascell, chairman of the U.S. House of Representatives Foreign Affairs Committee, completed his tour of Leningrad on 31 March. Yu. F. Solovyev, candidate member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and first secretary of the Leningrad party obkom, had a meeting with the visitor. The great importance of the USSR's initiatives, outlined by Comrade M.S. Gorbachev in his speech on Soviet television, was noted during the meeting. The Soviet Union has again displayed goodwill, declaring its readiness to extend the moratorium on its nuclear explosions provided the U.S. side terminates nuclear tests.

Readiness was also expressed to begin talks at the summit level on the total ban of nuclear weapons tests, including questions of verification [kontrol].

Taking part in the conversation were I.D. Laptev, USSR Supreme Soviet deputy, and, on the U.S. side, W. Broomfield, member of the U.S. House of Representatives.

The representatives of the United States toured the V.I. Lenin Memorial Museum at Smolnyy. At the Piskarevskoye Memorial Cemetery, they honored the memory of Leningraders and servicemen who fell during the Great Patriotic War and laid wreaths at the memorial's communal graves. Flowers were also laid at the monument to the heroic defenders of Leningrad at Victory Square.

D. Fascell and those accompanying him toured the Hermitage art collections and traveled to Pushkin. [Leningrad report ends]

Conversations with D. Fascell, chairman of the U.S. House of Representatives Foreign Affairs Committee, continued at the USSR Supreme Soviet Soviet of the Union and Soviet of Nationalities Foreign Affairs Commissions in Moscow on 1 April.

The visitor's attention was drawn to the new USSR proposals, outlined in Comrade M.S. Gorbachev's 29 March speech on Soviet television. It was emphasized that the Soviet Union, by taking a real step along the path to nuclear disarmament, is again displaying a firm desire for peace and for ensuring international security.

There was also discussion on the question of ways and forms for the further development of contacts between the USSR Supreme Soviet Chambers' Foreign Affairs Commissions and the U.S. House of Representatives Foreign Affairs Committee.

Taking part in the conversation were V.V. Zagladin, secretary of the USSR Supreme Soviet of the Soviet Union Foreign Affairs Commission; I.D. Laptev, member of the USSR Supreme Soviet of the Soviet Union Foreign Affairs Commission; and K.N. Brutents, deputy chief of the CPSU Central Committee International Section. The U.S. side was represented by W. Broomfield, member of the U.S. House of Representatives.

On the same day, D. Fascell and his party visited the "V.I. Lenin's Office and Apartment in the Kremlin" Museum.

TRADE GROUP MEETS WITH U.S. MANAGEMENT SPECIALISTS

LD021928 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 1044 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow, 2 Apr (TASS) — Opportunities for cooperation in the sphere of improving management methods were discussed here at a meeting today between the leadership of the USSR's Chamber of Trade and Industries and the delegation of the American Management Association.

(Domenico Antonio Fanelli), president of the association, said we know of the importance that the USSR gives to questions of improving the activity of the whole economic mechanism. It is precisely in this area that some practical spheres for mutually arranged advantageous cooperation between the U.S. association and Soviet organizations engaged in questions of planning or management could be possible. This cooperation could take the form of holding joint seminars or conferences, bringing Soviet specialists into programs being developed by our association for improving management, or by setting up in the USSR a joint center for raising the qualifications of leaders of Soviet enterprises and institutions.

During their stay in Moscow, the members of the U.S. delegation will hold talks in research organizations of the State Planning Committee, the Academy of Sciences, and the USSR Foreign Trade Ministry.

REPORTS, COMMENTS ON WEINBERGER VISIT TO FAR EAST

U.S. Increases Korean Aid

LD032227 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 1754 GMT 3 Apr 86

[Text] Tokyo, 3 Apr (TASS) -- The 18th session of the American-South Korean Council on Questions Relating to the Provision of Security has ended in Seoul, reports the KYODO-TSUSHIN agency.

The 2-day meeting, in which U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger and Minister of National Defense of South Korea Yi Ki-paek took part, had been taking place at the height of the major "Team Spirit-86" military maneuvers. Taking part in them were more than 200,000 members of the U.S. and South Korean Armed Forces.

After the conclusion of the session, the boss of the Pentagon stated that the United States did not intend to remove its troops from South Korea. Washington ascribes to the Seoul regime and to the South Korean Army the role of the regional gendarme. Having agreed to this, the regime of Chon Tu-hwan is insisting that in 1987 the United States increases military credits to Seoul to $230 million.

It is already envisaged this year to arm the South Korean Air Force with American F-16 fighter-bombers. The participants in the 18th session of the American-South Korean council on questions relating the the provision of security made the decision to strengthen the antiaircraft defense system in the south of the Korean peninsula, and also to increase the arsenal of chemical weapons.

Moscow Comments on Air Boost

LD032253 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1822 GMT 3 Apr 86

[From "The World Today" program presented by V. Shishkovskiy]

[Text] U.S. forces will remain in the south of the Korean peninsula for as long as necessary. Sugh a statement was made today in Seoul by U.S. Secretary of Defense Weinberger. He was heading a U.S. delegation at a regular American-South Korean consultative conference on problems of security, which has ended there. The main questions discussed were increasing the combat potential of the 40,000-strong corps of American forces in South Korea and increasing assistance to the dictatorial regime of Chon Tu-hwan. The Pentagon chief's voyage to Seoul took place to the accompaniment of U.S.-South Korean "Team Spirit-86" maneuvers involving over 200,000 servicemen and an enormous quantity of combat equipment. Washington and Seoul's militarist games have become the largest in recent years not only in the Far East but also in the entire Pacific Ocean basin. According to military experts the firing grounds of South Korea give U.S. forces a unique opportunity to work unimpeded through methods for conducting large-scale operations of the notorious Rapid Deployment Forces. In building up the might of its forces, the United States is trying to save the South Korean anti-popular regime which is being shaken by mass demonstrations against dictatorship, from failure.

This year the Reagan administration will substantially increase military assistance to its puppet, having given the Chon Tu-hwan regime $232 million. This will go toward modernizing the Army and purchasing combat equipment from the United States, including the latest early detection systems for ensuring sudden missile and aviation strikes.

Weinberger Begins Japan Visit

LD040943 Moscow TASS in English 0731 GMT 4 Apr 86

[Text] Tokyo April 4 TASS -- TASS correspondent Vasiliy Golovnin reports: U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger began the official part of his visit to Japan today with a provocative inspection of military units in the northernmost island of Hokkaido near the Soviet border.

The crack 7th Division of Japanese Land Forces acted out an operation "to crash through enemy defenses" specially for him at the Shimamatsu testing range outside the town of Eniwa in the island's central part. The exercise involved newest tanks, self-propelled howitzers and helicopter gunships.

The KYODO news service reported today that U.S. defense secretaries refrained from attending such war games in the vicinity of Soviet territory in the Far East for the past seven years.

But this time Tokyo and Washington obviously took pains to end Weinberger's trip the demonstrative nature of a "visit to the front line of confrontation".

The Pentagon chief made no bones about admitting to newsmen at the testing range that the United States saw Hokkaido as a key area of military confrontation with the USSR.

Weinberger's visit later today to the Misawa strategic air base in the north of the island of Honshu, where the deployment of a large squadron of U.S. F-16 nuclear-capable fighter-bombers has been under way since last year, also had a blatantly defiant and anti-Soviet nature.

The defense secretary and his entourage there watched demonstration flights by these planes which are to play an important role in U.S. adventurist plans to tip the balance of forces in the Far East to give itself an advantage.

It is in the spirit of confrontation and heightening tension, according to press analyses, that Weinberger is going to hold also tomorrow's talks in Tokyo with Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone, Foreign Minister Shintaro Abe and Koichi Kato, chief of the Japan Defense Agency.

The U.S. defense secretary intends to press them for official consent to Japan's involement in the "star wars" program, for a setup in the country's military preparations and for another base to be allowed in Japanese territory for the aircraft of the U.S. 7th Fleet.

TV Analysis Of Weinberger Tour

OW031125 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1400 GMT 1 Apr 86

[From the Novosti newscast; Yevdokimov commentary]

[Text] U.S. Defense Secretary Weinberger has left for a 2-week tour of Asian and Pacific countries. Our commentary:

[Yevdokimov] Hello, comrades. The current trip of the Pentagon chief to the Asia and Pacific region and its purpose are nothing else but a routine proof of the U.S. Administration's aggressive policy. Washington is striving to create a new line of U.S. advanced nuclear bases on the borders of Asia. Hundreds of Pentagon objectives are operating on the territories of Asian and Pacific countries. Nuclear ammunition is kept in a state of constant readiness aboard ships of the U.S. 7th Fleet, which is operating in the Pacific and Indian Ocean basins. The fleet is being provided with Tomahawk cruise missiles equipped with nuclear warheads. But even this seems to be insufficient for the United States. It is trying to convince the people of the countries in the region that that the Soviet threat is hanging over them, and that for this reason it is necessary to expand U.S. military aid. And this is the reason why Weinberger has gone to South Korea, Japan, the Philippines, Thailand, and Australia. He will try to achieve closer involvement of these countries in the large-scale militaristic preparations being conducted by the United States, not only in the Asia and Pacific region but in the entire world.

Special attention is being paid to Weinberger's visit to Japan. He hopes to push the Japanese Government to adopt a decision on joining the U.S. Strategic Defense Initiative, which is known to be aimed at militarizing space. These then are the objectives of the Pentagon chief's trip. They cannot be called anything but aggressive. The people of the Asian and Pacific countries have come to understand this more and more clearly. This is the reason for the growing protest against U.S. militaristic policy, and the spread of the movement for creating nuclear-free zones in this part of the world, for security and peace in the entire world.

SOVIET AMBASSADOR MEETS JAPANESE FISHERIES MINISTER

OW031123 Tokyo KYODO in English 1119 GMT 3 Apr 86

[Excerpt] Tokyo, April 3 KYODO -- Soviet Ambassador Petr Andreyevich Abrasimov indicated Thursday his government would welcome a visit to Moscow of the Japanese fisheries minister for top-level talks on fishery problems pending between the two countries. Abrasimov told Agriculture, Forestry and Fisheries Minister Tsutomu Haneda that he believes Moscow would decide on Haneda's visit Thursday night or Friday morning.

The Haneda-Abrasimov meeting took place at Haneda's office at Haneda's request to review the deadlocked Japan-Soviet fishery talks in Moscow. During the meeting Haneda asked for a quick Soviet decision on his Moscow visit in order to break the deadlock.

FURTHER ON DPRK DELEGATION'S VISIT

Moscow Korean Comments

SK040356 Moscow International Service in Korean 1330 GMT 3 Apr 86

[Article by station commentator (Vladimir Koryorov) on a visit to Moscow by a delegation of the DPRK's Supreme People's Assembly [SPA] led by Yang Hyong-sop]

[Text] A meeting in Moscow reaffirmed the resolve of the two countries of the Soviet Union and Korea to strengthen cooperation to guarantee peace in the Far East and Asia.

The Soviet Union and the DPRK have put forward various proposals to guarantee security in Asia and the Pacific where the situation is invariably strained because of the instigation of the U.S. ruling circles. To give an example, Moscow has proposed that talks be held to take measures to create trust in the Far East. Pyongyang has proposed that nuclear weapons be completely removed from the Korean peninsula.

In addition to this, there have been constructive initiatives taken by other socialist countries. For example, Mongolia has proposed that the countries in Asia and the Pacific sign a treaty of nonaggression and nonuse of force. Along with Laos and Cambodia, Vietnam has made efforts to change Southeast Asia into a peace zone.

As proposed by the Soviet Union, these appeals of the socialist countries in implementing their foreign policies, along with (words indistinct] of other Asian peace-loving states, can present effective measures to solve the question regarding security in Asia at a [word indistinct] (?forum).

Other stands contrary to this toward the prevailing situations in broad areas of the world exist. The junket to Asia by U.S. Secretary Weinberger this time is proof of this. He stated that it is necessary to leave the U.S. military installations in the Philippines. The Pentagon boss promised to introduce F-16 fighter-bombers capable of delivering nuclear weapons and [words indistinct] into Seoul. He held talks to strengthen the aggressive alliance among Japan, South Korea, and the United States, and called on the Japanese Government to participate in the SDI.

The military [words indistinct] against sovereign states are expanding in this way.

DPRK AMBASSADOR SIGNS COOPERATION ACCORD IN USSR

LD041221 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1100 GMT 4 Apr 86

[Text] A plan for cultural and scientific cooperation between the USSR and the DPRK for 1986-1987 was signed today in Moscow. It provides for the further development of cooperation in the fields of culture, art, science, education, the training of national cadres, cinematography, television, broadcasting, health care, and sports. The plan was signed by Kapitsa, deputy foreign minister of the USSR, and Kwon Hui-Kyong, DRPK ambassador to the USSR.

SRV OFFICIAL DETAILS SOVIET SCIENTIFIC ASSISTANCE

OW021307 Moscow International Service in Vietnamese 1000 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] Dear listeners: In many letters to our station, Vietnamese listeners have suggested that we give a more specific introduction to Soviet-Vietnamese cooperation in the area of science and technology.

We think that not only the writers of those letters but many other listeners will also be interested in listening to the following statement by Comrade Dang Huu, chairman of the Vietnam State Science and Technology Commission.

[Begin recording] After more than 40 years of building, with the selfless assistance given in a noble spirit of proletarian internationalism of the Soviet Union and other socialist countries, Vietnam's science and technology have made significant progress.

From only about 1,000 cadres of high school level and above in the post-August Revolution period, Vietnam now has a million-strong contingent of scientific-technical cadres, including 650,000 vocational-middle-school cadres, 350,000 college graduate cadres, and about 5,000 with doctorates and masters of science degrees. Nearly 90 colleges and 165 scientific research institutes have been built. Our present scientific-technical cadre contingent is able to solve, basically, all of our country's scientific-technological problems.

The Soviet Union has made very great contributions to our country's scientific-technological potential. It has helped train 20,000 college level cadres and 2,500 cadres with MS degrees that is, more than one-half of our country's MS and MA degrees. Most Vietnamese PhD's are Soviet-trained. The Soviet Union has helped build Hanoi Polytechnic College, our country's key technical-industrial college. It has also helped build and equip the Vietnam Institute of Science, our country's largest scientific center. The center has 23 specialized research institutes that are quite well equipped and a strong cadre contingent. The Soviet Union has also helped restore and develop the Dalat Nuclear Research Center, which is operating successfully. Many other scientific establishments, equipped with Soviet assistance, and many joint Soviet-Vietnamese laboratories and research centers have also been built. These include the antilightning research station at Gia Sang, Thai Nguyen Province; the Tropical Metereological Research Institute, the Typhoon Prevention Research Institute; the Plant Species Research Centers; the joint Vietnamese-Soviet Sericulture Center, and so forth.

It may be said that the great, valuable, and efficient Soviet assistance is invariably found in all scientific-technological domains -- natural science, social science, and technical science. It is also invariably found in areas from basic surveys domains -- such as geology, hydrology, and metereology -- to the fields of agricultural and industrial production, construction, communications, transportation, and so forth. From the mountains and forests to the delta, the sea, and underground work, close Soviet-Vietnamese scientific-technological cooperation is also present. The Soviet Union has helped Vietnam's science and technology develop and mature into what it is today.

Very great, encouraging results have also been noted in scientific-technological cooperation between the Vietnam State Science and Technology Commission and the Soviet State Committee for Science and Technology. Since the April 1959 signing of the Soviet-Vietnamese scientific-technological sector has constantly developed. From 1959 to our country's national reunification in 1975, Soviet-Vietnamese cooperation was mainly for training scientific and technical cadres and for building a number of establishments for scientific and technological research. In the 1976-80 period, cooperation was on a long-term basis, including great projects such as the antilightning measures for high-voltage power lines, with an investment of more than R2 million.

From 1981-85, scientific-technological cooperation was further developed, with 88 long-term projects. The cooperation focused on the key fields of agriculture, aquatic products, public health, food industry, light industry, chemicals, coal mining, power, engineering, metallurgy, communications, construction, geological surveys, and so forth. Participating were 23 ministries and sectors.

To exchange experience and for research purposes, the Soviet Union has dispatched to Vietnam more than 350 specialists and Vietnam has sent over 1,500 to the USSR. The Soviet Union has sent to Vietnam many scientific and technological documents, including standardization documents and many descriptive documents and documents on inventions.

Soviet-Vietnamese scientific-technological cooperation has gradually switched from the key task of training cadres to solving specific, important scientific-technological problems to help Vietnam further its ecosocial development. The scientific cooperation has become increasingly linked to Vietnamese-Soviet cooperation in economics and trade. The cooperation is organized with increasingly better planning and focus. Cooperation projects have increasingly clear objectives of transferring new technologies and industries to Vietnam to solve pressing technical problems in production.

Promising forms of cooperation have emerged: joint research projects, laboratories, research centers, which the Soviet Union helps equip, and where Soviet and Vietnamese specialist conduct joint research for objectives of mutual concern.

In short, Vietnamese-Soviet scientific-technological cooperation, mainly Soviet assistance to Vietnam, is very great and fruitful. It is progressing toward closer association with economic cooperation, and cooperation efficiency continues to be upgraded.

Entering the 1986-90 5-year plan, both sides have asserted that it is necessary to further intensify their scientific-technological cooperation, to further focus on priority fields, and to bring about results more rapidly in order to further economic development and enhance the all-around Vietnamese-Soviet cooperation. Both sides have agreed on many new forms of cooperation. Vietnamese-Soviet scientific-technological cooperation is particularly closely linked to CEMA's comprehensive program for advanced science and technology through the year 2000. We consider the prospects very bright.

Vietnamese scientific-technological cadres are extremely grateful to the party, government, and state of the Soviet Union and to Soviet scientists for upholding the spirit of proletarian internationalism and providing wholehearted assistance to help develop Vietnam's science and technology. BULGARIAN PARTY CONGRESS CONTINUES IN SOFIA

Economic Shifts Discussed

LD032237 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1700 GMT 3 Apr 86

[Report by special correspondent Igor Kudrin in Sofia -- from the "Vremya" newscast]

[Excerpts] The 13th BCP Congress is in its 2d day. The attention of the capital's inhabitants and all working people in the republic is riveted on it. Taking part in the forum's work is a delegation of the CPSU led by Comrade Ryzhkov. From the congress tribune the delegates are speaking about ways of solving the large-scale problems of socialist construction, about the most important task of the present 5-year period -- qualitative shifts in the economy. In the words of many speakers, the 27th CPSU Congress, which evinced a Leninist approach to questions of internal life and the international situation, was a worthy example for them.

Tyzhkov Tours Technology Center

LD031921 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 1445 GMT 3 Apr 86

[Text] Sofia, 3 Apr (TASS) -- The CPSU delegation headed by Nikolay Ryzhkov, member of the Politburo of the CPSU Central Committee, chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers, which is taking part in the work of the 13th Bulgarian CP Congress, today acquainted itself with the achievements of socialist Bulgaria in the field of scientific-technical progress. The Soviet guests visited the Central Institute of Computer Technology in Sofia, which is developing for the Bulgarian national economy and other countries of the socialist community trial models of electronic equipment and means of automation of engineering work.

The members of the delegation viewed models of electronic computer machines. Nikolay Ryzhkov made an entry in the honorary visitors book of the institute and wished the collective creative successes in developing and creating computer technology.

The CPSU delegation visited the Sofia Institute of Technical Cybernetics and Robotechnics which is playing an active part in deepening integration between the research organizations of the socialist countries.

At the press center of the 13th BCP Congress, the CPSU delegation held a press conference for Bulgarian and foreign journalists on the work of the party forum. Georgiy Razumovskiy, secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, spoke of the recently held 27th CPSU Congress, which was held in a creative, businesslike atmosphere, in a spirit of Leninist Bolshevist traditions and which set out the party's general line in the field of domestic and foreign policy.

Zhikov Receives Soviets

LD032311 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1800 GMT 3 Apr 86

[Excerpt] Today the CPSU delegation led by Comrade Ryzhkov, as well as other foreign delegations, visited the mausoleum of Georgiy Dimitrov, the great son of the Bulgarian people, and laid a wreath. A wreath was laid to the monument of Vladimir Ilich Lenin, the leader of the world proletariat, in the center of Sofia.

This after the CPSU delegation visited the town of Pravets in Sofia Okrug. Leaders of the town acquainted the Soviet guests with its economic and cultural achievements. After that, a talk between the CPSU delegation and Todor Zhivkov, who had arrived in Pravets, was held in a warm and comradely atmosphere.

PARTY, STATE HAIL HUNGARIAN LEADERS ON LIBERATION

LD031423 Moscow TASS in English 1413 GMT 3 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 3 TASS -- The Central Committee of the CPSU, the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet and the Soviet Government have cordially congratulated the leaders of the Hungarian People's Republic on the occasion of the 41st anniversary of the liberation of Hungary from fascism.

"More than forty years have passed since the memorable date of April 4, 1945, which became a turning point in the history of Hungary", says a telegram issued here today. "Broad prospects for a new life free from all forms of exploitation and oppression opened up before the Hungarian people as a result of the victory over fascism and of the liberation of the country by the Soviet Army."

Having embarked upon the road of socialist construction, the Hungarian working people under the leadership of the party of the communists and in close cooperation with the Soviet Union and other fraternal socialist countries have effected deep political and socio-economic transformations within a historically short period. The considerable strides which Hungary has made in developing the economy, science, culture, and in raising the well-being of the working people show the vital power of Marxism-Leninism, the advantages and wide potentialities of the socialist system".

The telegram emphasizes that the dynamically developing Soviet-Hungarian relations serve the basic interests of the Soviet and Hungarian peoples and of the entire socialist community.

"The strengthening of the cohesion and unity of action of the countries which are parties to the Warsaw Treaty, which is one of main factors of the successful struggle for a radical improvement of the situation in the world, is of great importance at the present crucial stage of international development, in the conditions when the reactionary forces of imperialism, of U.S. one, in first place, heighten the nuclear threat. The course of peace and cooperation which the USSR, Hungary and other countries of the socialist community steadfastly follow reliably counters imperialism's aggressive policy", the telegram says.

REPORTAGE, COMMENT ON SINOWATZ DEPARTURE, VISIT

Departs Moscow

LD031538 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1400 GMT 3 Apr 86

[Text] Fred Sinowatz, federal chancellor of Austria, left the Soviet Union today. He was in Moscow as a guest of the Soviet Government, taking part in the opening of the national exhibition "Contemporary Austrian Industrial Equipment."

He was seen off at the airport by Comrade Talyzin, candidate member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo first deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers, and chairmen of the USSR Gosplan; and other officials.

Before his departure, Sinowatz visited the Institute of Space Research at the USSR Academy of Sciences.

IZVESTIYA Reports Visit

PM040857 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 3 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 3

[TASS report: "Cooperation Strengthening"]

[Text] On 1 April, Austrian Federal Chancellor F. Sinowatz arrived in Moscow to take part in the opening of the national exhibition "Modern Austrian Industrial Equipment" as a guest of the Soviet Government.

He was met at the airport by N.V. Talyzin, candidate member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo, first deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers, and chairman of the USSR Gosplan; deputy chairmen of the USSR Council of Ministers; USSR ministers, and other officials.

The Austrian and Soviet state flags were raised.

On the same day N.V. Talyzin held a meeting with F. Sinowatz. Questions of Soviet-Austrian economic, scientific, and technical cooperation were discussed. Particular attention was paid to making use of existing reserves to further develop Soviet-Austrian trade and economic relations on the basis of equitability and mutual benefit.

The following took part in the conversation, which took place in a friendly atmosphere: G.I. Marchuk and I.S. Silayev, deputy chairmen of the USSR Council of Ministers; B.I. Aristov and N.S. Konarev, USSR ministers; M.I. Yefremov, Soviet ambassador to Austria; F. Lacina, federal minister for transport and nationalized industries; R. Sallinger, president of the Austrian Economic Confederation; H. Grubmayer, Austrian ambassador to the USSR; and other Austrian officials who were accompanying the federal chancellor on his trip.

The Soviet and Austrian flags were raised above the largest pavilion at the Moscow exhibition complex on Krasnaya Presnya. It was there, on 2 April, that the opening of the Austrian national exhibition "Modern Austrian Industrial Equipment" took place.

F. Sinowatz spoke during the ceremony. I am very pleased, he said, that I am able to be in Moscow in person at the opening of the exhibition "Modern Austrian Industrial Equipment." The industrial products on display here have been specially selected in light of the Draft Basic Guidelines for the Economic and Social Development of the USSR for 1986-1990 and the Period Through the Year 2000.

I am pleased to note that Austro-Soviet economic relations are marked by particular stability and are not subject to any kind of external influence. For decades they have been developing in an upward direction to the benefit of both countries. But, despite their high level, there are undoubtedly still large reserves, which we intend to tap in the future.

It is no accident that this exhibition is being held at the beginning of the Soviet 5-year plan, in which the USSR, exploiting the most up-to-date achievements of science and technology, has embarked on a course of considerably speeding up the economy's development. I am certain that advanced Austrian technology can make an important contribution to it.

Successful trading relations, the federal chancellor went on, presuppose the existence of relations of trust between Austrian firms and Soviet organizations. But I want to stress that good general political conditions are very important for this too. And both exist in the relations between our two countries.

He noted that ending the arms race, which could lead to strengthened political stability, is a vital task for the present day. We all have a very pressing need for it in order to realize our social and economic goals and ensure peaceful achievements for the benefit of our peoples, the federal chancellor stressed.

In his speech, N.V. Talyzin noted that the Austrian federal chancellor's participation in the opening of the exhibition is yet further evidence of how much importance Austria attaches to developing economic ties and strengthening good-neighborly relations with the USSR. Both sides, the speaker said, have every reason to believe that the diverse Soviet-Austrian cooperation, based on the sound foundation of the 1955 State Treaty and the law on Austria's permanent neutrality, is developing productively on the whole. This exhibition that is opening -- one of the largest ever mounted by Austria abroad -- is a graphic example of that.

Maintaining and strengthening good-neighborliness with all countries, including Austria, the speaker said, is the consistent, principled stance of the Soviet Union, confirmed by the 27th CPSU Congress.

R. Sallinger and Ye. P. Pitovranov, chairman of the presidium of the USSR Chamber of Trade and Industry, also spoke. The following took part in the ceremonial opening of the exhibition: G.I. Marchuk, I.S. Silayev, and B.I. Aristov; the leaders of a number of other ministries and departments; M.T. Yefremov; and other officials and representatives of the capital's public; and from the Austrian side: F: Lacina, H. Grumbmayer, and others.

An inspection of the exhibition, organized by the Austrian Economic Confederation with the assitance of the USSR Chamber of Trade and Industry, took place. The numerous exhibits on show from more than 180 Austrian firms demonstrate Austria's considerable achievements in developing various sectors of industry, science, technology, transport, and agriculture. There is, in particular, a wide display of electronics, process automation devices, machines, and equipment.

The exhibition vividly illustrates the potential for further developing effective, mutually advantageous business cooperation between the USSR and Austria.

On the same day a luncheon was given in F. Sinowatz' honor on behalf of the USSR Government. During the luncheon, which took place in a friendly atmosphere, N.V. Talyzin and F. Sinowatz exchanged brief speeches.

The luncheon was attended by I.V. Arkhipov and M.S. Murakhovskiy, first deputy chairmen of the USSR Council of Ministers; deputy chairmen of the USSR Council of Ministers; leaders of a number of USSR ministries and departments; and other officials.

UK 'SOLIDARITY' WITH U.S. NUCLEAR POLICY VIEWED

[Own correspondent A. Krivopalov dispatch: "To Please 'Big Brother'"]

[Text] London -- Whitehall did not react to the provocative explosion of the nuclear device in Nevada in any way, although the media echo transmitted its reverberations to Albion's shores without delay. It is difficult for London officialdom to express surprise, not to mention dissatisfaction, on this subject. The Tories' stance on this issue was decided a long time ago.

The White House could be sure on this occasion too that at the crucial moment its most disciplined and devoted ally would cause the Washington administration no trouble. On the contrary, it would set an example to the other Atlantic partners how unreserved NATO solidarity must be demonstrated.

You get the impression that the Conservative government, which until quite recently displayed the will to think and act independently in the international arena in individual cases, has now definitively decided to leave this mission to others. If this were just a matter of bilateral relations between Great Britain and the United States it would not be so bad because it would concern Britons alone, even though it is true that it would dent their sense of national pride. In the given case the negative consequences of the readiness to compromise are much more far-reaching.

The Tory authorities must be aware that the provocatively demonstrative nature of the nuclear tests in Nevada is designed to thwart the concusion of a comprehensive agreement on ending nuclear weapons tests. In this context, it is possible to say with full justification: By carrying out the explosions in a U.S. state, the United States wanted to undermine the hopes of peace-loving people at home, in Britain, and everywhere that the nuclear race may be stopped. H. Pick, a well-known London diplomatic commentator has correctly remarked: "The United States does not intend to conclude a test ban treaty even if acceptable verification [proverka] methods which inspire trust are submitted for negotiation."

These words express the essence of the problem precisely. Washington is trying to heap as many obstacles as possible on the path toward businesslike, serious, and honest talks, and by toeing its line, the Thatcher government has accepted a great responsibility.

The arguments you currently hear from people belonging to the upper echelons of the Conservative Party do not hold water. They merely parrot Washington's thesis that nuclear tests must continue in order to verify the reliability and effectiveness of nuclear weapons.

To this argument, if you can call it that, they add another, no less dubious one. Britain allegedly needs to renew its nuclear armor. Yet without a fitting this cannot be done...

The head of the Tory Cabinet added the finishing touch. In her interview with THE TIMES, M. Thatcher stated frankly: "I cannot imagine a world without nuclear weapons." In other words, all attempts to reach agreement on arms limitation and on ending nuclear weapons tests as a first step are a futile exercise.

London is trying to underate the significance of its nuclear "deterrent," present and future. However, the U.S. Trident-2 missiles with which the British submarine fleet is to be fitted are not something to be trifled with. They sharply increase Britain's nuclear potential.

Arms race opponents in Britain criticize the Tory leadership for both deliberately spending vast sums on the implementation of the program and for the joint U.S.-British nuclear weapons tests which have been -- and judging by appearances will be -- held in Nevada. Many Britons are alarmed at the prospect of Britian's continued participation in the nuclear arms race which the Pentagon intends to extend to space.

There are more than enough grounds for concern. While Whitehall officials are trying to reassure Parliament, and the public in general, by claiming that the British Government merely signed an agreement on the participation of private firms and scientists in the SDI program and that the experiments connected with it are a matter of the distant future, information received from across the ocean testifies to something quite different. Is it not true that the Livermore Laboratory is working on a nuclear-pumped x-ray laser? The U.S. press has reported that the first tests of this weapon have already been carried out at the nuclear test site in Nevada.

Ridiculing the absurd claims of people who regard the USSR's honest and constructive proposals as mere propaganda, the London newspaper THE GUARDIAN writes that Washington is scared by the growing support for the stance of the USSR which is calling for an end to nuclear weapons tests. The newspaper published its editorial comments under a characteristic headline "When Good Will Is Put to the Test." Even THE TIMES was forced to admit in somewhat confused tones: "The holding of nuclear experiments at a time when the Russians have called for ending them seems incomprehensible and unnatural to many people in the world." Likewise it seems incomprehensible and unnatural to many Britons why official London, instead of heeding the sensible appeals is speaking with Washington's voice, rather than its own in trying to justify the nuclear explosions.

FRG CRUISE MISSILES IN STATE OF 'READINESS'

[TASS report: "They Are Forcing On..."]

[Text] Bonn, 28 Mar -- The first battery of U.S. nuclear cruise missiles delivered to the FRG this January and deployed in the forest area of Hunsrueck (Rheinland-Pfalz) has been brought into combat readiness. This was reported by REUTER, citing an FRG Defense Ministry spokesman. Local observers point out that the Pentagon and the NATO bloc have demonstrated yet again their intention to force the deployment of 90 cruise missiles on FRG territory provided for by the notorious 1979 NATO "win-track solution." In accordance with the NATO schedule for deploying the new U.S. nuclear missile weapons in Western Europe, it is planned to carry out the deployment of cruise missiles in the FRG in 1987.

REPORT ON ITALIAN PARLIAMENTARY SDI DEBATE

LD032314 Moscow TASS in English 2144 GMT 3 Apr 86

[Text] Rome April 4 TASS -- Under Washington's pressure the Italian Government is increasingly involving the country in the implementation of Reagan's "star wars" programme. During the debates held on Thursday at a joint meeting of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate and the Senate's Defence Committee, Foreign Minister Giulio Andreotti and Defense Minister Giovanni Spadolini openly declared in favour of the need for the participation of Italian firms and companies in the research stage of SDI and for holding talks with the USA to conclude appropriate agreements at a government level.

Representatives of the left opposition forces sharply criticized the government's stand during the debate. Representative of the Italian Communist Party A. Pasquini demanded the government's promises that it would not conclude any secret agreements with the United States. Besides that, the ruling cabinet must put the question of SDI to the discussion of Parliament before signing any document.

Senator from left independents E. Milani said that Italy had already actually joined SDI without any decision by Parliament on this score. He said the Italian Government had acted irresponsibly and "underestimated the political and military aspects of President Reagan's initiative'." The senator submitted a draft resolution which contains a demand to the Italian Government to turn down the U.S. "star wars" programme and hold debates on the problem in the Chamber of Deputies.

[Text] Ankara April 1 TASS -- Turkish warships today began exercises codenamed "Deniz Kurdu 1-86" at the Black Sea and the Sea of Marmara.

As was reported by the ANADOLU AJANSI news agency, various naval actions and operations to ensure cooperation between combatant ships and aviation are being tested in the course of the exercises to last till April 11. Service firing will also be held.

NETHERLANDS PARLIAMENTARIAN MEETS WITH OFFICIALS

Holds Talks With Tolkonov

LD031022 Moscow TASS in English 0950 GMT 3 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 3 TASS -- Lev Tolkunov, chairman of the Soviet of the Union of the Supreme Soviet of the USSR, today met with Relus Ter Beek, chairman of the standing Commission on Foreign Relations of the second chamber of the Dutch Parliament.

An opinion was expressed during the conversation that inter-parliamentary contacts contribute to developing relations between the two countries on the basis of the principles of equality, mutual benefit, non-interference and respect for sovereignty.

An exchange of opinions took place on the more pressing problems of disarmament. Special attention was paid to the Soviet Union's latest proposals reflecting its genuine desire for fundamental improvements in the international situation and for a real step to ending the nuclear arms race.

Confers With Zagladin

LD031911 Moscow TASS in English 1825 GMT 3 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 3 TASS - Vadim Zagladin, secretary of the Foreign Affairs Commission of the Council of the Union of the USSR Supreme Soviet, has met today with Relus Ter Beek, chairman of the Commission for Foreign Affairs of the second chamber of the Dutch Parliament. In the course of the talk the guest's attention was attracted to the USSR's latest peace initiatives containing a real programme for putting an end to the nuclear arms race and stage-by-stage elimination of nuclear weapons. Special attention was devoted to the problem of general and complete ending of nuclear testing. Both sides expressed the view of the need for the speediest resolution of that issue, which is vital to the cause of peace and universal security.

POLYAKOV MEETS AL-ASAD, KHADDAM IN DAMASCUS

PM041037 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 4 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 4

[TASS report: "Strengthening Contacts"]

[Text] Damascus, 3 Apr -- President H. al-Asad of Syria has received here V.P. Polyakov, member of the USSR Foreign Ministry Collegium. Greetings were conveyed to the Syrian head of state from M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee. During their conversation the situation in the Middle East and questions of mutual interest were discussed.

H. al-Asad expressed satisfaction with the relations of cooperation between the USSR and Syria and confirmed his country's firm commitment to the principled course of opposing the plans of imperialism and Zionism.

On the same day V.P. Polyakov met with Syrian Vice President 'A. al-H. Khaddam.

LYBYA'S AL QADHDHAFI PRAISES SOVIET SUPPORT

PM031316 Moscow KRASNAYA ZVEZDA in Russian 30 Mar 86 Second Edition p 3

[TASS report under the general headline "U.S. Cynicism and Libyan Resolve"]

[Text] Tripoli, 29 Mar -- The Libyan people's resolve to continue to steadfastly oppose any infringements by U.S. imperialism on the country's freedom, independence, and sovereignty was reaffirmed by M. al-Qadhdhafi, leader of the Libyan revolution. Speaking in Tripoli on the 16th anniversary of the evacuation of British troops from Libya, he stated that the military adventure of the U.S. military in the Gulf of Sidra has led to a political defeat for Washington, exposing once again its aggressive essence to the entire world. Noting the important role of international solidarity with the Jamahiriyah on the part of the world's progressive forces, M. al-Qadhdhafi made a high assessment of the Soviet position of support for the Libyan people in opposing imperialist aggression. This position, he stressed, has become yet another reaffirmation of the Soviet Union's sincere friendship with the Arab peoples.

The Soviet Union, M. al-Qadhdhafi stated, has again given its Arab friends, above all the Libyans, sincere political support. We must express gratitude to the USSR for this stance and record it in the history of Libyan-Soviet friendship which is based on mutual respect. We and the Soviet Union, the Libyan leader stressed, are united by the commonality of the goals of the struggle for peace and progress and against our common enemies -- imperialism, racism, Zionism, and reaction.

PRAVDA CITES CAIRO PAPER ON EGYPTIAN REBUFF TO U.S.

PM031323 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 2 Apr 86 First Edition p 5

[TASS report: "Resolute Rejection: AL-AHRAM on Egypt's Position"]

[Text] Cairo, 1 Apr -- I. Nafi', chief editor of the newspaper AL-AHRAM, has written an article on Egypt's position in relation to the anti-Libyan campaign being conducted by the United States.

Despite Egyptian-American military cooperation, he writes, Egypt has three times refused to take part in military operations against Libya. It is no secret that the United States has repeatedly tried to urge Egypt toward anti-Libyan actions, which it has categorically rejected.

In mid-July last year, the author points out, a conference was held in the White House on the initiative of R. McFarlane, then national security adviser to the U.S. President. It adopted a decision on carrying out a military action against Libya.

Its implementation was agreed to by the White House, the CIA, and the State Department, and it was noted that it must be carried out with "a friendly state in the region." J. Poindexter, who replaced McFarlane, visited Cairo in an effort to involve Egypt in this action. But the Egyptian leadership declined to take part in the plan's implementation.

At the end of December 1985 the United States again planned to involve Egypt in a military action against Libya. A high-ranking U.S. spokesman again arrived in Cairo on the same mission as his predecessor, and again he received a resolute refusal from the Egyptian leadership. At the beginning of this year a new high-ranking White House envoy appeared in Cairo for consultations on the same question. For the third time Egypt rejected the U.S. proposal to take part in an action against the neighboring state.

It is well known, I. Nafi' notes, that the Americans themselves have already announced their attempts to persuade Egypt to take part in operations against Libya. However, President H. Mubarak has stated repeatedly that Egypt will not turn its weapons against an Arab state. He has three times reaffirmed this position during the Americans' attempts to persuade him to take part in military actions against Libya.

IRAQI PEACE, SOLIDARITY DELEGATION IN MOSCOW

PM031309 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 26 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 4

[TASS report: "Moscow's Guests"]

[Text] A delegation of the Iraqi Council for Peace and Solidarity comprising I.A. 'Ali, deputy secretary general of the council, and S.K. Hammudi, member of the council presidium and chairman of the Iraqi National Assembly Committee for Arab and Foreign Affairs, is in Moscow at the invitation of the Soviet Committee for Solidarity With Asian and African Countries.

Meetings have been held at the Soviet solidarity committee, the Soviet Committee for the Defense of Peace, and the USSR Union of Journalists.

The Iraqi delegation stressed that the 27th CPSU Congress' initiatives aimed at solving international security problems and the search for a just, peaceful settlement of centers of tension are meeting with broad understanding and support among the Iraqi public.

An exchange of opinions on the Middle East and the Persian Gulf was held. The representatives of the Soviet and Iraqi public confirmed that a just, lasting Middle East settlement can only be reached on a principled basis which provides for the withdrawal of Israeli troops from all occupied territories and the safeguarding of the Arab people of Palestine's inalienable national rights, including the right of self-determination and the creation of their own independent state.

The sides expressed support for an immediate end to the Iran-Iraq war, which runs counter to the national interests of the peoples of both countries and leads to a growth in tension in adjoining regions. In this regard, support was expressed for the efforts of the progressive peace-loving public, which advocates the speediest possible political settlement of the Iran-Iraq conflict, whose continuation is fraught with the danger of imperialist interference in the affairs of the region's peoples.

Noting the important role being played in current international relations by democratic antiwar movements, the sides confirmed their desire to continue to promote the vigorous activity of the AAPSO and the WPC in the struggle for peace and social progress.

WEEKLY SAYS ISRAELI GENERALS DRAWING UP WAR PLANS

PM031453 Moscow LITERATURNAYA GAZETA in Russian 26 Mar 86 p 9

[Igor Belyayev "Political Observer's Notes": "What Peres Has on His Mind..."]

[Text] In Israel Prime Minister Peres has been discussing peace in the Middle East for over a year. Using "bold" statements or spreading blatantly speculative rumors with the aid of his office, the head of the Israeli Government has persistently created the impression that under his leadership the country will move forward even to the point of solving the Palestinian problem. Peres has frequently expressed his readiness to begin talks with King Husayn and to "exchange" the occupied Arab lands for peace.

At the same time, the present head of the Israeli Government has not rejected the idea of talks of another kind: between Israel and some kind of Jordanian-Palestinian delegation. To prepare for the talks Jordan and the PLO have concluded the well-known Amman agreement (February 1985). The United States has declared its support for it. Washington, to encourage the Arabs' separatism, has expressed the readiness to hold a preliminary meeting with a Jordanian-Palestinian delegation. Separate talks have been persistently set against the idea of convening an international conference on the Middle East with the participation of all interested sides, including the PLO.

Peres has not tired of stressing that talks with a Jordanian-Palestinian delegation, if they do take place, will be on the basis of the well-known UN Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338. In Israel this has generated what is almost an eruption of enthusiasm. People there interpret the two resolutions in their own way: not only with regard to the occupied Arab territories (Israel, it is said, should not give up all the Arab lands seized in June 1967) but also with regard to the Palestinian problem. Thus, Resolution 242 discusses only the Palestinian refugees and the question of creating an Arab Palestinian state therefore does not arise.

On an anti-Palestinian wave, Peres has gained points as the sole architect of the "Israeli peace" attended by success. His popularity, growing albeit only slowly, has made it possible to think that by the summer of 1986 he will succeed in "exploding" the Labor Party coalition with "Likud," dissolving the present government, holding early parliamentary elections, winning them, and becoming sole prime minister. Then, Peres calculates, he will be able to continue to "search for peace" with the Arabs and with the "accommodating Palestinians," without the PLO, of course! By that time, as a result of intimidating terrorist acts like those committed at the Rome and Vienna airports at the end of last year, the PLO's discrediting will have peaked and everyone will disgustedly try to forget it as a nightmare.

One more important detail. Tel Aviv has deliberately unleashed the malicious rumor that the Soviet Union is prepared, "in exchange" for Israel's consent to involve the USSR in a Middle East settlement, to restore diplomatic relations with Israel and open some kind of "air bridge" between Moscow and Tel Aviv to maintain the emigration to Tel Aviv of Soviet citizens of Jewish nationality who will be settled on the occupied West Bank of the Jordan. This rumor has in no way reflected the true state of affairs, but it has created a background advantageous to Peres.

On 19 February King Husayn stated that his contacts with the PLO on the basis of the Amman agreement were deadlocked. The Palestinians had refused to recognize Resolution 242. The United States had angrily made it clear it would not enter into contact with the PLO. The idea of new separate details remained hanging in the air...

The generals -- with Peres' blessing, of course -- became more active in Tel Aviv. Force should settle everthing! The generals have drafted two scenarios for wars in the Middle East.

The first is a war with Jordan. Some kind of "rebellion" will be provoked against King Husayn. An acute situation will arise, not excluding his deposition. Taking advantage of the "rebellion," Israel will attack Jordan. At the same time hundreds of thousands of Palestinians will be driven from the West Bank of the Jordan. A fourth "wave" of Palestinian refugees will appear. The United States will supply Israel with arms and financial support. After all, the U.S. ally in the Middle East "will be in need of assistance."

The second is a war with Syria. As soon as Damascus makes its next "mistake," Israel will immediately take advantage of it. Its strike will put that Arab country back many years in military terms. The "road to peace" in the Middle East from a "position of strength" advantageous to Israel will be cleared!

As recently as 18 March this year Peres suddenly started talking of Israel's "fears" of a possibel attempt by Syria to initiate...a "limited" war with a view of regaining the Golan Heights.

That is the background to the Israeli "peacemaking" efforts observed recently.

But what about the Palestinians? Historical experience attests that while their leaders struggled for the just cause of the Palestinians and Arabs and against separatism, they were attended by support, which by relying on they achieved considerable successes. As soon as some of them embarked on the path of compromise with the United States and Israel at any price, the Palestinian resistance movement split, and it is still suffering losses. It has begun to be openly manipulated by those who have never considered a truly just solution to the Palestinian problem. This course of the quest for peace in the Middle East only plays into the hand of its overt opponents.

'MEANINGLESS' IRAN IRAQ WAR ONLY BENEFITS U.S.

NC031221 Moscow in Persian to Iran 1000 GMT 3 Apr 86

[Unattributed commentary]

[Text] The Iran-Iraq war continues and every day reports are received of air operations, fierce artillery battles, and clashes between the armored and tank units of both sides. How much is this war, the bloodiest in recent years, which has been going for for more than 5 years and is devoid of all logic and meaning, costing Iran and Iraq?

To begin with, it should be said that both sides are suffering heavy human losses in the war. According to statistics published in the world press, more than 1 million have died or been wounded on both sides, and thousands are in captivity. This meaningless war of attrition is inflicting heavy economic, social, and political damage on both countries. First and foremost, oil production has plummeted. Oil production in Iraq fell from 175 million tons in 1979 to 50 million tons in 1983, while the drop in Iran was from 153 million tons to 98 million tons in the same years. The Iraqis have declared the northern section of the Persian Gulf an exclusion zone and are striking at tankers and cargo ships headed for Iranian ports. As a result, Iran's oil exports are threatened. The Iranians, in turn, attack ships carrying oil from the Arab countries in the Persian Gulf, in order thus to put pressure on Iraq. According to assessments by experts in the West, this war is costing Iraq $1 billion a month. This has led Iraq not only to halt its loans and financial assistance to other developing countries, but also to become the recipient of $35 billion in foreign loans.

Iraq increased the capacity of oil pipelines to Turkey in order to earn more from oil sales, and two new pipelines are to be built as well. Because of the extensive recruitment of people by the regular Army and the mobilization of a large proportion of the labor force to serve the Popular Army, the Iraqi leaders have had to employ more than 1.5 million foreigners to replace its own workers in order to keep the wheels of its economy turning.

This war and the destruction resulting from it have had a very negative impact on Iran's socio-economic situation and on its domestic policy. It is estimated that between 3 and 5 million people are unemployed in a country with a population of some 42 million. Inflation has reached 40 percent and the cost of living has more than doubled during the past 5 years, while wages have remained unchanged. The 2 million people who have migrated from provinces bordering Iraq add to the unemployment and housing problems. The war has reduced efforts to reform in industry and agriculture to practically zero. Each day of the war is costing Iran $11 million. The country's foreign reserves, which are at present only $3-4 billion, have been depleted. Meanwhile, Iran has postponed payment of 6 billion [currency not specified] on trade agreements.

Therefore, who is benefiting from this war between two Muslim countries? It is primarily the United States which, right from the outset of the conflict, found in this new crisis a suitable pretext to build up its military presence in the region. Throughout the 5 and 1/2 years of this war, Washington has obstinately been implementing this policy, a result of which is the increasing threat of armed imperialist intervention in Persian Gulf affairs. Moreover, as was rightly pointed out by Kuwait's AL-RA'Y AL-'AMM, the existing situation gives the United States and its strategic ally, Israel, an excuse to prevent settlements of the Middle East conflict and the Palestinian problem.

However, other motives and genuine interest in the just resolution, at the earliest possible date, of the Iran-Iraq conflict are the principles that underlie our country's stand on this issue. The Soviet Union categorically calls for an end to the Iran-Iraq and for the use of political methods to resolve these two countries' conflict. This is in the interests of both peoples and in the greater intrest of peace.

PERSIAN GULF ARMS RACE THREATENS WORLD PEACE

GF310640 Moscow in Persian to Iran 1600 GMT 30 Mar 86

[Unattributed commentary: The Arms Race in the Persian Gulf Is a Threat to World Peace"]

[Excerpts] Among the dealers in death and exporters of arms to the states of the Persian Gulf, and in general to the Near and Middle East, the U.S. Government continues to occupy a noteworthy position. Over half of the earnings from arms exports of capitalists countries goes to the United States. Among the West European countries, France and the United Kingdom are [leading arms exporters]. Over the past few decades these three countries have sold arms to the region's countries valued at over $70 billion. It should be added that a large portion of the arms were exported during the past 5 years, which is proof of the imperialist countries' efforts to increase their exports.

Planes, tanks, and artillery equipment of very high destructive power comprise the major portion of such exports. For example, during 1975 over 1,200 fighter and support planes, almost half of which went to the Near and Middle East, 3,000 tanks, and other arms were exported to the region.

(?Before the establishment) of the Islamic Republic of Iran, the United States was the major exporter and used every facility to strenghten the role of the shah of the special gendarme of the Persian Gulf region. The vacuum that was created in the international arms market following the victory of the Iranian revolution in February 1979 is being filled by other Western imperialist countries, such as the United Kingdom, the FRG, Italy, and others.

The arms race in the Persian Gulf, during the present circumstances as the Iran-Iraq war continues, can be dangerous. This arms race stops the normalization of relations between the two enemies through peaceful means and aggravated the crisis in the region in general. This arms race creates the possibility of involving the neighboring countries of the Persian Gulf in the war, which would escalate the war.

The new colonialist policies of the Western imperialists, headed by the United States, in the Near and Middle East, particularly in the Persian Gulf region, has thus turned the area into a major arsenal of deadly weapons and a (?powder keg) that can explode at any moment to create many calamities and problems for the nations fo the region. All of these are truly grounds for concern and worry for the socialist circles of the region.

Soviet-Mozambican Communique

PM031623 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 4 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 4

["Joint Soviet-Mozambican Communique" -- IZVESTIYA headline]

[Text] Samora Moises Machel, chairman of Frelimo and president of the People's Republic of Mozambique, was in the Soviet Union 30 March through 1 April on a friendly working visit at the Soviet leadership's invitation.

During the visit M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, had a talk with S. Machel, in the course of which the Soviet leader spoke of the work that has been launched in the Soviet Union to put into practice the 27th CPSU Congress decisions. There was a comradely exchange of opinions on fundamental questions of the development of friendly Soviet-Mozambican cooperation. President S. Machel reported on Frelimo's activity in mobilizing the Mozambican people to oppose the aggression of the South African racists and their imperialist allies, which is aimed at turning Mozambique aside from its freely chosen path of building a socialist society. He expressed deep gratitude to the CPSU and the Soviet people for their combat solidarity and fraternal selfless assistance and support to the People's Republic of Mozambique. M.S. Gorbachev stated that the Mozambique people can continue, as before, to count firmly on the Soviet people's support in their just struggle.

Topical international problems were also discussed, including the explosive situation in southern Africa.

It was stressed by the Soviet leader that the USSR firmly and consistently advocates a just political settlement in various regions of the world, with unconditional respect for every people's right to independently choose their path of development.

A meeting took place between S. Machel and N.I. Ryzhkov, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers. At the meeting questions connected with the implementation of cooperation between the two countries in various spheres of mutual interest were examined and a number of concrete measures to improve and develop this cooperation were outlined.

Soviet-Mozambican talks were held, with the participation of the following:

On the Soviet side -- A.A. Gromyko, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and chairman of the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium; E.A. Shevardnadze, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and USSR foreign minister; S.L. Sokolov, candidate member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and USSR defense minister; A.F. Dobrynin, secretary of the CPSU Central Committee; B.I. Aristov, member of the CPSU Central Committee and minister of foreign trade; K.F. Katushev, member of the CPSU Central Committee and chairman of the USSR State Committee for Foreign Economic Relations; L.F. Ilichev, candidate member of the CPSU Central Committee and USSR deputy foreign minister; R.A. Ulyanovskiy, deputy chief of the CPSU Central Committee International Section; and Yu.F. Sepelev, USSR ambassador to the People's Republic of Mozambique;

On the Mozambican side -- S. Machel, chairman of Frelimo and president of the People's Republic of Mozambique; J. Chissano, member of the Frelimo Central Committee Politburo and foreign minister; M. Machungo, member of the Frelimo Central Committee Politburo and minister of planning; A. Panguene, secretary of the Frelimo Central Committee and deputy minister of national defense; S. Vieira, member of the Frelimo Central Committee and minister of security; A. Branco, minister of industry and power; H. Patricio, Mozambique ambassador to the USSR; and other Mozambican officials.

In the course of the talks the Mozambican side was briefed on the main results of the 27th CPSU Congress, which elaborated the party's strategic course of accelerating the country's socioeconomic development. Its attention was drawn to the Soviet peace initiatives put forward by the congress, including the concept of creating the foundations of an all-embracing system of international security, as well as the program set forth in the 15 January statement by M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, for the complete elimination of weapons of mass destruction by the end of this century.

S. Machel reaffirmed Mozambique's support for the Soviet Union's peaceful foreign policy initiatives, whose implementation would make it possible to radically improve the present complex situation in the world. He welcomed the Soviet Union's decision to refrain from carrying out nuclear explosions after 31 March this year unless the United States carries out such explosions.

The two sides noted the importance of strengthening the collaboration of all progressive and peace-loving forces in the struggle to prevent thermonuclear catastrophe, strengthen international security, and safeguard the peoples' inalienable rights to independence and social progress. Emphasis was placed on the growing role of the Nonaligned Movement in achieving this goal; the movement's next summit session is to take place in 1986 in southern Africa, in the Zimbabwean capital, Harare.

The Mozambican leader spoke of the problems that his country encounters in the course of the implementation of socioeconomic transformations in the people's interests. He stressed that the main obstacle on this path is the unceasing subversive activity of international imperialism and racism and their agents. However, the Mozambican president again confirmed that Frelimo and the people of Mozambique are fully determined to thwart the intrigues of the enemies who pursue the goal of undermining the Mozambican revolution.

The sides expressed satisfaction with the development of Soviet-Mozambican relations, which are based on the firm foundations of the 1977 Treaty on Friendship and Cooperation, and of the fraternal ties between the CPSU and Frelimo. They noted the usefulness of regular contacts at all levels between representatives of the two parties and states, which help to strengthen our peoples' mutual understanding and fraternal friendship.

The participants in the meetings and conversations once again confirmed the unchanging nature of the course of strengthening relations of close cooperation in various spheres, especially in strengthening the defense capability of People's Mozambique.

In examining the world situation the sides expressed serious concern about its sharp deterioration and the increased military and nuclear danger arising from the aggressive policy of militarist circles of imperialism, which kindle hotbeds of conflict in various regions of the globe and interfere in sovereign states' internal affairs. The coincidence of the viewpoints of the Soviet Union and Mozambique on the main international problems was noted and their mutual desire to continue to cooperate in resolving those problems was declared.

At the talks particular attention was devoted to the situation in southern Africa. The Soviet Union and Mozambique consider the situation that has developed in southern Africa to be explosive. They also believe that the source of the conflicts in the region is the aggressive domestic and foreign policy of the apartheid regime in South Africa, which enjoys the support of international imperialism. The two sides agreed that true peace and stability in southern Africa can be ensured on the following conditions: first, the South African racists' aggression against the "Frontline" States and other neighboring states must be completely stopped; second; the problem of the decolonization of Namibia must be solved without delay in line with UN decisions, including Security Council Resolution 435, and without the imposition of any conditions unrelated to a Namibian settlement, including the presence of Cuban internationalists in Angola; and third, the inhuman apartheid system in South Africa must be eliminated.

The sides condemned the policy of bloody repression pursued by the Pretoria regime with regard to the opponents of apartheid and declared their solidarity with the patriots of South Africa and Namibia and with their recognized liberation organizations -- the African National Congress and the South-West African People's Organization.

In connection with the situation in Angola the two sides condemned the American Administration's decision to supply arms to the puppet grouping the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola and demanded an end to South Africa's aggression and the speedy and unconditional withdrawal of its occupation troops from Angola territory.

The Soviet side confirmed the unchanging nature of its principled line of all-around support for Mazambique and the other "Frontline" States and regards this as a contribution on its part to the struggle for lasting peace and the peoples' security.

The Soviet Union and Mozambique gave a high assessment of the role of the OAU in the struggle against imperialism, colonialism, and racism and for the strengthening of the political and economic independence of the continent's countries. They came out in favor of stepping up efforts to eliminate foreign military bases in Africa and turn it into a nuclear-free zone.

The sides condemn the recent aggressive military acts against Libya, which constitute a threat to international peace and security, and in this connection expressed their solidarity with the Libyan people.

The sides again confirmed the need for a just settlement of the Near East problem on the basis of collective efforts within the framework of an international conference with the participation of all interested parties.

The Soviet Union and Mozambique expressed profound concern in connection with the serious threats and provocations from imperialist forces directed against the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Nicaragua. They declared their support for the efforts of the peoples of Central America toward a peaceful political settlement of the situation that has developed in the region.

The sides came out in favor of solving problems in Southeast Asia on the basis of fruitful dialogue between the countries of the region, as is proposed by the states of Indochina -- Vietnam, Laos, and Cambodia.

The Soviet Union and Mozambique support the DRA's proposals on a political settlement and come out resolutely in defense of its independence and sovereignty.

The sides declared their support for the nonaligned countries' proposal on turning the Indian Ocean into a zone of peace, and came out in favor of the speediest convening of an international conference on this question.

In the course of the exchange of opinions the Soviet Union and Mozambique stressed the importance of the restructuring of international economic cooperation on a footing of equality and justice, guaranteeing economic security for all states. The Soviet side reported on its initiative concerning the holding of talks within the UN framework with the participation of all states for the global solution of the most important economic problems, with the aim of establishing a new international economic order, overcoming economic backwardness, and settling the problem of the developing countries' foreign debt. The participation in the talks pointed to the link between disarmament and development, and in particular to the positive effect of disarmament measures in releasing financial and material resources for the purpose of the people's socio-economic progress. They noted the great significance of the UN General Assembly special session that is being convened, devoted to the critical economic situation in Africa.

Confirming their adherence to the aims and principles of the United Nations, the sides noted the exceptional significance of preserving and strengthening that organization as an important instrument for ensuring peace and international security.

Considering the UN designation of 1986 as International Year of Peace, the sides believe that this offers a favorable opportunity to step up the efforts of the UN member-states with a view to achieving a change for the better in the present political situation in the world.

The two sides expressed deep satisfaction with the results of the visit to the USSR by S. Machel, chairman of Frelimo and president of Mozambique, which took place in an atmosphere of fraternal friendship and mutual understanding.

They regard the visit as a contribution to strengthening all-around cooperation between the Soviet Union and Mozambique.

S. Machel, chairman of Frelimo and president of Mozambique, expressed sincere gratitude to the CPSU Central Committee and the USSR Government and people for the warm reception accorded to him and those accompanying him in the Soviet Union.

S. Machel, chairman of Frelimo and president of Mozambique, conveyed an invitation to M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, to pay an official friendly visit to Mozambique. The invitation was accepted with thanks. The date for the visit will be agreed through diplomatic channels.

Politburo Deliberates Domestic, Diplomatic Issues

LD031723 Moscow TASS in English 1702 GMT 3 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow, April 3 TASS — At its meeting today, the Political Bureau of the CPSU Central Committee has approved the results of Mikhail Gorbachev's talks with Chadli Bendjedid, president of the Algerian Democratic and Popular Republic, general secretary of the National Liberation Front. Satisfaction has been expressed with the successful development of friendly Soviet-Algerian relations and the striving has been reaffirmed for their further broadening and strengthening.

The Political Bureau heard a communication by Mikhail Solomentsev on the participation of the CPSU delegation in the work of the 17th Congress of the Communist Party of Czechoslovakia, the delegation's meetings with Gustav Husak and other Czechoslovak leaders. It has been stressed that the CPSU and the Soviet state will further do everything necessary to deepen all-round Soviet-Czechoslovak cooperation and develop fraternal friendship between the peoples of the two countries.

The Political Bureau of the CPSU Central Committee has examined a number of other issues in connection with a further consolidation of the socialist community, of strengthening European and international security, developing relations between countries with different social system on the basis of the principles of peaceful coexistence.

The Political Bureau has endorsed the slogans of the CPSU Central Committee for the international day of solidarity of the working people — May Day.

The Political Bureau has discussed issues in connection with the acceleration of the solution of the housing problem in the country and recognised it advisible to outline a number of additional measures to implement the directives of the 27th Congress of the CPSU concerning this important field of social development, further improvement of the living standards of the working people.

The Political Bureau has examined the question of a further perfection of rationalisation and invention, pointed out the importance of creating an effective mechanism for the introduction of the application of the results of scientific discoveries and inventions, creating a system for the selection of innovations, which have a decisive impact on accelerating progress in science and technology, perfecting the methods of planning work, ensuring the speediest application of these innovations.

Supreme Soviet Presidium Meets 31 March

[TASS report: "USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium Session"]

[Text] A scheduled session of the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium was held in the Kremlin 31 March under the chairmanship of A.A. Gromyko, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and chairman of the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium.

The Presidium examined the question of soviets' tasks stemming from the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress. A.A. Gromyko delivered a report at the session. He stressed that the party Central Committee Political Report, the congress resolution, the new edition of the CPSU Program, and other documents adopted by the congress and given the fervent approval of the Soviet people are of truly historic significance. The congress armed soviets at all levels with a clear perception of forthcoming tasks and opened up broad horizons for increasing their transformative influence on practice. Now it is important that every soviet comprehensively interpret the congress directives, concretize them as applicable to their own conditions, and embody them in a fighting program of action. This work has already begun at every level of our representative system.

It was noted in the report and speeches at the Presidium session that the Soviets must chiefly concentrate their attention on the practical implementation of the party congress decisions in the specific conditions of every republic, kray, oblast, city, rayon, village, and labor collective; on meeting the plan targets for this year and for the 5-year period as a whole; and on improving the organizational, political, and educational work of the organs of people's power and also the style and methods of leadership of state, economic, and sociocultural building.

Everything necessary must be done to ensure that soviets of all levels everywhere outline specific measures to step up their activity in all spheres of life, enhance their efficiency, broaden publicity, intensify control over the activities of organs accountable to them, develop deputies' activeness, and strengthen their links with all strata of the population, labor collectives, and the broad public.

Collating their work with congress requirements, soviets must bring into play the vast reserves inherent in soviet democracy. They must persistently strive to ensure that every individual not only feels himself to be master of our state of the whole people but — the main thing — that he is master in reality, a real, responsible master. In this lies the essence of the Leninist interpretation of socialist self-management. And it is precisely the soviets, under party leadership, that are expected to ensure real scope for the people's initiative and its development.

Of all the tasks facing the soviets, the key issue is to constantly improve their work style in the spirit of the times. The congress directives, its atmosphere and attitude have created the conditions for working in a new way. But endeavor and an understanding of the urgency and necessity of change are also needed. Achieving all this in pracitce and ensuring the reorientation of workers' psychology both in the center and at local level is a vital task of the day.

We cannot accept the fact that in many local soviet ispolkoms real organizational work is frequently replaced by conference bustle and the generation of paperwork. The basic criterion by which the activity of soviets and their organs must today be evaluated is not the number of sessions and conferences held but real, practical results.

Life demands a further increase in the independence and responsibility of organs of power in everything that concerns the satisfaction of people's needs and legitimate interests, in the exploitation of local potential, and in the coordination and control of work by organizations situated on their territory. It is essential, as the congress decisions demand, to conduct soviet sessions more efficiently, increase permanent commissions' analytical and monitoring activities, and improve the practice of deputies' requests for information.

One urgent task is to step up the activity of soviet deputies in all sectors, increase their responsibility for carrying out deputy duties and mastering the art of state administration, and give them all-around assistance.

The USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium passed a resolution on soviets' tasks emanating from the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress, which will be published in the press.

The session examined and approved the plan of basic measures to be implemented in the USSR Supreme Soviet in 1986. The country's supreme organ of power will be focusing on the principal problems raised by the 27th CPSU Congress, the soviets' work experience, the development and improvement of current legislation, and the implementation of the USSR's peace-loving foreign policy.

The USSR Supreme Soviet presidium discussed some other questions of state life.

Participating in discussion of questions on the agenda were Comrades M.S. Gorbachev, L.N. Zaykov, D.A. Kunayev, V.V. Shcherbitskiy, and N.N. Slyunkov; Chairman of the RSFSR Supreme Soviet Presidium V.P. Orlov; Chairman of the Ukrainian SSR Supreme Soviet Presidium V.S. Shevchenko; Chairman of the Georgian SSR Supreme Soviet Presidium P.G. Gilashvili; First Secretary of the Uzbek Communist Party Central Committee I.B. Uzmankhodzhayev; electric welder at the Podolsk Ordzhonikidze machine-building plant N.N. Ryzhova; Chairman of the Belorussian SSR Supreme Soviet Presidium G.S. Tsarazevich; chairman of Moscow city soviet ispolkom V.I. Saykin; and Chairman of Leningrad city soviet ispolkom V.Ya. Khodyrev.

CPSU's Ivan Frolov Named New KOMMUNIST Edito

LD301358 Belgrade TANJUG in English 1846 GMT 29 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow, March 29 (TANJUG) — Ivan Frolov has been named new editor-in-chief of the Soviet periodical KOMMUNIST to take over from Richard Kosolapov, who was recently replaced, and who has now lost his seat on the board of editors of the periodical as well.

Frolov was at the recent congress of the Soviet party elected to the Central Committee. He is a corresponding member of the Soviet Academy of Science.

The reasons for the replacement of Kosolapov, who has also lost his place membership in the Central Committee, have not been announced.

Observers in Moscow recall, however, a major polemic conducted some time ago between the periodical VOPROSY ISTORII and KOMMUNIST.

The periodical VOPROSY ISTORII advocated the thesis that Lenin after the October Revolution perceived manifestations of the party and state leadership drifting away from the masses and their interests and that in this he saw one of the contradictorinesses [as received] in socialism. The periodical also claimed that the essence of the contradictoriness of the new society lies in its internal contrasts whereas external influence is significant but nevertheless of secondary character.

KOMMUNIST, still with Kosolapov at its head, reacted sharply, advocating stands which could have been taken as dogmatic. According to KOMMUNIST, "external interference" dominated in Czechoslovakia in 1968 and Poland in 1970, which allegedly caused crisis in these countries.

PRAVDA Examines Post-Congress Role of Press

[Editorial: "5-Year Plan and the Press"]

[Text] In our dynamic lifetime, a time of changes and transformations, the role of the mass media is growing substantially. The party sees the media as a powerful tool for creativity, publicity, and social control work and as a mouthpiece for the partywide viewpoint, which is incompatible with departmentalism and local self-interest. The Soviet press is one of the brightest manifestations of socialist democracy.

The period since the Central Committee April (1985) Plenum and the days preceding the congress has been a serious examination for all party journalism; the press has been working more vigorously than ever. Editorial collectives, the Central Committee Political Report noted, have been boldly tackling complex and largely new issues. Many constructive proposals have been expressed and there has been more analysis, civic-mindedness, and acuteness in posing problems and criticizing shortcomings.

The 27th CPSU Congress armed the party and the people with program documents and a strategy of acceleration at the new crucial stage of Soviet society's development. Journalists have perceived with a sense of duty and high responsibility the party's orders to fully realize the mass media's potential, to strive for effectiveness in articles, to eradicate mediocrity, to overcome inertia and superficiality in judgments, and to be receptive to what is new and advanced. There should be more practical matters and initiative and fewer empty words and enthusiastic exclamations.

The content of newspapers in the first few weeks since the congress provides convincing proof that the acceleration of socioeconomic development on the basis of scientific and technical progress and production intensification are becoming the major topic in the press. There has been a marked desire among journalists to promote the galvanization of the human factor, to expand publicity, and to analyze ways of ensuring a fundamental psychological reorientation among cadres and their thinking and in the work style of party organizations.

The elucidation of the congress documents, which our press is now actively undertaking, must be closely linked with the publicizing of labor collectives' efforts to fulfill the plan for 1986 and for the 12th 5-Year Plan as a whole and the practice of socialist competition. The entire rich arsenal of journalism must be brought into play, spotlighting the inquisitive and searching working man. One of the main avenues of the activity of editorial bureaus is to analyze how party organizations and labor collectives are tackling the resolution of questions linked with improving the economic mechanism and management and the acceleration of scientific and technical progress, how financial autonomy is being introduced everywhere, and how the struggle for high quality in output and work as a whole, for the full utilization of reserves, and for the strengthening of labor, production, and contractual discipline is proceeding.

The press is called upon to help collectives seek and find positive solutions to the problems that emerge. It is necessary to involve working people more extensively in the newspapers and on TV and radio broadcasts so that they themselves can talk in their own words about the new things entering our reality and about their concerns and thoughts. Stringent monitoring of plan fulfillment is also one of the most important tasks for the press.

It is regrettable, however, that certain economic reviews and other local press articles devoted to the results of the first quarter have already sounded notes of complacency and of captivation with what has been achieved. Front pages are awash with high-sounding epithets in reports of successes — and often only very modest successes, at that. Attempts to drown matters in verbiage are today simply intolerable.

We should not disparage successes and achievements. Every newspaper — from works newsheets to central newspapers — must objectively demonstrate the practical experience of work in each section and persistently strive to disseminate that experience. Revealing the individual's creative potential, making it possible for talents to flourish, and actively supporting the masses' initiative is a skill our press has in abundance. But nor should we be satisfied with our old approaches. Many things in this direction still need to be improved and restructured on the move, so to speak, and greater informational content and emotion must be given to articles and TV and radio broadcasts to make them reflect the pulse of life. There is and can be nothing richer than people's social experience. The press is called upon to be a genuine forum for that experience and to painstakingly collate the products of life, communist attitudes to work, and creative initiative.

The mass media have an invaluable role to play in implementing the party's social program. The 5-year plan targets in this area are intensive. Press interest in this sphere has also grown considerably, new rubrics have appeared, and current topics have keenly made their presence felt. This question is exceptionally important since it directly concerns people and their lives, work, and position in society. Press attention to the entire range of social problems must be constant.

Holding a frank conversation with readers means answering the most urgent questions of life and not avoiding difficult points. Readers pay particular attention to articles on the assertion of the norms of communist morality, the improvement of society's moral climate, and the strengthening of the family. There is no place here for sensationalism or the exposition of the "nuts and bolts" of various deviations or court investigations, which still mar certain publications. And can many newspapers claim to be persistent in their castigation of bureaucratism, whose roots are hidden, where there is inadequate publicity, self-criticism, and public control? The press has a great deal of work to do in this direction. It is necessary to fight, literally fight for each line of the party congress decisions. That is how the party is posing the question.

The strength of the press lies in its party leadership. This requires constant improvement and deepening in the spirit of the times. The selection of journalist cadres and the concern for their education and competence largely determine the content and effectiveness of articles. Everything that is dictated by principled considerations and the interests of improving matters, the congress noted, will continue to be supported by the party.

Armed with the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress, our press — a collective propagandist, agitator, and organizer of the masses — will promote still more successfully the mobilization of working people to fulfill party plans and the 5-year plan targets.

Official Appointments, Retirements Reported

Samizdat Says Two Diplomats Executed for Smuggling
AU030945 Paris AFP in English 0920 GMT 3 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow, April 3 (AFP) — Two Soviet diplomats in Kabul were sentenced to death and executed for gold smuggling, according to a "samizdat" underground news bulletin circulating here Thursday.

It identified them as Sultan Radzhabov, a former minister of justice in the Central Asian Republic of Tajikistan until 1978, and a secretary at the Soviet Embassy in the Afghan capital, whose name was given only as Saydov. The "samizdat" based its information on a senior law officer.

But the Tajikistan mission in Moscow, contacted by AFP, described the report of Sultan Radzhabov's execution as "gossip." A mission spokesman said that Radzhabov had been given an assignment in Afghanistan but "not at the Soviet Embassy". He confirmed that he had been arrested, sentenced to prison and then released and "had died in 1985."

The "samizdat" claimed the two men had acted as middlemen between gold dealers and Afghan buyers. It said the gold was intended for Afghan "counter revolutionaries". The traffic had been discovered during a customs inspection at Moscow airport when officers seized a package containing 23 kilos (50 lbs.) of gold from Saudi Arabia addressed to Saydov, it added. "This, while the Soviet Union loses 15,000 soldiers in Afghanistan every year," the "samizdat" noted. Western diplomats judged this figure of Soviet losses as rather high, but East European sources held that it was "likely".

Two Accused of Trying To Pass Anti-Soviet Material
AU031259 Paris AFP in English 1225 GMT 3 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow, April 3 (AFP) — Documents believed dropped by a foreigner at Moscow airport have led the authorities to two Soviets later accused in Tashkent of trying to pass "anti-Soviet material" abroad, the provincial daily PRAVDA VOSTOKA said.

The pair, Rishat Ablayev, 35, and Sinaver Kadyrov, 31, were charged in the Central Asian city, which is the capital of the Uzbek Republic, with passing texts accusing the state of pursuing "the imperial policy of tsarist Russia" towards Soviet peoples.

They risked long prison sentences, the paper said.

Jews Free To Leave for 'Sweet Life' in West
LD022256 Moscow in English to Great Britain and Ireland 1900 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Observer Mikhail Taratuta commentary]

[Text] Today we continue our talk with Mrs (Davies) of Hove, Sussex, and Mr (Curtin) in Birmingham concerning Jewish emigration from the USSR. Mrs (Davies) believes that if Jews were treated better in this country they would not wish to leave. And Mr (Curtin) is concerned over decreased emigration and sees it as a sign of infringement on freedom in this country. Our observer Mikhail Taratuta writes in reply:

I wonder if you know that the Soviet Embassies in London, Washington, Rome, and other capitals continue to receive letters from former Soviet citizens of Jewish descent with the request to let them come back. Letters arrive from the Jews who, as the Western media say, fled from the persecution of Soviet authorities and found happiness in the free world. But there is an obvious discrepancy in this. Either these people desire to return to their prison voluntarily or the Soviet Union was no prison for them and they left it for some other reason. Which is the truth?

In the past 40 years or so an estimated 250,000 Jews have left this country. Indeed, and all for reasons of their own. Some wanted to join their relatives scattered by World War II throughout the world. Some responded to the call of their religion, which urges them to live in the land of their ancestors. Some went to other countries in the pursuit of a sweet life. As for the dream of political freedom and flight from persecution and discrimination, the New York-based Russian language newspaper NOVOYE RUSSKOYE SLOVO came to the following conclusion, having conducted a poll among former Soviet citizens. Paradoxically, none of them was guided by the thought of political freedom.

Why, then, all this noise in the West about the persecution of Jews in the USSR and concern over declining emigration? There are political reasons for all this. Israel, with its unending aggressive ventures, simply needs a permanent inflow of cannon fodder and the United States needs a strong Israel in the Middle East. And for Western propagandists every Jew leaving the Soviet Union is not simply a Jew but a political figure that has chosen the free world, a figure tormented and harassed in the Soviet Union. Under this logic, if a British Jew does not leave for the United States or Israel, that means he doesn't want to, but if a Soviet Jew does not leave the USSR this means that he is not allowed to.

The tragedy, however, is that this not very honest game has its victims; people who are taken in by the image of heavenly life expecting them beyond the Soviet Union presented by the BBC, the Voice of America, and other radio stations. [sentence as heard] But when they find themselves abroad, unused to life in new conditions, without support given them by the countries they were reared in, people often get lost, break down. Nostalgia comes later. First comes the financial trap when emigrants begin to recall what in their native lands they had taken for granted: the low housing rent, the free education, the inconsiderable taxes and, the most important, the availability of jobs — that is, all that makes up a secure, if not luxurious, life. They begin to realize too late that they lost their past without finding their future. Nobody needs them in their new place. They have neither friends nor relatives there. Their new country does not need them, because it has enough jobless people without them. Western propagandists don't need them either, because they are now used material.

And so a former engineer begins to wash cars at a service station and a former doctor washes dishes at an eating house, unburdening their souls in letters. Such letters arrive by the thousand in the Soviet Union, with the inevitable request to let their authors return home. Emigrants address such letters to Soviet organizations, to friends and relatives back home, to Soviet periodicals. They describe the hardships of their life in the West and warn others against being too gullible, against repeating their own mistake. And it is not surprising that with every year the number of those who want to repeat other people's tragedy shrinks. Many of the would-be emigrants have already retrieved their applications for exit visas.

So we advise Mrs (Davies) and Mr (Curtin), when they hear about the persecution of Jews in the USSR, to think about the thousands of broken lives, about people who believe the Western press and the stories about easy life in the West and who now dream of one thing only — how to return home.

Khrennikov Address

PM031107 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 2 Apr 86 First Edition pp 1,3

[TASS report: "Music and the Times: The Seventh All-Union Congress of Composers"]

[Excerpts] The results of the work done in recent years and the tasks of personalities in Soviet music at the present stage of socialist building are being discussed by delegates to the Seventh All-Union Congress of Composers. It opened in Moscow's Great Kremlin Palace on 1 April.

The accountability report of the USSR Composers Union Board was delivered by T.N. Khrennikov, first secretary of the Board.

Our congress is taking place at a remarkable time, he said. It is not yet a month since the 27th CPSU Congress completed its work. This was truly a congress of renewal, permeated by unprecedented dynamism and a concrete, businesslike approach. To use the language of musicians, it drew the bar line from which the new tempo and rhythm of our progress begin.

The CPSU Central Committee Political Report to the congress and the documents it adopted emphasize the growing role of art and its influence on society and on every person. We have a right to be proud of the place of honor which music holds in contemporary life. Public recognition is the measure of the true value of creative work, because the Soviet artist is not only a witness and chronicler, but also a participant in the creation of the new world.

We see again and again that democratic attitudes and involvement in life nurture the art of socialist realism, which is based on the Leninist principles of party-mindedness and the popular spirit. The immutability of these fundamental principles is reaffirmed in the new edition of the CPSU Program. And that is only natural, because it is the party-mindedness and popular spirit of our art which have enabled it to demonstrate its correctness and fruitfulness in the fight for human souls in the ideological battles of the present day.

Our creative organization's activity has been directed toward the all-around strengthening of links between the art of music and the tasks of communist building and the strengthening of contacts between masters of the arts and the audience at large. Soviet music days are now held everywhere and contracts for creative collaboration between composers' unions and the biggest enterprises and agro-industrial associations have become the norm.

The speaker devoted great attention to the development of the music theater, where the fusion of different artistic genres is revealed particularly clearly. Any bold and artistically jusitifed decision to which the audience responds can, he said, only be welcomed, even if it does not immediately arouse the approval of those who adhere strictly to tradition. But serious artistic intentions cannot brook oversimplification, petty subject matter, or weak dramaturgy; and much here depends on the quality of the libretto. Yet the occupation of librettist has for some reason become unprestigious among professional playwrights. The time has come once again to revive the creative alliance with writers, which will benefit Soviet musical art.

A special place in the socialist society's spiritual arsenal belongs to Soviet song, which is the legitimate heir to the revolutionary melodies of the world's peoples and which has continued and developed their traditions in the conditions of the new society. An understanding of the importance of the ideological and educational function of song has dictated both the artistic policy of the Composers Union and its concrete actions. In particular, the holding of competitions for composers and performers, which resulted in the emergence of a number of talented works written for notable dates in the country's life — the 110th anniversary of V.I. Lenin's birth, the 60th anniversary of the USSR'S formation, the 40th anniversary of victory, and the 27th CPSU Congress. The creativity of a whole constellation of talented composers has spread firmly beyond their own republics, which testifies to the upsurge of songwriting in the republics and to the true internationalism of our music.

But unfortunately, among the thousands of songs one hears on the radio and television and from stages large and small, there are too many which do not meet high demands. This has become particularly clear in the recent period of rapid and uncontrolled expansion of vocal and instrumental groups. Both in repertoire and in style of performance, as a rule they blindly imitate the models which are persistently brought to the awareness of young people by the bourgeois commercial show business machine. In the capitalist countries they use this machine to attempt to distract young people in every way from the urgent social problems. Not for nothing is this music taken up so eagerly by those who are professionally engaged in ideological subversion against the socialist countries.

Serious measures are now being taken to regulate the activity of vocal and instrumental groups, which are clearly experiencing a shortage of good quality musical material. We are reproached on this score from the platform of the 27th CPSU Congress. To give young people a really attractive repertoire of songs appropriate to our times — that task is within the powers of Soviet composers!

The speaker dwelt in detail on the problems of so-called mass music, which recently has largely lost that very quality — its mass appeal.

The entire tenor of our life and the role which art plays in it prompt us constantly to think about the aesthetic education of children and young people — those to whom the socialist state's future belongs. The school reform opens up wide scope for the application of musicians' efforts. The musical education program elaborated under the leadership of our outstanding composer D.B. Kabalevskiy has completed its experimental stage and is being introduced in practice.

The eighties are a period of mighty upsurge in the world prestige of Soviet music. Soviet music festivals and premieres of new works are held with triumphant success abroad; leading publishing houses and record firms compete for the right to publish music and recordings created in the USSR.

This is happening first and foremost because our music — the offspring of Great October — has always been and remains the herald of today's leading ideas — the ideas of peace, humanism, and social progress. Being addressed to people, rather than against people, it has become the legitimate heir and continuer of many centuries of traditions in the art of music. At a time when all kinds of currents and pseudoschools of the avant-garde have revealed to the whole world their bankruptcy — not only aesthetic, but also moral — Soviet music offers an example of the laws of artistic development and the natural progression of the path followed throughout the decades since October. The destiny of music in the land of socialism, where its sounds have always been not only an artistic act but also a social and public act, where the figure of the creator is invariably surrounded by respect and honor, and where, lastly, art has an unprecedented, truly gigantic audience, is an inspiring beacon for the planet's leading musicians. All these qualities have never emerged so clearly as at the two international music festivals in Moscow. The world's best composers supported the festival slogan: "Music for humanism, for peace and friendship between peoples."

[Excerpts] On 28 March V.V. Shcherbitskiy, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo, member of the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium, and first secretary of the Ukrainian Communist Party Central Committee, presented state awards to a group of comrades.

V.V. Shcherbitskiy warmly congratulated the recipients and wished them new successes in their work for the benefit of the socialist homeland and in implementing the 27th CPSU Congress decisions.

Present at the ceremony of award presentation were Ukrainian Communist Party Central Committee Politburo members and candidate members, Ukrainian Council of Ministers deputy chairmen, obkom first secretaries, and oblispolkom chairmen.

Shcherbitskiy Delivers Report to Ukraine Plenum

AU031244 Kiev PRAVDA UKRAINY in Russian 29 Mar 86 p 1

["Information Announcement on a Plenum of the Ukrainian Communist Party Central Committee"]

[Text] A plenum of the Ukrainian Communist Party Central Committee was held on 28 March.

Oblispolkom chairmen, ministers, leaders of some other republic-level organizations, secretaries of the Ukrainian Trade Union Council, and the Ukrainian Komsomol Central Committee, who do not belong to the Ukrainian Communist Party Central Committee or Auditing Commission, were invited to attend the plenum proceedings.

The plenum examined the results of the 27th CPSU Congress and the tasks of the republic's party organizations to implement its decisions. V.V. Shcherbitskiy, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and first secretary of the Ukrainian Communist Party Central Committee, delivered a report.

(V.V. Shcherbitskiy's report is to be published in the next issue of the paper).

Those participating in the discussion were Comrades Yu.N. Yelchenko, first secretary of Kiev Gorkom; V.P. Mironov, first secretary of Donetsk Obkom; A.P. Zolotarev, stope brigade leader in the Ternovskaya mine, Pavlograd coal mining association; A.P. Sazonov, first secretary of Zaporozhye Obkom; V.A. Masol, deputy chairman of the Ukrainian Council of Ministers and chairman of the Ukrainian Gosplan; K.V. Khirnyy, first secretary of Kharkov Gorkom; I.S. Plyushch, chairman of Kiev Oblispolkom; K.G. Nosov, director of the Dneprovskiy F.E. Dzerzhinskiy metallurgical combine in Dnepropetrovsk Oblast; V.P. Salo, Ukrainian minister of industrial construction; V.S. Venglovskaya, woman weaver at the Zhitomir flax combine named after the 60th anniversary of the Great October Socialist Revolution; A.N. Girenko, first secretary of Kherson Obkom; V.S. Mikhalevich, director of the V.M. Glushkov Cybernetics Institute of the Ukrainian Academy of Sciences; A.P. Makatsov, mining brigade leader in the Krasnodon mine construction trust, Voroshilovgrad Oblast; N.P. Oboznyy, party committee secretary at the M.V. Frunze scientific and production machine building assocation in Sumy; V.I. Tsybukh, second secretary of the Ukrainian Komsomol Central Committee; I.A. Bulyga, Goshchanskiy Raykom first secretary in Rovno Oblast; V.I. Yurchuk, director of the Institute of the History of the Party under the Ukrainian Communist Party Central Committee — a branch of the Institute of Marxism-Leninism under the CPSU Central Committee; A.P. Nochevkin, first secretary of Odessa Obkom; B.N. Lishchina, general director of the "Azot" production association named after the Leninist Komsomol in Severodonetsk, Voroshilovgrad Oblast; amd N.U. Kotlyuba, party committee secretary at the Zaporozhye V.I. Lenin transformer production association.

V.V. Shcherbitskiy delivered a concluding speech.

The plenum adopted a decision on the issue discussed, and it will be published.

The plenum endorsed the organizational and political measures taken by the Ukrainian Communist Party Central Committee to implement the decisions of the 27th CPSU and Ukrainian Communist Party Congresses. The plenum of the Ukrainian Communist Party Central Committee ended its proceedings.

Turkmen CP Central Committee Holds Plenum

PM031519 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 31 Mar 86
First Edition p 2

[Correspondent A. Grachev report on Turkmen Communist Party Central Committee plenum under the rubric "Implementing the Decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress" and the general heading "Working in New Fashion"]

[Text] Turkmenistan

A fact is a fact, no matter how sad it may be: social labor productivity had remained at the same level in Turkmenistan for 15 years. For this reason, participants in the Turkmen Communist Party Central Committee plenum discussing the results of the 27th CPSU Congress and the republic party organization's tasks in implementing its decisions spoke about the causes of the prevailing situation and sought ways to overcome the stagnation. S. Niyazov, first secretary of the Turkmen Communist Party Central Committee, who delivered the report and others who spoke during the debate noted that a spirit of realism and a critical assessment of what has been achieved are actively gaining ground in the republic and an atmosphere conducive to creative activity is being established. Many sectors of party, economic, and state work have been reinforced with cadres. Important problems are being tackled more actively by Vommunists.

Yhis approach is producing results. Over the first 3 months of the new 5-year plan, the increase in industrial output totaled almost 10 percent and the increase in labor productivity 7 percent. Livestock raising productivity has increased. Sll this is a cause of joy to workers and inspires them to strive for new successes. But unfortunately, the plenum noted, the reorganization is proceeding too slowly as yet.

Gor instance, the Turkmenian nitrogen fertilizer plant failed to deliver R12 million worth of output last year. However, the Mary party obkom and gorkom and their First Secretaries Ch. Gedzhenov and A. Valiyev failed to draw the appropriate conclusions from this. And so the plant's performance remains poor.

Such phenomena are impermissible: after all, the republic is to double the average annual rate of increase of industrial output in the current 5-year plan, increase gas production to 86 billion cubic meters, and double the volume of capital construction. Yhe set targets can be met only by means of persistent and skillful work on the part of all party organizations and every Vommunist, the plenum participants said. Yet what is happening in practice? One of the key enterprises — the Chardzhou oil refinery — was mentioned in particular. It has been under construction for the past 15 years. Yet R. Khudayberdiyev and G. Ashirov, first secretaries of the Chardzhou party obkom and gorkom respectively, have still not managed to establish order at the construction site and help to organize harmonious work there.

It is also necessary to overcome the lag in oil extraction. And here much depends on the stance and efficiency of the Krasnovodsk party obkom and the Nebit-Dag party gorkom and their First secretaries Ye. Mitrin and Ye. Akentyev and all Communists at the Turkmenneft association. They must tackle questions of the introduction of modern machinery and technology in the extraction of the valuable raw material more persistently and adopt a comprehensive approach to the development of new deposits.

The practical work of scientific collectives was analyzed in detail at the plenum. During the last 5-year plan more than R50 million were invested in the development of science, yet the return totaled R11 million. The Presidium of the Turkmen SSR Academy of Sciences, its President A. Babayev and the republic Gosplan and its Chairman V. Abramov must utilize scientists' work more effectively and ensure a broader introduction of scientific developments in practice, speakers noted. In this context the work of the Turkmen Communist Party Central Committee Science and Educational Establishments Section, headed by Ye. Ovlyakuliyev was criticized.

Plenum participants paid special attention to agriculture. Labor productivity here is lower than, for instance, in 1970, although labor remuneration has increased by 25 percent over this period. In cotton growing alone, nonfulfillment of the plan for the procurement of fine-fiber cotton accounted for a shortfall of R40 million in farm income. Kolkhoz and sovkhoz managers, in an effort to meet the plan target for cotton procurement, expanded the sowings of medium-fiber cotton, while on certain farms the area under cotton was in excess of the plan but this was concealed. Defective practices caused great moral and material damage. However, the former Ministry of Agriculture and Minister G. Gurbanov, oblast agro-industrial associations, and party raykoms turned a blind eye. There were gross violations in the storage and processing of cotton. Losses of raw cotton were mounting and the output of yarn was low.

The republic Communist Party Central Committee Bureau examined the state of affairs in this sector. Rigorous conclusions were drawn. Thus the bureau severely punished B. Khaydarov, former minister of the cotton cleaning industry and dismissed him from the post of first deputy chairman of the republic State Agro-Industrial Committee.

Certain leaders' tendencies to embellish the true state of affairs and to conceal miscalculations in their own work are still surviving. Thus, with the assistance of the CPSU Central Committee Party Control Committee, overreporting to the tune of R13 million was revealed on water conservancy construction projects. G. Mishchenko, chairman of the republic State Agro-Industrial Committee; A. Charyyev, chief of Glavkarakumstroy; and T. Altyyev, Turkmen SSR deputy minister of land reclamation and water resources, were severely punished for this. The plenum participants demanded that any deviations from law and the norms of our life continue to be subjected to principled assessments.

Production successes and the quality of people's labor depend on their conscientiousness, on the quality of educational work within the collective. Unfortunately, many party committees in the republic pay insufficient attention to this work. They include the Karakumskiy, Bayramaliyskiy, Karakalinskiy, and Krasnovodskiy party raykoms, and the Tashauz party obkom (Obkom First Secretary B. Atayev; Secretary for Ideology U. Shamuratov).

The plenum noted that it is necessary to reorganize work in the spirit of current demands not only at local level but also at the Turkmen Communist Party Central Committee Propaganda and Agitation Section. Its influence on the situation in party organizations is still too weak.

The resolution that was adopted outlines specific measures to ensure the implementation of the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress.

Turkmen Lecture Seminar on 27th CPSU Congress Ends

GF021728 Ashkhabad Domestic Service in Russian
1545 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Text] A 3-day seminar of lecturers of party committees of the Turkmen SSR Society for Knowledge dedicated to the study, clarification, and propaganda of the political reports at the 27th party congress and the documents of the congress has ended. Participants included (Kachurin), deputy chairman of the USSR Gosplan; Doctor of Juridical Sciences Professor Azmukhamedov, a leading researcher at the State and Law Institute of the Turkmen SSR Academy of Sciences; (Fidoshina), a senior lecturer at the Moscow Higher Technical College of the Order of Lenin and the Order of the Labor Red Banner named after Bauman; Doctor of Philosophical Sciences Professor Garadzha, director of the Scientific Atheism Institute of the Social Sciences Academy subordinate to the CPSU Central Committee; (Belimenko), a lecturer at the All-Union Society for Knowledge; Doctor of Philosophical Sciences (Vedudov), head of a department at the Sociological Research Institute of the USSR Academy of Sciences; Shilatov, [word indistinct] of the USSR; Admiral Grishanov, chief of the military and patriotic education section of the All-Union Society for Knowledge; Babayev, president of the Turkmen SSR Academy of Sciences and corresponding member of the USSR Academy of Sciences; and leaders of the republic's ministries and departments.

Speeches noted that the new large-scale heavy tasks to be solved by our society place high demands on all political, ideological, and organizational activity. The contemporary course of the party and its strategy of acceleration create favorable potentials for considerably improving the effectiveness of ideological work. It is now essential that the ideological-political education of workers and its forms and methods are conducted in accordance with their practicability in the internal life popular life and that they are [word indistinct] ensured in the organizational and economic activity.

Mollayeva, secretary of the Turkmen Communist Party Central Committee, took part in the seminar.

Energy Complex Undergoing Structural Changes

LD031149 Moscow TASS in English 1106 GMT 3 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow, April 3 TASS — TASS news analyst Vladimir Yegorov wrote:

Oil, at present the power industry's major raw material, is to lose its leading positions to coal. Such is the main direction of a reconstruction drive, under way in the fuel and power complex, for the next five years and till the end of the century, economists predict.

The reason is far from being the one given by certain Western media which allege that Soviet oilmen have hit the bottom at their oil fields. If this were the case, the USSR would not have planned to produce 630-640 million tons of oil and gas condensate in 1990, as against 616.7 million tons in 1986 (the world's highest figure among oil-producing countries). The reason is quite different: once rich oil fields are past their peak production rates. Hence, the need to increase the recovery ratio, and look for oil further out and at greater depths, which requires increased capital outlays. Suffice it to say that in the past decade the costs of oil and gas extraction have tripled in the USSR.

By the end of the 90s oil consumption will be reduced largely through wider use of natural gas (its 1990 output is planned at 835-850 billion cubic meters.) Then will come the turn of the rational use of this raw material — for the needs of the chemical industry.

Reliance on coal in the USSR, which is second to none in the world as regards coal resources, is an objective development. Last year its output in the USSR stood at 726 million tons. Meantime, the Knask-Achinsk basin, southern Siberia, alone will be able to produce up to one billion tons of coal a year, for as long as 140 years. The USSR has other promising coal basins, for example, at Kuznetsk, Western Siberia, and Ekibastuz, northern Kazakhstan.

In the past years the coal industry has experienced some difficulties and failed to reach planned targets. This was caused, in particular, by a sharp deterioration of the mining conditions at old basins, especially in Donetsk, Ukraine, where coal has to be extracted from twin beds and at greater depths.

The task of boosting output in such conditions or least least keeping it at present level is hard to tackle even though the mines are modernised and advanced technology used. Therefore, the plans for increasing coal output envisage an accelerated development of the eastern coal fields with opencast mining. In 1990 the USSR plans to produce 780-800 million tons of fuel.

Computer-Transmitted Data — Specialists from the Transbaykal board of the hydrometeorological service have begun setting up their own automated system for receiving and transmitting information. Assembly of equipment has begun for the Tsiklon electronic complex, whose purpose is to collect data on the atmosphere in zones where 150 meteorological stations are located. Computers will take over the work of tens of telegraph operators and will increase 1,000-fold the speed of processing and analysing the incoming material. The first communications session between the Chita Tsiklon electronic complex and the Khabarovsk center for collecting meteorological data from the territory of Siberia and the Far East will take place 1 month from now. Polish Helicopter Tested — Testing is taking place in Yakutiya of a new Polish helicopter, the Sokol. It is a medium-class craft, with a lifting weight of 6,400 kg and a speed of 235 km per hour, and can carry 12 passengers and two crew members. Soviet test pilots are taking part in the testing, as well as members of the Civil Aviation Scientific Research Institute and Polish specialists. The helicopter is expected to be used in the most varied areas of the USSR to help geologists, oil workers, and hunters. [Summary] [Moscow Television Service in Russian 1130 GMT 14 Mar 86 LD]

Arctic Plane — Moscow, March 15 TASS — The new Soviet liner AN-74 successfully operated under a temperature reaching minus 58 degrees centigrade, which is a rare occasion even for the Soviet extreme north. It has been designed specially for work in conditions of the Arctic and Antarctic regions. The plane, seating 12 people, easily transports 1.5 tons of cargo to a distance of 4,500 km. The on-board computer and automatic devices permit the pilot to guide the AN-74 by the optimal route at any time of day or night. The plane is economical so far as fuel consumption is concerned. [Excerpt] [Moscow TASS in English 1234 GMT 15 Mar 86 LD]

Flights to Antarctic — For the first time, the heavy IL-76 plane will fly from Leningrad to the Antarctic. It has been especially reequipped for Antarctic flights. The flight route is Cyprus-Djibouti-Maputo-Molodezhnaya. A landing strip with a length of approximately 3 km has been prepared at the Anarctic station. The testing of the heavy plane in the Antarctic will make it possible to carry out landings at the Vistok station in the future. Agricultural Developments for 27 Mar-2 Apr Reported LD030527 [Editorial Report] The following is a compilation of reports on agricultural developments in the USSR between 27 March and 2 April broadcast by Moscow Domestic Service in Russian. Times of broadcasts are given in parentheses at the end of each item.

27 March

Rostov Oblast starts sowing today. (0700 GMT)

Cotton sowing starts today in southern Uzbekistan with nearly 2 million hectares to be sown. (0700 GMT)

Sowing of grain crops has begun in Kazakhstan. Farms of southern oblasts have already sown wheat, barley, and peas on thousands of hectares. (1430 GMT)

Don farmers have started sowing early spring crops; farmers in southern rayons of Rostov Oblast took seed-drills out to the fields today. Grain crops will be grown on an area exceeding 1 million hectares using intensive technology methods. (1930 GMT)

28 March

Mass sowing of spring crops has begun in Krasnodar Kray. More than one-third of a million hectares have been sown, which is one-fifth of the area. Sugar beet sowing is under way on many farms. (0800 GMT)

The 6th month of winter is coming to an end on the country's farms. As the USSR Gosagroprom [State Agro-Industrial Committee] has reported, collective and state farms continued to increase production and procurement of animal husbandry products during that time. Since the beginning of this year, for example, 641,000 metric tons more milk have been sold to the state than for the same period last year; 454,000 metric tons more meat has been procured. Farms of Azerbaijan, Armenia, Kirghizia, and Uzbekistan have fulfilled the quarterly plan for meat ahead of schedule. A particularly large increase over last year's level was yielded by collective and state farms of the Russian Federation, the Ukraine, Belorussia, Kazakhstan, Moldavia, and Turkmenistan. However, there is a negative side in this sharp increase of procurements. The fact of the matter is that a significant number of farms, having fulfilled the plans in November and December, stopped handing over cattle. Large-scale delivery of cattle to the meat combines began in January. This formal, bureaucratic attitude by heads of farms to the fulfilment of plans led to no small losses not only of animal husbandry produce but also of fodder. (1200 GMT)

29 March

Sowing of sugar beet has begun in the south of Kazakhstan. This crop has now been sown on 70,000 hectares in the republic. (0204 GMT)

Spring sowing has begun in the Kabarda-Balkar ASSR. In the Prokhladnyy Rayon, early spring crops are being sown, together with peas, oats, and fodder grass. Equipment and workers are fully prepared. Two shifts are being worked, and team self-interest is the guiding principle behind the work organization. (0900 GMT)

After protracted foul weather, Chimkent Oblast farmers have once again begun field work today. Farms in Dzhambul and Kzyl-Ordinskaya Oblasts are now sowing grain crops. Farms in Alma-Atinskaya Oblast have started harrowing areas alloted to winter crops and perennial grasses. Spring has been late in coming to southern Kazakhstan, requiring speedy, well-organized field work. (1200 GMT)

Stavropol Kray agricultural workers have reported fulfillment ahead of schedule of the quarterly plan for all sales to the state of livestock farming produce. (1200 GMT)

The land cultivators of Azerbaijan have started sowing maize for grain. Some 30,000 hectares has been allocated for maize cultivation. The industrial method of cultivation will allow production of grain to be increased more than fourfold in the 5-year plan because of the increased return per hectare. (2230 GMT)

30 March

A scientific and practical conference dedicated to the problems of the intensification of farming in the kray has been carried out in Altay. A wide scope of issues on the introduction of intensive and industrial technologies on the fields of the kray was discussed. It is envisaged that this year 1.2 million hectares of wheat will be grown with the aid of intensive technology. This will provide an additional increase of about 1 million metric tons of high-quality grain. (0600 GMT)

Warm spring weather has come to the southern steppes of the Ukraine, leading to widespread sowing of early spring crops. In Odessa Oblast, 280,000 hectares of land are to be sown with spring crops. Over 500 sowing detachments are at work. (1100 GMT)

Moldavia — Sowing of sugar beet started today. Workers plan to produce 2.7 metric tons of sugar annually in the republic during this 5-year plan. (1100 GMT)

1 April

Tuva livestock farmers have had a good first quarter: the overall purchase of meat and milk in the republic as a whole has increased by nearly 10 percent against the same period last year. (0200 GMT)

Irrigation work is in progress in Stavropol. About 400 pumping stations have started work. Irrigated fields make up less than 10 percent of the whole area under cultivation in the region, but they produce 3 times more crops than the dry-farming land. At present in the kray, more than 400,000 hectares of arable land is being irrigated, most of which is fodder land. (1904 GMT)

2 April

A new strain of cotton, called "Tashauz-61," has been developed by seed selectors of a Tashauz Oblast experimental agricultural station. Last year the strain was tested on Tashauz and Chardzhou farms and yielded an average of over 40 quintals per hectare of raw cotton more than earlier regionalized strains. It also has greater germinating capacity. (0000 GMT)

Sugar beet planting began in the Odessa Oblast farms today; more than 50,000 hectares are to be planted. The work is to be completed in 4 days. (1000 GMT)

Poor Management Blamed for Ruined Kazakhstan Crop

LD022323 [Editorial Report] Moscow Television Service in Russian at 1700 GMT on 2 April in the "Vremya" newscast broadcasts a video report from a state farm in the Chu Valley where sowing of sugar beet is under way. The director of the farm says: "Sugar beet has been rotting since 1982, rotting on a massive scale, on the whole area. What can one say when we obtain a yield of 30-40 quintals per hectare on the same fields where we used to get 800 quintals." The reason is the bad crop rotation that was recommended by scientists, which has resulted in an accumulation of diseases in the soil. The farm manager should be allowed to make the decisions on what to grow and how to grow it.

The reporter concludes: "The majority of sugar beet-growing farms in Kazakhstan, due to the very bad land management practices and due to the violation of the correct crop rotations have greatly reduced the sugar beet yield. And the republic did not fulfill the 11th 5-Year Plan for sales of beet to the state. Today, sugar beet growing in Kazakhstan requires the solution of many cardinal problems in order to restore the former yield per hectare. And these problems must be solved today and not put off until tomorrow."

Tashkent Conference — The 28th coordination conference of the Soviet center for cotton and cotton seeds production ended its work in Tashkent on 18 March. Scientists concerned with seed farming and experts working in scientific research institutions and experimental gardens participated in the work of the conference. Discussed was the work of the variety and quality center during the past 5-year plan period and the results attained from the testing of new cotton varieties. All-Union Science Conference Opens in Tashkent

[From the "Vremya" newscast]

[Text] An all-union scientific-practical conference, "The Perfecting of National Relations in the Light of the Decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress," opened in Tashkent today.

Taking part in it are eminent scientists from Moscow, Kiev, Tashkent, and a number of union republics.

The conference was addressed by Comrade Usmankhodzhayev, first secretary of the Central Committee of the Uzbekistan Communist Party.

Kazakh Council Discusses Scientific Progress

GF011644 Alma-Ata Domestic Service in Russian 1400 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] The republican coordination council for scientific and technical progress today held a regular meeting at the premises of the Kazakh Communist Party Central Committee. During the meeting the project which outlines the general fields of the programs for intensifying scientific and technical progress was discussed. (Dakhtir), deputy chairman of the State Planning Committee of the Kazakh SSR, delivered a report in this regard.

The coordination council ratified the main project of the republican programs for intensifying scientific and technical progress in light of the decisions and [word indistinct] of the Kazakh Communist Party Central Committee and the Kazakh SSR Council of Munisters.

The meeting was attended by Bashmakov, Truysov, and Trofimov, secretaries of the Kazakh Communist Party Central Committee; Grebenyuk, first deputy chairman of the Kazakh SSR Council of Ministers; Zhanybekov and Kuppayev, deputy chairmen of the Kazakh SSR Council of Ministers; the directors of the departments of ministries [word indistinct]; and responsible functionaries of the Kazakh Communist Party Central Committee and Kazakh SSR Council of Ministers.

Miroshkin, second secretary of the Kazakh Communist Party Central Committee, delivered a report.

Antarctic Expedition Personnel Transfer Stations

LD012321 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 2100 GMT 1 Apr 86

[Summary] The collectives of the Russkaya and Leningradskaya stations have transferred from three vessels of the 31st Soviet Antarctic expedition to the flagship Mikhail Somov. Supplies for them also were transferred. The diesel-electric ship once again met icebergs on the way to the Russkaya station. It could not get closer than 80 miles from the station. Then the crews of two MI-8 helicopters set up a type of air bridge from the vessel to the shore. The Mikhail Somov was near Hawkes Heights for 6 days and nights. The personnel of the Russkaya station was exchanged. The participants in the voyage finished work, led by Nikolay Tyabin, candidate of geographical sciences, and continued the voyage in the southern latitutdes. The Mikhail Somov reached Oates Coast, where the Leningradskaya station is situated. The vessel has stopped 25 miles from that base, now, and another air bridge has been set up between improvised ice berths and the Antarctic coast.

IZVESTIYA Correspondent Reports From Missile Site

PM040838 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 19 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 6

[Special correspondent N. Sautin article under the rubric "Life of Soviet Armed Forces": "Underground Bastion; Reportage From the Region Where Unit X of the Strategic Missile Forces Is Based"]

[Text] The days marked red on the calendar are not days off here. Even on Sunday morning at headquarters there are phone calls, reports, orders.... The commander is free by 1000: "Shall we go?"

On the way we passed the rayon center. New five-story buildings, a noisy bazaar... Near a roadside village we turned off onto a country track. The driver hugged the side of the road to let pass a Belarus truck coming from the other direction with a trailer of mixed feed, then a kolkhoz milk tanker, then a bus. When we passed a small wood, Guards Lieutenant Colonel V. Yakovlev gave the order to stop. We got out.

Snow-covered virgin land all around — there is nowhere to get your bearings. It is hard to get used to the thought that this area contains silos with nuclear missiles ready to fire like cartridges in a gun barrel....

A small digression at this point: Our first ballistic missile was launched in 1947. Tests of an intercontinental ballistic missile were successfully completed 10 years later. The engines generated over 20 million horsepower. It flew at 28,000 km per hour! That was ballistic missile No 1 — an impressive "trailblazer." A new branch of the Soviet Armed Forces was born — the Strategic Missile Forces.

Missile complexes were developed taking account of the prospects for developing the achievements of science and technology and the country's economic and production potential. The transition away from above-ground undefended launch sites to silo launch installations ensuring missile survivability and protected from enemy nuclear impacts occurred gradually. The missiles of the most varied types and designations being introduced into the troops were improved and modernized. The yield of nuclear charges and warhead strike accuracy both improved. Today the troops are armed with launch installations that have wholly automatic remote control and an extremely short launch preparation time. The high proportion of automation and electronic and computer equipment in the complex increases the reliability of the weapons and combat equipment and the security of their utilization, and entirely rules out any unsanctioned operations.

The party Central Committee Political Report to the 27th CPSU Congress stressed that Soviet military doctrine is unambiguously defensive. The USSR has pledged not be be the first to use nuclear weapons. But it is no secret that scenarios for a nuclear attack against us do exist. We do not have the right to fail to take them into account. And that is why the strategic nuclear forces — the Strategic Missile Forces and Naval and Air Force strategic forces — are in constant readiness to immediately inflict a retaliatory strike.

A steel door leads to one side. Below are concrete steps. Going deeper and deeper. We enter a narrow tunnel illuminated with diffused lighting. We make a turn. And another. Our footsteps echo in the total silence.

The underground entrance ends at an airtight sliding door. We go through, and it immediately closes again. We get into an elevator. And down we go again.

I once went down to the coal face in a mine. Here the feeling is different. It is as if the elevator is sliding down the belly of a submarine placed vertically in the ground. I try to count the flashing level indicators and — I lose count....

The elevator stops, gently depositing us on the concrete "bottom." And there is another steel door.

Behind the door is a separate compartment: the command post of the guards unit. And if hordes of hostile missiles emerge streaking toward our country from the dark dungeons of Nevada or Colorado, from the NATO bases in Britain, Italy, or West Germany, or from the depths of the oceans, the motherland's orders will arrive here. And then the duty detail in the underground bastion will launch the retaliatory Soviet missiles hidden in the silos.

Who are these people prepared to carry out the order to launch a retaliatory strike? The current detail at the strategic missile consoles is headed by Guards Major Yuriy Vasin. He is 33. From a worker family and married with two children. He has the top military qualification of "expert specialist." He is a student at the correspondence section of a military academy. With him is Guards Senior Lieutenant Igor Medvetskiy. He is 25 and married with a daughter. His choice of profession was predetermined: He is the grandson of a frontline artilleryman, a colonel who fought from Brest to Berlin. On the other side of that door, in a cylindrical room, Vasin and Medvetskiy stand guard over peace and our dear home.

We go up to the surface and enter the rest room. It contains polished wooden furniture, carpets, a color television, and bookshelves — the comforts of home. The walls are easy on the eyes: pictures of Russian landscapes. There is a small sports hall and a shower room. One of the officers who has recently come off shift is leafing through newspapers. Another is sitting at a writing table covered with textbooks — he is preparing for academy examinations. Both recently celebrated a double jubilee — 25 years since the creation of the Strategic Missile Forces and their own 25th birthdays....

I get acquainted with Guards Warrant Officer Nikolay Zadorozhnyy. He has 27 years of military service behind him. Service in the Strategic Missile Forces is intensive and linked with frequent separations from home and family. So what makes him, the no-longer-young Warrant Officer Zadorozhnyy, spend his days and nights in this remote area? "Do you really want a one-sentence answer?" Nikolay said, and asked me to sit down. Here is a brief resume of the veteran missile soldier's life.

His father, the chairman of a rural soviet, was shot before his very eyes on the first day of the fascist occupation. Nikolay, as the son of a Communist, was chased barefoot over broken glass. He survived by a miracle. After the war and now orphaned, he worked as a cowherd. When drafted he flew in bombers as a gunner. Then he became a milling machine operator in a plant. He was summoned to the military enlistment office where it was suggested that he become a military construction worker with the promise of an unusual construction project. He agreed and was taken to the construction site. It was winter; there were tents, no roads, and the schedules were extremely tight. What was the project? This very same command post. He recalls digging each meter into the ground. But here and in other parts of the country, even the most remote, the military construction workers succeeded. They did not give an aggressor the slightest chance of inflicting a first nuclear strike with impunity. Yet overseas many hundreds of launch installations targeted on the USSR had already been set up.

He stayed to serve at this command post which he himself had built. He also knows to whom he will hand over the post — his son, now drafted into the Army and a senior sergeant who has already distinguished himself in Afghanistan. The father safeguards peace. And the son defends the cause of peace.

Zadorozhnyy spoke with special love of his wife Galina. She also had a terrible time during the war. And consequently even today feels other people's pain as if it were her own. A blood donor, she has already freely given 108 liters of blood....

That is how the Zadorozhnyy family see their duty to the motherland. And it was clear to me why the Guards warrant officer serves precisely in the Strategic Missile Forces. Forces whose terrible weapons are one of the guarantees of peace and quiet in our home.

What precedes the anxious vigil in the underground steel bunker? On my last morning I visited a training command post. From the exercise leader's workstation I can watch the training detail.

My place at the workstation is taken by Commander V. Yakovlev. Officers S. Martynenko and V. Kasyanenko settle into high-backed easy chairs at the "command post." In front of them are small tables similar to writing desks. Their plastic tops are studded with buttons, keys, and switches. The semicircular inside of the "command post" gleams with white and green displays and indicators. The premises contain nothing frightening or particularly impressive. It is similar to the situation in an air traffic control room or power station.

Let us present the training detail. (It is selected according to people's psychological compatibility, commonality of interests, and habits — everything is important: They are left alone for hours on end....) Guards Captain Sergey Martynenko is 27 and an expert specialist. He is married with one daughter and is an excellent sportsman. His hobbies? Wood carving and the guitar. His testimonial states: "He is reliable in combat work...." Alongside is Guards Lieutenant Valeriy Kasyanenko. He is 22 and a specialist third class. He is a bachelor and a first-rate shot, boxer, and athlete. His testimonial states: "He is persistent in training. He does not lose his head under the complex conditions of combat work."

Work at the training "command post" now starts. Here, with the help of highly accurate electronic instruments, the detail, without leaving their positions, takes the "pulse" of each missile. The officers are like virtuoso pianists: with incredible speed they easily and expertly run their fingers over the switches on the panel. Prompt and accurate information about the launch readiness of all ICBM systems appears on signal readouts.

The commander starts pressing the switches on his own panel. His task is to create a situation as near as possible to that which might be encountered on combat standby. Remember the television program "What? Where? When?" It gave you a minute to think. A whole minute. The missile troops have but moments.

Signals flash on the panels in front of the officers.

"Communications breakdown..."

"Loss of power..."

"Fire in compartment number..."

Of course, these situations are unlikely in real life. But that makes things no easier for the detail. There is no such thing as a "dry run" training session for strategic missile troops. Should S. Martynenko, a master in military matters, now commit even a single mistake — even if he immediately corrects it — the detail's actions will be considered hesitant.

Nuclear missile weapons require accurate and extremely well-organized actions on the part of a combat detail. And here at the "command post" you can see for yourself that it is inconceivable to direct missile equipment without in-depth knowledge in the sphere of automation, remote control, electronics, ballistics, nuclear physics, and mathematics. The example of even this ordinary training session also shows something else: Combat standby duty demands particular teamwork from missile troops and the ability to act resolutely and purposefully under conditions of extremely high physical, moral, and psychological pressures. The Strategic Missile Forces are a branch of the Armed Forces where almost one officer in three is a master of military matters!

Time is passing! The electronic counter inexorably ticks off the moments. I hear the officers exchanging clipped phrases. It is not enough to report disagreements now. Yakovlev is waiting for a full analysis of the situation he has created. The measures taken by the officers will be assessed to ensure that the unit's combat readiness has not diminished, and the commander is aided by a special panel — a impassive objective screen giving a readout of the result of the detail's efforts. Different colored lights whirl on the indicator boards and displays in a frenzied dance. Things are heating up at the "command post."

And finally Yakovlev duplicates the unit's decision to launch all ICBM's. He gives the order to the "command post." The officers press a combination of buttons, entering the order into the missiles' guidance system. The time limit for launch is so short that the detail must act automatically.

Red displays showing the numbers of launch installations flash. Those are the ICBM's — invisible from where we are — answering: "Roger, standing by!"

I imagine how, somewhere on the edge of the forest a large, rather flat semicircle cast from high-durability metal, sweeping the snow-powdered hill, opens the mouth of the silo....

The officers, each at their own console, press buttons simultaneously. The automatic equipment works in a fraction of a second: one circuit closes, then another, ignition in the combustion chamber, and...

The displays show that the missiles have left the silos!

The electronic counter has stopped! Yes, all this takes longer to describe than to happen....

The commander of a Strategic Missile Forces unit... How did I previously imagine the person under whose command are officers empowered to press the button? There are rows of orders on his jacket. He has a steely stare, is taciturn, restrained, and authoritative... No, that picture does not apply to Yakovlev.

He has only two awards so far: service medals. He has good, blue eyes. He is sociable. Straightforward with his subordinates and benevolent. He has a soft, rather than a "parade ground" voice. And as for his age: At 31 he is the youngest unit commander in the Strategic Missile Forces.

That is the outside information. Let us take a look at his career history. He graduated from higher military college summa cum laude. He graduated from the military academy summa cum laude. He has moved progressively up through the officer ranks. His unit is a front-ranker. But let fellow servicemen of the guards lieutenant colonel fill in his portrait.

Guards Major Yu. Vasin: "Yakovlev is a rare and inspiringly industrious commander." Lieutenant Colonel A. Bolshakov: "He can find the right people to help him and encourage their initiative." Lieutenant Colonel Yu. Yeretnov: "Under Yakovlev people see the results of their work. They do not approach service like programmed robots but conscientiously, with a real feel for the job." Guards Senior Lieutenant I. Medvetskiy: "The commander immediately played on our pride: Can't you do any better? It seems we could. Now any other way is unthinkable."

Under the glass on Yakovlev's writing table is a letter from his father. The frontline officer congratulates his son on being appointed to his new post. And he writes words that have made a deep impression on the young commander's consciousness:

"In 1941 the fatherland's defense stretched along the Brest-Vyborg line. Today the frontline is where you are serving..."

Military Officials Sign Retired General's Obituary

PM040910 Moscow KRASNAYA ZVEZDA in Russian 3 Apr 86 Second Edition p 3

[Obituary of L.I. Baukov]

[Excerpts] Colonel General (retired) Leonid Ivanovich Baukov, a participant in the Great Patriotic War, has died after a serious and protracted illness. He devoted his entire conscious life to service of the socialist motherland and the Communist Party, of which he became a member in 1931.

L.I. Baukov was born into a workers family in Petrovsk, Saratov Oblast, on 13 August 1910. He entered the ranks of the Soviet Army in 1931.

Kolkhoz Imeni Kirov Milkmaid

WA311430 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 5 Mar 86 p 2

[Speech by Comrade V.V. Koroleva, milkmaid, stock breeding plant-Kolkhoz imeni Kirov, Tula Oblast]

[Text] Dear comrades! It is a great responsibility and a high honor to take part in the work of the 27th Congress and to speak from its high rostrum. In seeing me off to Moscow, our kolkhoz peasants asked me to speak about what concerns us. And it is not easy to do this, because many reflections and thoughts of the village workers were stated in the Central Committee Political Report made by Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev. (Applause)

In the direct and open criticism of shortcomings and omissions which has been voiced at the Congress we see the firm policy of the Central Committee and its Politburo to strengthen discipline and order in all spheres of life and to affirm a responsible attitude toward work. As a deputy to the RSFSR Supreme Soviet, I often meet with people in different situations. I will say that the absolute majority of workers approve of this policy and that the Tula delegation unanimously supports it. (Applause) We fervently approve the foreign and domestic policy of our party and with all our hearts support the tireless activity of the CPSU Central Committee toward preserving peace on earth and the proposals, set forth in the statement by Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev, for the destruction of nuclear weapons on our planet. (Applause)

Comrades! To me, a rural resident, the welcome changes in the village resulting from the decisions of the May 1982 CPSU Central Committee Plenum are especially marked. Our Kolkhoz imeni Kirov, like many farms in the non-Chernozem Zone, is today standing firmly on the ground. The great help received from the state is being used correctly. We have comfortable residences, a house of culture, school and kindergarten. Each family has enough. Working conditions in the fields and on the farms have improved; new structures have been built and many processes mechanized. There is also output. Currently we are obtaining a reliable grain harvest of 30 centners per hectare, and previously had only one-third as much in our poor soils. We have completely solved the problem of fodder. In the past 10 years sales to the state of meat and dairy products have increased by a third and the kolkhoz has increased the yield of milk per cow to 4,300 kg. We are fulfilling the plan for the sale of all types of agricultural products under any weather conditions.

Personally I obtained 4,900 kg of milk per cow last year. (Applause) This is a ton more than in 1981. In the year of the congress I decided to exceed the 5,000 kg mark, and by the end of the 5-year plan will near the 6,000 mark. (Applause) My coworkers on the farm are working with the same intensity. The entire kolkhoz collective firmly intends to make a great step forward during this 5-year plan; to achieve a grain yield no less than 35 centners per hectare and a 5,000 kg per cow milk yield. The path to achieving this has been thought out. We are introducing scientifically based agricultural systems and advanced technology in animal husbandry, and are improving labor organization. And, very importantly, our party organization and kolkhoz administration counts on people and on their conscientious labor. We are confident of fulfilling our plans. However, we also have our difficulties and unsolved problems. We must pay more attention to inculcating in people a keen feeling of ownership on the land and improve responsibility for capable and assiduous management. The April plenum and CPSU Central Committee Political Report direct us to this end.

I will say in self-criticism that our kolkhoz is somewhat slow to introduce brigade cost accounting. Inertia of the leadership, specialists and we animal husbandmen has been a factor. Now we are resolutely correcting this. But the aging of the village is of particular concern. Pitifully few young people are staying in the village. This is particularly noticeable in animal husbandry. On the farms more and more milkmaids are older people. And future prospects are simply alarming, In our oblast, to my knowledge, in many farms by the end of this 5-year plan more than a third of the milkmaids will reach retirement age, and so far we are not finding enough replacements. We would all like for our children to work nearby. But the desire alone is insufficient. Even on our farm, where decent working and living conditions have been created, we are so far unable to compete with the cities and with industrial enterprises. We may do everything, but if there are no people in the village, there will be neither meat nor milk. (Applause)

Today the discussion about scientific and technological progress and about new technologies is in full progress. This attracts the young people. After all, they are always drawn toward what is new and advanced. On the farms and in the fields technological progress is so far not very speedy. For 25 years I have been working in animal husbandry, but have never expected that reliably functioning manure disposal transporters and equipment for the preparation and distribution of fodder would arrive. There are also not any highly productive fodder extracting machines. Our field workers strive mightily to strengthen the fodder base and have learned to grow 400 or more centners per hectare, but then there is nothing with which to harvest these riches. It has been correctly stated that the country's only silage harvesting combine, the KSK-100, produced by the Gomel Agricultural Machine Building Factory, is so poor that the mechanizers refuse to work on it. (Applause) Of course, it is not pleasant to speak of this. But we know well the industriousness of Belorussian workers and hope that they will correct this shortcoming.

The other side of the problem is living conditions. The standard of living is still inferior to that of the cities. Take, for example, rural stores. They have many goods, but at times necessities cannot be bought. There is a shortage of quilted jackets, felt boots, thermal underwear and rubber shoes. Very few washing and sewing machines are supplied, and how necessary they are to our women, who are engaged in difficult labor on animal husbandry farms! In recent years we have had a lot of good housing built in the village. But far from all houses have central heat. Only five percent of the populated areas in the oblast use natural gas. These problems are not simple, but they must be solved, especially under the conditions of our industrial oblast. Six percent of the entire population is engaged in agricultural production, and the outflow is continuing. People are leaving for the city. And, although the oblast is already oversaturated with industry, new factories are always being built, and existing enterprises are expanding.

Might it be better to stop? Might it be better not to create additional jobs, but to use those which are available as they should be used? The efforts of builders should be used for reconstruction, social restructuring of our domestic life, and shifting agricultural production to an industrial basis. (Applause) As a member of the party obkom, I know that it was ordered in one of the resolutions by the Party Central Committee and USSR Council of Ministers concerning development of the non-Chernozem Zone to limit our industrial construction to that necessary. But a number of ministries, by hook or by crook, seek to build new facilities, and USSR Gosplan agrees.

Comrades! The path to highly effective agricultural production lies through extensive introduction of intensive technologies. Everyone knows this today. But, in order to introduce them it is necessary to increase the delivery of highly effective complete fertilizers to the village, preferably liquid fertilizers; to deliver reliable, high productive equipment; and to create a stable base for the storage and reprocessing of fodders and other products. We lay great hopes on Gosagroprom [State Agro-Industrial Committee] for solving these problems. Its creation has been welcomed. Now we wait for it to take more boldly in its hands the fate of agrarian policy. I do not think that the delegates have gotten the impression that we are sitting and waiting for assistance from the central organs. Just the same, I will say that we in the oblast have developed and are implementing a program for the social restructuring of the village, comprehensive mechanization of labor in animal husbandry and strengthening the fodder production base. Implementation of these planned measures will make it possible during the 12th 5-Year Plan to provide the population of the oblast with all agricultural and animal husbandry products, through their own production. This will fully correspond to the current requirements of the party.

Comrades! The CPSU Central Committee Political Report and the Draft Basic Guidelines for the Economic and Social Development of the USSR have outlined grand plans. We delegates will depart from the congress with a great charge of optimism and with a desire to fulfill the party task as well as possible. We have the firm conviction that the decisions which will be made by the congress will become the main purpose of our lives. We will work as the times require and as the strategy of acceleration developed by the party requires. Our workers' honor and conscience is the guarantee of this. (Applause)

Kolkhoz Imeni Frunze Chairman

WA311450 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 5 Mar 86 p 3

[Speech by Comrade V.Ya. Gorin, Chairman of the Order of the Labor Red Banner Kolkhoz imeni Frunze, Belgorod Oblast, Twice Hero of Socialist Labor]

[Text] Esteemed comrades! The folk saying is true: Truth is brighter than the sun and more dear than gold. And now the heart rejoices in the frank thoroughness and resourcefulness with which the CPSU Central Committee Political Report expressed everything about how the country lives today, what people are concerned about today, and what life itself requires. Listening to this report and thinking over the speeches of delegates and foreign guests, I recognize with particular force how much is being done by our party and the Soviet State in the name of peace, and how strong is the community of progressive forces. This multiplies tenfold our energy and our confidence in a bright tomorrow. There are no difficulties which the united will of the party and people cannot surmount!

Throughout the country and in every labor collective the difficult, but we are confident, irreversible process of modernization and rebuilding is underway. It passes through the minds and hearts of the Soviet people and requires the full effort of each -- most of all in labor.

Among all the cares which concern me most as a rural resident, in first place, of course, is implementation of the Food Program. Life has completely confirmed the correctness of the key directions of the party's agrarian policy, worked out at the May 1982 CPSU Central Committee Plenum. The achievements of the Kolkhoz imeni Frunze, the leadership of which my fellow villagers have entrusted to me for 27 years already, are also directly associated with implementing the decisions of the plenum. The collective of our large farm, specializing in swine production, fulfilled in 4 years the plan for the 11th 5-Year Plan. We have sold to the state products worth R17 million above the plan. In an average year we now produce 38 percent more meat than in the 10th 5-Year Plan, and almost 1 and 1/2 times the milk. Labor productivity has increased 33 percent. Annual profits have reached R6.5 million; the level of profitability is 58 percent. (Applause)

The oblast as a whole has fulfilled the plans of the five-year plan for sale to the state of all basic types of animal husbandry products.

Do these results satisfy us? No, they do not. And they cannot satisfy us, because the country's need for food, as was stated in the report by Comrade N.I. Ryzhkov, chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers and member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo, is still not being fully met, and to a great extent existing reserves and capabilities have not been put into action. We discussed this frankly at the electoral party meeting and the rayon and oblast party conferences. And there was a breath of fresh air at these conferences, although it must be said frankly that the spirit of the April 1985 CPSU Central Committee Plenum is not yet being affirmed as necessary everywhere. There are still managers who are awaiting additional instructions, and there are also those who hope that soon the discussions will end and everything will be as before. As Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev stated quite correctly in his report, such people cannot be tolerated. And the sooner we rid ourselves of them, the better it will be for our cause. (Applause)

We see as our main task achieving a further increase in production of farm products, and most of all meat. In the 12th 5-Year Plan the average annual delivery to the state will increase by 1,000 tons and exceed 6,000 tons, which constitutes 400 centners per 100 hectares. The capacity of the swine breeding complex will double. On what basis will this task be accomplished; what here is most important? I would say that the main thing, and the center of all the problems, is development of fodder production.

The time has come to set up matters so that everything grown in the field is used for fodder production; so that nothing is lost; and so that technology guarantees that fodder with the desired characteristics is obtained. In short, the need has come to create a powerful fodder industry, beginning with farm shops and concluding with major enterprises.

I would like to emphasize that to solve this task nothing needs to be invented, it is just necessary to use capably already existing experience. In our kolkhoz, for example, a fodder shop was built recently; I would say a fodder factory, with automatic dispensing of all components. In the oblast, 400 fodder shops have been built and redesigned in connection with the shift to low-concentrate feeding. After this experience was approved by the party Central Committee, interest was great, all the more so in that the equipment for these shops was manufactured mainly on our initiative. Of course, initiative in such matters is very important. But we have special ministries -- Minselkhozmash [Ministry of Tractor and Agricultural Machine Building] and Minzhivmash [Ministry of Machine Building for Animal Husbandry and Fodder Production], which are required to study thoroughly and generalize everything new and progressive and organize mass production of machinery and equipment required today by agricultural production. So far these leaders, who often come out in favor of advanced experience and industrialization of the branch, are virtually not setting up production of such necessary equipment.

Especially intolerable today are instances of the delivery to agriculture of poor quality equipment. Mechanizers utter well-justified criticism in this regard of the Odessapochvomash Production Association and the Gomel Agricultural Machine-Building Factory. There are many complaints about the quality of grain harvesting equipment and trucks. For example, the Kutaisi Automobile Factory delivered 50 unsuitable vehicles last year, which had to be returned to the supplier. More than a third of the spare parts turned out to be damaged. It is painful to see that in the busy time of sowing or harvesting dozens of machines stand idle through the fault of bad workmen. This brings not only economic harm, but also hurts morale.

One cannot help but wonder how the decisions of the April 1985 CPSU Central Committee Plenum are being fulfilled in these enterprises. Can it be that Communists and party organizations do not see this? Can it be that a special resolution is needed for every occasion in order to bring bad workmen to order and to take care of the problem of quality? (Applause)

And how much we waste due to poorly developed processing industry! I am not the only one who has spoken about this here. Our oblast grows sugar beets. In the last 3 years the average annual state purchase of sugar beets increased 66 percent over the two first years of the 5-year plan. However, the capacities of the factories prevent its timely processing. Due to this almost 53,000 tons of sugar were lost during the past 5-year plan alone, as was noted at the oblast party conference. And what are country-wide losses? I would like USSR Gosagroprom, along with USSR Gosplan and the appropriate ministries to become seriously involved in solving this most important problem. Of course, expenditures will be required, but, in the first place, they will be rapidly recovered, and, in the second place, we will save so much currency, which we spend to acquire corresponding products abroad.

These problems were discussed today in the report. They were expressed in the Draft Basic Guidelines for the Economic and Social Development of the USSR For 1986-1990 and the Period Up Through the Year 2000. It is only important that everything which we decide at the congress be accomplished without fail. And here we are coming to a single conclusion. It is necessary to begin by strengthening discipline and increasing the responsibility of cadres. Experience shows that our efforts to strengthen discipline and raise the demands made upon cadres are more effective the more energetically an atmosphere of trust is established in our relationships. In life everything is interrelated. The more instructions there are from above, the less initiative there is from below. The new structure and its managerial mechanism are aimed at encouraging independence and creativity on the part of all engaged in agricultural production and the whole agro-industrial complex. Finally, on the land there is one master -- Gosagroprom! In its hands are resources, planning and financing. We have long dreamed about such a managerial structure. But in and of itself, a structure still does not solve everything. Unfortunately, the fallacious style, formed over decades, is slow to give way: instructions on every question; tutelage, whether needed or not. Communists working in the agricultural industry must be first to shift their consciousness and deeds. But they are not the only ones. Party and soviet organs have something to think about. It is important to accelerate in every way the transition from good and correct decisions to real, actual changes. The congress has very correctly posed the question about reducing economic plan indices. At the same time, in our view, it would be appropriate to reexamine and put in order all types of accounting and bookkeeping.

Dear comrades from the USSR CSA [Central Statistical Administration], do you not yourselves think: Why, in a cost accounting collective, which is more than any other interested in assiduous management and for which the end result is the ruble, is it necessary to require a weekly report on how and where every tractor or combine is working. (Applause) It is as though it has decided to free the bull to graze freely in the meadow, but to tie it with a rope just in case. No, it must be decided: Either free it, or hold it firmly. Half measures will bring half results and, as was stated in the report by the party Central Committee, we need to double the majority of our basic economic indices within the next 15 years.

Why do I discuss this in such detail? Because excessive reports and paper shuffling is not only indicative of a lack of trust in cadres. Excessive reports also mean time specialists must take away from real matters. Of course, independence does not signify lack of control. To the contrary, demands must increase continuously. But real demands cannot be made upon a man who has become accustomed to bowing to every instruction. It is necessary to give the specialist the opportunity to try his wings and to give him confidence in himself.

This is also fully applicable to relations between party committees and economic managers. If a manager is not coping with his work it is necessary to see what is interfering with him and how to help him. It also may be necessary to get after the nonperformers. Those who do not wish to give full effort to the cause must be resolutely eliminated from management and sent to ordinary work, and I do mean ordinary. (Applause) But those who serve the cause devotedly and selflessly must be trusted implicitly. The whole country knows the names of the best managers of kolkhozes and sovkhozes. They are linked not only by the highest level of responsibility, but also by their ability to defend their independence and their right to initiative. And such conditions must be created for all economic managers.

Speaking about cadres, I would like to direct attention to the training of agricultural specialists in our VUZes. Observing over many years the graduates coming into the economy, one notes with sadness that most know theory, but many cannot organize matters in practice. Such a specialist comes to the kolkhoz and spends two or three years assimilating his duties, and some of them do not even strive, since back in the institute they were not given jobs which fit their vocation. How can this situation be corrected? How can it be ensured that agronomists, livestock specialists and mechanics, after the VUZ, take part in intensive agricultural work without breaking stride?

In our view it is necessary to lengthen substantially the students' practical experience, which they undergo during their studies, beginning from the first course and working their way up from an ordinary kolkhoz peasant to a chief specialist. This will make it possible, on the one hand, to raise their level of preparation, and on the other hand, for those who do not like the specialty to drop out in time. The value of such more extensive practical training would be obvious. (Applause)

And there is yet another matter, that of the social restructuring of the village. I would even put it in the forefront. In order to work well on the land a person must develop roots there. Patriotism for each of us begins with this. What is it that makes our good farms strong? They are strong not only in terms of their competent and capable production. They are strong in their stable and healthy-spirited labor collectives, in their concern for people, and in their creation of good working and living conditions. (Applause) For our party organization this is law.

In recent years we have built many residences, two schools, three cultural houses, a 320-place childrens' training center, a dispensary and more than 60 km of roads. More than half of the villages are supplied with gas. Along with the general educational school there is also a music, sports, choreography, art and a work-study school. We have more than 500 people participating in amateur art activities alone. All of this has made possible the creation of a stable labor collective and successful farming, for culture and production are inseparable. (Applause)

But the rates of the village transformation must be substantially accelerated. It must be considered that a large amount of construction work is being carried out by the internal resources of the farms, but its development is held back by inadequate material and technical support. Some kolkhoz chairmen, in order to obtain metal, wood or sanitary engineering products, violate financial discipline and skirt the law, and this does not end up for the good. These issues are not being raised for the first time; however, it is not felt that USSR Gosplan and other organizations have displayed activeness in solving these problems. Planning should be reexamined, additional resources sought and the capacities of rural construction organizations increased. The situation cannot be tolerated, comrades, whereby the hereditary farmers flee the villages! (Applause)

What exactly is the rural social and cultural way of life? It is not merely schools, hospitals, barber shops and workshops. It is the living environment of the rural worker, on which depend his health, frame of mind, knowledge and cultural level. It is essentially the human factor, which determines all our successes and failures. This means that the attitude toward it must be a party attitude! (Applause)

We customarily say that the Food Program is a matter for the whole people. And this is true! Much attention must be paid to it in our ideological work. But look at the weekly Central Television Program. Essentially only one broadcast, "The Rural Hour," is addressed specifically to rural residents. It is a good and necessary broadcast, one cannot say otherwise. But think, comrades; one hour a week! And we sit down to eat no less than three times a day. And there are few who complain about their appetite. (Applause)

Comrades! I am speaking here about what troubles me, and I speak from the heart. And I do not speak only because it is my nature, but because now there is a different situation in the party and the country. (Applause) It is inspiring confidence; everything which comes from life will be heard and done. And we will accomplish fully what depends on us. The party Central Committee can be sure of this. (Prolonged applause)

Auto Factory Toolsmith

[Speech by Comrade Ye.A. Shulyak, toolsmith-stamp operator at the Minsk Automobile Factory imeni 60th Anniversary of Great October, Hero of Socialist Labor]

[Text] Esteemed comrades! Each of us delegates heard parting words from our coworkers who elected us to the congress. My comrades asked me to relate that the workers at the Minsk Automobile Factory approve and support with their hearts and minds the party's foreign and domestic policy and that of accelerating the country's social and economic development. This policy is the only true and correct one. It meets our thoughts and desires. (Applause) The Central Committee Political Report has precisely and clearly formulated the immediate and long-range tasks and goals of the party, and defined the ways to implement them in practice.

We are very grateful for the efforts of the party to preserve and strengthen peace on our planet. The very word, war, is profoundly foreign to us. The peace program set forth in the statement by Comrade Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev, CPSU Central Committee general secretary, and in the Central Committee Political Report to the congress is especially dear and understandable to us workers of Belorussia, one in four residents of which burned in the fires of World War II.

For us workers the struggle for peace is primarily daily, intense labor in the name of strengthening the economic and defensive might of the homeland. Each of the 42 people in the brigade which I lead understand this well. One-fourth of our collective are Communists. They both set the tone in work and initiate useful deeds. We have succeeded in strengthening labor discipline. We have given a decisive rebuff to the lovers of strong drink. We did not shy away from having a frank and impartial conversation with workers who produced defective goods. In short, people assumed a more demanding attitude toward one another. And today I can say with pride in my comrades that they are working conscientiously and have a responsible attitude toward their work. In honor of the opening day of the congress the brigade fulfilled its two month production target in advance. Labor enthusiasm and creativity are characteristic of the majority of the collectives in the factory brigade, which unites more than 80 percent of the workers.

Responding by deeds to the policy developed by the CPSU Central Committee of accelerating the country's social and economic development, factory workers see it as their duty to increase most rapidly the output of heavy freight automotive equipment. The factory collective fulfilled in advance the target of the last 5-year plan for production volume and labor productivity. All of the growth of the last two years was obtained without increasing the expenditure of rolled ferrous metals and while reducing the number of workers. Automotive factory workers began to produce modernized tractor-trailer rigs for inter-city hauling, with improved technical and economic indices.

However, we are not satisfied with what we've achieved. Today we must work much better. This is my understanding of the requirements set forth in the CPSU Central Committee Political Report and the Basic Guidelines. We have also clearly been instructed to do this in the CPSU Central Committee decree, which thoroughly examined the work of the factory party organization in fulfilling the law on labor collectives. I will say frankly, as a member of the factory party committee, that this document stirred up the entire party organization and our whole collective. We looked anew at our shortcomings and omissions and saw large reserves and opportunities. Appropriate conclusions have been drawn from the sharp and fair criticism. Communists have been leading an uncompromising struggle to root out self-complacency and to restructure the style and methods of our work.

Today there is no aspect of life and activity where the law on labor collectives would not have a favorable influence. Automotive factory workers have begun to participate more actively in managing enterprise affairs. This year's draft plan was discussed at workers' meetings in all factory elements.

Workers and specialists made many specific proposals. Questions of the selection and assignment of cadres -- team leaders, foremen and other workers -- and of developing production and improving working and living conditions, are more and more often being taken to the general soviet. This has found specific embodiment in the plans and commitments for the current year and the 12th 5-Year Plan. We must increase by 50 percent the growth rate of production volume and double labor productivity. A most important task of our collective is for our vehicles to be better than foreign models. Do not think that this is simply a statement. It is real, and is based on a good and solid foundation. We have a cohesive collective which possesses skilled cadres. Redesign and technical retooling has been widely developed in the factory, based on comprehensive mechanization and production automation.

During the 5-year plan 60 percent of the active part of fixed capital will be modernized, and the same portion of capital investments will be directed toward redesign and technical retooling. The amount of our own production of machine tools and means of mechanization will triple. Our first priority is modernizing equipment in processes associated with heavy physical labor and intensive stress.

Toolsmiths are particularly happy about this, since our trade, although interesting and necessary, requires great physical exertion. Today we have in operation a new, mechanized stamping line. Work has become much easier, quality has improved, expenditure of metal has declined 12 percent, and labor productivity increased 1.5 fold. We made a great deal in our factory for this line. But, we will not be able to manufacture everything ourselves. We count on machine tool manufacturers to satisfy more fully our needs for advanced equipment. Speaking more specifically, thus far delivery of 18 lines out of 52 necessary to transition to the manufacture of new vehicles, which the country awaits, is not yet clear. This has long been known in the Ministry of the Automotive Industry and in USSR Gosplan. But everything is as before. We are prepared to begin today with this work. But, unfortunately, parts suppliers, mostly the Yaroslav motor manufacturers, are holding us back. They are unjustifiably dragging out the manufacture of a new engine.

Kolkhoz Imeni Kirov Chairman

WA311630 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 5 Mar 86 p 4

[Speech by Comrade D.K. Motornyy, Chairman of the Kolkhoz imeni Kirov, Kherson Oblast, Twice Hero of Socialist Labor]

[Text] Esteemed comrades! Listening attentively to the Central Committee Political Report, the report on the Basic Guidelines and the delegates' speeches, I felt as though the fiery wind of history itself was rushing into our life. And is this not so? After all, the decisions of our party congress will accelerate not only the development of Socialist society; they will influence the acceleration of the progress of all mankind.

The scales of the plans outlined are truly unprecedented. Their implementation will require that all of us, to use Lenin's words, multiply our efforts tenfold. For workers in the agro-industrial complex this means, first of all, to bring reserves into operation and most importantly, to use effectively the production potential which has already been created. For our vegetable and dairy farm collective, no matter what the weather conditions, each year was a step forward. The 11th 5-Year Plan was fulfilled. Average grain yield over the 5-year period exceeded 45 centners and the average annual net income was 4.7 million rubles, including 2 million from animal husbandry. Some R785 of net income were obtained from each hectare of agricultural land. The profitability of production was 85 percent, and that of animal husbandry was 80 percent. (Applause)

What enabled the collective to reach this level? It can be said definitively that it was the introduction in all 52 elements of complete cost accounting, which we have already been engaged in for more than 20 years. It is precisely cost accounting which helped us to use effectively all funds and reserves and to conduct plant growing and animal husbandry intensively. Due to cost accounting, for 4 5-year plans already the kolkhoz has not used short or long term credits. It transfers R1.5 million to the state budget each year and works on a self-paying and self-financing basis. (Applause)

It would seem that there is no need to agitate for cost accounting. But here is what is troubling. Although today there are no open enemies of cost accounting, there are also thus far rather few true adherents. It is not favored by some managers and specialists, for it is necessary to work very painstakingly with each individual and to provide support in fulfilling cost accounting targets. It is much easier to just argue about cost accounting! Moreover, the existing practice of subsidizing low profit and unprofitable farms from the state budget suits them completely and gives rise to parasitism. Such frames of mind, unfortunately, have been grounded in the work of some managers and define their style. We believe that the report made by Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev poses the issue of ensuring the self-paying nature of economic entities with particular urgency and demandingness. Net income must be the main source of the production expansion and material incentive fund in kolkhozes and sovkhozes, and the farm itself must be in charge of this fund. (Applause)

Cost accounting has become a key factor for us in bringing up a zealous, thinking and true owner of the kolkhoz field. But this does not come in-and-of itself. Party, trade union and komsomol organizations and the kolkhoz management continuously sought new forms of work to create a stable and healthy collective. For this it was most necessary to raise up the deep layers of development of kolkhoz democracy. This was accomplished through self-management organs -- the soviets of cost accounting elements. Due to the development of labor collective self-management, where all questions of work, living conditions, rest and material and moral incentives are solved, the high labor activeness of people has been ensured, when each kolkhoz worker goes to work and does not leave his conscience at home.

At the same time, we understand well that the solution to many problems depends only on ourselves. We often do not display the necessary persistence and high principles in struggling against shortcomings, which, unfortunately, are still numerous. Much remains for us to do to increase the coefficient of use of rolled metal, almost a fourth of which is still going to waste.

This problem also troubles us. Since the start of this year we have been utilizing the new managerial methods. The delivery of products according to agreements made has become our foremost duty, and we are striving to fulfill it. But, due to the erratic delivery of metal it is frequently necessary to save the plan by resorting to "storming." I will give an example. Recently work stopped in the section. I went to the suppliers to ask where the metal was and who was delivering it to us. They shrugged their shoulders: It does no good to complain formally to the supplying factories of USSR Minchermet [Ministry of Ferrous Metallurgy]. They shipped it on 25 January, and the fact that the metal arrived at our factory in February doesn't trouble them. You see, the agreements count deliveries monthly, and not in 10 day periods, as it should be for the sake of the work.

I asked: Why did you ship metal of another type? They answered: Be thankful that we gave you at least that. So, the metalworkers forge so-called "pancakes," and throw away the excess part of the metal as waste. Such work does not bring satisfaction to people, although the plan is being fulfilled. There are still many such disconnections at the upper levels of management and the economy. We workers do not know all the reasons for this, but we feel them very acutely. Labor productivity falls, losses increase and quality suffers. And it is very right that these issues received a sharp and principled assessment at the congress.

Comrades! Enterprises in the Socialist countries are also taking part in creating the family of automotive vehicles and in increasing output. I recall that when starting to produce a new vehicle a need arose for more productive machinery. Our factory made a request of the machine tool manufacturers of Czechoslovakia and the GDR, and the required equipment was delivered on time. Cooperation between our factory and enterprises in the CEMA countries has been implemented successfully for many years already. Each year delivery of diesel engines produced by the Martin Factory (Czechoslovakia) is increasing. Some subassemblies for MAZ vehicles come to us from the GDR, Poland and Yugoslavia. Of course, these goods do not come only to us. Products of our association are sent to more than 60 countries. Each year deliveries of Belorussian vehicles to countries of the socialist community increase.

I fully support the position taken in the report by Comrade Nikolay Ivanovich Ryzhkov on further developing production cooperation among the Socialist countries, and about sharing advanced experience. All of this will work still more for the cause of peace, for strengthening fraternal friendship and cooperation and for Socialism. (Applause)

I assure my country's party and you comrade delegates that, as I return to my factory, I will do everything to embody the spirit of the congress and its decisions in the work of our collective.

Thus, every cost accounting element enjoys complete trust and independence in solving various production and social problems. It would be right for all kolkhoz and sovkhoz managers to also have such independence.

Agricultural workers completely approve and support the provisions stated in the Political Report about expanding the rights of managers and specialists in kolkhozes and sovkhozes, establishing stable state purchase plans and accelerating the social restructuring of the village.

The party Central Committee persistently emphasizes the importance of the dissemination and mass assimilation of advanced experience. This is truly an important problem of statewide significance. Many come to our kolkhoz to study. We willingly show them and discuss with them everything. But today this alone is too little. It is necessary also for the leading workers themselves, who possess such experience, to take a more active position in its dissemination and to train cadres who are capable of leading lagging sectors in other collectives and improving their work.

Our kolkhoz, supervising the economically weak Vostochnyy Sovkhoz, recommended the kolkhoz chief engineer to be its director. Now we are providing to this sovkhoz a variety of organizational and economic assistance, and our primary task is to introduce into sovkhoz production the best from the experience of our collective. We are confident that the sovkhoz will not only come out of the hole, but will also be in the ranks of leading collectives.

I would also like to support these troubling thoughts from the rostrum of the congress. As is known, the April 1985 Central Committee Plenum set forth a requirement which defined the full essence and core of the restructuring of work which was developing in the country. That is a requirement for unity of word and deed. But one hears at times some responsible worker, how well he speaks and approves the decisions of the party and government! But, you see, to approve means little, what is necessary also is to work creatively to implement the decisions.

All of the representatives of the agro-industrial complex who spoke before me criticized the quality of agricultural machinery being manufactured. I think that I will add nothing to this. But today new, powerful KAMAZ vehicles are reaching us, and what is the first thing we do in beginning their "operation?" We take off the truck bodies and reweld all seams, or otherwise after the very first load they become completely deformed and inoperable. Do the leaders of the Ministry of the Automotive Industry (Comrade Polyakov, minister) know about this? Undoubtedly they know, but they do not show the necessary demandingness toward their factory directors for the quality of the machines. We believe that such an attitude toward quality must be viewed simply as a state crime, and we ask the Central Committee to be more demanding with regard to this matter toward all managers, from top to bottom. (Applause)

In our view scientists must also substantially increase their contribution to solving the questions of agricultural intensification. Recently I read in PRAVDA how sharp the questions were in the CPSU Central Committee resolution on the work of the Siberian Department of VASKhNIL [All-Union Academy of Agricultural Sciences imeni V.I. Lenin], and thought: Essentially the same assessment could be made to several scientific institutions in the Ukrainian Department of VASKhNIL. We await from the agricultural scientists new, high yield varieties and hybrids of agricultural crops, and more active participation in solving the tasks of management, production organization, economics and technical reequipping of agriculture.

Recently a number of prominent scientists have placed in doubt the advisability of further developing irrigated farming, especially in the southern black earth areas. Meanwhile, Vladimir Ilich Lenin himself wrote: "Irrigation is most required and will most recreate an area, breathe new life into it and bury the past..."

Experience confirms that irrigation is the main path to reclaiming our southern steppe regions, increasing the production of agricultural products and, in the final analysis, improving the well-being of the Soviet people. And not everything here can be measured solely by the ruble. In assessing the effectiveness of irrigation its social aspect must not be forgotten. In brief, we must not be talking about curtailing irrigated farming, but about, with its help, doubling and tripling the productivity of the land. (Applause) For example, in our kolkhoz grain growers obtain from each irrigated hectare 66-70 centners of grain; 700-800 centners of tomatoes; 143 centners of alfalfa; 2,200-2,500 centners of fodder root crops, and overall production translated to feed units is a stable 117-120 centners. And during the past 15 years the content of organic substances, humus in the soil, has not declined, but increased. (Applause)

Practice shows that it is necessary to approach the development of irrigated lands comprehensively, to provide to the irrigated hectare everywhere a true owner, high quality equipment, fertilizer and herbicides, and to solve more actively in the irrigation zone questions of social and cultural construction. To use irrigated lands more effectively, especially in extremely arid areas, the USSR Council of Ministers should also solve the problem of increasing the output of Fregat overhead irrigation machines, so that in the next two years already it will be possible to enable them to work on a single position.

There are many problems in the village, and improving the management of the agro-industrial complex should do much to solve them. This is a very good thing. But it is important that with the change of sign boards there take place everywhere a change in the style and method of work, so that past errors are not transferred to new conditions, and so that RAPO [Rayon Agro-Industrial Association] is not an office which cranks out papers, but a militant headquarters for solving the tasks of the Food Program. (Applause)

Comrades! We delegates will return home with one main thought, how to better and more quickly embody in practical deeds the decisions of our historic congress. Our collective has made high Socialist commitments for the 12th 5-Year Plan -- to obtain no fewer than 50 centners of grain crops per hectare and to bring the milk yield from each cow up to 5,000 kg. Today I understand that this is our minimum achievement, and we will do everything to surpass it and to contribute our share of work to the all-people's cause of struggling for peace and Communism. (Applause)

Khimstroy Construction Chief

WA311620 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 5 Mar 86 p 5

[Speech by Comrade P.G. Pronyagin, chief of the Khimstroy Construction Administration, Tomsk Oblast, Hero of Socialist Labor]

[Text] Esteemed comrades! In the multitude of thoughts and feelings which gripped us delegates during the days of the congress, one is shared -- a high responsibility for the practical implementation of the energetic policy of the Central Committee, worked out at the April Central Committee Plenum, which is fervently supported by the party and people, and a responsibility for fulfilling the decisions of the 27th congress.

The role of Siberia and the eastern areas of the country in substantially accelerating the country's economic and social development is great. This is vividly and broadly stated in the Central Committee Political Report, made by Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev. Yes, Siberia, with all of its gigantic natural and industrial might, is working actively for our great homeland and for Communism.

Siberia is called a great construction site. This is factual. Let us take merely our Khimstroy Construction Administration in which I work. During the past 5-year plan it introduced more than 800 million rubles' worth of fixed capital and had a 25 percent increase in labor productivity. Overall Tomsk builders assimilated more than R5 billion worth of capital investments during the past 5-year plan, which is one-third more than the indices of the 10th 5-Year Plan.

In the name of our construction collective and party organization I would like to report to the delegates that the decision of the previous, 26th Party Congress on construction of the Tomsk Chemical Factory, which along with other enterprises in the country has been called the nucleus of the modern Soviet chemical industry, is being fulfilled successfully. Here the largest capacities in the country for the production of polypropylene, methanol, formalin and carbamide resins have entered operation.

It is noteworthy that, simultaneously with the creation of the industrial node, major agricultural complexes were built: a 30-hectare hothouse combine which uses secondarily derived heat; a broiler factory and a swine complex. And now Tomsk has an adequate number of shielded earth fresh vegetables, dairy products, eggs and poultry. I add that all of this is being produced locally and that the oblast is no longer subsidized.

Under the leadership of the oblast party organization, construction workers are actively participating in developing the villages and are erecting academic scientific facilities and VUZes in the city. According to the example of industrial enterprises, which produced 26-28 percent of their annual planned products in the first quarter, a rhythmic system of turning over residential quarters has been attained: in the first quarter 20 percent; at mid-year 50 percent; after 10 months, 80 percent of the annual volume. The quantity and quality of residential construction have improved.

The daily lives of construction workers are characterized by many examples of labor heroism among the Siberian builders. Recently, on one of my infrequent free days, I visited a construction site in the area of a future TETS. I wanted to reflect a bit alone. But I did not find solitude. I saw operating machinery and people in a huge foundation pit. I approached and asked: "Why are you not resting, comrades, today is a free day? It is not sufficient that the trade union remarked to me about violating labor discipline." They answered me: "We will rest later, when we reach the zero mark. Nonfulfillment of the plan is also a violation of the law. So choose what will be worse for you. And we must hurry, otherwise in the spring the pit will thaw out and it will be necessary to spend many times more labor and resources." I thanked the fellows for understanding the situation and thought to myself: "Look at the people that our construction site and our whole country is full of; with such people one can move mountains." (Applause)

Appropos of this, I mention that the workers donated their pay for this day to the construction of a memorial to the 55,000 Tomsk residents who did not return from the fronts of the Great Patriotic War. (Applause)

Comrades! In assessing what has been achieved there is much one could be glad about, but we do not have great justification for this, since we builders could do more and better given our existing capabilities.

Construction is a key problem for our country's rapidly developing economy. We still have much to create [sozdavat], but what is not built [postroit] will not exist. I believe that fundamental changes are needed in construction policy; I would even say drastic measures along the line taken by the party and state, which were discussed in the report made by Nikolay Ivanovich Ryzhkov. And I see their meaning as accelerating, not in words but in deeds, the break away from former customs, methods and style of work.

The ways by which capital construction must be developed and improved are clearly stated in the latest party and government decrees. But, unfortunately, we in the local areas do not yet feel the frame of mind for their operational fulfillment from the higher echelons of economic leadership. (Applause) Approximately two years have passed since the CPSU Central Committee and USSR Council of Ministers adopted the resolution, "On Improving the Planning, Organization and Management of Capital Construction." In January of last year the USSR Council of Ministers decree on improving planning and budgetary matters was adopted. But it is still not working at full strength and is still being translated into the language of directives and departmental instructions in USSR Gosplan, USSR Gosstroy and the ministries. In particular, USSR Gosstroy and Gosplan approved the statute about the construction and assembly trust only after a year, in June 1985, and it arrived at our construction site on 7 February of this year. Where is the acceleration here?

As before, construction workers' efforts are dissipated among numerous facilities; the number of new construction starts has not noticeably declined; purchasers' plans include work which is not confirmed by plan documentation and equipment delivery times; that is, everything is as before. For example, at the Tomsk Petrochemical Combine it is necessary in 1987 to introduce major capacities for the production of ethylene, propylene and polyethylene. And the builders do not today have many plans for assembly projects, for the construction part of major and difficult facilities in this complex, or for a substantial portion of the machinery, fittings or specialized materials. When are we to accomplish construction and assembly work having a value of more than R130 million? How long will this continue? We make one decision and say one thing, but in fact something else is done.

The Basic Guidelines envision in the next decade reducing the time periods for construction and reconstruction of facilities by one and a half or two times. I have thought about this a lot and have come to the conclusion that these tasks, although they are difficult, are realistic. However, in order to accomplish them in a short period of time it is necessary, in the first stage, to bring organizational order on construction sites, strengthen discipline and provide the brigades at this time with traditional construction materials and designs. And then the powerful detachment of builders and assembly personnel will work right away with greater productivity. This is not a case of the brigades standing idle due to halts in material and technical support or due to a shortage of equipment. It is necessary to use more fully that which we have. And it is understandable that greater initiative and resourcefulness should be displayed by construction organizations themselves and local leadership organs, in the use of reserves, including the output of local construction materials.

Comrades! The speeches of many delegates have made critical remarks about construction workers. Perhaps, I feel somewhat better here myself, on the rostrum, because our collective copes with the plans each year and completed the 5-year plan two years ahead of time. And, as a rule, we turn over good quality facilities on time. But, a feeling of solidarity forces me to ask the question: Why, for many years has capital construction -- one of the country's most important industries -- been a lagging branch? After all, the country is, all the same building a great deal and doing so not badly. Remarkable people work on construction sites. I know many of my comrades are devoted to the matter entrusted to them to the end, without anything left over. I am firmly convinced of this, first of all because we have a firmly entrenched consumer's attitude toward builders. Everything is required from them; it is required quickly and all at once. And we at times are like the housewife whose broth is overflowing on the stove out of ten pans simultaneously. We do not know what to work on.

It is known that the capabilities of construction personnel are not unlimited. But, directive issuing organs, sometimes even for objective reasons, without increasing the capacity of construction organizations, hasten to thrust on them an unrealistic program, not supported by resources, which leads to disorganization of construction production and often to not meeting the plan. Unfortunately, many construction personnel are in worse material and everyday living conditions than are the workers in the other branches for which we are building. In our administration alone, more than 2,500 families are waiting, who have been waiting for an improvement in living conditions for years. It is like in the proverb, "The Bootmaker Without Boots" -- the builder without an apartment. And this leads to the great turnover of cadres and problems in creating strong and stable collectives, especially at new construction sites. A way out of this situation is seen in accelerating the shift of construction to planning based on normative time periods. I wish to qualify this immediately by stating that these norms must be realistic and associated with the nature and local conditions of construction. But building must be a continuous flow of assembly work, based on the strictest observance of construction technology, as is being successfully organized in the construction of large panel residences.

In this regard it is mandatory that there be for all involved -- planning organizations, designers, clients, suppliers, financiers and builders -- a single technically and economically justified document for the entire period of construction, calculated for all, according to normative terms and having a legal basis. In this case there would no longer be a need each year to distribute capital investments and coordinate endless lists of titles; yes, and the equipment would arrive on time. Comrades, the bulk of equipment deliveries must not be planned for the year the facilities are to be turned over. When then are they to be erected? And one more thing. Since reconstruction now is getting priority, it is necessary to speed up solutions to the questions of the economic interest in this on the part of construction organizations. Reconstruction must become prestigious and an economically advantageous matter, regardless of its labor intensity. The sources of this self-interest will come from the difference in cost of new construction and reconstruction.

In our view, CPSU Central Committee departments, the USSR Council of Ministers, USSR Gosstroy and the ministries must become thoroughly involved in the technical reequipping of construction, its higher degree of mechanization and, I would say, the time has come also for automation, especially in the production of construction materials. Without this it will be difficult in the future to improve labor productivity. Decisions have been made on this matter, but, unfortunately, there have been no substantial steps forward. Our builders require mobile and heavy freight lifting and transport equipment, and high capacity earth moving machinery. We have a particular need for small mechanized equipment, which our industry produces in a narrow assortment and small quantities. We also await specialized, highly productive equipment which takes into account the conditions found in Siberia and the extreme north.

On our construction site more than 30 percent of the bulldozers have exceeded the depreciation periods and the majority of tower cranes are of obsolete design and their lift capacity does not exceed 5-7 tons. Today it is no longer possible with such equipment to assemble a modern panel construction house, not to mention major industrial block. Is it possible that our designers and scientists have become impoverished in their thinking? Or is our industry so weak? For example, how many years have Siberian construction workers been waiting for powerful bulldozers from the Cheboksary Factory for loosening permafrosts? And their production in the necessary quantity is still not set up. Stagnation in the ministries led by comrades Yezhevskiy and Varnachev, yes and in the corresponding local party organs, is obvious. We builders are usually hurried to build, and this is right. But the attitude of clients toward the development and use of the capacities which have been built is beginning to be of concern. The production recently introduced at the Tomsk Petrochemical Combine is being used only 60 percent at best, since it turned out not to be staffed with cadres, and it is put in service at times mainly through the efforts of troubleshooters and repairmen. It must be said that this situation was created due to violating the principle of comprehensiveness in the construction of the enterprise. This is known to Minkhimprom, but so far no significant changes for the better have come.

A great deal of oil is being extracted in Western Siberia, but large quantities of it are pumped past the petrochemical combine which has been built to petroleum refining enterprises in other oblasts, and beginning in 1988 it is planned to deliver to Tomsk by rail (from where is still unknown) more than a million tons of gasoline for the production of ethylene. It would be smarter, no doubt, to build a refinery locally, as was earlier planned. I think that USSR Minenergo [Ministry of Power and Electrification] made mistakes when it declined to build a nuclear power station in Tomsk, which would truly guarantee to supply the electricity and heat for the developing region, under conditions in which hydroelectric power stations depend on Siberian rivers, where unstable levels and periods of low water are frequent. Tomsk residents are ready to undertake to build the station; all the more so in that the base for local operation exists. In supporting the draft Basic Guidelines, I propose that these structures and capacities of the petrochemical combine be included in the program for the 12th 5-Year Plan.

Comrades! Life requires a change in attitudes toward the work of engineering and technical workers, to make it more prestigious and authoritative, especially for those who work directly in production and who are capable and called upon to move scientific and technological progress forward and improve economic work. In my opinion, this must not be a matter of reducing, but of strengthening engineering and technical personnel. And it is necessary to give builders themselves the right to determine and approve local managerial structure, for we know better how and where to assign cadres. (Applause)

Comrades! We builders are people of a peaceful profession. Everything necessary for the work and life of the Soviet people is created with our hands. And we want everything which has been built over the ages to serve people, and not to be destroyed by the hurricanes of war. That is why we completely support the active foreign policy of the Communist Party, which is directed at strengthening peace and security. We are right to demand, and we do demand, positive responses from the other nuclear states, most of all the United States of America.

At his speech at the meeting of the Tyumen and Tomsk Oblast aktiv in which I participated, Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev called capital construction the fulcrum of scientific and technological progress.

Allow me to assure the congress that we, Siberian builders, will continue to be a reliable fulcrum in the development of the productive forces in the east of our country and will do everything to implement the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress. (Applause)

Consumer Services Director

WA311700 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 5 Mar 86 p 5

[Speech by Comrade N.D. Dzenis, director of the Bauskiy Rayon Consumer Services Combine in the Ministry of Consumer Services of the Latvian SSR]

[Text] Comrades! The CPSU Central Committee Political Report and the report by Comrade N.I. Rzykov, chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers, emphasized with new force that concern for the good of the people is a main goal of our party. The Soviet people fervently approve and support this policy.

Everyone is happy to see the positive changes which began with the April 1985 CPSU Central Committee Plenum. We feel that order and organization will become greater. People are striving to work better, according to their conscience. And this is getting results. Our economy is growing stronger and the well-being of the workers is increasing.

Improving the standard of living is closely linked to developing the services sphere. I think that everyone understands this. After all, each of us uses various services every day. Both the frame of mind and the working efficiency of people largely depend on the level of these services. Therefore, the fact that the party is paying particular attention to developing the services sphere is of great satisfaction.

For us workers in consumer services the recently adopted Comprehensive Program for the Development of Consumer Goods Production and the Services Sphere is of great importance. Its implementation will make it possible to raise services to a higher level. Our Soviet people deserve the highest level of services. Active work is underway in this direction in Latvia. I will discuss briefly our rayon consumer services combine. We are doing much to see that services in rural areas do not differ from those in the cities. Rayon residents are now obtaining more than 300 kinds of services. Their overall number increased 36 percent during the past 5-year plan. Special attention was paid to those forms of service which ease domestic labor and save free time.

We are constantly introducing new types of consumer services, taking into account the wishes of the rayon residents. For example, recently we have been helping to develop fruit and vegetable garden plots, and we organized the transport of the crop. We try to ensure that any worker can order or obtain from us everything he requires: knitted and sewed garments, kitchen utensils, furniture, woodworking and metal parts, and various implements for the garden and farm. Convenient operating hours have been set up at reception points, studios, workshops and barber shops. We strive to bring services close to the consumers. Our workers go out directly to the brigades, farms and enterprise shops. The time required to fill the majority of orders has been cut in half. Our cadres largely decide the success of our work. They, as is known, are mostly women. Therefore, as we raise our demands, we at the same time intensify our concern about them. We are creating good conditions for work and rest. People are working in comfortable studios, barber shops, workshops and factory shops. We are providing housing for them. We have built a club, this year are opening a dining hall, and then will be building a kindergarten.

We, comrades, have become convinced in practice that increasing the level of service has a salutary influence on all we do. The rayon kolkhozes and sovkhozes have begun to be better staffed with cadres, especially young people. The loss of working time was reduced by half during the 5-year plan. The demographic situation improved. In recent years the rayon's population increased by almost 1,500 people, mainly in the kolkhozes and sovkhozes. And this tendency is characteristic of the whole republic. Village workers have gotten greater opportunities for better use of their free time. And, most importantly, in the 11th 5-Year Plan rayon farms successfully coped with the targets for state purchases of agricultural products. Grain production increased 1.7 fold by comparison with the previous 5-year plan.

I wish to note that all Latvian service sphere workers were greatly helped by the CPSU Central Committee examination of the question of the work of Riga party organizations to improve public dining and consumer services for workers at work. The republic is restructuring the entire services sphere and is expanding the network of its facilities. On the initiative of party committees, industrial, construction and transport enterprises, kolkhozes and sovkhozes have become more involved in the development of the branch.

On the farms in our rayon alone, in the last few years nine comprehensive reception points and two consumer services houses have opened. And all farms throughout the republic have such facilities. Last year in our rayon consumer services cost R60 per resident. But I must acknowledge self-critically that not all reserves have been used. Workers in the services sphere are still in the debt of the rural workers. You see, as people's incomes rise, so do their needs.

We have calculated that in 1990 we will be able to grant each rayon resident R85-90 worth of consumer services. We believe that this is the minimum. We are trying to use our own reserves first. We will raise the quality of services. We will begin to use more widely various forms of rapid accomplishment of services -- while the customer waits, and in one day. We are organizing home delivery of others. We are preparing to produce several dozen products necessary in everyday life, mainly from industrial waste materials. For this we have planned further expansion of the production base and its reequipping. We will improve labor organization and pay. In short, we are trying to do everything which depends on us.

I have been managing the combine for almost 20 years. Great changes for the better in the consumer services sphere have occurred before my eyes. New machinery and equipment have appeared and the number of specialists has increased. But there are also difficulties which slow our branches' development. I wish to discuss them.

First of all, we are troubled by the low level of equipment found at consumer services enterprises. The level of labor mechanization of many kinds of services does not exceed 30 percent, and in a number of cases manual labor predominates.

Last year I visited the "Interbytmach-85" exhibition. Here Soviet and foreign equipment which we greatly need was exhibited. But, comrades, this was only advertising. As it was explained to me, the items shown at the exhibit have been manufactured only in a few copies. And for the branch thousands are required.

We are very short of tools and equipment for barber shops, shoe and furniture repair shops, and for sewing of clothing and metal working. We obtain few instruments and little equipment to repair consumer services equipment. And that which the services sector receives is still of low quality.

We services sector workers have serious complaints to make toward designers. The equipment which they design in the majority of cases does not meet the level of the best worldwide models. Using such machinery and equipment we cannot provide high quality work, and have substantial overexpenditures of raw materials, materials and energy.

The task of organizing production of everything necessary for the services sphere was defined back in 1983 by the CPSU Central Committee and USSR Council of Ministers resolution, "On the Further Development and Improvement of Consumer Services to the Population." But its fulfillment is being dragged out. In the name of all workers in consumer services, I request that the leaders of the appropriate ministries and departments, most of all Minlegpishchemash [Ministry of Machine Building for Light and Food Industry and Household Appliances], Minpromsvyaz [Ministry of the Communications Equipment Industry] and Minkhimprom [Ministry of the Chemical Industry] do everything to see that scientific and technological progress not pass us by.

The low quality of many types of consumer services equipment and poor standardization of its assemblies and parts also complicates our work. In many places we are experiencing a most acute shortage of spare parts, even for guaranteed repairs. People make all their complaints about this to the consumer services workers. But the main party at fault for poor quality goods -- industry -- remains uninvolved. But we do not wish to address unwarranted criticism toward industry. I think that it is necessary to increase the material and legal liability of manufacturers for producing worthless products. And the labor collectives must safeguard the honor of their brand. Since last year republic consumer services has been working under experimental economic conditions. Expanding rights of the collective, and the opportunity to use material incentives more effectively has made it possible to improve the results of our labor. For example, the quantity of our consumer services increased 11 percent last year, and labor productivity rose almost 13 percent. Standards of services rendered improved. In short, the decision to shift the branch to new economic conditions was correct and timely.

But, problems also appeared during the course of the experiment. I believe that the central planning and financial organs must examine questions concerning the profitability of consumer services enterprises. Increasing the quantity of services must not bring losses to our branch, as is the case now. It is also necessary to solve completely questions of construction and redesign through the use of internal resources and, in particular, to reexamine the standardized time periods for construction and wages, and to provide construction projects with material resources. In order to maximize the bringing of consumer services, trade and public dining to the places where people work and live, it is necessary to allocate more specialized light vehicles and fuel.

Finally, many remarkable workers, true masters, work in our branch. But, take our press, television, films and literature. They do not omit us from their attention. However, most frequently the journals KROKODIL and FITIL take an interest in us. I think that this is not right. Journalists, writers and artists can and must help us to raise the prestige of our profession, through good and capable words. (Applause) This is especially important for young people, of whom our branch still has few.

Dear comrades! From this high rostrum of the main gathering of the country's communists, I wish to express deep gratitude and true thanks to the Leninist Central Committee for its untiring concern to strengthen peace on Earth, and for the fact that people are not more fearful of the threat of destruction.

Communists, the working class and all the workers of Soviet Latvia fully, completely and wholeheartedly support and approve the foreign and domestic policy of the party. The policy of the party is our policy; the plans of the party are our plans! (Applause) And we will do everything to implement them, and to make our homeland still more powerful and beautiful! (Applause)

Genetics Institute Director

WA311730 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 6 Mar 86 p 4

[Speech: "Speech by Comrade A.A. Sozinov, director of Institute of General Genetics imeni N.I. Vavilov, USSR Academy of Sciences"]

[Text] Dear comrade delegates! In the Political Report by Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev, in the report about the Basic Guidelines for the Economic and Social Development of our country which was given by Nikolay Ivanovich Ryzhkov, and in the statements made by delegates, a large amount of attention was devoted to science and to its key role in scientific-technical progress. At the same time bitter but justified words were expressed to the effect that Soviet science is not always and not everywhere at the level of the highest achievements, and that there has been a lag in the resolution of a number of important scientific problems, and, as a consequence, technical ones also. We scientists can make just one conclusion from this just criticism: it is completely inadmissible to move ahead today in science by using the traditional method! What is needed is acceleration both in the development of fundamental and applied research, and in the reduction of the periods of time required to introduce scientific developments into practice.

The area that is closest to my heart is biology, and specifically genetics, which studies the extremely complicated, surprisingly perfect mechanisms of transmittal of hereditary information from generation to generation and seeks ways to control those mechanisms. Today this science, which not too long ago was a purely theoretical science, is already helping to increase the production of food products and agricultural raw materials, to develop a strategy and tactics for protecting the environment, and to preserve the public's health.

It is obvious to everyone that progress in agricultural production is determined by many branches -- machine-building, large chemistry, the construction industry, transport, etc. But nevertheless the basic producer goods in agriculture, figuratively speaking, are plants, animals, and microorganisms, and the improving of them contains tremendous, and I might even say completely unprecedented, reserves. Suffice it to recall that more than half the increase that has been achieved during the past 30 years in the harvest of a number of agricultural crops was achieved by using new varieties and hybrids. The creation alone of the Bezostay-1 and Mironovskaya-808 varieties of winter wheat at one time provided a 20-percent increase in the harvest of that crop.

The development of modern agriculture requires genetics and selection science to resolve a number of new, large-scale tasks. One of the main areas for increasing the productivity and stability of vegetable husbandry is the application of intensive technological systems. However, this creates on the fields favorable conditions not only for the plants, but also for the spreading of aggressive diseases and pests. This makes it necessary to increase considerably the application of poisonous chemicals to protect the sowings, and this is not only expensive, but also causes substantial damage to the environment. But even so, despite the protective means, on many fields diseases destroy a considerable part of the harvest. The most reliable way out is the creation of varieties with genetic, inherited resistance to diseases, and realistic opportunities for resolving that task are provided by genetics and selection science.

A no less acute problem is the obtaining of good harvests on land with a low fertility rate. In our country more than 80 million hectares of salinized and acid soils are under cultivation. The tremendous efforts to reclaim that land have been yielding positive results, but we have not yet been successful in achieving on that land a steady rise in fertility or the planned harvest yield. This problem must be resolved only in a combined manner: by carrying out land-reclamation operations, while simultaneously creating planting that has been adapted for those soils. It is also necessary to take into consideration the fact that the creation of these varieties requires immeasurably smaller expenditures than the carrying out of chemical reclamation.

Selection science can and must play, in many respects, the determining role in improving the quality of the harvest and in particular in resolving the problem of protein. It will be necessary within short periods of time to create varieties that are more resistant to drought, low temperatures, and herbicides, while guaranteeing a reduction in the expenditure of energy for the obtaining of output.

It is no less important to improve the genetic nature of the animals and the microorganisms that are used in biotechnological production. Today the acceleration of the processes of selection is linked primarily with the increase in the effectiveness of the work, with the reinforcement of the material-technical base of the selection centers, and with the rise in the level of scientific methodology in selection work, because in many selection centers even the well-known genetic methods are being used far from sufficiently, and this is influenced not so much by the lack of the necessary conditions as it is by the poor training of selection specialists in the field of genetics.

But it is very important to realize that on the basis of the traditional methods one cannot resolve the vitally important problem of creating, in essence, a new generation of plants, animals, and microorganisms. What we need is qualitatively new approaches to the control of heredity.

In laboratories around the world, the scientific basis is already being created for radical and one might even say revolutionary changes in very important areas of agricultural production, the protection and efficient use of the resources of the biosphere, and the preservation of people's health. Man has penetrated into the innermost secrets of the mechanism of heredity and, in addition, has learned how to reorganize, to use a figurative term, the main blueprint according to which the organism is built, a blueprint that is transmitted by heredity. We can already transfer genes from bacteria to higher organisms and, conversely, force genes of plants, animals, and even man to function in bacteria, to create gene structures that have never existed in nature, and to obtain entire plants from an ordinary somatic cell.

In the lifetime of a single generation we have seen several events of this scope being brought forth by physics -- the development of nuclear power engineering, the mastery of space, computerization, and microelectronics. The science that is standing today on the threshold of similar discoveries is biology, and in particular genetics. Are we ready for this? Are we at the level of those requirements that our congress is placing on us today?

Our country has created scientific collectives where the latest areas of biology and genetics are developing, and where a number of results on a worldwide level have been obtained. For example, in the past two years scientists at the USSR Academy of Sciences, in collaboration with other collectives, using methods of genetic engineering, developed a biotechnological process for obtaining very valuable medicinal preparations -- interferons, as well a growth hormone for man and animals, and vaccines to combat a number of serious diseases, and created effective biotechnological processes for obtaining fodder protein. At the All-Union Selection and Genetic Institute of VASKhNIL [All-Union Academy of Agricultural Science imeni V.I. Lenin] the use of a culture of vegetable cells has today made it possible to develop new varieties of barley in a 4-year or 5-year period, instead of the usual 10-12 years. Two of these varieties -- Istok and Odesskiy-115 -- are successfully undergoing state variety testing.

Scientists at the Institute of General Genetics, USSR Academy of Sciences, jointly with other collectives, found new approaches for accelerating the selection process with the help of special molecular markers and began raising the curtain that had been concealing the secret of the creation of varieties by outstanding selection specialists. They have isolated and studied the genes that encode the proteins of cow's milk and have clarified the natural laws underlying their functioning, and the isolation and transference of the gene for a hormone of human growth to laboratory animals has accelerated their growth by a factor of almost 2. This is no science fiction, it is not something from an H.G. Well's novel, but is an actual scientific result. But we cannot remain complacent with what has been achieved. In the developed countries there is in progress literally a storm of problems in modern biology and genetics. Participating in that storm are thousands of highly trained specialists and scientists, and international corporations and universities are investing tremendous amounts of money in this field. Every day sees the issuance of reports about newer and newer discoveries. An entire branch of industry that produces instruments, experimental units, and reagents for carrying out research in the field of modern biology and biotechnology has already grown up.

In the USSR much is also being done in this direction. The CPSU Central Committee and the USSR Council of Ministers, in August 1985, adopted a decree concerning the further development of new directions in biology and biotechnology. Provision was made for the resolution of a number of important problems that guarantee the reaching of the highest goals by Soviet biology. However, in this regard we do not have everything that is required by the situation and by life itself.

As everyone knows, Moscow is a very large scientific center where considerable scientific forces with the highest level of proficiency are concentrated. However, the base of many institutes specializing in biology is unsatisfactory. Most of them are housed in cramped, poorly equipped areas, and they have not been provided with the appropriate equipment or reagants. I can state with all responsibility that, as a result of the appropriate support and on the basis of interaction with many scientific collectives around our country, we can do in Moscow today, in the field of biology, that which will not be achieved in other places for years. Therefore it is necessary, in full volume and within the deadlines that were stipulated by the decree, to resolve all the problems of the construction and material-technical support of the Moscow institutes. Simultaneously it is extremely important at an accelerated rate to create and equip the biotechnological centers in other parts of the country.

The growing revolution in the use of the latest achievements of biology requires a large influx of young scientific workers who can use the most up-to-date methods of research at the molecular level and who at the same time have a good knowledge of the biology of the entire organism and have a complete mastery of computer technology. Today the number of such specialists is extremely insufficient. We need the most decisive steps to accelerate their training. Here too a decisive role must be played by the Academy of Sciences.

I would like to reemphasize that we are discussing not a specific question that is of interest to only a narrow circle of specialists, but one of the key problems in the scientific-technical revolution. And if one returns to the food problem, one can assert that as a result of the creation of a new generation of plants, animals, and microorganisms, the biological means of protecting them, and of physiologically active substances, the technological scheme in the production processes in agriculture will undergo a cardinal change, and that will result in the corresponding changes, which will be simply astonishing, in the entire agro-industrial complex.

For the successful resolution of the food problem it is extremely important to increase the role and authority of VASKhNIL in elaborating a strategy for scientific-technical progress in the agrosphere and, relying upon the interaction with the institutes of the Academy of Sciences, to raise considerably the level and rate of results of the research in the agro-industry's scientific institutions. What is needed here is science of a higher class.

A mandatory condition for the acceleration of scientific research is the effective cooperation between the academy's institutes and the applied scientific institutions. This problem cannot be resolved simply by preparing newer and newer coordination plans. Life requires a search for different forms of interaction. They are already being brought to life and it is very important to establish direct creative ties and to render substantial material and psychological support to any valuable joint projects that arise in real life. This process, in addition to the organization of interbranch complexes and laboratories, can be aided by the creation of councils of directors of the academy's institutes and the applied institutes for individual areas of science where it is possible in a businesslike manner, without any stereotypic reports, to discuss the situation and find methods of interaction more rapidly.

In conclusion, I would like to mention an additional problem to which our attention was drawn in a new way by the Political Report by the party's Central Committee. That problem has absorbed a large series of questions that are united by the words "the human factor." This factor also resolved a lot in science, and possibly even more than in other areas. Suffice it to recall that just one of the many discoveries by Petr Leonidovich Kapitsa -- the method of obtaining gaseous and liquid oxygen -- provided an economic benefit which, practically speaking, covered all the expenditures for sciences during those years.

The days of Lomonosov and Newton have passed, and today there is no scientific genius who can work without complicated laboratory instruments and expensive reagents. But even the most up-to-date equipment will be of no benefit if it gets into the hands of a person who is unskilled or untalented, if the researcher is constantly interrupted from doing his job or if he himself, in the race for outward effects, withdraws from the difficult, painstaking search for a truly new result.

Unfortunately, for a long time the psychological and material evaluation of every scientist was determined not so much by the real results of his labor as by his scientific degree and longevity. That led to the accumulation in many scientific institutions of a kind of ballast -- scientists whose activity can be summed up as the carrying out of experiments and the writing of articles which, essentially speaking, confirm truisms. The existing system of renovation of scientific collectives, practically speaking, does not operate. Academician Skryabin cited the following figures: during a 5-year period the Academy of Sciences recertified 43,000 scientific workers and only 110 of them were recognized as failing to conform to the job that they occupied. This, of course, does not reflect the real assignment of forces in science. Last year a decree was adopted to systematize the payment of the labor performed by scientific workers. It became possible to determine a scientist's salary on the basis of the results of his activity, and to open a broad road to capable forces in science. However, we still see today a rather large number of those insolvent scientists who are entering into the struggle for their "own existence" through the writing of complaints and anonymous letters, and they are followed by numerous commissions, while any good work can only drown in discussions. What we need here is decisive actions and the permanent support by the party agencies in the outlying areas. (Applause)

And there is yet another of the many fragments of the multifaceted problem of the "human factor" in science. Why do we force a scientist to expend his forces and time twice for the purpose of formally confirming his capability of carrying out scientific work, first by making him defend his candidate's dissertation and then his doctor's dissertation? Wouldn't it be more correct to change over to a single-degree system, bringing the researcher into science by the awarding of the degree of doctor, as is done throughout the world, and then letting him confirm his scientific level by his real results, by his specific scientific work. (Applause) This problem is by no means a simple one and requires discussion. It cannot be resolved in a slapdash manner.

The attention that has been shown to science at our congress is a factor that is not only inspiring for scientists, but also one that mobilizes them. Actually, Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev put it correctly when he said that a country has a right to expect its scientists to produce discoveries and inventions that guarantee truly revolutionary changes in the development of technology and technological systems. Soviet scientists are obliged to justify those expectations and that requires creating, in a constructive, businesslike manner, in the process of daily creative and organizing work, the real mechanisms for resolving the large tasks that are assigned to science by the party. (Applause)

Metallurgical Combine Director

WA311800 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 6 Mar 86 p 5

[Speech by Comrade I.V. Frantsenyuk, director of the Novolipetsk Metallurgical Combine imeni Yu.V. Andropov, Hero of Socialist Labor]

[Text] Dear comrade delegates! Our party is rightfully called the party of innovators, the party of trailblazers. New brilliant testimony of that has been provided by the revolutionary-transformational nature of the Political Report of the CPSU Central Committee to the 27th CPSU Congress, which was given by Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev. An innovational spirit and lively Marxist-Leninist thought also distinguish the new edition of the party's Program. These tremendously important political and theoretical documents contain a profound, realistic analysis of the road that has been traveled, and the creative tasks, to use the words of V.I. Lenin, are being posed "...in the sense of the fearless foresight of the future and bold practical activity that is aimed at carrying it out..."

The confirmed situation of efficiency in the party and throughout the country, the atmosphere of frankness and constructivism at the present congress confirm, over and over again, the great need and the great farsightedness of the decisions of the April 1985 Plenum of the CPSU Central Committee.

We warmly support the principles presented by General Secretary of the CPSU Central Committee Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev concerning the ways to accelerate the intensification of the national economy, to carry out technical re-equipping, and to improve the mechanism of management and control. The implementation of the tasks that were set forth in the Political Report will take our society to a qualitatively new level, will open up a broader vista for the development of our country's productive forces, and will create even more favorable conditions for the creative work of our cadres. The 12th 5-Year Plan and the period until the year 2000 will become an important stage for carrying out these tasks. In the report by member of the Politburo of the CPSU Central Committee, Chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers Nikolay Ivanovich Ryzhkov, one finds a thorough exposition of the Basic Guidelines for the Economic and Social Development of the USSR in the forthcoming period. A large amount of attention in that report was devoted to problems of the development of the base branches of the national economy, including ferrous metallurgy. And that is understandable, since the rates of the technical reequipping of social production depend, to a decisive degree, upon the provision of high-quality metal to the entire national economy.

The immediacy of this task is also influenced by the fact that the metallurgical branch, by virtue of a number of reasons, has been operating in an unstable manner for a prolonged period of time.

Under these conditions, the collective at the Novolipetsk Metallurgical Combine sees its very important task in assuring the use of all the available opportunities for building up the production of high-quality metal and improving the economic indicators in the enterprise's work.

As a whole, our collective coped with the plans for 1985 and the 11th 5-Year Plan. The volume of production of commercial output during the 5-year period increased by 26 percent; labor productivity increased by 18 percent; the production costs of output dropped by 8 percent; and the balance-sheet profit increased by a factor of 1.7. The production of economical types of metal output developed at outstripping rates.

The plans for the first two months of the current year and the socialist pledges that were taken by the collective in honor of the 27th CPSU Congress were fulfilled ahead of schedule.

Self-critically evaluating the results of the work performed by the collective, we see our shortcomings and the unused opportunities. The combine still has instances when the equipment remains idle; instances of production of low-grade output have not been eliminated; and the introduction of means of meachanization and automation, robotics, and flexible automated systems is still being carried out at insufficient rates. This was the subject of a frank discussion at a plant party conference.

The main tasks and directions for accelerating the development of the entire national economy were stated at the April Plenum of the CPSU Central Committee and at the conference at the party's Central Committee on questions of the acceleration of scientific-technical progress, and they received thorough development and confirmation at the present congress.

Interpreting the accumulated experience and determining the ways to resolve the tasks that confront us in the 12th 5-Year Plan, we concentrate our attention in those areas which are supposed to give us a rapid and reliable effect.

Those areas are, first of all, the purposeful work to achieve the effective use of production capacities, to improve equipment, and to intensify the technological processes. In the past year alone, by means of the remodeling and modernization of metallurgical units during capital and current repair, we succeeded in building up the capacities for the production of agglomerate by 200,000 tons; cast iron, by 100,000 tons; and rolled metal, by 200,000 tons. With a consideration of the accumulated experience, we developed for the 12th 5-Year Plan a comprehensive plan for technical reequipping. The implementation of that plan is supposed to make it possible to increase during the 5-year period, by using the available production capacities, the smelting of cast iron by 1.8 million tons; steel, by 1.5 million tons; and the production of ready rolled metal, by 1.3 million tons.

Secondly, we shall continue to reinforce the creative cooperation with the designing and scientific-research institutions, especially in matters of quality. We have had good experience in joint creative work with scientists at a number of institutes in Moscow, Minsk, Kiev, Dnepropetrovsk, Sverdlovsk, Lipetsk, and other cities.

Recently a large volume of research has been carried out and new, effective methods have been introduced for producing high-grade structural materials for the electrical-engineering, power-engineering, electronic, and instrument-building branches of industry; and cold-rolled metal for the automobile industry and low-alloyed steel for the manufacture of pipes for gas and petroleum pipelines.

Today the combine's output is delivered to 18 countries throughout the world. Thirdly, a very critical task for us is the economical use of raw-material, material, and fuel-and-energy resources. For that purpose at our combine, as at the other metallurgical plants in the branch, a special comprehensive system has been developed and is being steadily introduced. The system provides for the forecasting, planning, analysis, and improvement of the accounting and control of the consumption of all types of raw materials and energy carriers, and the providing of incentives for saving them.

Our work experience convinces us every day that a mandatory condition for the successful resolution of production tasks is constant and meaningful work to improve the working, everyday living, and recreational conditions for the workers and the protection of their health. These questions are in the center of attention of the party, trade-union, and Komsomol organizations and the economic management of the enterprise and each shop.

In conformity with the 5-year plans for the social and economic development of the collective and the comprehensive "Health" target program, much is being done to reinforce and develop the material-technical base of the medical institutions, sports and recuperative structures, and public nutrition enterprises, and to create healthy working conditions at every work station.

Comrades! Both in the Political Report of the CPSU Central Committee and in the report on the Basic Guidelines for Economic and Social Development, much attention was paid to the improvement of capital construction as the basic condition for the remodeling of the national economy on the basis of the latest achievements of scientific-technical progress. This problem is an especially vital one for modern metallurgical production, the projects of which, in the overwhelming majority, are large-scale shops, units, and complexes.

The construction workers, installation workers, and metallurgists of Lipetsk Oblast have had experience in the rapid erecting of modern large-scale projects. At the present time the construction workers and operational specialists in the combine are taking energetic steps to assure the preterm completion of the construction of the first phase of a large-scale shop to produce electrical-engineering dynamo steel. The use of its output will make it possible for the electric-machine builders to reduce by 15 percent the expenditure of metal and to obtain in the national economy every year a saving of more than 3 billion kilowatt-hours of electric energy.

But it must be said that the efforts being taken to reduce the normative periods required for construction are not being taken into consideration by the planning agencies. The economized time in the construction of the dynamo-steel shop should have brought closer the beginning of the construction of the following object that was stipulated by the 5-year plan -- the highly productive, newest generation Model 2500 sheet-rolling mill. Unfortunately, that is not occurring. The conditions for the accelerated development of the design documentation for that mill have not been created. USSR Gosplan, Mintyazmash [Ministry of Heavy and Transport Machine-Building], and the other ministries must take urgent steps to resolve the questions that have arisen, in order to provide the possibility of beginning the construction of the 2500 mill no later than 1987. The startup and assimilation of this one-of-a-kind shop will make it possible to eliminate the shortage of rolled sheet metal in the national economy.

I must dwell on yet another very important question that has been restraining the development of ferrous metallurgy. In order to accelerate the technical progress of many branches it is necessary to have not metal in general, but ready, high-grade rolled metal. At enterprises in our branch, 420 rolling mills and pipe-rolling mills are in operation at the present time. Many of them require fundamental remodeling. According to the program for technical re-equipping in the 12th 5-Year Plan, USSR Minchermet [Ministry of Ferrous Metallurgy] plans to remodel 140 rolling mills. In order to carry out that program, the need for domestic rolling equipment comes to more than 500,000 tons. And yet USSR Gosplan, we have learned, has allocated to our ministry limits of only 250,000 tons. The volumes of manufacture of rolling equipment at Mintyazhmash plants have not been increasing in recent years. We feel that this question requires special consideration at the USSR Council of Ministers Machine-Building Bureau and at USSR Gosplan.

At our combine the further improvement of quality and the increase in the volumes of production of cold-rolled transformer sheet metal also are being restrained because of the fact that the production of that sheet metal is carried out on two obsolete mills that were manufactured as long ago as 1954. Therefore we urgently raise at USSR Gosplan and Mintyazhmash the question of the urgent construction of a new specialized plant in the Mintyazhmash system for the manufacture of rolling mills and other rolling equipment with a capacity of 140,000-150,000 tons a year.

In the report given by Nikolay Ivanovich Ryzhkov, mention was made of the great importance of ties and cooperation with the fraternal socialist countries. For many years the collective at our combine have maintained friendly creative ties with our colleagues -- metallurgists, chemists, and machine builders -- in the CEMA member-countries, such as Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, and other countries.

Our combine maintains close contacts with the collective at the Schwartze Pumpe gas combine in Cottbus, GDR. A treaty of cooperation has been concluded. The treaty stipulates various forms of expansion and reinforcement of friendly ties and the increasing of their effectiveness. They include the exchange of production experience, the carrying out of joint scientific-research programs, and the improvement by innovators and efficiency experts of the work methods.

The people at Novolipetsk also maintain international relations with the collective as the East Slovak Metallurgical Combine in the city of Kosice. We are building on a firm, long-range basis our relations with the Valcovni Plehu Sheet-Rolling Plant in the city of Frydek-Mistek, Czechoslovakia. In recognition of the many years of fruitful cooperation and the large amount of assistance given to develop the metallurgy of a fraternal country and to train national cadres, our combine at Novolipetsk was awarded the Czechoslovakian Order of Labor.

Comrades! At the present time in our collective, as throughout the country as a whole, all the workers are showing a tremendous amount of interest in becoming acquainted with and studying the Political Report of the Central Committee and all the Congress documents.

The new foreign-policy initiatives advanced by Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev have evoked universal approval.

The bold plans that have been advanced by the party, and the majestic prospects bring to life new energy and the striving to multiply the contribution to the reinforcement of the economic might and defensive capability of our motherland.

Please allow me to assure the CPSU Central Committee and the congress delegates that the metallurgists of the Novolipetsk Metallurgical Plant will work persistently to reinforce the organizational spirit, order, and discipline and will do everything to implement the historic decisions of the 27th Congress of our beloved Communist Party. (Applause)

Zhukov Details Protests

PM052000 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 5 Apr 86 First Edition p 4

[Article by Yu. Zhukov, chairman of the Soviet Committee for the Defense of Peace: "Responsibility for the Future; Everything Possible Must Be Done To Prevent Another Round of the Nuclear Arms Race Before It Is Too Late"]

[Text] It is difficult to find words to describe the complex gamut of feelings currently experienced by the tens and hundreds of millions of people who follow the development of the struggle to end the arms race with emotion and hope.

Until quite recently many people in the West were under the spell of a perfidious play, cunningly thought up by the "psychological warfare" specialists, claiming that both "superpowers" -- the USSR and the United States -- bear equal responsibility for the arms race and that therefore this struggle should not be taken too seriously.

However, no matter how hard bourgeois news media try to hush up the constant stream of new Soviet peace initiatives, no matter how they distort our proposals, no matter how hard they try to present white as black and black as white, people everywhere are increasingly ridding themselves of this paralyzing delusion. The same thing has been happening over and over again for many months now. The USSR puts forward clean, precise, simple, generally comprehensible, and entirely feasible proposals; the United States promises to study them and subsequently announces: No, this does not suit us. And the reaction of many millions of people echoes throughout the planet. First, universal interest in the Soviet proposals and hope that at any moment a mutually acceptable solution may be found; bewilderment and disillusionment at Washington's negative reaction, followed by indignation and outrage at this reaction, and, finally, determination to fight against it.

However, even if the pernicious concept of "equal responsibility" still survives here and there in the West, it has currently been dealt a crushing blow by the selfsame leaders who rejected out of hand the new proposals put forward by M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee 29 March in his speech on Soviet television.

You will recall, comrades, that the speech was broadcast Saturday night. And it was immediately picked up and reported throughout the world by radio and television stations. The world learned that Moscow had again created a real opportunity for ending the nuclear arms race, which is becoming more and more dangerous.

Despite the fact that the United States responded to the unilateral Soviet moratorium on nuclear explosions with a clearly provocative and defiant nuclear weapon test, Moscow -- even on that occasion -- did not slam the door, although it was clearly being pushed to do so.

"As for our unilateral moratorium," M.S. Gorbachev stated, "I am able to say that it remains in force until 31 March 1986. But even after this date, as we have stated, we will not carry out nuclear explosions provided that the United States acts likewise. We are giving the U.S. Administration another chance to adopt a responsible decision, namely to stop nuclear explosions."

"Otherwise," the Soviet leader went on, "the Soviet Union will resume tests. This must be perfectly clear. We regret this, but we will be forced to act in this way because we cannot sacrifice our own security and the security of our allies."

And to ensure that it does not come to that, M.S. Gorbachev offered on behalf of the Soviet Union to meet with President Reagan in London, Rome, or any other European capital in order to reach agreement on ending nuclear tests.

It was evening in Moscow, while in far-off California, where the U.S. President had gone to spend the Easter vacation at his favorite cowboy ranch, the sun was shining brightly. The President was, of course, briefed on the Soviet leader's proposal without delay. But he was busy thinking about other things. He was preparing his Saturday radio address extolling the U.S. Navy's recent agression against Libya and threatening Nicaragua. The answer to the new Soviet proposal was given there and then by Donald Regan, the White House chief of staff, who accompanies the President everywhere and hastened to give an interview to U.S., British, and French news agency correspondents just an hour after the Soviet leader's speech. It was a categorical "No."

Please note, that this time the U.S. Administration did not even deem it necessary to promise "to study the Soviet proposal," which it did on previous occasions of this kind. In view of the attractiveness of Moscow's new initiative, which immediately met with approval and support, it was decided to stifle from the outset any rising hopes that an accord might be achieved.

The answer was cynical and defiant: We, Regan declared, will nonetheless test our nuclear weapons; the next explosion is scheduled to be carried out in Nevada in mid-April and we do not intend to postpone it; and we do not want any summit in Europe to discuss ending nuclear weapons tests.

In reacting so defiantly, and I would say recklessly, to the Soviet Union's warning that that it is necessary to act with the utmost responsibility at this crucial moment when the question of whether or not there is to be a new round of the nuclear arms race is being decided, the gentlemen who had gathered in California were guided by a primitive gamble on the mentality of the average American citizen. They still believe that the notorious "position of strength policy," which is capable of evoking another bout of chauvinism among the supporters of the present U.S. Administration and of intimidating its opponents, will also work on a worldwide scale.

What a miscalaculation! Even the first reactions to what happened last Saturday and Sunday show that the cynical "No" which rang out from Reagan's ranch is having an effect diametrically opposed to that hoped for by those who authorized Regan to make that statement. I will not quote them, as PRAVDA readers are already familiar with the sharp disapproval expressed not only by participants in the current spring peace demonstrations which are taking place everywhere but also by prominent politicians in Europe and North America.

"Time does not stand still," our party's general secretary warned in his speech last Saturday when he called on the American people and their government and the peoples and governments of all countries to contribute actively, by means of practical steps, to translating the ban on nuclear explosions into reality, into an immutable norm of international relations.

Soviet peace champions fully agree with the assessment made of the prevailing situation in that most important speech.

And indeed, no sober-minded person can stand aside from the struggle to ban nuclear tests, which has entered a crucial stage. This is the reason why reports about actions in support of the new Soviet proposals and Soviet people's protests against the U.S. leadership's defiant stance are pouring in in an unprecedented stream at the Soviet Committee for the Defense of Peace from all our 120 local committees.

Around 40 million young Soviet men and women have already signed a message to the White House headed "It Is Still Not Too Late' in which they demand that the United States join the unilateral moratorium which has been observed by the Soviet Union for the past 8 months.

Cables and letters protesting the U.S. leaders' stubborn refusal to heed this demand have been addressed to Washington in the past few days by collectives of the most varied enterprises and establishments, schools, prominent Soviet scientists, students, workers, kolkhoz members, members of countless international friendship clubs at schools and Young Pioneer centers, and participants in mass demonstrations.

I have just received a report from Yalta, where an international meeting was held under the motto "Let us pool our efforts in the struggle for peace and against the threat of nuclear was." Taking part in it alongside Soviet Peace champions were people who had come to the Crimea from Australia, the FRG, Finland, Hungary, the GDR, and Czechoslovakia. They unanimously decided to send President Reagan a message calling on him to accept the Soviet proposal and to issue instructions to halt the preparations for the new nuclear weapon test.

Similar demands were addressed to him by participants in the Krasnodar Kray peace champions' conference, the collectives of Rostov's Rostselmash and Krasnyy Aksay plants, students at Leningrad, Yerevan, and Azerbaijan universities, Orel Oblast's Pokrovskiy Rayon kolkhoz members, pupils at Vladimir City No. 33 School, workers at the Krasnoyarsk aluminum plant, and the collective of the Yakutzoloto production association...I have dozens of such reports here.

There was a telephone call from Riga to say that the VEF plant collective has sent a cable to the White House protesting the provocative underground nuclear explosion carried out at the test site in Nevada. The mailman brought a copy of a message on the same lines to President Reagan which arrived by airmail from Partizansk city in Maritime Kray in the Far East. It is signed by 13,000 of the city's inhabitants. In their letter they ask a direct question:

"Mr. President, why is your administration refusing to give a positive answer to the program for phased nuclear disarmament and the prevention of the militarization of space which was put forward by the USSR 15 January? Even after the tragic destruction of Challenger you declared that work on the Strategic Defense Initiative will go on! We resolutely protest this stance of yours!" There is no end to such collective and individual letters. There is one from the Sverdlovsk "Fakel" sports club, and from Nikolay Ivanovich Milkov, a machine operator in Tajikistan. And here is a letter from a large group of participants in the "Slavutich" international youth peace camp in the Ukrainian city of Kanev. Its authors proclaim emphatically:

"We say: 'Down with war! Down with nuclear weapons tests!' We call on the U.S. Administration: Stop! The nuclear explosions are destroying the earth, they are searing people's souls."

The U.S. public does not know about the Soviet people's powerful wave of protests. The White House maintains a deathly silence about the mail which is pouring in from Soviet Union.

However, truth travels without visas and sooner or later our American colleagues will get to know that Soviet people are expressing solidarity with their struggle for banning nuclear tests.

At the beginning of May, Soviet peace champions will organize new mass demonstrations as part of the traditional 1-week festival in support of European security held annually on the initiative of the WPC. Unquestionably, the slogans of the struggle to ban nuclear tests will occupy a central place at these demonstrations. And even the most skillful masters of the U.S. propaganda services will not be able to suppress information about these events.

[Commentary by Boris Belitskiy on the "Vantage Point" program]

[Excerpts] Almost exactly 1 month has elapsed since the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, the country's governing party, concluded this congress. Such congresses, according to the party's rules, constitute its top policymaking forum. One month is, of course, in historical terms little more than an instant, and yet such is the pace of events in our day and age that even this brief period has provided striking proof of how consistently the Soviet Union is following the policies formulated at the congress. In its main resolution, the congress unequivocally reaffirmed the defensive nature of the Soviet military doctrine based on the USSR's firm commitment to opposing nuclear war in any form. The main thrust of the Sovet Union's foreign policy in the coming years, the congress declared, should be efforts to secure the implementation of the program outlined by the party's general secretary on 15 January 1986, for eliminating weapons of mass destruction.

Alas, instead of grasping this excellent opportunity to end all nuclear tests once and for all and thereby take the first real step toward nuclear disarmament Washington is practically seeking excuses to continue escalating the arms race. One such excuse was the flimsy argument about the inadequacy of verification procedures for policing an underground test ban. The Soviet Union has disposed of this argument completely by declaring it would accept any form of verification, including on-site inspection. Even flimsier are recent arguments about the Soviet Union being ahead in nuclear testing, or having violated its treaty undertakings.

As for vague charges about the Soviet Union having possible violated nuclear test agreements, such as the threshold test ban treaty of 1974, a highly relevant fact on this score has been reported from Washington by the world's major new agencies this week. According to these reports, the director of the Central Intelligence Agency, William Casey, has ordered drastic changes in the way his agency judges the yield of Soviet nuclear weapons tests following determinations that its estimates were too high. According to administration officials cited by THE NEW YORK TIMES, Casey's decision has called into question past administration claims that Soviet tests may have violated the threshold test ban treaty.

It's a pity that practically each of these Washington excuses is dutifully echoed in London. Little wonder that even Denis Healey, a Labour Party leader who can hardly be suspected of any pro-Soviet leanings, this week felt constrained to level strong criticism at the Conservative government's tacit agreement with Washington's refusal to begin a constructive dialogue with a view to achieving a comprehensive test ban.

As the Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev said the other day, he felt certain that the proper conclusions from this refusal would be drawn by the world public as well as the Soviet Union. It has, he said, become particularly clear who's who in world politics.

World Opinion Supports Ban

[IZVESTIYA Political Observer Stanislav Kondrashov commentary; from the "Vremya" newscast]

[Text] A large group of U.S. and Swedish political, trade union and public organizations has appealed to President Reagan and the U.S. Congress to end nuclear tests immediately. Over to IZVESTIYA political observer Stanislav Kondrashov:

Hello there comrades! A week ago, Comrade Gorbachev made an offer to President Reagan to meet without delay in order to discuss the issue of halting nuclear tests. The President answered in the negative, promptly, not pausing to think about it. But the world has fallen to thinking, both about this latest refusal and about the policy of the Washington administration in general, does it really want to halt the nuclear arms race, and ultimately, to eliminate the nuclear weapons? President Reagan says yes, and he was saying that before Geneva, at Geneva and after Geneva likewise. Moreover, not bothering with facts, he attributes the authorship of the very idea of eliminating the nuclear weapons to himself. But the sincerity of his intentions is doubted more and more, even by those who by merit of their convictions believe Washington more than Moscow.

Let us take Chancellor, an old and eminent U.S. television observer. About 3 days ago he noted: Divergence in word and deed is not working in favor of the United States now, since it is precisely the United States that has been mounting up its nuclear armaments at the highest rate for the past 20 years.

Or Egon Bahr, prominent West German Social Democrat. He has made it clear for himself yet another time. I quote -- the United States only says "no" to all attempts to stop the spiralling arms race.

In Japan, the daily TOKYO SHIMBUN, and not only it, condemns the Washington position on the issue of nuclear tests. And finally, one more quotation, quite lengthy but an expressive one, from the London weekly THE OBSERVER. The West would be stunned, THE OBSERVER writes, if Gorbachev were subjected to emotional outbursts which, when it comes to Washington, we regard as normal practice in U.S. foreign policies. If the Soviet Navy took on one of the weaker representatives of the capitalist world, sank ships and downed planes, the British House of Commons and the press would long be shuddering from anger and indignation. A real cause for concern would then arise, THE OBSERVER goes on, that a person who exercises the power he was endowed with in such an offhand way, cannot be entrusted with responsibility for nuclear weapons.

What do all these words mean? That the feeling of common sense and of responsibility is in an increasing way associated in the world with the position of Moscow, and not with that of Washington -- even by those, I repeat, who by merit of their convictions and views rather believe Washington and not the other way round. It is precisely the reason why Washington is nervous and trying to brush off the Soviet peace initiatives as a propaganda war. The extreme right among U.S. politicians literally dream about Moscow slamming the door and thus making their position easier.

The latent shifts in the giant massif which is called the world public opinion do not occur rapidly, and there are no seismograhs which could measure their magnitude. One thing is quite clear however: The movement of this massif is observed in the direction of those who display platitudes, wisdom, and self-possession in our dangerous age. And those who display opposite qualities, find it increasingly difficult to obstruct this movement.

Secret Testing Concept Refuted

[From the "International Panorama" program presented by Gennadiy Gerasimov]

[Text] It is not easy to deal with the United States. The President has a meeting with Katya Lyceva and tells her that he is for peace, that peace is his dream, and that he is ready to do anything to eliminate nuclear weapons. But in order to eliminate them, let us stop nuclear tests, at least, for a start, this is so logical. But they tell us no. And they explain their refusal by saying that they have to catch up with us. But here is a diagram [video shows pie chart with table above it listing numbers of nuclear explosions carried out by the United States, USSR, France, Britain and China and percentages in pie wedges. Caption on diagram gives source as Swedish Defense Institute] If one takes the nuclear tests carried out by all countries as 100 percent, then 51 percent belong to the Americans, more than that of all the others taken together. They also explain their refusal by saying that, you see, the nuclear arsenal must be rechecked regularly to see that it is in combat condition, and has not rusted.

But this argument applies equally to both sides. It is even a good thing, if uncertainly about nuclear combat readiness were to increase, there would be less temptation. This reminds one of the concept of suffocation of nuclear weapons proposed by Pierre Trudeau, former prime minister of Canada. They go on to say that the problem of verification has not been solved, and that the Russians would carry out explosions secretly.

I was recently in Uppsala, a Swedish city where a famous seismological laboratory operates at the university, and records nuclear blasts, among other things. Data received from this laboratory are referred to now and then in the press. I asked a member of its staff whether it is possible to pull the wool over the world's eyes and carry out a nuclear explosion secretly. He said that in theory, this is possible, if one makes the explosion immediately after an earthquake and in the same area. But he added that we have not yet learned how to forecast earthquakes. Apart from that, the test range has to be quite close to the epicenter of the earthquake. In a seismically active region. Overall, the theoretical possibility of deception is virtually zero, especially if one takes into account the risk of exposure both by instruments and by on-site checks. The matter concerns not the problem of verification, but an absence of a desire on the part of the United States to stop the nuclear arms race. One journalist has compared Washington's passion for creation of nuclear weapons systems with the enthusiasm of a follower of fashion who is endlessly buying more and more new designs of shoes without any need. The late Olof Palme said that an end to tests is a signal awaited by the whole world. The Soviet Union is adhering to a unilateral moratorium, until the next U.S. nuclear explosion. It has reported that this is planned for next Tuesday, 8 April. So might the United States cancel the next test? A White House spokesman has said that they might, adding, because of weather conditions. Such an answer is provocative, and perhaps even impudent.

The editor of the U.S. academic journal FOREIGN POLICY, Charles (?Mains), criticizing the Reagan administration for missing the opportunity to improve Soviet-U.S. relations, writes: The contrast between the courteous President in Geneva and the unchanging U.S. policy, might appear to the Russians as proof that the President is the captive of people and forces of an anti-Soviet bent.

U.S. Relies on Force

LD071103 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 0830 GMT 7 Apr 86

[Correspondent Andrey Ptashnikov report from New York]

[Text] Referring to a statement by official White House representatives, THE NEW YORK TIMES has reported that another nuclear test could be conducted in the United States on 8 April. But it was initially planned for the 3d week of this month. So what is this? A straightforward rescheduling to an earlier date? Not at all. The schedule will be adhered to. And the test planned for tomorrow will be an additional one. It will be the ninth since the day the Soviet Union introduced a unilateral moratorium on any nuclear explosions. Since then our country, as we all know, has extended the moratorium three times, but on the last occasion with the condition that it would be observed until the new nuclear explosion carried out by the United States.

The White House has had more than 8 months to change its mind, to listen to the voice of reason and to cease nuclear tests. That is precisely what many American congressmen, prominent scientists, specialists, and political and religious figures, not only from the United States but also from other countries, have been and keep on appealing to it for. This is precisely what the progressive American and world public is demanding. The White House daily receives petitions from various antiwar, trade union, women's and youth organizations with appeals to the administration to join the Soviet moratorium. Such appeals can also be heard at the numerous mass demonstrations taking place in the United States and outside its boundaries.

And what is the response of the U.S. Administration? It is again conducting an underground nuclear explosion. It is becoming increasingly evident that the U.S. ruling circles are continuing to lay special stress on pursuing a militarist course and to rely on force in order to dictate their will to other countries and peoples.

SOVIET, U.S. UN ASSOCIATIONS CONCLUDE MEETING

LD070901 Moscow TASS in English 0843 GMT 7 Apr 86

[Text] Washington April 7 TASS -- TASS correspondent Nikolay Turkatenko reports:

A meeting of representatives of the USSR and the U.S. United Nations Associations has ended here. The meeting was presided over by Chairman of the USSR United Nations Association Academician Georgiy Arbatov and Chairman of the U.S. United Nations Association, prominent public figure Elliot Richardson. It was devoted to the discussion of pressing issues of the international situation and Soviet-American relations. The parties of the meeting declared for strengthening and enhancing the U.N. role in international affairs which is bound to be largely promoted by the fact that 1986 was proclaimed the International Year of Peace by the United Nations Organisation.

The U.S. authorities' decision on reducing the personnel of the Soviet representation at the United Nations was strongly criticised and condemned since that decision is contrary to the U.N. Charter and international law.

Mainly discussed at the meeting were questions of limitation and termination of the arms race, prevention of it from spreading into outer space, prospects of Soviet-American relations in the light of the results of the Geneva summit meeting. Soviet representatives acquainted the American participants in the meeting in detail with the Soviet Union's initiatives and practical steps, aimed at the early attaining relaxation of international tension, vital to all countries and nations, at terminating nuclear tests and at curbing the arms race, in general.

Much attention was paid to regional conflicts, the role of the U.N. mechanisms in their settlement, problems of limitation and reduction of troops and armaments in general Europe.

WEEKLY 'INTERNATIONAL OBSERVERS ROUNDTABLE'

LD061645 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1130 GMT 6 Apr 86

["International Observers Roundtable" program, with All-Union Radio foreign policy commentators Nikolay Ivanovich Agayants, Viktor Nikolayevich Levin, and Vitaliy Sergeyevich Sobolev]

[Text][Sobolev] Hello, comrades! A few days ago the Canadian GLOBE AND MAIL published a review of the international situation under the headline "Persistent Search for Peace by Moscow and Bellicosity by Washington." For us, such a comparison is nothing new, it is no discovery, but when a solid, bourgeois, newspaper says something like that, it is very symptomatic. In our times, if you are looking for war, you cannot build a policy enjoying popularity. In the West, the doctrine of mutual assured destruction, otherwise called the balance of terror is widespread. But even those people who consider that balance to be salutary still want the terror to be less while retaining the balance. And that is what they find in the Soviet proposals, which is why the persistent, tireless, and consistent efforts by our country aimed at halting the arms race and putting it into reverse give rise to response like that from the GLOBE AND MAIL. I quoted our Canadian colleagues because they put it in the most concise and clear ways.

Ideas in the same spirit can be found also in the U.S. press, in particular, profound regret that the U.S. leadership, that once assumed an obligation to do everything it could to bring about the complete and universal ending of nuclear tests, is rejecting, and demonstratively rejecting, the Soviet initiatives which are aimed at this. These initiatives are backed up by unilateral measures and a maximum show of goodwill. On one hand the Soviet Union proposed an all-embracing program of disarmament, and at the same time it showed its readiness to settle individual questions. Now it has brought the termination of nuclear explosions into the focus of attention.

[Agayants] Why does the Soviet Union attach such enormous importance to this problem? First, without such tests it is impossible either to improve nuclear weapons or to create new ones. A test ban would thus enable the whole process of nuclear disarmament to be brought out of deadlock. Second, the continuation of nuclear tests is doing enormous damage to nature and the environment that is still not completely understood. Third and last there is no need to start from scratch in this difficult business. A certain path has already been traveled: For many years now there have been no tests carried out in the air, the waters, on land, or in space.

One of the realities of the nuclear age today is the fact that it is simply impossible to resolve international conflicts by resorting to nuclear war, since there can be no winner. Consequently, such a war can in no way serve as an instrument for achieving any political aims. Moreover, the further continuation of the already head-spinning arms race is impairing both overall international security and the security of each individual state. That is why we are convinced that one of the most important measures that could have a beneficial influence on the political climate on our planet is the ending of nuclear tests. Unfortunately, however, one get the impression that in Washington they have no wish to understand this. The Pentagon is stubbornly stepping up new nuclear tests, going against common sense, and against strong demands by the world public and by the U.S. public itself. The current U.S. Administration, as the events of this week show, is demonstrating an absence of political will to solve such a highly important problem of today as the renunciation of nuclear tests, and an absence of the necessary responsibility for the destiny of mankind.

[Levin] You know, comrades, in response to the latest proposal by the Soviet Union given in Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev's statement on television last Saturday, 1 week ago, U.S. representatives stated immediately that they had no wish to talk about any summit meeting to decide the question of ending nuclear tests, neither did they intend to talk about ending those tests. We hope that this is not the last word from the Washington administration, but to date that is how the situation is taking shape. Moreover, there are clear attempts by the United States to avoid giving an answer to the questions raised by the Soviet Union, and to find some sort of propaganda camouflage moves. The first move was the story that the Soviet Union, contrary to the Geneva accords -- here casting a shadow over our attitude toward the Geneva summit -- is rejecting the planned meeting and proposing another meeting instead devoted only a narrow question, and so on and so forth. The Soviet Union immediately made this matter completely clear. No, the meeting that Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev is suggesting be held in the immediate future to resolve the question of ending nulcear tests does not replace the Soviet-U.S. summit meeting planned for this year which is to take place in the United States to discuss a wide range of problems. Furthermore, other ideas were set in motion. A commentator for the U.S. NBC television company, for example, made the following statement regarding our initiative and the reaction by the United States. I quote this observer: To ask Ronald Reagan to end nuclear tests is the same as asking Imelda Marcos to stop buying new shoes.

[Sobolev] That is the wife of the Philippines dictator Marcos.

[Levin] That is right! That, you know, was in fact an attempt to turn the idea around, but the sense of the commentary was that, well, it is an absurd thing to ask of Reagan. Why on earth do the Russians, knowing full well that Reagan will give a negative answer, make such statements? But what we are counting on is common sense, a realistic understanding of the political and strategic situation that has come about in the world because of U.S. President Reagan. We make that proposal, not at all, as again they say in America, to score propaganda points, to drive the United States into a corner, or put it in a difficult position. No, that is not our aim at all. Our aim is to find a point of contact in attitudes, to develop a common point of view, and solve the problem of ending nuclear tests, because that is the first step on the path of eliminating nuclear weapons.

I would like to recall the foundation-laying documents that were adopted by the 27th CPSU Congress. The new edition of the party program says clearly and definitely that the Communist Party of the Soviet Union firmly and consistently upholds the Leninist principle of peaceful coexistence between states with different social systems. We see our task as being the prevention of the threat of war. That is our principled policy. That is our chief aim. And that aim is far removed from any attempts to score points in the propaganda struggle. No, we do not want to drive Washington into a corner. If today it feels uncomfortable, then it is the fault of the U.S. Administration alone, its fault alone. But that is not our aim. We want to come to agreement with the United States, agreement on the problems which life itself today puts in the forefront.

[Sobolev] And problems on which at one time it seemed to express views that would enable agreement to be reached. In particular, during the Geneva meeting, the United States, in the person of President Reagan, expressed readiness to come to an agreement on the major problems of disarmament, and in particular the ending of nuclear tests could be the first step toward such accords. Unfortunately, however, as Comrade Gorbachev said in his interview with the Algerian magazine REVOLUTION AFRICAINE, Washington's actions following Geneva contradict the accords reached there. In the United States there is an increasing anti-Geneva syndrome which naturally creates no small number of difficulties for the development of Soviet-U.S. relations. In particular that syndrome has been manifested in the increasing onslaught by the opponents of the SALT-II and ABM Treaties that the United States signed with the Soviet Union. Certain commissions compile completely groundless documents showing that the USSR is violating the limitations imposed by those agreements. A few days ago, however, there came to light a secret report by the U.S. special services for internal use which came to the conclusion that USSR is, in fact, not violating the treaties, but observing them.

But I repeat, although a secret report for internal use quietly says one thing, in the United States they are loudly saying something else. They assert, for example, that the USSR has 20-25 percent more warheads than the 2,500 fixed by SALT-II. Where does Washington get these figures, and why does it quote them? It is because another atomic-powered nuclear missile-carrying Trident submarine is going into service in the United States. So in order to keep to the level fixed by SALT-II, two other nuclear systems have to be dismantled -- two old Poseidon submarines. And so certain officials in Washington, quoting figures plucked out of thin air, are insisting that these submarines should not be dismantled but just put into dry dock, thus trying, by means of these submarines, to torpedo the clauses of the treaty. Also, as everyone knows, the ABM Treaty stands in the path of developing the star wars treaties is particularly great, and it is the passionate dream of the Washington neoconservatives to wreck them. A clear field, so to speak, would then be opened up for the arms race, that even in the ruling U.S. circles is far from an attractive thought for everyone.

[Levin] In the United States at the moment, again by falsifying the facts, they are attempting to create the impression that if the United States were to stop its nuclear tests, the U.S. lag in that area -- as certain politicians in Washington are now saying -- would be frozen. Let us recall that according to data from the Swedish Institute of Defense Research, the United States has tested one-third more nuclear devices than the Soviet Union since 1945, and together with the other Western states one and half times as many.

[Sobolev] Moreover, they have tested more in all environments -- in the air, under water, and on earth.

[Levin] That is absolutely correct -- and underground tests as well. And it is not out of place to recall that, up until today, the United States has carried out six explosions since the Soviet Union's introduction of the unilateral moratorium. Now they want to demonstratively carry out yet another explosion, directly connected withthe implementation of the so-called Strategic Defense Initiative program. If this explosion takes place we shall be forced to resume nuclear tests. However, we do not want that. We want to see nuclear explosions brought to an end, the first specific step taken along the path of ending nuclear tests, and bilateral, trilateral, and multialteral talks begun. We are proposing a very broad program of action here.

[Agayants] Thus, Viktor Nikolayevich, we should stress once more that the foreign policy course of the CPSU and of our state is imbued with the most profound concern for preserving and consolidating peace on earth and has nothing to do with any kinds of short-term calculations or considerations, because in the nuclear era the security of one state cannot be built at the expense of others. This is extremely clear and well-argued and is set forth in both the 27th CPSU Congress documents and in Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev's latest speeches. It is a consistent, principled, and constructive course which also takes into account the interests of states belonging to different social systems, for we genuinely want an improvement in the international situation, an easing of tension, and the prevention of the threat of war.

[Levin] I would like to note yet another point regarding U.S. policy. Quoting spokesman of the Washington administration, in the name of achieving President Reagan's principle objectives, which they name as the implementation of the SDI program -- the program of creating space strike weapons -- and the stepping up of assistance to, as they call them, anticommunist regimes around the globe -- we know what they mean: support for the Afghan bandits, support for the UNITA [National Union for the Total Independence of Angola] gangs in Angola; support for the Nicaraguan contras etc -- in the name of realizing these objectives, the administration is willing to risk, as THE WALL STREET JOURNAL wrote, a deterioration of relations with the Soviet Union. However, this is no risk. It is a calculated provocation aimed at forcing the Soviet Union so slam the door shut in order to bury the Geneva spirit under layers of militarism and aventurism. But we have frequently stated -- and it was said from the rostrum of the 27th party congress -- that we shall not fall for these provocations, we shall not slam the door shut. Responsibility for the destiny of peace and for security is too great.

[Sobolev] During Mozambican leader Samora Machel's visit to the Soviet Union, Comrade Gorbachev again emphasized that the Soviet Union will continue its persistent and painstaking work to implement its integral program for preventing a thermonuclear disaster and creating a safe world. And we know, the Soviet leader said, that the peoples of the world will be on our side in this noble cause. The past week has seen an upsurge in the antiwar movement throughout the world. So-called Easter marches were held. Demonstrators blocked U.S. and NATO bases in Western Europe, America, and Asia. Hundreds of thousands of people participated in such demonstrations in the FRG and the number of marchers around the world amounts to millions.

[Agayants] The antiwar movement has been injected with a powerful additional stimulus by, of course, the Soviet Union's new peace initiatives which have met with the support and approval of the broadest circles of the world public.

[Levin] On the subject of the present phase of the antiwar movement, I would like to draw listeners' attention to the fact that in the FRG the main slogan accompanying these Easter peace marches was the demand to refuse to support the Strategic Defense Initiative and the demand that the United States renounce its intention of implementing the star wars program.

[Sobolev] The United States has recently been making especially active efforts to develop this program and to assemble under the star wars banner, so to speak, a sort of universal army. U.S. Secretary of Defense Weinberger has gone to Japan where the main aim of his visit, according to correspondents accredited to the White House, is to, so to speak, put the final pressure on Tokyo, to force it to officially join in the so-called Strategic Defense Initiative. Previous to that, the Pentagon chief signed an agreement in Washington with FRG Minister for Economics Bangemann giving the FRG Government's sanction to participation by West German firms in the program to create space strike weapons. The West German press asks what the FRG has gained from this, in particular the WESTFAELISCHE RUNDSCHAU which writes that there was no need at all for it, that the agreement was a political act, which supported Washington's policy and split, so to speak, the front of the West Europe countries. As the newspaper put it, after the fall of Bonn, it will be easier for Rome and other West Europe capitals to fall under the onslaught of the star wars program propagandizers.

[Levin] First, as we recall, was Great Britain, then the FRG -- and this has just been formulated in treaty form -- and Rome has already advocated participation in SDI.

[Sobolev] Although it has not signed an agreement.

[Levin] For the Americans the political aspect of the issue is important. And to claim that they do not understand this in Bonn! They understand perfectly and are thus consiciously assuming responsibility for the deterioration in the international situation. After all, one would think that in Europe any political issues should be tackled with particular delicacy since an extremely large amount of explosive materials are accumulated in Europe -- more than anywhere else -- and to remove the danger from these explosive materials is the main task. This was stated very clearly at the 27th party congress once again.

[Agayants] Washington is striving to drag its allies, including the Land of the Rising Sun, closer into its aggressive militaristic plans. Just today, Pentagon chief Weinberger, who is on a 2-week tour of countries in Asia and the Pacific Ocean region, persistently tried to convince his partners of the need to speed up the process of Japan's joining Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative, at talks held during his stay in Japan. In Tokyo, they listened with satisfaction to these appeals. At the moment, let us recall, the third competent commission of representatives of Japan's largest and most influential corporations, comprising 55 people, is traveling the length and breadth of the United States. By 10 April, they have to submit their recommendations to the government on Japan's participation in SDI.

[Sobolev] As a Canadian journalist has put it, Washington's war-mongering is showing more and more clearly in the planet's so-called hot spots where the United States is continuing to whip up tension, both qualitatively and quantitatively. I mention quality because various kinds of counterrevolutionary gangs are receiving ever-more modern weapons. Shoulder-fired Stinger anti-aircraft missiles have now been sent to Angola and Afghanistan.

It is said that each of these missiles cost $75,000, so America has had to open its coffers wide. This year both the dushmans and the anti-Angolan group, UNITA, have been allocated hundreds of millions of dollars. The U.S. press writes that the U.S. leaders wanted to carry out this anti-aircraft missile business secretly. It is well known that U.S. mercenaries in the two above-mentioned countries have already shot down civilian aircraft and those who are giving them new, modern weapons for this are assuming a grave responsibility. However, Washington's ultraconservatives were so overjoyed at the Stinger deliveries that they could not refrain from bragging in public and there is now a new investigation under way in Washington in connection with the fact that once again the beans have been spilled.

And here is another detail of the methods used to implement the notorious policy of neoglobalism. When the House of Representatives refused to let the White House hand out $100 million to the Somozists, and the voting on this question in the Senate was still to come, the U.S. Government organized an anti-Nicaraguan propaganda campaign in order to bring the legislators and the public to their side, to convince them that Nicaragua supposedly poses a danger to its neighbors. And so it was proposed to Honduras that they ask the United States for $20 million to defend it against the Sandinists. But Honduras is in a delicate situation. It officially denies that there are Somozist camps on its territory; the Honduras public is opposed to the presence in the country both of the contras and of U.S. troops. The armed foreigners are involved in robbery, trading in narcotics, and debauchery -- without mercy even for children. The Hondurans are also justifiably concerned that they will be drawn into a military escapade against Nicaragua; and in the end they consider themselves Latin Americans -- and the position of Latin America in relation to the U.S. anti-Nicaraguan policy is known; they are categorically opposed to it.

In this situation the Honduras president gathered courage and refused to ask for the $20 million which he had been offered -- can you imagine! Then, as the U.S. press reports, they told their insubordinate protege: Obviously, Honduras will not be needing U.S. aid in the future. Well, frightened by the threat that he would be cast to the whim of fate and that they would stop showering him with dollars, the president backed down and did as he was told. U.S. helicopters began urgently to send Honduran soliders into the area on the Nicaraguan border, the situation there flared up, and the White House talked another few senators into the struggle for the $100 million.

[Agayants] This doctrine of neoglobalism is, you know, being spread to other areas of the globe too, particularly the Mediterraean Sea. No matter how refined and cunning the lies put forth to justify the piratical actions by the U.S. 6th Fleet off the coast to sovereign Libya are, those lies cannot conceal Washington's true intentions. What is secret, sooner or later, comes to light. THE LOS ANGELES TIMES newspaper carried an article in which it is directly admitted that the attack by the U.S. Navy in the Gulf of Sidra was thought up as long as 3 months ago by Secretary of State Shultz and Poindexter, assistant to the President for National Security Affairs, in order to draw the Libyan leader, Al-Qadhdhafi, into an exchange of fire with U.S. forces. The United States saw he provocative maneuver by the U.S. Navy off the Libyan coast as a long-awaited chance to use the U.S. military might against the Libyan Jamahiriyah's Government which is disagreeable to Uncle Sam.

[Sobolev] We have already spoken, comrades, about what kind of support is given to the peace-loving policy of the USSR throughout the world. In the struggle for disarmament and detent, our country stands shoulder to shoulder with the fraternal socialist states. It is stressed in the party program that in our time the socialist community is the most authoritative force on the planet, a force without which it is impossible to solve a single, in any way significant problem concerning mankind. The coordinated foreign policy of the socialist countries was spoken of by Comrade Zhivkov, speaking at the 13th Bulgarian Communist Party Congress which took place this week.

The congress delegates noted the historic significance, for the dynamic economic and political development of the world system of socialism, of the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress. In a businesslike fashion, self-critically but with complete confidence, they discussed the plans for the forthcoming 5-year plan and for the period up to the end of the century. In Bulgaria, a long-term program has been mapped out and is being implemented to raise the quality of and to intensify production, to accelerate scientific and technical progress. It was noted at the congress that in the elaboration and implementation of the strategy of accelerated social and economic development of the socialist countries, they act in concert, have a common program of cooperation, and this is an important prerequisite for the successes in achieving the aims set. A substantial change is also taking place now in Czechoslovakia, where the implementation of the decisions adopted at the recent 17th CPCZ Congress is beginning.

[Agayants] The Czechoslovak Communists' highest forum took place in a solemn and, at the same time, businesslike atmosphere of creative approach to carrying out the latest tasks, of critical assessment of the shortcomings to be found. A characteristic feature of its work was the complete unanimity of the delegates on all the chief questions about the development of the country and of the international situation. In the speech one could see the deep interest of the participants in resolving the questions of raising the efficiency of the work of each enterprise, building site, agricultural cooperative; there was a search for internal reserves. It was noted there that not a little has been done: In 15 years, national income has risen, for example, by 81 percent. All this has facilitated a further raising of self-sufficiency in foodstuffs. The total volume of foreign trade has increased approximately two-fold. Moreover, the Soviet Union's share in CSSR foreign trade amounted to 45 percent. And personal consumption has risen over the past 15 years by 43 percent, social consumption has increased two-fold; over 1.8 million families have moved into new apartments. Undoubtedly high results.

[Sobolev] But they did not satisfy the Czechoslovak Communists. They postulated that development must be accelerated.

[Agayants] Yes, serious shortcomings were noted. The national economy developed to a large extent in recent years on an extensive basis; the management structure, if it changed, then was not fast enough, falling clearly behind the development of productive forces; in industry, the stock of equipment and machine tools was in need of radical reconstruction and modernization; the latest achievements of science and technology were being introduced slowly. At the congress there was a frank, honest, party-like conversation about this, and its aim is to achieve to an even greater extent the use of the advantages of the socialist system for deepening socialist democracy and for even more fully satisfying the material, social, and spiritual requirements of the people.

[Levin] I do not think we would be mistaken if we were to say that the 27th CPSU Congress set the tone for the work of the congresses of the fraternal parties, too. We have already seen this in the examples from the congresses of the Communist Party of Czechoslovakia and of the Bulgarian Communist Party; coming soon is the congress of the Socialist Unity Party of Germany. It opens on 17 April. This will undoubtedly also be a very important milestone in the life of the fraternal GDR. Even now, our Communist friends in the GDR are openly saying that at the focus of their attention will be problems of scientific and technical progress. It should be said that the GDR can, with full justification, be proud of the achievements of recent years: it has made a very noticeable step forward, but the problems that face the country are obvious, and it is characteristic that these problems in general have something in common with those on the solution of which the fraternal parties are working in other socialist states. The understanding of the unity of the tasks, the understanding of the unity of the methods by which these tasks must be solved also signifies that we are moving together toward the solution of the problems facing us.

Joint, coordinated efforts are one of the decisive factors that will help solve these problems. It must be noted: Here, Vitaliy Sergeyevich, you spoke of how the 27th CPSU Congress defined the significance of developing cohesion in the community of socialist states. The significance of our joint efforts, the significance of friendship with the Soviet Union and other fraternal countries was spoken of by Communists of Czechoslovakia, spoken of by the Communists of Bulgaria; this was spoken of during the course of pre-congress discussions very precisely and clearly by Communists of the GDR. All our friends are talking about this: The cohesion of efforts is a powerful factor in our movement forward. And speaking of the development of relations between the socialist states, witnesses to which we have become this week, I would also like to note the visit to the Soviet Union by a delegation from the Supreme People's Assembly of the DPRK. In the recent period our relations with fraternal Korea have received a new stimulus: This year we will be marking the 25th anniversary of the Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance between the USSR and the DPRK; and we do not doubt that this jubilee will demonstrate the resolve of the two countries to strengthen their interaction in the interests of socialism and peace in the Far East, in Asia, and throughout the world.

[Sobolev] Our time has come to its end. Thank you for your attention. All the best.

U.S. REPORTEDLY SUPPLYING WEAPONS TO RSA VIA ISRAEL

LD060754 Moscow TASS in English 0640 GMT 6 Apr 86

["Zionist-Racists -- A Sinister Alliance" -- TASS headline]

[Text] Moscow April 6 TASS -- Follows commentary by Sergey Kulik, a TASS political news analyst:

The African press has recently more than once expressed well-founded alarm about and indignation at the broadening cooperation between Zionist Israel and the racist Republic of South Africa. While the whole progressive mankind condemns the apartheid regime and demands that all-embracing sanctions be imposed against it, Tel Aviv is giving Pretoria all-round assistance both in the political, economic and military fields, the Zimbabwe news journal says.

The criminal ties between the Zionists and racists are developing with the knowledge and apparent approval of the United States, which reluctant to compromise itself ultimately by direct contacts with the apartheid regime, has turned Israel into a kind of a trans-shipment point for large-scale supplies of U.S.-made weapons and military hardware to the Republic of South Africa [RSA]. Thus, according to the newspaper WASHINGTON POST, Tel Aviv has been allowed to sell to Pretoria war planes and other Israeli military equipment manufactured according to American licences.

The sale to the Republic of South Africa of the Israeli weapons, which are used by the racists to suppress the just struggle of South Africa's indigenous population and for the bandit raids against the neighbour independent states, has assumed such a scale that at present it accounts for 35 per cent of the aggregate Israeli arms exports. In violation of the U.N. embargo on military supplies to the RSA, the Zionist government offers to the racists Kfir jet fighters, Arava military transport planes, Westwind reconnaissance planes, Merkava tanks, Shafrir and Gabriel missiles, Uzi submachine guns and Calil assault rifles, miscellaneous electronic equipment, etc.

A source of special danger is the close Tel Aviv-Pretoria cooperation in the nuclear field. The South African militarists have recently purchased in Israel a super-long range nuclear-capable artillery system.

The construction of four nuclear powered submarines is at its closing stage in the Simonstown naval base with the assistance of Israeli experts. The project is top classified. The implementation of the policy of creating a South African nuclear submarine fleet is a result of the agreement on close military cooperation between Tel Aviv and Pretoria.

In recent years, more than 5,000 Israeli servicemen have moved for permanent residence in the Republic of South Africa and joined the Army of the Pretoria regime. This figure does not include the hundreds of the Israeli instructors who took part in combat operations by the South African troops against Angola and against the SWAPO [South-West African People's Organization] patriots in Namibia. The military strategy of the apartheid state has been outlined with the assistance of the Israeli officers. As is pointed out in a book on the violation of sanctions against South Africa by Israel and the USA, which was written by Jane Hunter, and published in Washington, Tel Aviv and Pretoria have actually created now an integrated military-industrial complex, whose development is subordinated in a considerable measure to the policy on neo-globalism in southern Africa and in the Middle East, proclaimed by the Reagan administration. The main source to finance the development of that complex is the lavish U.S. financial aid to Israel, a part of which comes to the apartheid regime via Tel Aviv.

The sinister alliance of the racists and Zionists based on human-hating policy and ideology is a source of danger not only to the peoples of the Middle East and southern Africa, but also to peace the world over.

NATO BEGINS MANEUVERS IN GULF OF CADIZ

LD041420 Moscow TASS in English 1350 GMT 4 Apr 86

[Text] Madrid April 4 TASS -- NATO's naval manoeuvers codenamed Tapon-86 have begun in the Mediterranean and the Atlantic close to the Gibraltar. Naval ships and planes of eight NATO countries -- the USA, France, West Germany, Spain, Italy, Britain, Portugal and the Netherlands -- are taking part in these manoeuvres, intended to simulate options for the blockade of the strait in an "emergency."

The Saratoga aircraft carrier, which participated in the U.S. act of aggression against Libya, perpetrated by the U.S. Sixth Fleet, entered the Gulf of Cadiz with the beginning of the manoeuvers. It is escorted by two destroyers and a frigate of the U.S. Navy.

The manoeuvres will last throughout the first half of April.

ZORIN PONDERS U.S. 'CAMPAIGN' AGAINST SUMMIT

LD060505 Moscow in English to North America 2200 GMT 5 Apr 86

["Moscow Viewpoint," by commentator Valentin Zorin]

[Text] The episode I've been reflecting on these days took place in Geneva at the end of last November. Ronald Reagan and Mikhail Gorbachev had just left the Geneva airport and journalists were exchanging impressions of the summit. An American commentator remarked that not everybody in the United States would like the agreements achieved at the summit, for instance the agreement on more meetings of the two leaders. The journalists said we could believe him that there were influential people in his country who would not like that at all and would try to prevent another summit, at least in the nearest future.

The more I think of the conversation, the more it seems to me that the pessimistic forecast made at the Geneva airport is coming true. Indeed, a whole series of events of the not very distant past cannot but create an impression that somebody in Washington tries to put as many obstacles as possible in the way of a Soviet-American summit scheduled for this year. In Nevada a nuclear explosion has been carried out in answer to Mikhail Gorbachev's insistent calls for signing a treaty on a comprehensive nuclear weapons test ban. American warships have made a provocative voyage towards the USSR's Black Sea coast. And shortly before that there was that sudden demand from the American Administration that the Soviet Union reduce its staff at the U.N. headquarters in New York. All this suggests a carefully planned campaign testifying to the fact that Washington has departed from the Geneva agreements.

In a word, Washington has tried to apply the brakes, if not to go into reverse, and this is seen in the negative reaction of the American Administration to the Soviet proposal for a summit in the nearest future to negotiate a ban on nuclear testing. Washington has shown no intention to meet in [as heard] Moscow halfway in the matter of nuclear disarmament. Why? This is a puzzle for many in the Soviet Union, in the United States itself and in other countries. Some say that President Reagan overestimated his capabilities when he agreed in Geneva that neither side should seek military superiority. Others suppose that the President underestimated the influence of those who feared that they would sustain losses if the arms race is put under control by a Soviet-American agreement. It's also possible that the President was insincere when he talked of peace and the need to improve Soviet American relations and curb the arms race, and that his main concern was not so much to achieve an agreement as to score as many propaganda points as possible.

But which explanation is closer to the truth? Whatever the answer, one thing is obvious. Washington over the past few weeks has been carrying out a planned campaign to worsen the international situation and to reduce to nothing the very possibility of another Soviet-American summit.

BEGLOV CONSIDERS SOVIET-U.S. DIALOGUE SINCE GENEVA

PM061440 Moscow SELSKAYA ZHIZN in Russian 5 Apr 86 p 3

["View of Events" by Political Observer Sparktak Beglov: "Equal to the Responsibility"]

[Excerpt] Age-old experience suggests that particular laws can be traced in the policies of each state.

There is one "law" in Washington's foreign policy that our changing, multifaceted world categorically cannot tolerate. Let us look at the events of recent weeks. A well known law of physics manifests itself in these events with quite obvious regularity: action and reaction.

Indeed. As soon as a ray of light appears in the clouds on the international horizon the U.S. leadership seizes on any methods to once again muddy the situation and increase tension.

As soon as the USSR puts forward a far-reaching new proposal in the nuclear disarmament sphere like the 15 January statement by the general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, Washington and its partners suddenly begin displaying an unusual attachment to nuclear weapons. According to her statement of 31 March, Mrs Thatcher simply "cannot imagine a world without nuclear weapons" (!). And this comes after so many verbal incantations from across the ocean and from the banks of the Thames and the Rhine regarding the necessity to rid the world of the nuclear threat.

As soon as within the course of negotiations the USSR goes halfway to meet the United States and its allies, the latter either renounce their own proposals or present the world with faits accomplis such as the latest nuclear explosion in Nevada.

At the summit meeting in Geneva and from the rostrum of the 27th CPSU Congress it was honestly and openly said: The USSR is fully determined to achieve a breakthrough for the better in world affairs and will seek this by its every action.

Precisely such a major step could be a joint accord between the USSR and the United States on ceasing all nuclear tests. What would happen in this case? The control circuit on the conveyor belt of the arms race would be broken and disconnected. Arsenals would cease to be replenished with increasingly sophisticated instruments of war. Consequently, the most favorable conditions would be created for embarking on real disarmament measures. People in the USSR, as throughout the world, continue to hope that the U.S. side has not yet said the last word in connection with the Soviet proposal.

This week has even more clearly highlighted the opposition between the two approaches to the future destiny of the dialogue begun in November at the Soviet-American summit meeting in Geneva and to the content and purposefulness of such meetings. And was it just chance that at the press conference held in the Soviet capital at the beginning of this week virtually half the questions put by correspondents revealed an interest in what will happen next to the "spirit of Geneva"? How does Moscow view the prospects of the next summit meeting, which it is planned will take the shape of an official visit by the general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee to United States?

The sincere interest and concern shown by the questions asked not only be professional politicians and journalists, but also by millions of ordinary people are understandable. But these questions must be directed first and foremost at the U.S. leadership.

As far as the Soviet side is concerned, it entered a dialogue with the United States on the basis of the firm belief that without normalizing Soviet-U.S. relations, without finding common points of departure for progress toward disarmament, a general improvement in the international situation is also impossible. Important points of departure were found in November in Geneva. These were the two leaders' agreement that nuclear war is inadmissible, as is any aspiration to military superiority. Because there can be no victors either in an all-destroying war or in an insane arms race.

Since the November meeting the expression "the Geneva process" has come into circulation. What is this process? It is dialogue and a process of talks at summit level. It presupposes that at every stage there will be a qualitative increase in decisions made in favor of peace and disarmament. Since the initial milestones of consensus have been established, the next meeting will appear worthwhile in the eyes of the whole world only if it is marked by practical decisions, decisions leading to accords on curtailing nuclear arsenals. It is clear that such an approach implies a mutual, clearly expressed readiness to work toward this result and to bolster this readiness in everyday policy. It is not difficult to see that our country acts precisely in this way, that it interprets the purpose and content of dialogue with the United States precisely this way, and that this is our guideline in the light of the new summit meeting planned for this year within the framework of the "Geneva process."

Considering the consistency of the course adopted by the Soviet Union to achieve this aim, the world public has a right to ask the question: What is the U.S. side driving at? Especially in light of Washington's latest abuses of crude force and its "automatic" negative reaction to Moscow's proposal to stop the buildup of nuclear weapons. In this connection a considerable number of people are also questioning the sincerity of President Reagan's statements last November about his desire for peace. They are greatly at variance with the real actions of the U.S. Administration. Or does the master of the White House no longer feel like "peacemaking" and are his hands full with the control panel of the arms race?

Washington journalist Mary McGrory recently offered the following version: Having appeased the American masses with his trip to Geneva, President Reagan is now, she says, solely acting to appease his supporters on the right wing. He is suggesting that dialogue with the USSR will not, he claims, have serious consequences for the U.S. arms buildup program.

Every policy has its own nature, its own social roots. Indeed, many of Washington's actions proclaim themselves so loudly that at times they drown out the voice of common sense even in America itself. It is not difficult to understand why the U.S. leadership feels so uncomfortable in the face of the simple and specific Soviet proposals. Some people in the ruling U.S. grouping are afraid that the curtailment of the arms race will become reality. Once again Moscow is intimating to Washington with the utmost firmness and determination: Strong-arm methods have never succeeded against our state before, and now they are simply laughable.

Proposals in the spirit of an honest and open policy are a kind of "moment of truth." The constructive action program put forward by the 27th CPSU Congress is precisely such a test of truth. It is a test of the sense of responsibility. Matters in the world will proceed much more rapidly and confidently along the path of normalization if the U.S. Administration is open to this understanding and responsibility. "And we call on the President, the U.S. Government, and Congress to show political will and seek ways of normalizing Soviet-U.S. relations, developing them, and improving the situation as a whole," M.S. Gorbachev stressed in his replies to questions from the African weekly REVOLUTION AFRICAINE.

At a time of a complex and, to a great extent, crucial situation in international affairs our country continues to firmly adhere to the course of ensuring that a breakthrough does happen, and that it is definitely a turn for the better.

U.S. 'LOGIC OF STRENGTH' TERMED 'DANGEROUS'

PM041536 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 2 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 5

[Stanislav Kondrashov "Political Observer's Opinion": "Playing With Fire"]

[Text] The political weather in the world does not depend too much on actual meteorological conditions. This is an indisputable truth. Even so, judging by the latest reports, quite a few people are confused and even alarmed by the fact that, following the thaw that spread from Geneva at the onset of last winter, an obvious cooling is to be observed now, at the beginning of spring. What has caused this deterioration in the international weather? Using weather forecast terminology, we can say: a cyclone. A cyclone, however, which was created not by elemental forces of nature but by totally deliberate efforts by people holding responsible positions and operating from a territory of a few square miles along both banks of the Potomac River that runs through the city of Washington, District of Columbia, United States of America. During the second half of March this man-made cyclone pushed a front of thunderstorms over Nicaragua and caused deadly flashes of lightning from U.S. missiles fired at air defense bases in the Libyan city of Surt and at Libyan ships in the Gulf of Sidra. Another effect of this political cyclone was an earthquake in the American state of Nevada, which was also man-made and was triggered by an underground nuclear explosion; it was used by Washington to give yet another expressive answer to the Soviet moratorium introduced since the beginning of August last year for the purpose of initiating movement along the path of nuclear disarmament.

Generally speaking, the cyclone destroyed in its wake many of the recently emerged hopes, and now it is difficult to say what actually remains of the "Geneva spirit," which has failed to materialize in the form of specific accords and agreements to improve the international atmosphere.

Let us now ask another question: What guides Washington in destroying hopes? The fact that it is easier to destroy than to build, the logic of strength and not of reason. This is the primordial logic of the Reagan administration. It does, however, appear that, in the aftermath of Geneva, the U.S. President decided to demonstrate this logic more clearly than before so as -- God forbid -- not to be suspected of betraying his own beliefs. The fact that, as a result of Geneva, Americans started speaking out more actively against rising military expenditure frightened the White House more than anything else. These moods had a strong effect in Congress. And so, as soon as fears started growing that the $320 billion by the Pentagon in its draft budget might be cut back, Ronald Reagan called, in a special address to the nation, for military expenditure to be safeguarded like the apple of people's eyes.

By way of supporting evidence let me offer a few quotations from his 27 February policy address which, incidentally, also contains Reagan's interpretation of Geneva. "Strength is the most persuasive argument we have," the President declared. And further on: "Some argue that our dialogue with the Soviets means we can treat defense more casually. Nothing could be further from the truth. It was our seriousness about defense that created the climate in which serious talks could finally begin." And further on still: "If we sustain our efforts now (in implementing uncut military programs — S.K.) we have the best chance in decade of building a secure peace. That's why I met with General Secretary Gorbachev last year. That's why we are talking to the Soviets today, bargaining -- if Congress would support us -- from strength."

And so, on with the arms race -- and "we have the best chance of building a secure peace." This basis of Reagan's foreign policy and miltiary strategy remains unchanged, and this goes a long way toward explaining the surprises offered by Washington in the last few weeks -- hardening of anti-Soviet rhetoric, hysterical pandemonium around Nicaragua, and wringing out millions upon millions to provide material backup for bellicose "neoglobalism."

Washington in general, and under the incumbent administration in particular, is not distinguished by the ability to place itself in the other side's position. Had it been otherwise, people there could possibly have asked themselves more seriously before shifting toward confrontation: What course of action is left to the other side in the face of this U.S. logic? Strength against strength, until they are evenly matched? But does this process of U.S. strength being matched by Soviet strength not comprise the history of the last few decades, from which a lesson must at long last be learned? It is, however, unfortunate that the ability to learn lessons is not one of the virtues of today's Washington. People there speak about positions of strength but essentially strive for positions of diktat -- diktat of American conditions to the Soviet Union.

This is what well-informed observer Leslie Gelb writes about Washington's moods in the last few weeks: "According to administration officials, President Reagan believes that he has succeeded in establishing a more favorable Soviet-U.S. balance of forces, and this enables him to act everywhere in the world with greater freedom and determination." The President is experiencing "a feeling of optimism and confidence because he has succeeded in squeezing the Russians." One high-ranking State Department official told Gelb: "This is more of a mood and philosophy than strategy. It has not been thought through to the end."

To put it mildly! It -- this philosophy or strategy -- was actually not thought out at the very beginning, since it has forgotten and is unwilling to take into account the experience of the past.

M.S. Gorbachev gave a reminder of this in his statement on Soviet television: "No one has ever before succeeded with strong-arm methods against our state, and now they are simply ridiculous." "Neither a sense of realism, nor a sense of responsibility!", the Soviet leader exclaimed when assessing Washington's current actions.

The tougher attitudes [uzhestocheniye] being reintroduced by Washington in international life are twice as regrettable against the background of Soviet policy, Soviet efforts to create a constructive atmosphere, and Soviet restraint. Moscow tirelessly stresses, both in principle and in practice, that security in USSR-U.S. relations can only be mutual, and in global relations it can only be all-embracing. In contrast, people on the other side of the ocean are insisting more strongly than usual on imperial egoism and arbitrariness.

Following the U.S. Navy's missile strikes against the Libyan Armed Forces, U.S. observer George Will wrote enthusiastically: "We are playing the role of an international policeman, and there can be no international law without a policeman." This out-and-out chauvinist, snorting at everything "un-American" (including Reagan's critics on Capitol Hill), is not perturbed by the fact that his international policeman is self-styled and upholds America's imperial arbitrary rule.

But, alas, Will's descriptions are not all that far removed from the official ones. President Reagan, for example, has repeatedly said that he considers the Nicaraguan Government an "outlaw," even though Washington actually still maintains diplomatic relations with Managua. The Libyan Government is also classes as an "outlaw." Thus, the terminology -- and customs -- of sheriffs hunting escaped black slaves is being introduced into international politics.

Outlaws could be tried without judge or jury, or the lynch law could have been applied against them. Outlaw means without any rights, without even the right of self-defense. Indeed, Washington actually denies this right to the Sandinistas and to Al-Qadhdhafi. The "contras," on the other hand, enjoy full rights, even including the right to overthrow a legitimate government with U.S. military aid.

The Libyans use the term "line of death" for the line to the south of which the waters of the Gulf of Sidra have been proclaimed to be Libyan territorial waters. Last week the U.S. naval armada played a teasing and dangerous game around that line. The fact that, while playing with fire in different parts of the world, Washington is prepared to cross the line of reason is no less dangerous.

COMMENTATOR VIEWS SHULTZ' ATHENS, ANKARA TRIP

PM041135 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 30 Mar 86 First Edition p 5

[Nikolay Miroshnik "Commentator's Column": "Dangerous Partnership"]

[Text] U.S. Secretary of State G. Shultz has just paid official visits to Ankara and Athens. His talks with the Turkish and Greek leaders have been given great significance in Washington. This is confirmed by the fact that G. Shultz' trip was preceded by diplomatic and propaganda "artillery preparation."

The United States did not conceal the fact that the secretary of state's chief task was to bring political pressure to bear on Ankara and Athens with the aim of securing a settlement convenient to the American Administration on issues primarily relating to the future of the dense network of American military bases located on Turkish and Greek soil. Although the agreement with Turkey concerning the bases expired last year and negotiations for its extension have as yet failed to yield results, while a similar American-Greek agreement remains in effect until 1988, it was Athens that was the secretary of state's main "headache." The Turkish leadership, as is well known, has not raised the issue of eliminating the bases, while the Greek Government, on the other hand, has said more than once that the bases will be closed on expiration of the agreement with the United States. This prospect in no way suits the Pentagon.

In addition to this, Washington is worried by the state of the entire NATO southern flank which, in the Atlanticists' opinion, is being weakened by existing Greek-Turkish differences, primarily on the Cyprus problem. American diplomacy has long been trying to "close" the Cyprus question, but only in such a way as to draw Cyprus, contrary to the will of its people, into the orbit of the North Atlantic bloc. The U.S. secretary of state devoted a considerable portion of his talks in Ankara and Athens to this question.

The timing of Shultz' trip was not chosen by chance. In view of the economic difficulties experienced by both countries, Washington clearly counted on gaining concessions from them in exchange for promises of new credits and dollar infusions. But, as the talks conducted by G. Shultz showed, if the United States does intend to loosen its purse strings, then it will only be to modernize its bases and expand their functions right up to adapting them for the needs of American "Rapid Deployment Forces."

Judging by foreign press reports, the trip by the secretary of state did not lead to cohesion of NATO's southern flank, over which Washington is so concerned. What is more, the U.S. pressure once again recalled the threat that the American military presence here represents. The latest military provocations off Libyan shores can serve as an example of this.

KORNILOV CRITIQUES WEINBERGER'S RECENT ARTICLE

LD041756 Moscow TASS in English 1751 GMT 4 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 4 TASS -- By TASS political analyst Yuriy Kornilov.

"The summit meeting half-opened the door to hope. But how this ray of light frightened people associated with the U.S. military-industrial complex, how heftily they pressed against the "door" to slam it shut," Mikhail Gorbachev pointed out in an interview with the Algerian magazine REVOLUTION AFRICAINE. These words come to one's mind when one is reading the U.S. defence secretary's lenghty article in the latest issue of the FOREIGN AFFAIRS journal.

The article in question sets forth the guidelines for U.S. military policy for the 90's and is of a programme character. What "programme" then, does the Pentagon chief have in mind?

Let us put it straight. It is in vain that one will look in Mr Weinberger's article for fundamentally new and constructive concepts that would reflect present-day realities. Its principal message is just the same: Strength and only strength. This is the chief and in fact the only "argument" to be used by Washington in the world arena. While praising the administration for restructuring the American military power and adhering to the doctrine of nuclear deterrence, the Pentagon chief declares that Washington's policy rests on "four pillars". These are: The Strategic Defence Initiative and secure nuclear deterrence, uses of military force and secure conventional deterrence, a strategy for reducing and controlling arms, and competititve strategies.

The order in which the "four pillars" are given attests to the top priority Washington attaches to material preparation for war, above all for "star wars". But what about the "strategy for controlling arms" in which Washington is allegedly interested? The Pentagon chief bluntly says that if talks on the major problem are to be conducted, they are to be conducted from the position of strength.

He regards from the same position the situation in trouble spots around the world, proclaiming, yet another time, almost the entire world to be the "sphere of American vital interests" and seeking to justify and American intervention in the affairs of sovereign nations and peoples.

The article doesn't mention even in passing the Soviet peace programme directed at ridding mankind of the nuclear menace by the beginning of the third millennium, making it clear that Mr Weinberger's "pillars" have an aggressive, militarist hegemonistic foundation.

This approach is wholly within Washington's policy to the shaping of which the U.S. Defence Department is making its weighty contribution. Acting in the world arena as the engine of militarism, the United States stubbornly refuses to handle the chief, principal question of preventing an arms race in outer space.

On strategic armaments, he repeats the old American proposal designed to obtain unilateral advantages. Instead of untangling the European missile "knot", attempts are being made to tighten it harder.

Washington's refusal to respond to the USSR's good initiative and agree to the termination of all nuclear tests has sparked off a wave of indignation. It is of considerable importance how the U.S. ruling circles reject or block any peace initiatives -- in a demonstrative, off-hand way, without regard for world public opinion. They lack both the sense of reality and the sense of responsibility.

The potential and character of modern weaponry deprives the policy of confrontation and rivalry of any meaning whatsoever. According to statistics, 3.3 million people perished in wars from 1600 to 1699, 5.3 million were killed between 1700 to 1800, and 5.6 million between 1801 to 1913. The First World War claimed 10 million lives and left 20 million maimed. 50 million people perished in the Second World War.

What calamities would nuclear conflagration bring today when so many nuclear warheads have been accumulated around the world that experts argue only how many times mankind could be destroyed -- just several times, or tens of times?

The world has become too little and fragile for wars and "power tactics" of all sort. And the recognition of the fact, although with great difficulties, is breaking through the mass of prejudice in the thinking of many representatives of the U.S.ruling class.

"Forty years ago, the United States had a monopoly on the atomic bomb," former American President Richard Nixon said in Los Angeles in March 1986. "The United States had just nine atomic bombs. The Soviet Union had none. Today, the United States and the Soviet Union each have more than 10,000 nuclear warheads on their intercontinental weapons, the smallest of which is 10 times as powerful as the bomb which destroyed Hiroshima. To continue the nuclear arms race is insane."

It is indeed so -- insane. But is there a way out? In shaping foreign policy, one has to realize clearly that in the nuclear age, no sensible solutions, either international or domestic, can be found along the military path, by betting on force. It is this obvious political axiom that the Pentagon chief and the like of him stubbornly fail to acknowledge. And this is what gives rise to anxiety.

PRAVDA REPORTS GORBACHEV MEETING WITH CONGRESSMEN

LD041549 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 5 Apr 86 First Edition p 1

[Text] Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, on 4 April received in the Kremlin Democrat Dante Fascell, chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the U.S. House of Representatives, and Republican Congressman William Broomfield. They stayed in the Soviet Union at the invitation of the Foreign Affairs Commission of the USSR Supreme Soviet.

Mikhail Gorbachev gave a detailed evaluation of the state of Soviet-American relations since the Geneva summit meeting, and recalled and explained the motives behind the proposals and measures that were put forward by the Soviet Union over that period with the aim of consolidating the atmosphere of the Geneva meeting and starting the implementation of the joint statements made there and the accords reached. He characterized the conduct of the American side over that period as being in conflict with the accord expressed in Geneva on the fundamental issue -- the inadmissibility of nuclear war and of the striving for superiority over each other.

Mikhail Gorbachev again stressed the need for a new mode of thinking in world politics that presupposes not only mutual understanding, consideration of the true role, responsibility, and possibilities of the USSR and the United States, but also respect for the sovereignty and legitimate interests of all countries and peoples, and the exclusion of strong-arm tactics and threats from relations with them.

A detailed exchange of views was held on all aspects of Soviet-American relations with the sincere wish to understand the specific features of the approach in each of the countries and the recognition of the fundamental difference between the social systems to which they belong.

The mutual striving was expressed for Soviet-American contacts in various fields to understand each other better and more correctly. The conviction was expressed of the need to carry on the summit dialogue started in Geneva, but it should be an effective dialogue providing for concrete steps to end the arms race and eliminated the danger of a nuclear catastrophe. The Soviet Union, Mikhail Gorbachev said, is prepared to reach agreement on an equal footing, without detriment to anybody, on any problems and expects the same preparedness from the United States.

Due attention was devoted to humanitarian issues. The American guests were briefed on the Soviet Union's principled stand in that field.

Present at the meeting were Lev Tolkunov, chairman of the Soviet of the Union of the USSR Supreme Soviet, and Arthur Hartman, U.S. ambassador to the USSR.

GORBACHEV RECEIVES U.S. PUBLISHER 4 APRIL

LD041544 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 5 Apr 86 First Edition p 1

[Text] Mikhail Gorbachev on 4 April received Stewart Richardson, president of the Board of Directors of the American "Richardson and Steirman" publishers.

On the eve of the Geneva summit meeting and before the opening of the 27th CPSU Congress that publishing house issued the books "A Time for Peace" and the "Coming Century of Peace" by Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee. Stewart Richardson presented copies of these books to Mikhail Gorbachev. The interest in these books in the United States is a manifestation of the wish of the American readers to familiarize themselves more closely with the views of the Soviet leadership on the key issues of today, the life of the Soviet people, and their thoughts and plans for the future.

SOVIET, U.S. SCIENCE ACADEMIES SIGN AGREEMENT

LD050925 Moscow TASS in English 0902 GMT 5 Apr 86

[Text] Washington April 5 TASS -- A new agreement on cooperation between the USSR Academy of Sciences and the U.S. National Academy of Sciences has been signed here. It envisages the exchange of visits by scientists and the holding of working conferences and meetings. The agreement expands the potentialities of cooperation between Soviet and American scientists and of the exchange of scientific information and results of research.

MOSCOW TV ON WEINBERGER ASIAN, PACIFIC TOUR

LD041934 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1445 GMT 4 Apr 86

[From "The World Today" program presented by Georgiy Zubkov]

[Excerpt] Two U.S. Administration representatives are making important trips abroad. U.S. Vice President George Bush set out on Thursday on a 10-day visit to the Near East and Persian Gulf, while U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger is completing his 2-week tour of Asia and the Pacific. In the second edition of World Today, I will be speaking in more detail about Bush's trip; my subject now will be Weinberger's travels. He already has been to South Korea and he began his visit to Japan today. He will be traveling to the Philippines, Thailand, and Australia later.

The results of the latest U.S.-South Korean consultative conference in Seoul on defense questions have brought no surprises. Their main result has been that the two countries' military alliance is not only to be preserved, but also strengthened in every possible way. In practical terms, agreement was reached on continuing the annual major joint maneuvers, and the deployment of binary chemical weapons in South Korea. It is worth remembering that U.S. warheads and their carriers already are sited there: the south of the Korean peninsula is a potential bridgehead for the deployment of cruise missiles. The almost 40,000-strong contingent of U.S. troops in Korea will get new equipment, and financial aid to dictator Chon Tu-hwan will be increased.

This is the U.S. defense secretary's fifth visit to the countries of Asia and the Pacific. He goes there every time with just one purpose; specifically, to strengthen the U.S. military presence and launch new large-scale military preparations. The United States already has more than 300 military establishments in Asia, 85 of which are very extensive. There also are as many as 140,000 U.S. service personnel stationed in the region. The political observers writing on this trip in the U.S. press draw particular attention to the fact that Weinberger is visiting the Philippines. The U.S. defense secretary will meet with that country's new president, Corazon Aquino, for the first time. That meeting is scheduled for 6 April. Well, we already know that Weinberger will stress at that meeting: The PHILIPPINES NEWS AGENCY has announced his willingness to help the new government in its efforts to reform and restructure its Armed Forces in its role as an Asian front-line state.

But Weinberger has canceled New Zealand from His itinerary, not wishing to make an appearance in a country whose government refuses to allow U.S. warships with nuclear weapons to enter its ports.

One knows that the Pentagon's plans in Asia and the Pacific are aimed at upsetting the balance of strategic forces and creating a nuclear bridgehead in the immediate vicinity of our Far Eastern borders. This is confirmed by the U.S. defense secretary's current visit to Japan, which he began by inspecting the military units stationed on the northern Japanese island of Hokkaido, near the very borders of the Soviet Union. The elite 7th Japanese ground forces division carried out an operation under the symbolic and, you could say, provocative title of "Breaking Through Enemy Positions."

Taking part in this operation were the latest tanks, self-propelled howitzers, and helicopeters. Weinberger actually told newsmen on the testing-ground, during the exercise, that the U.S. regards Hokkaido as one of the key points in its military confrontation with the Soviet Union. It evidently is not for nothing, either, that the military base at Mesawa, in the north of Honshu, was selected for a visit. The deployment is under way on that base of a large group of U.S. F-16 fighter-bombers capable of carrying nuclear weapons.

FURTHER ANALYSES OF WEINBERGER JAPAN VISIT

U.S. Continues 'Big Stick Policy'

OW060200 Moscow in Japanese to Japan 1200 GMT 4 Apr 86

[Andreyev commentary]

[Text] Commenting on Defense Secretary Weinberger's tour of Asian countries, SANKEI SHIMBUN said that this is part of the U.S. Government's effort to revise its policy toward the Asian-Pacific region. It is common sense to think that a revision in such a case means to redress an outdated policy to make it meet reality.

However, judging from all indications, the U.S. Government is not trying to amend its big stick policy, charged with lethal danger in this nuclear age. Since Washington tries to solve present-day problems by Admiral Perry's means, its policy can never be realistic.

Prior to Secretary Weinberger's departure for Seoul, Mr Sims, Pentagon spokesman, stated that there are vital U.S. interests in the Asian and Pacific region as much as in Europe. His statement actually reveals a blind resolve to also deal with Asian countries from the position of strength.

Last month the United States created very dangerous situations in various parts of the world. It violated Soviet territorial waters, bombarded Libya's coastal area, and keyed up tension in Nicaragua. It then said all this was an action to safeguard its vital interests.

Today, when any regional dispute can possibly develop into a world war, clearly it is very dangerous to use force. To survive is the common vital interest of everyone today and, to safeguard this interest, it is necessary to not only desist from using force but also to refuse to do so. But U.S. [word indistinct] never try to realize this simple fact.

Let us take a look at a recent development. Secretary Weinberger made arrangements in Seoul to continue the joint military exercise "Team Spirit" until 1988. Conducted in the vicinity of Soviet, DPRK, and Chinese borders, the exercise serves as an endless source of tension and provocation and, if something goes wrong, it may possibly touch off an armed conflict. This is evident from the fact that DPRK airspace is incessantly violated during the exercises.

Secretary Weinberger also held talks in Seoul on the deployment of binary chemical weapons. They mean to add those weapons to the U.S. nuclear arms already deployed to South Korea. Therefore, it is needless to explain what a big threat South Korea poses to Asia because of the United States.

Washington is making the same approaches to Japan, its chief ally in the Far East. Secretary Weinberger's visit to Japan is aimed at drawing Japan into a military confrontation with the Soviet Union. There is no other way to assess it.

It was not by chance that Secretary Weinberger began his visit to Japan with a tour of Hokkaido. Mr Weinberger, who observed a training exercise of the Self-Defense Force's Northern Regional Command, was the first secretary of defense under the Reagan administration to inspect Japan's northern border area.

SANKEI SHIMBUN regards this unprecedented fact as evidence that the United States attaches strategic importance to Hokkaido. To put it precisely, the United States attaches strategic importance to Hokkaido as an advance base located close to the Soviet eastern border.

According to reports, Mr Weinberger plans to strongly pressure Japan into participating in the Strategic Defense Initiative -- SDI. There is a fear that this adventurist plan would bring unforeseen consequences to mankind.

Observers point to the fact that, simultaneously with Secretary Weinberger's visit to Japan, a third batch of Japanese experts left for the United States to study SDI. This does not seem to be a mere coincidence. Washington is actively trying to convert Japan into a direct helper in the nuclear development of outer space.

But this is totally unrelated to the interest of either Japan's security or the security of Asia and the rest of the world.

Since the U.S. nuclear armament plan in Asia is raised as a problem, I think that New Zealand's position should be mentioned. As everyone knows, the Pentagon does not accept New Zealand's position against nuclear arms; and, because of this, it was decided that Secretary Weinberger would not visit that country. This is a good example of the attitude of the U.S. secretary of defense toward an ally's request and wish.

But New Zealand is not isolated in its policy. Thirteen island nations in the region have manifested their support for a nuclear-free South Pacific. These nations think that the U.S. military presence shatters rather than ensures security.

The United States is making no secret of its irritation at such developments. The antinuclear movement in Japan is being subjected to fierce attacks from the official U.S. propaganda machinery. Yet this movement is making further developments, and antiwar mass struggles are also swelling up in other countries in Asia as well.

The mass actions in South Korea show that the antipopular, militarist policy of the dictatorial Chon Tu-hwan regime is met by the resistance of democratic forces. The Philippine Government headed by President Aquino reserved the right to make a free decision on the issue of the presence of U.S. military bases after 1991.

Washington's policy of strength clearly goes against the peaceful aspirations of the people of Asian countries and runs counter to the peace initiative of the Soviet Union and other socialist countries in Asia, as well as developing countries.

Regarding the peace initiative of these countries as a threat to its imperialist ambition, Washington is exerting itself to strengthen its military presence in the region. Secretary Weinberger is scheduled to have talks on the construction of new military warehouses in Thailand and the maintenance of the Clark and Subic Bay bases in the Philippines.

The purpose of the international maneuvers by the U.S. secretary of defense is to establish U.S. military domination in Asia under any circumstances and to make it possible to force its will on all other countries.

This outrageous policy of strength of the United States can produce only one result -- that is, further increase the danger of war.

Weinberger's 'Anti-Soviet Venture'

LD042325 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1631 GMT 4 Apr 86

[From the "International Diary" program presented by Nikolay Agayants]

[Text] The Pentagon chief, Caspar Weinberger, in the course of his 2-week trip in the Asian-Pacific region, has, after South Korea, arrived in the Land of the Rising Sun. The main aim of the highly placed U.S. guest is to convince Nakasone's government to force the pace of the process of Tokyo joining in the so-called Strategic Defense Initiative, to more firmly drag Japan into U.S. militaristic plans.

However, Weinberger would not be Weinberger if he did not take part in a provocative anti-Soviet venture. Hardly off the ship -- and off to the party, as they say -- he made for the northernmost Japanese island Hokkaido, where at (Shimo-mazo), near the town of (Iniwa), specially for their visiting guest from across the ocean, the hospitable Japanese organized exercises by the select 7th Infantry Division.

In the last 7 years the U.S. defense secretary has refrained from participating in such dubious demonstrations in direct proximity to the USSR's borders. So Washington and Tokyo have now decided to assign to Weinberger's voyage of inspection on Hokkaido the character of a visit to the front line of confrontation, as the KYODO TSUSHIN agency writes. The Pentagon chief stated to journalists that the United States sees this Japanese island as one of the key areas of military confrontation with the USSR. All these actions by the Pentagon chief, fitting beautifully into the framework of the doctrine of neoglobalism, are clearly at variance with the Geneva accords of the leaders of the United States and the USSR and Washington's high-flown words about their aspirations for peace and cooperation.

PRECONDITIONS FOR 'PROGRESS' ON DRA OUTLINED

PM041115 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 26 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 4

[Vs. Semonov article: "Afghanistan: Who Is Hampering a Political Settlement"]

[Text] The DRA has been in existence for almost 8 years, and throughout that time an undeclared war, a war which grows larger every day, has brought grief and suffering to the people. Imperialism and the counterrevolution have turned the country into a bleeding wound, stopping at nothing to maintain a tense situation surrounding it.

It is the United States which acts as the initiator and organizer of anti-Afghan actions. The large-scale subversive actions carried out against the DRA have become, as acknowledged by the American press and congressmen, the largest U.S. covert operation since the end of the Vietnam War. Washington is providing the Afghan counterrevolutionary rabble with massive financial and military aid and political and propaganda backup. It has set up in neighboring Pakistan a bridgehead for aggression against an independent, sovereign state which is a member of the United Nations and the Nonaligned Movement. In past years the United States has given more than $1.5 billion for the undeclared war against democratic Afghanistan.

Moreover, substantial sums are allocated to the Afghan counterrevolution by Britain, the FRG, Japan, Iran, Israel, Saudi Arabia, and a number of revolutionary international organizations. Britain, for example, has given Afghanistan's enemies 18 million pounds sterling. British Prime Minister Thatcher, for example, recently received at her residence as an honored guest Abdul Haq, one of the most bloodthirsty ringleaders of the Afghan counterrevolutionary gangs, and assured him that the dushmans will continue to be able to count on British assistance.

Nor do some politicians in the FRG -- whose "contribution" to the murder of peaceful Afghans amounts to $20 million -- conceal their sympathies for the Afghan counterrevolutionaries. Bundestag deputies and Bundeswehr servicemen unlawfully penetrate DRA territory, where they engage in subversive activity.

Great material and military aid to the so-called "fighters for the faith" is also being provided by the leaders of Iran, who urge them to carry out hostile acts against their DRA. With the supreme religious authorities' blessing, gangs are being formed and trained in a number of that country's cities and later sent into the DRA.

The Afghan counterrevolution's protectors provide the bandits with an enormous quantity of weapons and military equipment, including missiles. Around 150 training centers have been set up in Pakistan and Iran, where 40-50,000 saboteurs and terrorists are trained annually prior to dispatch into the DRA.

The list of crimes by dushmans, protected and fostered by the forces of imperialism and reaction in the region, is very long. They destroy and burn down industrial enterprises, farms, mosques, schools, medical establishments, bridges, movie theaters, institutes, and stores, and murder teachers, truck drivers, agricultural machine operators, religious figures, party activists, and workers in state establishments. The direct material damage caused to the DRA economy by these subversive actions alone amounts to hundreds of millions of dollars. The Afghan Government, true to the principles of its peace-loving policy, is repulsing the counterrevolutionary attacks.

At the same time, in confirmation of its desire, proclaimed immediately after the DRA's formation in April 1978, to live in peace and friendship with all the peoples of the world, and above all the peoples of neighboring countries, and in full accord with its statements of 14 May 1980 and 24 August 1981, it is doing all in its power to settle the situation surrounding Afghanistan and ensure the security of all the region's peoples. During the six rounds of Aghan-Pakistan talks in Geneva the Afghan side has, through the UN secretary general's personal representative, make the utmost efforts to achieve progress and shown goodwill and the most serious intent. An overall agreement regarding the question of noninterference, international guarantees, and the free return of refugees has been reached. There remain a few details which require to be settled during direct talks.

Regarding the limited contingent of Soviet troops, as the CPSU Central Committee Political Report to the 27th party congress points out, the Soviet Union would like to bring home its troops which are in Afghanstan at that government's request in the very near future. Agreement has been reached with the Afghan side on a timetable for their phased withdrawal, which will take place as soon as a political settlement has been achieved which ensures a real halt to outside armed intervention in Afghanistan's internal affairs and reliably guarantees its nonresumption.

The aforementioned progress at the talks was brought about by the positive and flexible stance adopted by the DRA. Islamabad, however, under Washington's pressure, is not showing goodwill. As DRA Foreign Minister S.M. Dost has stated, despite the fact that the mandate of the UN secretary general and his representative presupposes the presence of both sides at meetings, Pakistan refuses to conduct direct talks.

Of late certain U.S. circles, disturbed by the impact on the world public of the Soviet-American Geneva summit meeting, have deliberately adopted a course of exacerbating regional conflicts. Attempting to provide a basis in military practice for the doctrine of "neoglobalism" in American foreign policy, U.S. Defense Secretary C. Weinberger states that the United States will support "anticommunist freedom-fighters" everywhere. He sings the praises of the "Rapid Deployment Force" and champions the "active use" of U.S. military force against other countries, particularly small ones. C. Weinberger is echoed by U.S. Secretary of State G. Shultz, who considers that "conducting low-intensity military operations is one of the major tasks in ensuring U.S. national security." They have named the following countries as proving grounds where it is intended to "run in" the new doctrine: Nicaragua, Angola, Cambodia, Ethiopia, Libya, and, of course, Afghanistan -- all states against whose peoples and lawful governments the United States and its allies are pursuing a subversive, interventionist policy and which they would like to "liberate" just as they "liberated" Grenada.

Military force, which the United States is relying on to prevent the process of progressive transformations in countries which have chosen their own path of development, can only complicate the international situation and generate new conflicts. It is the imperialist, interventionist course against the DRA of the United States, its allies in the West, and the reactionary regimes in the region which is the chief obstacle to achieving a political settlement surrounding Afghanistan. However, it should be borne in mind that attempts to "replay" history, to eliminate the peoples' revolutionary gains, and to foist on the peoples puppet regimes obedient to the United States are doomed to fail.

The DRA Government is firmly committed to a line of achieving a political settlement and it is ready to go a long way toward broadening the social base of the revolutionary democratic system. People's power intends to solve the complex problems of the country's internal development not by force or arms but by means of constructive dialogue, which must be based on devotion to the fatherland, ensuring the country's freedom and independence, and the maintenance of Afghans' honor and dignity.

The Soviet Union supports the DRA's efforts to defend its sovereignty, advocates the establishment of a system guaranteeing noninterference in the affairs of that friendly neighboring country, and is firmly bent on ensuring that substantial progress is made in achieving a political settlement of the situation surrounding Afghanistan in 1986. Like every other country, the USSR naturally attaches great significance to the security of its own borders, and has no territorial claims on any neighboring states, no matter how different they are.

Those people who are still hampering the resolution of the conflict must soberly evaluate the situation in and surrounding Afghanistan and weigh up their own interests and those of the world in general. Only then can we hope for a solution of the problem.

KARMAL CITED ON DRA 1985 ECONOMIC RESULTS

PM041351 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 1 Apr 86 First Edition p 4

[TASS report: "Afghanistan's Successes"]

[Text] Kabul, 31 Mar -- Delivering the concluding speech at the DRA Revolutionary Council session here, B. Karmal, general secretary of the PDPA Central Committee and chairman of the DRA Revolutionary Council, dwelled in detail on the results of the Republic's development in the past year.

The Afghan people, he said, have achieved considerable successes despite the grave conditions of the undeclared war unleashed by international imperialism and reaction. Much has been done in the field of improving the population's living standards and substantial achievements have been recorded in the economy and in social life. The volume of the GNP exceeded the 1978 indicators by 6.2 percent and the volume of national income was 5.5 percent more. The land and water reform was successfully implemented last year -- about 12,000 peasant families received land, 425 new agricultural cooperatives were organized, and there was a 50 percent increase in the volume of output coming from them to be put on sale. A number of industrial sectors coped with the plan targets.

The number of schools, hospitals, polyclinics, and courses for the abolition of illiteracy increased last year, B. Karmal continued.

At the same time the Afghan leader pointed to a number of shortcomings in the implementation of socioeconomic development plans. Of course, he stressed, there are objective reasons for this, primarily the aggression from abroad. The shortage of skilled cadres and the general backwardness inherited from the past are also having an effect.

This year, B. Karmal said in conclusion, should become the year of a fundamental breakthrough, the year of accelerated development. There is no doubt that this task is within the powers of the Afghan people.

DANGERS FOR TRUCK DRIVERS IN DRA REPORTED

LD052212 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1430 GMT 5 Apr 86

[M. Leshchinskiy video report from Afghanistan; from the "Vremya" newscast]

[Text] There were celebrations in Kabul today to mark the 10th anniversary of the Soviet-Afghan freight transport company Avsotr.

These roads in Afghanistan are the workplace of the heroes of today's event. Through the cold mountain roads and edges of bottomless abysses, the Avsotr drivers take their heavy trucks. [video shows truck convoys on winding mountain roads] Their work demands not only high skill, but also the real courage of a soldier, for these Afghan roads have been turned by the dushmans into the front line of undeclared war. [video shows burned-out oil tankers lying by the roadside] Here they carry out their bandit attacks and plunder the convoys carrying goods that are so needed by the people. They lie in wait for the trucks and kill the drivers. One hundred and sixty Afghan drivers from Avsotr have died at the hands of the hired killers, who, carrying out the instructions of their Western masters to the letter, are trying to disrupt the republic's economy.

These plans, too, however, are suffering complete failure, and the best example of this is the success of the Soviet-Afghan transport company which is increasing its freight deliveries year by year and is operating smoothly and stably. Steadily growing, too, is the international prestige of Avsotr, with which 127 foreign transport companies and forwarding agents are now cooperating.

Many Avsotr drivers are also marking their holiday today on long-distance journeys, but those with time off have gathered here at a ceremonial meeting. Here you can see the Soviet specialists who act as worthy representatives of the Soviet working class and our far-off homeland here on Afghan soil. They have a common cause, common aims and, of course, a common holiday and common award -- the DRA Order of the Red Banner which is now being presented to the Soviet-Afghan collective by Soltan 'Ali Keshtmand, chairman of the Republic's Council of Ministers.

WEINBERGER'S FAR EAST VISITS HIGHLIGHTED

Patsyuk Comments

LD071028 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 0230 GMT 7 Apr 86

[From the "International Diary" program presented by Konstantin Patysuk]

[Text] U.S. Defense Secretary Weinberger has started his visit to the Philippines. We should recall that he is touring a number of Asian countries. This is the first visit to the Philippines by a high-ranking representative of the U.S. Administration since the new government came to power there. The aim of the visit is to maintain and strengthen military and political ties with that country. The position of the Aquino government regarding the U.S. military bases in the Philippines causes Washington special concern. President Aquino has already stated several times that she intends to make this issue the subject of popular debate. She has also expressed her attitude toward U.S. military aid to her country. Our country, she noted, needs economic aid rather than weapons. Prior to this the U.S. defense secretary spent time in South Korea and Japan, where the aim was to strengthen the military alliance with those countries. Incidentally, the question of Tokyo's involvement in the star wars program was discussed with the Japanese leaders. And although Prime Minister Nakasone stated that it is still necessary to weigh the conditions for participation in that program, many people do not doubt Japan's positive position. It is only a question of details.

Protests on Philippines Arrival

LD071112 Moscow TASS in English 1130 GMT 7 Apr 86

[Text] Manila April 7 TASS -- Mass meetings and demonstrations were held in Manila in connection with the stay of U.S. Defence Secretary Caspar Weinberger, on a two-day visit there. The manifestators demanded that Caspar Weinberger should go home, that the U.S. military bases be dismantled, that American interference into internal affairs of the country be terminated. They declared they wanted peace, not weapons. The chief of the Pentagon today met with President Corazon Aquino, Vice President Salvador Laurel and Defence Minister Juan Ponce Enrile. The negotiations are reportedly being centered on the future of the American military bases on the Philippine territory, which Washington assigns a major place to in its strategic plans. The Government of the Philippines repeatedly stated its intention to submit the question of U.S. military presence for a nation-wide discussion.

New York April 7 TASS -- Commenting on Caspar Weinberger's visit to the Philippines, the NBC television company in its reportage from the U.S. Clark Field Airbase points out that the American bases in the Philippines are of special significance in Washington's global strategy.

The NBC reportage says that the importance of the Subic Bay Naval Base is not only its geographic situation. The huge local skilled labour force who are servicing ships and planes are paid by the Pentagon ten times less than in other countries. Such bases as Clark Field and Subic Bay are simply indispensable. According to the UPI, Caspar Weinberger is also discussing questions linked with increasing U.S. military and economic aid to the Philippines. Such aid is known to have the aim to tie that country still tighter to the U.S. aggressive strategy in South-East Asia, and also in the Pacific and Indian Oceans. The UPI cites Juan Niranda, general secretary of the public organization "Alliance for Justice, Freedom and Democracy" as saying: "We do not need military aid, it is directed against the Filipinos."

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON BULGARIAN PARTY CONGRESS

Ryzhkov Visits Varna

LD042216 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1700 GMT 4 Apr 86

[Igor Kudrin Varna report over video; from the "Vremya" newscast]

[Text] The CPSU delegation, headed by Comrade Ryzhkov, which is taking part in the 13th BCP Congress was today the guest of the working people of Varna. Varna is the third largest city in Bulgaria. It is a large Black Sea port and one of the country's industrial and cultural centers. In Bulgarian style, with joy and hospitality, the envoys from Lenin's Party were received at the Chernoye More scientific production combine. This enterprise, which is now well-known throughout the country, was the offspring of Soviet-Bulgarian friendship. It was constructed several years ago according to a Soviet design, and today most of its output -- complex instruments and apparatus for marine and river vessels -- is exported to our country. The combine's leaders spoke about the application in production of the very latest achievements of science and technology, and about the workers' struggle for higher labor productivity.

The prominent Soviet guests were shown new items which have recently been put into production. Afterwards a Bulgarian-Soviet friendship meeting was held in the combine's assembly shop. Hundreds of male and female employees greeted Nikolay Ivanovich Ryzhkov and the other members of the delegation with warm applause. Krasimira Boshnakova, one of the combine's best production workers, addressed a cordial welcome to them.

Comrade Razumovskiy, a member of the delegation and secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, spoke to those assembled. He said, in particular:

[Begin Razumovskiy recording] Soviet and Bulgarian Communists have the same domestic policy objective -- the growth of the people's welfare and the flourishing of socialism; and the same objective in foreign affairs -- peace, good-neighborliness, and all-round cooperation. We will always fight for the achievement of these objectives together. Soviet-Bulgarian friendship has deep historical roots. May the friendship between our peoples live forever; with all our hearts we wish Bulgarian Communists and all Bulgarian people successful implementation of the plans to be mapped out by the 13th BCP Congress. May you achieve new creative successes, dear comrades. [applause] [end recording]

Later today our delegation visited the Institute for Ship's Hydrodynamics, which carries out its research in close contact with specialists from the Soviet Union and other states in the socialist community. In memory of their visit the members of our delegation planted a young fir tree by the institute building in Varna as a symbol of the indestructible Soviet-Bulgarian friendship.

Ryzhkov Meets Atanasov

LD051445 Moscow TASS in English 1418 GMT 5 Apr 86

[Text] Sofia April 5 TASS -- Nikolay Ryzhkov, a member of the Political Bureau of the CPSU Central Committee and chairman of the Council of Ministers of the USSR who is leading the CPSU delegation to the 13th Congress of the Bulgarian Communist Party, met here today with Georgy Atanasov, a member of the BCP Central Committee and chairman of the Council of Ministers of the People's Republic of Bulgaria.

During their conversation they expressed shared satisfaction with the fact that the 27th Congress of the CPSU and the 13th Congress of the BCP have reaffirmed the immutability of the fundamental course of both parties aimed at further strengthening friendship and all-round cooperation between the Soviet Union and Bulgaria and with all other countries of the socialist community. Stress was made on the determination of both countries to continue actively interacting with each other in the interests of improving the international situation and preserving peace.

Nikolay Ryzhkov and Georgy Atanasov exchanged opinions on the issues of further deepening Soviet-Bulgarian economic, scientific, scientific and technological cooperation, switching it over to the path of intensive growth and making broader use of new, progressive forms of joint work.

The meeting passed in a warm, friendly atmosphere.

Ryzhkov Attends Final Session

LD052312 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1700 GMT 5 Apr 86

[Special correspondent Igor Kudrin report from Sofia; from the "Vremya" newscast]

[Text] The 13th Congress of the Bulgarian Communists' is in its last day of work. As at previous sittings, addresses by many delegates once again contain the idea that the key to a qualitative advance in economic and social life is the implementation in practice of scientific and technological achievements. Acceleration and development: These are probably the two words that have been heard more often than any others during these April days in the hall of the People's Palace of Culture. For this Bulgaria has at its disposal a powerful production base, and the enthusiasm of its workers, engineers, and scientists is great. Great importance is accorded in the party's plans for the Ninth 5-Year Plan to the country's participation in multifaceted links with the states of the socialist camp, above all with the USSR.

Today the members of the CPSU delegation headed by Comrade Ryzhkov which was taking part in the work of the 13th Congress visited the Institute for Soil Study and Harvest Programming. Staff there gave a warm and heartfelt welcome to the emissaries of the party of Lenin. The Soviet visitors looked around the institute's laboratories and computing center. They were told about the large amount of research work done by the agrarian scientists aimed at increasing yields of Bulgaria's main crops. The institute's staff have long had the closest fraternal links with their Soviet friends.

BCP Elects Politburo

LD051735 Moscow TASS in English 1714 GMT 5 Apr 86

[Text] Sofia April 5 TASS -- The first plenary meeting of the Central Committee of the Bulgarian Communist Party (BCP) elected by the BCP's 13th congress was held here today. The plenum unanimously elected Todor Zhivkov to be the general secretary of the BCP Central Committee. Todor Zhivkov, Chudomir Aleksandrov, Georgi Atanasov, Milko Balev, Dobri Dzhurov, Ognyan Doynov, Yordan Yotov, Pencho Kubadinski, Petur Mladenov, Stanko Todorov and Grisha Filipov were elected the members of the Political Bureau of the BCP Central Committee. Petur Dyulgerov, Georgi Yordanov, Andrey Lukanov, Stoyan Markov, Grigor Stoichkov, and Dimitur Stoyanov were elected the alternate members of the Political Bureau of the BCP Central Committee.

Chudomir Aleksandrov, Milko Balev, Kiril Zarev, Yordan Yotov, Stoyan Mikhaylov, Dimitur Stanishev, Grisha Filipov, Emil Khristov, and Vasil Tsanov were elected the secretaries of the BCP Central Committee.

Nacho Papazov was elected the chairman of the Central Control Auditing Commission of the BCP.

Congress Ends

LD051703 Moscow TASS in English 1603 GMT 5 Apr 86

[Text] Sofia April 5 TASS -- TASS correspondents Vladimir Abrosimov and Ilya Maslennikov report:

The 13th congress of the Bulgarian Communist Party (BCP) came to a close today. For four days delegates discussed in the Hall of the People's Palace of Culture the report of the BCP Central Committee, the speech made by Todor Zhivkov, general secretary of the BCP Central Committee, the theses of the congress on the main directions of the country's socio-economic development. The BCP's general line in the field of home and foreign policy received universal support in the speeches made at the party forum.

The congress was attended by delegations of communist and workers' parties, socialist and social democratic parties, revolutionary-democratic and national-liberation movements.

The delegates passed a resolution on the report of the BCP Central Committee and on Todor Zhivkov's speech at the congress, fully endorsing the political line and practical activities of the Party's Central Committee after the 12th Congress of the BCP. A decision approving the theses on the party's work in the fields of the social, economic and cultural development of the country was adopted as well.

The elections of a Central Committee and a Central Control Auditing Commission of the BCP were held at a closed-door meeting of the congress today. Todor Zhivkov was re-elected general secretary of the BCP Central Committee at the Central Committee's first plenary session. Members of the Political Bureau and alternate members of the Political Bureau of the BCP Central Committee, and secretaries of the BCP Central Committee were elected.

Todor Zhivkov, general secretary of the BCP Central Committee, declared the congress closed.

BULGARIAN MINISTER SPEAKS ON WEST'S TIES

LD042139 Moscow TASS in English 2033 GMT 4 Apr 86

[Text] Sofia April 4 TASS -- Despite the anti-Bulgarian propaganda campaign unleashed in the West, economic sanctions and embargoes, imperialist countries have been unable to achieve Bulgaria's economic isolation in the international arena, said Bulgaria's Minister of Commerce Khristo Khritov. Speaking at a press conference here today, he emphasised that the People's Republic of Bulgaria intends to continue promoting vigorously equal international commercial and economic cooperation in the spirit of the Final Act of the Helsinki Conference.

Khristo Khristov pointed out that Bulgaria attaches much importance to constructive commercial and economic relations with industrialised capitalist countries which evokes response in business circles of the West.

This is shown, specifically, by steady and considerable interest in the Plovdiv Fair manifested by Western firms. Bulgaria intensively develops fruitful and mutually advantageous ties with developing countries. At present the People's Republic of Bulgaria maintains regular commercial and economic contacts with 70 Asian, African and Latin American countries, said the Bulgarian minister of commerce.

ECONOMIC, TECHNICAL PROTOCOL SIGNED WITH SFRY

LD041904 Moscow TASS in English 1850 GMT 4 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 4 TASS -- Talks were completed here today and a protocol to the agreement between the USSR and Yugoslavia on economic and technical cooperation in the construction and reconstruction of industrial and other facilities in Yugoslavia was signed. Provision is made for further expansion of cooperation in 1986-1990 in building new and in reconstructing the operating industrial enterprises and other facilities in major branches of the Yugoslav national economy, including those in the power industry, ferrous and non-ferrous industry, coal and chemical industries, and machine-building.

LCY PRESIDIUM NOTES PROBLEM OF NATIONALISM

PM061702 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 4 Apr 86 First Edition p 4

[TASS report: "Ideological Work Discussed"]

[Text] Belgrade, 3 Apr -- Questions of the LCY's ideological and political work were discussed at an LCY Central Committee Presidium session held here, TANJUG reports.

It emphasized the need for the LCY's active participation in solving urgent social problems and achieving the party's program aims. It also pointed to the significance of raising the standard of ideological-political and educational work and achieving the LCY's strong ideological unity and unity of action with a view to overcoming the existing difficulties and shortcomings.

This, the report states, is particularly necessary now that antisocialist elements, exploiting the complexities in the country's economic and social development, as well as in the guise of "democratizing society," are launching attacks on the LCY and trying to undermine constitutional order. Nationalists are behaving particularly aggressively. It was stated that individual party organs and organizations do not show sufficient determination in the struggle against such phenomena. As a result, antisocialist statements frequently occur in certain mass media and do not encounter cogent and well-reasoned criticism from the LCY.

The Central Committee Presidium emphasized that the LCY must not remain indifferent to antisocialist trends. The struggle must be waged against them concretely and constantly and not be in the nature of a campaign.

A decision was adopted on the eve of the 13th LCY Congress to discuss questions of ideological and political work in the republic and provincial organizations of the League of Communists and to outline corresponding tasks.

ITALY ANNOUNCES PLAN TO JOIN SDI RESEARCH EFFORT

LD070624 Moscow TASS in English 0616 GMT 7 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 7 TASS -- The Italian Government officially announced its intention to join the American "Strategic Defence Initiative" (SDI), Gennadiy Zafesov, PRAVDA's Rome corresondent, reported in the newspaper today.

Giulio Andreotti, Italian foreign minister, told a joint session of the Senate Commissions on Foreign Affairs and Defence Issues that "it is time to determine together with the United States the framework within which Italian companies may participate in the SDI research stage." Defence Minister Giovanni Spadolini added that future cooperation would demand an agreement at government level.

Both ministers sought to abate the Italians' anxiety by the assertions that the "research part of the programme will not affect negatively the stability of the strategic balance on a global scale." Of all people, the Italian ministers ought to know that the chief objective of Washington's SDI was to change into its favour the existing rough balance of forces. That, in turn, threatened to push the world towards a new spiral in the arms race with unpredictable consequences, the correspondent wrote.

"Despite vigorous demands that the problem of participation in the SDI effort be taken outside the framework of the two Senate commissions, the government is reluctant to allow a parliamentary debate. It is apparently under pressure from its overseas ally and its own military monopolies."

"Meanwhile, opposition is mounting to the American 'star wars' plans not only at Italy's parliamentary and political circles. The Italians, forced recently to accept American medium-range nuclear missiles on their soil, are obviously against becoming Washington's accomplices in the latest militarist undertaking."

SOVIET ENVOY IN FRG ISSUES STATEMENT ON SDI PACT

LD041724 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 6 Apr 86 First Edition p 4

[Text] USSR ambassador to the FRG, V.S. Semenov, visited FRG Minister of Foreign Affairs H.D. Genscher on 4 April, and in accordance with instructions made the following statement:

Secret agreements were concluded between the FRG and U.S. Governments in Washington on 27 March on the procedure relating to FRG firms and institutions' participation in the U.S. program for the creation [sozdaniye] of space strike armaments.

It must be known to the FRG Government that this program, called the "Strategic Defense Initiative," has nothing in common with the aims of defense. It concerns an attempt to create [sozdaniye] a new dangerous class of armaments, multipurpose [universalnyy] in its combat possibilities, which has been called upon to become an element of the U.S. overall offensive potential. The appearance of space strike weapons would inevitably bring in the wake a serious destabilization of the strategic situation.

It also is quite clear that the U.S. SDI program's aim is to sabotage the solution of mankind's most acute problem; namely, the reduction and complete elimination of nuclear weapons. Instead, the SDI program is aimed at building up nuclear and military confrontations in general in the world, including the European Continent.

The FRG Government also is well aware that the U.S. side, having embarked on the path of creating [sozdaniye] space strike systems, including large-scale ABM systems with space-based elements, is openly pushing to undermine the 1972 ABM Treaty which is the cornerstone of the whole nuclear arms limitation and reduction process.

Having accepted U.S. medium-range missiles on its territory, and now involving itself in the SDI program, the FRG is assuming grave responsibility for participating in a chain of actions by the U.S. that in their very essence are profoundly hostile to the cause of international security, peace, and cooperation. It must realize that the Soviet Union cannot but draw the corresponding conclusions of a political and defense nature from this.

The arms race and participation in military preparations against the socialist countries will not help the FRG find a solution to any of the issues pertaining to its present or future.

The historical experience of its people ought to make this clear. The FRG has had and has a sensible alternative to the present unconstructive course which is clearly designated in the Moscow Treaty. The state and prospects of the development of our countries' relations will depend to a large degree on whether the FRG Government wishes to take advantage of it [the alternative] -- the Soviet side would like the FRG Government to be fully aware of this.

Schmidt Comments

LD070819 Moscow TASS in English 0749 GMT 7 Apr 86

[Text] Tokyo April 7 TASS -- Prominent West German politician, former Federal Chancellor of the FRG Helmut Schmidt, has denounced Bonn's decision to join the Reagan star wars programme. In an interview to the Japanese newspaper ASAHI he said that details of that accord are kept secret which causes serious suspicion on the part of the West German public as to the real aims of the agreement. Helmut Schmidt stated that Western Europe and Japan should not give premature obligations on joining the Strategic Defense Initiative since it will hardly help strengthen their security.

ANTONOV, FRG BANGEMANN-LED DELEGATIONS END TALKS

LD041644 Moscow TASS in English 1603 GMT 4 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 4 TASS -- The USSR and the FRG have reaffirmed their preparedness to go on developing economic relations meeting the interests of both countries, which positively influences the development of stable bilateral relations. This stand was reaffirmed at a press conference of the heads of the delegations on the results of the 14th session of the inter-governmental commission of the USSR and the FRG, on economic and scientific-technological cooperation, which closed here today.

The session was chaired by Aleksey Antonov, deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers. The West German delegation was led by Martin Bangemann, FRG economics minister. The sides discussed the implementation of bilateral agreements on economic cooperation, the activity of expert groups and briefed each other on the prospects for the economic development of the two countries.

The commission pointed out that the long-term agreements and the implementation of large projects will further play a great role in developing business relations between the two countries.

On top of that, the partners were recommended to make an even broader use of such effective forms of cooperation as industrial cooperation, compensation deals and joint appearances in third countries. This, in its turn, would contribute to improving the new structure of trade turnover.

Considerable attention was devoted at the session to cooperation in science and technology. It has been recommended to continue soon talks on signing an inter-governmental agreement in that field, which would have a salutary effect on the development of ties in science and technology, which are a good basis for trade and economic cooperation.

The next session has been scheduled to be held in the FRG in the first half of 1987.

USSR REITERATES TERRORISM STANCE AFTER BERLIN BLAST

LD061625 Moscow TASS in English 1620 GMT 2 Apr 86

[Text] West Berlin April 6 TASS -- Mass media continue to give wide coverage to the details of the powerful explosion that shook a discotheque in West Berlin on the night from April 4 to April 5. According to a spokesman of the police, 2 persons died and some 150 were injured. About 30 of them are in a critical condition. At the moment of the explosion there were over 500 people in the "La Belle" discotheque, including U.S. servicemen quartered in West Berlin. The wounded included some 30-50 Americans. A strong fire broke out in the six-storyed building housing the discotheque.

Commenting on the international reaction to this act of terrorism, observers point out the principled stand of the Soviet Union. They emphasize that, in the opinion of the USSR, crises and conflicts are good breeding ground for international terrorism. It resolutely rejects terrorism in all its manifestations, be it undeclared wars, attempts of the export of counterrevolution, political assassinations, the taking of hostages, hijacking or explosions.

It was attended by Mauno Koivisto, president of the Finnish Republic; Erkki Pystynen, the speaker of the parliament; Prime Minister Kalevi Sorsa; MP's; members of the government; representatives of political parties; and leaders of the "Finland-Soviet Union" society; and other public organizations.

REPORTS, COMMENT ON BUSH' MIDDLE EAST TOUR

Aims of Trip Viewed

LD042132 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1919 GMT 4 Apr 86

[From "The World Today" program presented by Georgiy Zubkov]

[Text] U.S. Vice President George Bush has set off on a journey to the countries of the Middle East and Persian Gulf. His itinerary takes in Saudi Arabia, Oman, Bahrain, and North Yemen. The aim of the trip is to ensure for the United States the possibility of using military facilities on the territories of the region's countries that Bush is to visit. Washington has already succeeded in winning itself the right to use such facilities in Oman and Bahrain. Washington's calculation is clear: to turn these facilities into strong points for its Rapid Deployment Forces, gendarme operations in the Persian Gulf area. The countries' leaders whom Bush will meet will be subject to persuasion both by himself and by the personal messages from President Reagan that he has with him.

Aside from the military objectives, the trip also involves economic tasks. Here too, the main aim is to consolidate advantages for the United States. In Saudi Arabia, for example -- as Bush himself said at a press conference before his departure -- more than 300 U.S. firms have their own offices in Saudi Arabia. This country is 13th among the world's buyers of U.S. products. Last year alone, U.S. firms sold goods worth $4.5 billion there.

Anti-U.S. Feeling Seen

LD052332 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1800 GMT 5 Apr 86

[Cairo correspondent Leonid Rassadin report]

[Text] Today is the 1st day of the week-long trip by U.S. Vice President Bush to a number of Arab countries, including the oil-producing states of the Persian Gulf. Bush's tour, Arab observers note, is taking place at a time when, due to the U.S. military's aggressive behavior towards Libya, there is a sudden upsurge in anti-U.S. feelings in the Arab world. There is no doubt that the Washington administration is worried about such feelings. Arab political circles do not rule out the possibility that the United States is preparing to carry out new armed provocations against sovereign Libya. Evidence for this is seen in the clearly suspicious movements of the ships of the U.S. 6th Fleet in the Miditerranean. There are still two aircraft carriers there -- the America and the Coral Sea -- carrying approximately 200 aircraft. Let us recall that at the beginning of last week during the provocative maneuvers off the coast of Libya, U.S. fighter-bombers made piratical attacks on a number of Libyan targets.

I have just returned to Cairo after a journey to Libya and I can testify that the Libyans are fully resolved to stand up to any encroachments by the U.S. military on the freedom, independence, and sovereignty of Libya. The recent U.S. foray in the Gulf of Sidra, stated the leader of the Libyan Revolution, Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi, at a mass rally in Tripoli, was a political defeat for Washington and once again exposed its aggressive nature before the entire world. The U.S. Administration will not succeed in intimidating the Libyan people. We realized this ourselves when we saw tens of thousands of Libyans on the streets of their capital exclaiming "Long live the Libyan Revolution," "No to imperialism and colonialism," and "The aggressor will be stopped."

Arrives in Saudi Arabia

LD051744 Moscow TASS in English 1726 GMT 5 Apr 86

[Text] Kuwait April 5 TASS -- U.S. Vice President George Bush arrived in Saudi Arabia today. During his tour he will also visit Oman, Bahrain, and North Yemen. Bush stated that he would discuss a wide range of matters concerning the ensurance of security with the leaders of those countries. Observers' opinion is that it is a question of attempts at achieving an increase in U.S. military presence in the area within the framework of the notorious "doctrine of neo-globalism". It is also believed here that the U.S. vice president, who on the eve of his tour had met with Prime Minister Shim'on Peres of Israel in the United States, will again try to impose separate models of a Middle East "settlement" after the pattern of the Camp David deal upon the Arab countries.

SOVIETS REPORTEDLY DIED IN U.S. ATTACK ON LIBYA

NC051235 Beirut Voice of Lebanon in Arabic 1225 GMT 5 Apr 86

[Text] The Voice of Lebanon correspondent has learned from a Libyan source that 14 Soviet advisers were killed when U.S. planes raided Libyan SAM-5 missile batteries near the Gulf of Sidra. Some 28 Libyan soldiers, including a number of officers, were also killed during the military operations.

POLYAKOV HOLDS TALKS IN SYRIA, JORDAN

LD042239 Moscow Radio Peace and Progress in Arabic 1530 GMT 4 Apr 86

[Text] Vladimir Polyakov, chief of the Near Eastern Countries Department at the Soviet Foreign Ministry, has arrived in Amman. He will discuss with Jordanian officials the situtation in the region and the issues of interest to the two sides.

Vladimir Polyakov stressed support for the just cause of the Arabs who are struggling against the aggressive expansionist policy of Israel.

Vladimir Polyakov visited Syria, then Jordan. In Syria, the necessity of holding an international conference for a Middle East settlement, in which all the concerned parties in addition to the Soviet Union and the United States would participate, was stressed during the meetings.

'VIETNAMIZATION' OF NICARAGUAN CONFLICT VIEWED

PM041311 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 1 Apr 86 First Edition p 5

[Vsevolod Ovchinnikov "Commentator's Column": "Warning of the Bay of Pigs"]

[Text] At almost the same time as the acts of aggression off Libyan shores, the Pentagon has taken new steps toward direct armed intervention in Central America. That is how the world press assesses reports that U.S. Army units have begun to be shipped from Fort Ord in California to Honduras. Not long before, U.S. military transport helicopters manned by U.S. pilots were used for the first time to regroup Honduran troops. General Galvin, commander of the U.S. southern military district, led the operation for their emergency transportation to the Nicaraguan border.

According to Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega, the U.S. Administration is proceeding along the path of the "Vietnamization" of the conflict in Central America. Washington bears full responsibility for the consequences of these adventurist steps including the possible death of U.S. servicemen in the zone of hostilities.

Meanwhile the White House, as is clear from the U.S. President's latest broadcast, is using anti-Libyan and anti-Nicaraguan hysteria to bring pressure to bear on Congress to use the results of the recent Senate vote to compel the House of Representatives to agree to open military aid to the "contras." The congressmen are essentially being asked to sanction the administration's attempts to achieve the violent overthrow of the Sandinist government.

THE WALL STREET JOURNAL sees in the events of the past week graphic evidence of the U.S. return to the role of the world's policeman. "The times have changed," the French newspaper LE FIGARO echoes, "Defeatism is no longer in fashion, nor is self-flagellation. The series of setbacks in Korea, Vietnam, the Congo, and Iran has convinced the Republican administration that the time has come not only to end retreats but also to regain lost positions. The Nicaraguan problem has played a certain role in this turnaround. But it has merely accelerated the assertion of the philosophy which has now become dominant. The operation in Grenada was its first direct manifestation."

To all appearances the authors of the doctrine of "neoglobalism" are indeed gripped by the idea of reversing the wheel of history. But this is a futile business as we are reminded in particular by the recent 25th anniversary of the defeat of the landing of Cuban counterrevolutionaries in the Bay of Pigs undertaken by Washington. It is no accident that THE NEW YORK TIMES sees a "frightening analogy" between the motives for U.S. interference in the affairs of Cuba 25 years ago and the administration's present attempts to arm the Nicaraguan "contras" to overthrow the Sandinists. The similarity here does indeed exist. And like the lessons of Vietnam, the events in the Bay of Pigs should serve as a stern warning to the Washington adventure-lovers.

BRIEFS

COLOMBIAN AWARDED USSR ORDER -- Moscow April 4 TASS -- Gilberto Vieira, general secretary of the Central Committee of the Colombian Communist Party, has been awarded the Soviet Order of Peoples' Friendship. The distinction was conferred on him in appreciation for his services in the work for peace, democracy and socialism and for his contribution to strengthening friendship between the Soviet and Colombian people and in connection with his 75th birthday. The CPSU Central Committee cordially congratulated the prominent figure of the Communist and working-class movement and founder and leader of the Colombian Communist Party on his birthday and wished him good health and big successes in efforts for a bright future for the Colombian working people. [Excerpt] The general secretary of the Central Committee of the Soviet Communist Party, Mikhail Gorbachev, has arrived in Kuybyshev, a big industrial and cultural center on the river Volga.

AUCCTU holds Plenum; Officials Elected, Released

LD042003 Moscow Television Service in Russian
1700 GMT 4 Apr 86

[From the "Vremya" newscast]

[Text] A plenum of the AUCCTU was held in Moscow today. Its participants discussed ways of cardinally restructuring and improving the entire work of the trade unions in accordance with the party's course of accelerating the country's socioeconomic development.

Taking part in the work of the plenum was Comrade Biryukova.

The report by Shalayev, AUCCTU chairman, noted that the current year should set a rhythm for all work that will ensure the fulfillment of the 12th 5-Year Plan tasks and accelerate socioeconomic development. For the trade unions, the rapporteur said, the social policy, the working peoples' interests, and the improvement of work conditions should always be in first place.

The plenum outlined measures to improve the style and methods of work and the organizational structure of the trade unions.

The plenum considered organizational questions:

In connection with her election as secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, Comrade Biryukova has been released from her duties as deputy chairman of the AUCCTU.

In connection with his appointment as chairman of the USSR State Committee for Labor and Social Problems, Comrade Gladkiy has been released from the duties of AUCCTU secretary.

Comrade Kozlov has been released from duties as secretary of the AUCCTU in connection with retirement on pension.

Comrade Lomonosov has been elected deputy chairman of the AUCCTU.

Comrades Turysov and Ryzhukov were elected as secretaries of the AUCCTU.

Role of Education Discussed

LD042127 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian
1500 GMT 4 Apr 86

[Text] Ways to achieve a cardinal restructuring and improvement of all trade union work in accordance with the party's strategic course of accelerating the socioeconomic development of the country were the subject of discussion at an AUCCTU plenum held today. A report was delivered by Shalayev, chairman of the AUCCTU. The plenum examined organizational matters. Comrade Biryukova; Comrade Razumov, first deputy chief of the CPSU Central Committee's Organizational Party Work Department; senior functionaries of the CPSU Central Committee; and leaders of ministries and departments took part in the work of the plenum.

Here is what one of the participants of the plenum, Dmitriy Mikhaylovich Rostovtsev, member of the AUCCTU and rector of the Leningrad Shipbuilding Institute, told our correspondent in an interview:

[Begin Rostovstev recording] The role of the trade union organization in securing and fulfilling the decisions of the 27th congress is an unusually large one. The basic task is to make a psychological breakthrough and create an appropriate labor attitude and an atmosphere of purpose in solving the tasks posed by the congress. It will be a question of the specific work of trade union groups and committees. Each enterprise must draw up its own program for intensifying its economy and for achieving the high rates of development that were outlined by the party. Of key importance is the provision of cadres and, consequently, the role and responsibility of Soviet higher education, above all, engineering higher education. Obviously, it is necessary to turn out specialists that would become the main source of restlessness in production so that they do not accept mere routine and so that they strive in all their work to depend on the most advanced equipment and technology.

It must be admitted, unfortunately, that higher education has itself experienced the fruits of extensive development. In our view, the main way to improve the training of engineers is to flexibly link studies in an institute with the productive work by young people at enterprises. At our institute, one group of students — at present comprising 30 persons — is combining study at the institute on the day faculty with daily work at the Leningrad Admiralty Association, each work 3 and 1/2 hours a day in the main work teams. It must be said that in the results of the winter session, it was one of the best groups within the faculty. However, these are really only the first steps.

In all this work, the role of the students' trade union organizations is becoming very significant, inasmuch as the teachers cannot monitor and direct this activity independent of the student organizations. The whole work of restructuring education must be based on the energetic utilization of student, Komsomol, and trade union organizations.

Cultural Ministry Plans To End Theatre Censorship

OW040155 Tokyo KYODO in English 0144 GMT 4 Apr 86

[Text] Tokyo, April 4 KYODO — The Soviet Ministry of Culture hasrecently decided to gradually end censorship of theaters, a source close to Japan-Soviet cultural exchanges disclosed Friday.

As an initial step, the ministry will abolish restrictions on 60 of the nation's some 600 theaters from September, the source predicted.

At present, plays are subject to checks by a screening commission of the ministry before they can be performed. This virtual censorship has been a target of criticism among Soviet reformist-minded writers and theater producers.

The source said the planned gradual lifting of censorship of theaters is part of the liberation of information being urged by party General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev.

After the restrictions are lifted, theaters will be able to select plays, decide admission charges and recruit actors without interference, according to the source.

Morozov Assesses Campaign Against Alcoholism

OW060115 Moscow Television Service in Russian
1400 GMT 4 Apr 86

[Interview with G.V. Morozov, director of the All-Union Scientific Research Institute for General and Judicial Psychiatry, by correspondent Minayev, date and place not given; from the "Novosti" newscast]

[Text] "Our Course Is for a Healthy Life" is the title of an exhibition which has opened in Moscow. Our correspondent gives this report.

[Minayev] Its main purpose is to show the experiences of workers collectives, trade unions, and health service organs in the struggle against drinking and alcoholism. About a year has passed since the publication of the decree. What is your assessment of the work done to eradicate drinking from our lives?

[Morozov] We have now achieved considerable results. The number of persons abusing alcohol has decreased. That is evident from the number of trauma cases, defective goods being produced, and automobile accidents associated with the use of alcohol. All that has diminished considerably. But of course there is still a considerable amount of work to be done in this field and it is very important and very meaningful to find new traditions which are not accompanied with the use of alcoholic drinks.

[Minayev] The exhibition shows once again that in order to completely eradicate drinking from our life it is necessary to plan and organize people's leisure time and not to approach the task in a formalistic manner. Much is being said about the need to open nonalcoholic bars. Very few have been set up so far. A coffeeshop with a wide range of juices, fruit cocktails, and bakery items, or a health bar where you will be offered drinks which include medicinal herbs can be organized by any enterprise, as may emotional-psychological relief rooms using slides changing on a screen, music, and auto-suggestion to remove stress, improve one's mood, and with that — work capacity, labor efficiency, and the prestige of many professions. There is an information center operating at the exhibition. Consultations are conducted by jurists, drug specialists, officials of the Moscow City Soviet and the All-Union Voluntary Temperance Society. It should be noted that the exhibition is a roving one and residents of many of the country's cities will be able to see it.

Worker Sentenced to Death for Drunken Murder

LD050543 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 0200 GMT 5 Apr 86

[Text] The Tomsk Oblast Court judicial collegium on criminal cases sentenced Aleksandr Osipov, former construction worker in the town of Strezhevoy, born 1962, to the exceptional measure of punishment [isklyuchitelnaya mera nakazania]. What was the offender punished for?

The workers of the young oil town are even now unable to come to terms with the thought that a man respected in the town — Leonid Yermolayevich (Kovrezhnykh) communist, journalist, and writer — died by the hand of a drunkard and hooligan. He was working as foreman on a construction site, bringing up children, and writing stories about the conquerors of the oil north in the evening. He was honest and principled. From the bottom of his heart he hated drunkerds and slipshods, all those who poison the life of townsfolk.

Osipov joined the team after his release from custody for malicious hooliganism. However, instead of redeeming his guilt to society through work, Osipov, who did not embark on the path of correction, had often been absent from work and drunk. On the unfortunate day in question, he was drunk, offended his colleague, and kept provoking the foreman. As should be, (Kovrezhnykh), having dismissed the rowdy individual from work, went to the cafeteria to write a report. Osipov followed him and stabbed the foreman with a knife causing 16 fatal injuries. The RSFSR Supreme Court rejected Osipov's request for pardon.

Moscow Soviet Meeting Looks at Achievements

LD052220 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1430 GMT 5 Apr 86

[From the "Vremya" newscast]

[Text] Today a regular session of the Moscow Soviet was held in the Hall of Columns of the House of Unions. Deputies discussed the tasks of the capital's soviets resulting from decisions of the 27th party congress. Assessing what has been achieved, the report by Comrade Saykin, chairman of the Executive Committee, stressed one should note that Moscow has not yet managed to resolutely reverse the unfavorable tendencies in the development of the economy, which is still being shifted onto the track of intensive development too slowly. Capital construction is lagging behind, some enterprises are not coping with their plan targets; reconstruction and technical reequipment are proceeding at a slow pace. Not enough attention is being paid to raising the quality of production and rotation of consumer goods stock. Speeches by delegates also noted major ommissions in the work of transport organizations, trade enterprises, and social organizations. The Moscow Soviet mapped out a concrete programme of eliminating shortcomings and ommissions.

Boris Nikolayevich Yeltsin took part in the work of the session.

Leningrad Obkom Session Discusses Soviets' Roles

LD052013 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian
1300 GMT 5 Apr 86

[Summary] The Leningrad Obkom met today to discuss the role of soviets in implementing the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress. During the first quarter of this year industrial productivity in the oblast has grown by 5 percent and the volume of contract work by 8 percent. Livestock product sales targets have been increased. However, some local soviets and executive committees are only slowly restructuring their working style and methods and are not making full use of their powers to coordinate the supervision of enterprises and organizations.

The meeting was attended by Solovyev, candidate member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and first secretary of the Leningrad Obkom.

Kirghiz Plenum Examines Work Efforts Since Congress

PM041543 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 1 Apr 86
First Edition p 2

[Report by correspondent Yu. Razgulyayev on Kirghiz Communist Party Central Committee plenum under general heading: "With High Exactingness"]

[Text] Immediately before the Kirghiz Communist Party Central Committee Plenum which discussed the results of the 27th CPSU Congress and defined the tasks of the republic's Communists in fulfilling its decisions, the local newspapers published a report that the republic's working people had fulfilled the quarter's plan for the sale of stockraising output to the state ahead of schedule.

Of course, this is only a small step on the long 5-year path. But all those with whom I talked in the intermission between sessions spoke of this first victory, not without some pride.

They link the acceleration of the tempo of development in the agro-industrial complex and other sectors of the national economy primarily with the substantial changes in the style of work of republic party organizations and with the hard process of renewal and the purging of those who have compromised themselves or lagged behind life's requirements from the party ranks. The atmosphere of businesslike exactingness could not fail to affect the results of the production collectives' activity and the enhancement of workers' initiative and creative activeness.

As the report delivered at the plenum by A. Masaliyev, first secretary of the Kirghiz Communist Party Central Committee, noted, the atmosphere and spirit of the 27th CPSU Congress can be felt everywhere. The initiative of the Leningrad workers who were delegates to the 27th CPSU Congress for a fitting greeting to the 70th anniversary of Great October has met with ardent support in the republic. At the Frunze city light industry enterprises dozens of teams and hundreds of leading workers have decided to fulfill the 2-year plan by that notable date.

The creative pitch and enthusiasm in the weeks since the congress have given a very good impetus to the fulfillment of the 1986 plan targets. But the first successes have not been a pretext for placidity and complacency. The shortcomings and omissions which are delaying the republic's headway were mentioned in a principled, frank manner at the plenum by R. Kulmatov, first secretary of the Osh Obkom; P. Manchenko, first secretary of the Kantskiy Party Raykom; A. Abdukardyrov, link leader at the "Sredazugol" association's mine named for the Lenin Komsomol; and other speakers. They noted that some leaders, under cover of talk about restructuring, prefer to "save their strength" and do not display initiative in seeking internal reserves. That is how the plenum assessed the activity of the directors of the "Kirgiztorgmash" association and the "Kirgizelektroizolit" plant who projected production growth rates for the 5-year plan 50-100 percent lower than the average republican rates. Keen criticism was levelled against S. Begaliyev, chairman of the republic's Gosplan, who was to blame for the fact that at the start of the year the cotton mills and the Tokmak factory for the primary processing of wool remained virtually without raw material while the tobacco producers, conversely, were overstocked.

Inertia and the desire to work in the old way are particularly dangerous when they are covered up by formal activity — verbal or written. The republic's Council of Ministers again together with the Gosplan embarked on a good and necessary matter — the drafting of the republican "Intensification-90" program. But they reduced all their activity to simply filing the plans for new equipment submitted to them by the ministries and departments. Such examples are evidence that the process of acceleration, the process of restructuring all echelons of the economic mechanism, is impossible without the party committees' constant attention, without making strict demands on cadres.

The initiative of the republic's People's Control Committee met with the Communists' support at the plenum. The patrol members waged an active struggle against slipshod workers. And there are still a lot of them. Thus, in January alone the "Kirgizavtomash" association produced spoiled output worth R.5 million.

The specific nature of the actions, making it possible to influence industry's work more effectively, could also have had a marked impact on matters in the agro-industrial complex, where the main element is undoubtedly production intensification. The setbacks of the past 5-year plan have convincingly shown the unsoundness of the paths of a constant buildup of the livestock population and the production of output "at any price." The leaders of the State Agro-Industrial Committee and its chairman, P. Khodos, were seriously concerned verbally about the increase in the number of farms operating with low profits or at a loss and the slow increase in livestock productivity and agricultural crop yield. But, in fact, even effective levers for increasing production efficiency such as the team contract and autonomous financing are being introduced extremely slowly. As yet, the scientists are rendering little assistance to the countryside with their developments and recommendations.

The plenum has confirmed the plan of organizational measures to implement the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress. They are aimed at mobilizing the Communists and all workers of the republic to practical work to implement the plans projected by the party.

Kazakh Plenum Notes Rise in Industrial Output

Kunayev Makes Report

1400 GMT 4 Apr 86

[Summary] During the first quarter, industrial output in Kazakhstan rose by 8.1 percent instead of the planned 4.5 percent. This was discussed today at a plenum of the Kazakhstan Communist Party Central Committee held to consider the results of the 27th CPSU Congress and the tasks of the republic's party organizations in carrying out its decisions. A report was made at the meeting by Comrade Kunayev, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and first secretary of the Communist Party of Kazakhstan Central Committee.

Cadre Responsibility Addressed

1805 GMT 4 Apr 86

[Text] A Kazakhstan Communist Party Central Committee Plenum has discussed the results of the 27th CPSU Congress and the tasks of the republic's party organizations in implementing its decisions. The report by Comrade Kunayev, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and first secretary of the Kazakhstan Communist Party Central Committee, and speeches noted that the republic was laying down the realistic prerequisites for raising labor productivity this year 1 percent higher than the figure provided for by the socialist pledges. The plenum very acutely brought to the fore demands that cadre responsibility be increased for the work entrusted to them. Efforts must be concentrated on enhancing the smooth functioning of all branches of the economy and on creating a creative and businesslike atmosphere in every section. These are the goals that are being met by the integrated "Intensification-90" program being drawn up in the republic. It aims to raise labor productivity as compared with the 11th 5-Year Plan period by 50 percent. An adopted resolution pays particular attention to securing the profound restructuring of party work and the organizational and political education activities of party organizations directed at realizing the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress without fail.

Lithuanian Plenum Notes Overfulfillment of Plan

LD051950 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian
1400 GMT 5 Apr 86

[Text] Plenums of the central committees of the communist parties of a number of union republics took place today.

At the Plenum in Vilnius it was noted in the report by first secretary of the Lithuanian Communist Party Central Committee, Comrade Grishkyavichus, and in speeches that the republic's industry overfulfilled the plan for the first quarter for production and marketing of commodity output. However, there can be no complacency with what has been achieved. The foremost task of party, local soviet, trade union, and Komsomol organizations, and management organs remains the consistent implementation of the policy of the 27th CPSU Congress for acceleration. Principal criticism was directed at instances of incomplete use of production capacities and scientific potential, and slow improvement in the quality of items. Concrete measures have been mapped out to improve the work of the agro-industrial complex of the republic.

[Text] The republic's commission for road safety has held its regular meeting under Alish Lemberanskiy, deputy chairman of the Azerbaijan SSR Council of Ministers Presidium. The meeting discussed the measures concerning the effort made to further reduce road accidents and consolidate the struggle made against the state of drunkenness in vehicle transportation and the tasks of transportation workers related to the effort made to consolidate work discipline.

Dzhafar Veliyev, the minister of internal affairs; Shakir Kerimov, the minister of motor transportation; Ridvan Radzhabov, chief of the State [word indistinct] Vehicle Administration affiliated to the Ministry of Internal Affairs; and others addressed the convocation on the work carried out in the direction of road safety and the existing shortcomings in that field.

With a view to consolidating discipline and upgrading safety in the transportation of passengers, the commission recommended that, on the basis of the measures established to date, all the ministries and chief administrations should determine the level of vocational training of drivers working on buses and trucks by 1 September. The need to employ the most disciplined workers and those who also have the highest vocational training for transportation jobs was set as a task.

Latvian Plenum Stresses Economic Improvements

LD052026 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian
1530 GMT 5 Apr 86

[Text] A Latvian Communist Party Central Committee Plenum took place in Riga today. The report by Comrade Pugo, first secretary of the Central Committee, and the speeches that were made stressed that the primary concern for all party organizations and every Communist is to resolutely break the unfavorable tendency in the development of the economy, to impart to it the proper dynamism of acceleration, and to make way for the initiative and creative work of the masses.

Thanks to the implementation of the comprehensive reconstruction program which has been developed at the initiative of the Riga Gorkom, many enterprises will be able to fully renew the range of products and increase the volume of production by several times in the current 5-year plan period.

Specific ways for the fullest possible utilization of all kinds of resources, the resolute improvement of the state of affairs in capital construction, and the broad introduction of principles of self-supporting operations in both industry and the countryside were mapped out at the plenum.

Moldavian Plenum Plans Accelerated Development

Resolutions on Capital Construction, Cadres Published

PM041521 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 31 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 2

[TASS "Official Section"]

[Excerpts] Additional Measures to Improve Capital Construction

The CPSU Central Committee and the USSR Council of Ministers have adopted a resolution "On Additional Measures To Improve Capital Construction With a View To Accelerating Scientific and Technical Progress in the Country's National Economy."

The adopted resolution deems it necessary to raise the entire construction complex to a new industrial and organizational level and to reduce the duration of the investment cycle by at least 50 percent as regards both the modernization of enterprises and the construction of new projects.

Union republic communist party central committees, party kraykoms and obkoms, USSR ministries and departments, union and autonomous republic councils of ministers, krayispolkoms, oblispolkoms, and all party, soviet, economic, trade union, and Komsomol organizations are set the task of ensuring, in accordance with the 27th CPSU Congress demands, a more effective utilization of capital investments, their concentration in key sectors, a shift in the center of gravity from new construction to the retooling and modernization of existing production capacities, a reduction in construction time, an improvement in the quality of construction, and a mobilization of enterprises' internal reserves with a view to maximizing production growth and national income for every ruble of expenditure.

Additional measures have been outlined for a transition during the 12th 5-Year Plan to the construction of enterprises and projects strictly in accordance with set norms for construction duration and the commissioning of enterprises and projects on time and ahead of schedule. It has been laid down that planning of construction projects in accordance with construction duration norms will begin as of 1986 in the case of new projects and as from 1987 in the case of projects that are being carried over. Ministries, departments, enterprises, and organizations are not allowed to coordinate plans for contract work if they do not accord with the approved itemized lists of projects.

The resolution also defines a range of measures to enhance the interest of construction and installation organizations and other construction participants in the implementation of work on the retooling and modernization of existing production capacities. To this end, clients and contractors are authorized to determine their organizational and economic mutual relations in the implementation of this work on the basis of special contract agreements and the agreed estimated cost (contract price) of work.

Production associations, enterprises, and design organizations are permitted, when drawing up estimates for the retooling and modernization of existing production capacities, to use individual estimate norms, rates, and costings or to apply upgrading coefficients to the estimated cost of construction and assembly work and to use higher norms for general overheads; also, to set aside means for the payment of bonuses for the commissioning of production capacities and projects on time or ahead of schedule in accordance with norms increased by up to 50 percent compared with existing norms.

The CPSU Central Committee and the USSR Council of Ministers deem it necessary to ensure the further development and improvement in the 12th 5-Year Plan of the method of construction based on a plant's own resources, primarily in the retooling and modernization of existing production capacities, and to focus attention on the implementation of work by this method, financed mainly with money from the production development fund and the fund for sociocultural measures and housing construction.

Utilizing Scientific and Technical Cadres in Industry More Effectively

The USSR Council of Ministers has adopted a resolution "On the Remuneration of Scientific Workers Engaged at Production and Science-and-Production Associations, Enterprises, and Design and Technological Organizations in Industry."

This resolution substantially expands the rights of association, enterprise, and organization leaders to engage scientific workers as designers and technologists. They are permitted, in particular, to lay down salaries for designers and technologists who have an academic degree which matches the salaries of corresponding categories of staff at scientific research institutes (establishments) laid down in the relevant resolution of the CPSU Central Committee, the USSR Council of Ministers, and the AUCCTU of 22 May 1985.

The actual size of the salary is fixed on the basis of the worker's qualifications and in accordance with his personal contribution to the development, assimilation, and introduction of modern, highly efficient machinery and technology and the technical and economic standard of output.

Leaders of production associations and industrial enterprises are authorized to engage, in accordance with the set procedure, scientific workers and leaders of scientific research institute (establishment) sections and also professors, lecturers, and heads of VUZ departments for a period of no more than 1 year to work on the assimilation and introduction of new types of machinery, equipment, instruments, materials, and other products which they developed and which have technical and economic specifications up to the highest world standards. They will also help introduce progressive technology and leading production, labor, and management methods. Scientific research institutes and VUZes must release these workers for the aforementioned period and keep their jobs and the privileges and advantages which they enjoyed at their permanent workplace open for them, as consultants in the solution of complex technical problems connected with the development and introduction of highly efficient equipment, instruments, materials, and progressive technology.

The procedure for labor remuneration and payment of bonuses to the said workers has also been defined.

Oil Price Drop Has 'Negative Influence' on Exports

LD062030 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1400 GMT 6 Apr 86

[Gennadiy Gerasimov commentary; from the "International Panarama" program]

[Excerpts] Another fall in oil prices on the world markets was an important event this week, with serious consequences for the world economy.

The OPEC member-states just cannot arrive at a harmonious trading policy. Saudi Arabia, the biggest oil producer in the organization, intends to increase extraction sharply. Incidentally, U.S. Vice President George Bush has set out to persuade them not to do so; a further drop in prices is also disadvantagous for the U.S. oil monopolies.

The disarray in the world economy also has a negative influence on our exports. A report from the United Nations published in Geneva warns that exports from Western countries to the countries of the East will suffer from the fall in oil prices. At the same time, our foreign trade exercises a stabilizing influence in the market for many goods. Our business relations with Austria are an example of fruitful cooperation. It was this week that there was the opening of an industrial exhibition, and Fred Sinowatz, chancellor of the Austrian republic, came to our country.

Geology Minister Details Emphasis on Exploration

LD051145 Moscow TASS in English 1023 GMT 5 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 5 TASS — Soviet geologists, who have turned a total of 650 explored and blocked-out mineral deposits over to the mining industry during the past five years, are to do an ever greater amount of work in the current five-year plan period, according to Yevgeniy Kozlovskiy, geology minister of the USSR.

Speaking in a TASS interview on the occasion of Geology Day which is observed in this country Sunday [6 April], he said prospecting and exploration work in 1981-85 was completed on a number of oil and gas fields in the north of West Siberia, the Caspian Depression and Central Asia.

Opening them up, he said, made it possible to achieve a significant gain in fuel production and put the Soviet Union, already leading the world for oil output, into the first place in the world also for gas extraction.

Other mineral deposits prepared for commercial development included sizable coal resources, most of them in Siberia. A larger part of these coal fields can be strip-mined.

The Soviet Union leads the world for the reserves and production of iron ore, Kozlovskiy said, adding that in the past five years more iron ore deposits were found, the biggest of them in the Ukraine, Siberia and Kazakhstan.

As a result, the raw materials foundation of the country's fuel and power industries, ferrous and non-ferrous metallurgy, mineral fertilizer and chemical production, and the construction industry was consolidated.

But the dynamic development of the Soviet economy, Kozlovskiy said, requires accelerating geological exploration even further.

Emphasis is on looking for new and proving prospected deposits of oil, gas and ores. Much attention is also attached to searching for coking and steaming coal fields which can be tapped by the open-cast method.

Soviet geologists, Kozlovskiy said, work also abroad, assisting their colleagues in 33 countries. This kind of cooperation in the past five years helped find 250 mineral deposits which are now being developed by respective countries in their national interests.

The Soviet Union, the geology minister said, is perhaps the only industrialized state which is not only self-sufficient in mineral resources but also exports them to both socialist and capitalist countries.

Party Meeting Views Agro-Industrial Complex Tasks

LD052227 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1430 GMT 5 Apr 86

[From the "Vremya" newscast]

[Text] A conference was held in the CPSU Central Committee today for secretaries of the central committees of the union republic communist parties, party kraykoms and obkoms; chairmen of the agro-industrial committees of the union and autonomous republics, krays and oblasts; chairmen of republican, kray, and oblast consumer society boards; secretaries of party raykoms; chairmen of rayon agro-industrial associations; leaders of ministries and departments; and scientists, leaders, and specialists from kolkhozes and sovkhozes and other enterprises and organizations in the agro-industrial complex. Taking part in the work of the conference were Comrades Vorotnikov, Zaykov, Ligachev, Talyzin, Biryukova, and Nikonov, and senior officials of the CPSU Central Committee, the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium and the USSR Council of Ministers. An examination was made of the tasks of party, local soviet, and economic bodies in implementing the resolutions of the CPSU Central Committee and the USSR Council of Ministers concerning the further improvement of the economic management mechanism in the country's agro-industrial complex.

The conference was opened by Comrade Ligachev, member of the Politburo and secretary of the CPSU Central Committee. He said the Central Committee has determined primary and long-term measures for fulfilling the resolutions of the 27th CPSU Congress and the ideas and policies in the Central Committee's Political Report. Guided by the decisions of the party congress, the CPSU Central Committee and the USSR Council of Ministers have adopted decisions on the economic management mechanism in the country's agro-industrial complex. This fundamentally important political document of the party has been worked out on the initiative, and with the most direct participation of Comrade Gorbachev. The speaker stated that most characteristic of the document adopted by the party and government was not only the expansion of management rights and the reinforcement of the workers' economic stake but also the raising of the responsibility of kolkhozes and sovkhozes and those enterprises related to them, and of territorial administration and leadership bodies for improving the supply of food to the local population. It is most important to obtain high returns from the organizational and economic restructuring of the agrarian sector of the economy and from the funds being allocated for the social and economic development of the country's agro-industrial complex, and to substantially increase the volume of agricultural output and lower specific input costs in its production.

A report was presented by Comrade Murakhovskiy, first deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers and chairman of the USSR State Agro-Industrial Committee. The report and speeches stressed the fact that introduction of stable annual plans for grain crop purchases would assist in increasing the degree of personal involvement and in raising the level of responsibility of local bodies for increasing the output of foodstuffs and providing them to the population. It was stressed that the cadre policy, inculcation of resourcefulness, creative boldness, competence, and profoundly economic thinking in our cadres should be the center of party committees' activities. The rapporteur and those who spoke noted that the decision adopted by the CPSU Central Committee and the USSR Council of Ministers will play an important role in resolving the tasks put forward by the 27th CPSU Congress for achieving steady growth of production and realiably supplying the country with food and agricultural raw material.

Comrade Nikonov, secretary of the CPSU Central Committee stressed that it is now time to transform the energy of the 27th CPSU Congress plans into the energy and substance of specific measures. The USSR State Agro-Industrial Committee and its provincial bodies must take upon themselves the resolution of practical issues more boldly and actively, must depart more resolutely from administering by orders and commands, and must base themselves principally on economic management methods in order to solve the task of fully supplying the country with food in the shortest time period.

In conclusion, Comrade Ligachev noted the businesslike and constructive nature of the conference, which had taken place in the spirit of the demands of the 27th CPSU Congress, and he expressed his confidence that the measures decided on by the conference would facilitate the successful resolution of the tasks faced by the country's agro-industrial complex.

Committee Session Emphasizes Agricultural Tasks

PM041031 Moscow SELSKAYA ZHIZN in Russian 30 Mar 86 p 2

[TASS report: "Tasks of the Country's Agro-Industrial Complex"]

[Text] The tasks of agro-industrial production collectives in fulfilling the 27th CPSU Congress decisions were discussed at an enlarged session of the USSR State Agro-Industrial Committee Collegium held in Moscow 29 March. Chairmen of union republic state agro-industrial committees and leaders of ministries and departments of the country's agro-industrial complex participated in it.

The report by V.S. Murakhovskiy, first deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers and chairman of the USSR State Agro-Industrial Committee, and the speeches emphasized that organs of the country's agro-industrial complex bear all the responsibility for increasing production and purchases of agricultural products and delivering them to centralized stocks with a view to satisfying more fully the population's requirements for foodstuffs. The 27th CPSU Congress defined this as the priority task. The consistent and unswerving implementation of the congress guidelines and the propositions and conclusions set forth in the CPSU Central Committee Political Report will help enhance the efficient utilization of the potential of the agro-industrial complex and increase the return on the funds invested. The measures defined in the CPSU Central Committee and USSR Council of Ministers resolution to further improve the economic management mechanism in the agro-industrial complex are becoming a weighty reinforcement in organizational restructuring.

The collegium session noted the need to concentrate the attention of workers of the USSR State Agro-Industrial Committee; the union republic state agro-industrial committees; autonomous republic, kray, and oblast agro-industrial complexes; and rayon agro-industrial associations, enterprises, and organizations on mobilizing existing reserves and potential in every possible way to make a fundamental breakthrough in all directions of economic activity. The transfer of agriculture and the processing sectors of industry to an intensive path of development is to help substantially enhance production efficiency. What is needed for this is the cardinal acceleration of scientific and technical progress and the broad introduction of scientific achievements and progressive experience into practice. The key problem of the agro-industrial complex is to enhance the stability of agriculture, and of arable farming above all. The transition to intensive corp cultivation techniques and increased returns from the land, particularly reclaimed land, must be made more resolutely. Measures are to be implemented to intensify livestock raising. Increasing the integration of kolkhozes and sovkhozes with the processing industry, the storage base, and transport and trade enterprises is a reserve for improving quality and reducing losses of products at all stages. It is necessary to ensure, above all, the priority development of the processing sectors of the agro-industrial complex.

Using economic management methods, it is necessary to focus attention on achieving the highest end results. A great role here is allocated to introducing true financial autonomy, paying one's way, and making the collectives' level of income directly dependent on work efficiency. We have to develop the normative-resource method of planning, financing, and granting credit and proceed to using it in practice. It is proposed to make wider use of material incentives based on gross income. Specific measures are provided for to overcome the laggardness of low-profitability and loss-making kolkhozes and sovkhozes.

The USSR State Agro-Industrial Committee Collegium demanded that all the sectors' leaders resolutely improve their work style and methods; strengthen organization, discipline, and order; and create all conditions for the development of creative initiative and activeness and the consistent assertion in every labor collective of the atmosphere of high party principledness, criticism, and self-criticism created by the congress.

Carrying out the spring sowing in an efficient and organized manner is a serious test for all components of agro-industrial production, and for the agricultural component above all. The immediate task is to secure a substantial increase in the productivity of arable farming and livestock raising this year; to ensure the fulfillment and overfulfillment of the purchasing plans for grain, meat, milk, and other products and their timely processing and full preservation; and to create a reliable basis for the more rapid upsurge of agricultural production in subsequent years in order to successfully fulfill the country's Food Program.

A plan of organizational and technical measures to fulfill the 27th CPSU Congress decisions was approved. I.I. Skiba, first deputy chief of the CPSU Central Committee Agriculture and Food Industry Section, participated in the collegium's work.

Late March Weather, Crop Status Reviewed

PM070812 Moscow SELSKAYA ZHIZN in Russian 4 Apr 86 p 4

[Agrometeorologist N. Ignatova report under the rubric "USSR Hydrometeorology Center Reports": "Weather and Crops"]

[Text] Warm weather persisted in the USSR's European territory in the last 10 days of March. The average daytime air temperature was 4-10 degrees higher than usual. In Moldavia, the Ukraine, the North Caucasus Region and the Kalmyk ASSR the maximum air temperature was 17-24 degrees. In the aforesaid regions and in the south of the Central Chernozem Region vegetation of winter grain crops and grasses resumed 5-10 days earlier than usual. In southern oblasts of the Ukraine and in Moldavia and the North Caucasus the soil was in a state of plasticity and was well warmed, which created favorable conditions for carrying out fieldwork and sowing early spring grain crops.

The warm weather (the daytime temperature was 7-15 degrees) in the northernmost part of the USSR's European territory promoted the rapid retreat of snow cover and the thawing of the upper layer of soil. In the Baltic republics, Belorussia, the Central Chernozem Region, and the south of the Central and Volga Regions fields were free from snow on an average of 1 week earlier than usual. Winter grain crops were still in a state of winter dormancy. North of a line joining Leningrad, Kaluga, Moscow, Ryazan, Penza, Tambov, and Saratov they were under snow cover.

It grew warmer in the Transcaucasian republics in the last 5 days of March (the daytime air temperature was 16-25 degrees). Winter wheat there tillered and grew. Buds on pears, plums, cherry plums, sweet cherries, sour cherries, and mulberry trees opened 1-2 weeks earlier than usual and leaves appeared in places. Apricots and early pears are blossoming in the valleys of Azerbaijan and Georgia. The frosts recorded in Azerbaijan may partially harm orchards that are in blossom and already open buds on early stone fruits.

Cold weather persisted in the Central Asian republics and south Kazakhstan. This retarded and in places halted the development of agricultural crops and the sowing of heat-loving crops. The development of fruits there is 5-10 days behind schedule. By the end of March apricot and peach blossom was recorded in the far south of Kazakhstan and on almost the entire territory of the other Central Asian republics, excluding Kirghizia. Buds were opening and leaves appearing on other fruits. Since soil-surface frosts from minus 7 to minus 1 degrees were recorded everywhere, fruit and berry crops and fresh grass growth may possibly be damaged.

It was warm in the crop farming regions of Siberia. In places in Tyumen, Omsk, and Irkutsk Oblasts and in the south of Krasnoyarsk Kray average air temperature was 5-7 degrees higher than usual. In Western Siberia winter grain crops were under snow cover in a state of winter dormancy. They have come through the winter successfully.

'Cosmos-1738' Earth Satellite Launched 4 Apr

LD041610 Moscow TASS in English 1600 GMT 4 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow, April 4 TASS — The artificial earth satellite Cosmos-1738, the next in the series, has been launched in the Soviet Union today.

On board the satellite is installed scientific equipment designed to carry on outer space exploration, and experimental equipment for relaying telegraph and telephone information operating in the one centimetre wavelength.

The satellite has been launched into a circular orbit with the following parameters: distance from the earth's surface — 36560 kilometres; inclination to the equator plane — 1.4 degrees; period of revolution — 24 hours 37 minutes.

The onboard equipment of the satellite is functioning normally.

Orbiting Cosmonauts Hold Press Conference

LD070905 Moscow TASS in English 0949 GMT 7 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 7 TASS — A press conference in Moscow today was devoted to the three-week stay of Soviet cosmonauts Leonid Kizim and Vladimir Solovyev aboard the orbital MIR station. The press conference was timed to coincide with the 25th anniversary of the space flight of the world's first cosmonaut, Yuriy Gagarin.

Journalists were given an opportunity to talk to the cosmonauts by a T.V. and radio link and learned that the crew was working strictly according to schedule aboard the Mir-Soyuz T-15-Progress-25 complex. All the orbital systems are functioning normally. The cosmonauts feel well.

In parallel with testing the new Soviet space station Mir in the manned regime, the cosmonauts have begun geophysical studies at the requests of specialists in different sectors of the Soviet economy.

Solovyev Discusses 'Mir' Communications System

LD050813 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1430 GMT 29 Mar 86

[Report by Cosmonaut Vladimir Solovyev from the orbiting Mir station on 29 March with introduction by unidentified announcer — recorded]

[Text] Cosmonauts Leonid Kizim and Vladimir Solovyev are continuing their flight aboard the Mir orbital station. In accordance with the scheduled program, tests were carried out today [29 March] on a new radio-engineering system that makes it possible to ensure reliable communications between the crew and the flight control center via a relay satellite while the manned complex is located outside the zone of radio-visibility from the territory of the Soviet Union. The new integrated radio-engineering communications system will make it possible to considerably broaden the potential for controlling the complicated scientific-research complex and to increase the volume and up-to-date character of the information that is received from it.

In a communications session via the Luch relay satellite, cosmonauts Leonid Kizim and Vladimir Solovyev presented a television report about the Mir station. You will see it in the "Vremya" program [1800 GMT on 29 March]. Afterward, Vladimir Solovyev continued his account on a radio channel:

[Begin Solovyev recording] I would like to begin with the fact that the Mir station is only the base assembly. As you have just seen, our transmission has been going on for an unusually long time. Indeed, a few months before the Mir station was launched the relay satellite was launched. The satellite was launched to an altitude a hundred times what our stations fly — over 30,000 km. This satellite makes it possible for both the ground measuring complex and the Mir station to be visible for quite a long time. Thus, the zones of radio communications aboard the Salyut station that were previously from 15 to 20 minutes, 30 minutes with difficulty, have been considerably expanded. The crew at the flight control center has an opportunity to observe the station both by radio — by radio communications — and by television for a considerably longer time — about 40 minutes. This testifies to the fact that our stations now have a fairly powerful radio and television center which can provide lengthy and reliable communications via a sharply directional aerial and the relay satellite.

Additionally, the Mir station fully accords with today's requirements by being totally automated. We have a complex of computers compared to the Salyut station where there was only one. Furthermore, it is possible to add equipment onto the complex, that is to say, in the process of its use it is possible to build up the the capacity of the computers and hook up greater memory capacity. This makes it possible for other developments on the basis of experience of the flight to fix new programs for the automatic control of the complex — really speaking the complexes, I would even say the stations altogether, the whole complex. Our (?station) has four peripheral docking units, which literally in the near future will have docking modules. They will essentially be real production and scientific laboratories. The computer complex makes it possible to automate virtually in full those jobs that used to be performed by the crew and to fully automate control, let us say, for a 24-hour period. That is to say, the control center will send the work program for the 24-hour period and the computer complex will carry out the program, switching on the necessary systems, operating the dynamics, and so on. [end recording]

Lizichev Addresses Baltic Military District Aktiv

[Correspondent Lieutenant Colonel B. Karpov report: "Course of Restructuring; Party Aktiv Meeting"]

[Text] The communist Officers A. Kolomiytsev and V. Kovalchuk arrived to serve at a military unit 2 years ago. Their efforts and the efforts of the party organization at which Lieutenant Colonel Ye. Samuylov is secretary created an atmosphere of intensity among people to carry out concerted work in order to achieve high end results and ensure strict regulation order. A system for analyzing the activity of each Communist was introduced. It envisages weekly personal assessments of the example set by Communists at the party group and company party organization level. Monthly assessments are carried out at the battalion party organization, party bureau, and party committee level. Communists who have had to be called to account or about whom uncomplimentary remarks have been made are invited for monthly individual discussions in a party context. The practice of reports by Communists, party assignments and tasks, individual discussions, and stringent monitoring of the execution of decisions have become permanent features. This approach is influencing all matters.

These cases of the specific restructuring of work in the spirit of the party's present-day demands were cited at a meeting of the Baltic Military District party aktiv. A report on the results of the 27th CPSU Congress and party organizations' tasks in fulfilling its decisions was delivered by Army General A. Lizichev, member of the CPSU Central Committee and chief of the Soviet Army and Navy Main Political Directorate.

"We have been entrusted with matters of immense state importance," the main speaker said. "We bear direct responsibility for working out and putting into practice the most important measures linked with resolving defense tasks and building and training the Armed Forces. How successfully the tasks facing the Armed Forces are fulfilled depends to an enormous extent on our attitude to the job, the style of our work, and the methods we use. It is necessary to ensure that all Communists are profoundly aware of their responsible role and build their practical activity in accordance with the congress directives — that is the key task of the present day."

Taking part in the debate on the report were Colonel General A. Betekhtin, district commander; Lieutenant General V. Samoylenko, chief of the district's military council and chief of its political directorate; Lieutenant General of Aviation D. Bobrov; Major General V. Chernykh; Colonel Ye. Zemskov; Senior Warrant Officer N. Igrunov; Sergeant S. Zaichko; Major A. Kozhevnikov; and others.

The main speaker and the speakers in the debate, assessing what has been achieved from the positions of the 27th CPSU Congress, noted that there is no visible desire to actively seek reserves in the activity of a number of communist leaders. The existing potential for achieving higher and more stable results in combat training and strengthening military discipline is not yet being utilized everywhere. Today enterprising and innovative work by leaders is more important than ever.

The following example was cited. Approximately 1 year ago the district's missile troops and artillery were headed by Major General V. Markeyev. The process of restructuring the style and methods of work in the units is linked with the name of this Communist. The result was that the troops subordinate to him have been successfully resolving tasks in carrying out field firing and missile launches.

The restructuring of the style of activity and methods of leadership must proceed from the district leadership level. Administrative components and party organizations are obliged to be the first to assert in the most resolute fashion a businesslike and combative mood at work, to find flexible and effective ways and means of monitoring, and to ensure that matters proceed better and successes become weightier. District leaders must take full responsibility for the results of work among the troops rather than referring to the shortcomings of subordinates.

Time dictates the need for serious restructuring in the work and style of the activity of the district's directorate and service headquarters. Specifically, it was noted at the meeting, this applies to the activity of Communists Major General A. Korkishko and Colonels V. Bondartsev and I. Taushanov. Communists at the directorates where they work must improve their organization in implementing leadership. It is necessary to assess the organization and results of combat training by more stringent criteria. The district's combat training directorate, headed by Major General V. Volkov, deputy chief for combat training, must assume a firm and principled stance on these questions. It is necessary to improve "average performers" and not allow units and subunits to tolerate mediocre results over the years. All exercises should engender new thoughts and ideas, lead to new solutions, and promote the development and mastery of more effective ways of conducting battles and operations.

For us, the meeting participants said, achieving acceleration means first and foremost ensuring improvements in the level of combat readiness, clear-cut regulation order, and an improvement in discipline and educational work. A great deal must be done here by primary party organizations. Improving their activeness and combativeness is the lever which will help to more rapidly break the power of inertia and create a shift in the minds, attitudes, and practical activity of cadres. But it must be recognized that some Communists exhibit complacency, lack of initiative, and a desire to create the semblance of well-being. The party aktiv meeting leveled this reproach at Colonels V. Kharkovskiy and Ye. Zemskov and Lieutenant Colonel V. Goryushkin. Their work often gambles on emergency methods. But the main thing — the example of organization and professionalism — is missing.

Ensuring that a Communist leader sets a moral example is among the primary tasks, the main speaker and other speakers stressed. It is an example to be followed by subordinates in everything, both in service and in behavior and relationships with everyone. Moral defects in the behavior of a Communist of any rank cannot be beyond criticism by the primary party organization. The moral health of the party collective and its high prestige are determined by this. This prestige and party principledness is clearly lacking among Communists at the republic military enlistment office in Lithuania and at the Tallinn Higher Military-Political Construction College, which has led to deviations from the demands of the CPSU Statutes on the part of certain communist leaders.

Time demands that Communists resolutely restructure all work to strengthen discipline and to instill strict regulation order. The position of Communists as active party fighters must be particularly to the fore here. This tenet encourages us to unswervingly fulfill the demands of military regulations, to approach people and find out how the personnel live, to promote their cohesion, and to encourage genuinely comradely relationships among servicemen.

Communists' struggle for firm discipline starts with personal example. Wherever a party member serves — in a subunit or a staff, at an institute or an enterprise — his duty is to strictly observe the norms of communist morality; to place social interests above personal interests; and to be modest, disciplined, and sensitive and attentive toward people.

Unfortunately, manifestations of coarseness, tactlessness, and a disdainful attitude toward people and their needs have not yet been eradicated from the party environment. There are also cases of window-dressing, overreporting, and abuses of service position. Each party organization must create an atmosphere in which guilty individuals can be discussed personally and in public in order to resolutely put a stop to any deviations from the norms of our life.

The party organizations of cadre organs must play an active role in implementing the restructuring that is needed today. In selecting and placing cadres in the district in recent years shortcomings have been permitted linked with a superficial study of officers' political and professional qualities in practical work. In a number of cases the practice was permitted of some not particularly deserving officers gaining rapid promotion, without even managing to get a feel for their jobs, while others were deliberately classed as unpromising. We cannot allow confidence in cadres to turn into lack of control or sensitivity to become total license. As in the entire party, publicity must be stepped up in resolving cadre questions, fuller account must be taken of the opinion of party organizations, and the practice of party character reports must be improved. Often these reports are rubber-stamped rather than written. That was how the party character reports for officers D. Andriyanov and A. Khristenko were "compiled." In them one sees the phrases: "active..., disciplined..., steadfast..., devoted..., able to..., skilled in..." A short time later they were expelled from the party for improper actions.

The meeting stressed that the worst enemy in party work is complacency and smugness. These are visible when the role of criticism and self-criticism is played down. Nobody can say that criticism and self-criticism do not exist in our work. But they are made excessively neat and tidy. Criticism often remains an unimplemented line in a stenographic report. Some 4 months have passed since the precongress report and election campaign, but most party committees and party bureaus of the Guards Motorized Rifle Proletarskaya and Moscow-Minsk Divisions have not yet started analyzing the progress of the fulfillment of the plan to implement the criticism and proposals stated at that time. In such cases the acuteness of the perception of criticism is lost and its meaning is overshadowed. This cannot be tolerated; criticism must actively serve our party cause.

An important factor in restructuring work, it was noted at the meeting, is to improve the professionalism and creative contributions of aktivs to the work of party organizations.

The party aktiv meeting showed that Communists with a sense of responsibility have joined in the rhythm of life and work set by the 27th CPSU Congress, are striving to implement its decisions, and are seeking new approaches in order to better resolve the tasks of strengthening military discipline and improving combat readiness.

Kurkotkin Addresses Conference on Finance Questions

[Unnamed own correspondent report: "Improving Financial Activity"]

[Text] A conference of the leading staff of the Army and Navy Financial Service devoted to the results of the service's work in the 11th 5-Year Plan and its tasks in light of the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress has been held at the M.V. Frunze Soviet Army Central House.

The meeting was opened by Marshal of the Soviet Union S. Kurkotkin, USSR deputy defense minister and chief of the USSR Armed Forces Rear Services. He noted that, thanks to the party's constant concern, the Soviet Armed Forces have everything they need to successfully resolve the tasks facing them.

A report was delivered by Colonel General V. Dutov, chief of the USSR Defense Ministry's Central Finance Directorate. He devoted particular attention to unutilized reserves for saving materials and funds and ways of strengthening financial discipline and ensuring the safekeeping of socialist property.

Taking part in the conference's work were V. Pavlov, USSR first deputy minister of finance; Army General Yu. Maksimov, commander in chief of the Strategic Missile Forces and USSR deputy defense minister; Marshal of Engineering Troops N. Shestopalov, USSR deputy defense minister for construction and billeting of troops; and senior officials from the CPSU Central Committee, the Soviet Army and Navy Main Political Directorate, and a number of ministries and departments.

SOVIET OFFICIALS CABLE U.S. OFFICIALS ON TEST BAN

Tolkunov, Voss Cable O'Neill

PM031312 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 2 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 4

[TASS headline: "Address by Soviet Parliamentarians"]

[Text] Comrades Talkunov and Voss, chairmen of the chambers of the USSR Supreme Soviet, have sent Thomas O'Neill, speaker of the House of Representatives of the U.S. Congress, a telegram. Despite the clearly expressed will of the peoples and their ardent desire to ensure stable peace on earth, the United States is continuing nuclear tests, says the telegram. This is taking place at a time when the USSR is strictly observing the unilaterally-declared moratorium.

In the interests of curbing the arms race and of disarmament, in the interests of freeing mankind completely from weapons of mass destruction, nuclear tests must be halted. The chairmen of the chambers have called on the speaker to use his high prestige and influence and prompt Congress into doing everything in its power so that the United States of America ends nuclear testing. The situation demands action without delay.

Deputies of the USSR Supreme Soviet Zhukov, Zagladin, Paton, and Tatarchuk, have addressed an appeal to a number of U.S. senators and congressmen to make their voices heard in defense of our children's future, a future free from the nightmarish threat of a nuclear apocalypse, to induce the U.S. Administration to end nuclear testing.

Wright Receives Message

LD030859 Moscow TASS in English 0845 GMT 3 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 3 TASS -- Boris Paton, a deputy of the USSR Supreme Soviet, has called on James Wright, a member of U.S. Congress, to show his weight to urge the U.S. Administration to end nuclear tests.

"The nuclear test at the proving ground in Nevada", says a telegram sent by the Soviet parliamentarian, "which pointedly ignored the urgent demands of international peace-loving public was conducted at a time when the Soviet Union once again reaffirmed its readiness to contribute to ridding mankind of weapons of mass destruction. We expect that the U.S. Administration's peaceable rhetoric will be followed at last by real steps to end nuclear explosions".

"It is my sincere hope that you will raise your voice in defence of a better future for our children, the future free from the nightmarish threat of nuclear apocalypse".

Zhukov Cables Hatfield

LD040801 Moscow TASS in English 0606 GMT 4 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 4 TASS -- Georgiy Zhukov, deputy of the USSR Supreme Soviet, has urged U.S. Senator Mark Hatfield to continue to insist that the Reagan administration immediately stop all the nuclear tests and resume talks on a general and complete nuclear weapon test ban.

He wrote in his telegram that he was very much indignant over the provocative actions of the U.S. Administration which, despite numerous appeals of the Soviet Union, other countries and the majority of U.S. congressmen had exploded a nuclear device.

"As members of our parliaments we cannot remain indifferent to the threat of the continuation of nuclear tests and the creation of new ever more destructive types of weapons".

De La Garza Receives Message

LD050715 Moscow TASS in English 0706 GMT 5 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 5 TASS -- Nikolay Tatarchuk, a member of the Supreme Soviet of the USSR, has sent a telegram to U.S. Congressman E. De La Garza.

"I cannot but express my indignation over the fact that, while the Soviet Union recently declared readiness not to conduct nuclear testing also after March 31 -- until the first nuclear blast in the United States, the Reagan administration has staged another nuclear explosion at the testing site in Nevada and announced plans for yet another such blast shortly," he wrote. Tatarchuk added: "Such actions by the Reagan administration cannot be summed up as anything other than provocative steps undermining the hopes of all nations for a world without wars and weapons."

"As your colleague," he wrote to De La Garza, "I call on you to use your authority and influence in U.S. Congress to impel the administration immediately to buckle down to accomplishing the task of ending all nuclear explosions as a first step to eliminating nuclear weapons."

APPEAL FOR U.S. TO JOIN MORATORIUM CONTINUES

Petrosyants Repeats Offer

LD072116 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1445 GMT 7 Apr 86

[From "The World Today" program presented by Aleksandr Zholkver]

[Text] Issues connected with curbing the arms race -- primarily nuclear -- are being discussed at the Geneva disarmament conference. Petrosyants, chairman of the USSR State Committee for Utilization of Atomic Energy, who spoke here, stressed that the USSR is ready to extend its moratorium on nuclear explosions if the United States will also not carry out nuclear tests.

Moratorium Gaining Support

PM071042 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 6 Apr 86 First Edition p 4

[Own correspondent Yu. Yakhontov dispatch: "Reagan Needs Tests"]

[Text] Bonn, 5 Apr -- The overwhelming majority of FRG newspapers have responded to the television address of M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, and to the proposals contained in that address. The Ruhr newspaper WESTDEUTSCHE ALLGEMEINE writes, for example:

"U.S. officials in the White House oversimplify the matter by just brushing aside M.S. Gorbachev's proposals with regard to ending tests. This is not the first time this dynamic new man in the Kremlin has put the Reagan administration in a difficult position with his initiatives on limiting the arms race. This was the case recently, for example, when M.S. Gorbachev proposed the phased destruction of all nuclear weapons by the year 2000. It took the White House a long time then to react to just part of that proposal concerning the elimination of medium-range missiles."

Western diplomats in Moscow call M.S. Gorbachev's new proposal "A very clever chess move." The idea that limiting the arms race must begin by ending nuclear weapon tests is acquiring more and more supporters in public circles.

Washington 'Ignoring' Appeals

LD071745 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1500 GMT 7 Apr 86

[Viktor Levin Commentary]

[Text] Originally it was being said in the United States that a new nuclear blast is to be conducted in the 3d week of April and a precise date, the 16th has been mentioned. But then talk started -- first it was mooted, then it became a rumor, and later this became a certainty -- that there is to be yet another blast at an earlier date. Now they have specified it, 8 April. The first hints of this explosion appeared at the beginning of last week, practically immediately after Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev's address in which he called on the United States to follow our example in halting nuclear explosions and to hold an immediate meeting with the U.S. President to work out an accord on this question.

By rejecting yet another of the Soviet Union's initiatives directed toward resolving the question of a total halt to nuclear weapons testing, the United States wasted no time in showing its nuclear muscles. One gets the impression that certain Washington circles are more than anything afraid of being suspected of being capable of renouncing militarist policies and are stubbornly demonstrating their reluctance to embark on totally freeing mankind from the threat of nuclear annihilation, given that the halting of tests is the first step on this road. Washington has been ignoring the Soviet Union's appeals, which have been voiced for almost 9 months, from which time we have unilaterally refrained from conducting nuclear blasts. Washington has been ignoring the forceful demands from international public opinion, including U.S. opinion, insisting that the USSR's appeal should be heeded, that blasts should be halted, and that talks should start on a total ban.

Criticism of the administration is being heard more and more widely today in the United States too. THE LOS ANGELES TIMES writes, and I quote, "It has to be admitted that the administration is not approaching the question of banning nuclear tests as a whole with the seriousness it deserves." To my mind, this may well be true in substance but it is too soft in form.

The administration's approach can fully and justifiably be described as provocative. For the nth time consecutively, we have again proposed an end to testing, with this question to be resolved at a Soviet-U.S. summit. They respond to us with an unscheduled explosion. In these conditions we shall have to resume our own testing, because we cannot neglect our own security. But that is not our choice. We are being forced into it by the United States. Our main intention -- and the Soviet Union has spoken firmly and authoritatively about this -- remains a desire to stop the nuclear arms race.

Monitoring Problems Refuted

PM070852 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 1 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 4

[TASS report under general headline "Urgent Measures Necessary"]

[Text] Leningrad -- Not every observatory watches the sky through the keen eyes of telescopes. There are also observatories whose attention is turned in the opposite direction. They constantly listen with sensitive ears to the earth's breathing. They are seismic stations whose instruments record the slightest movement in the bowels of the earth.

We have stations like these at different ends of our country. But the field of their "hearing" is considerably broader than its borders.

"Our observatory is one of the international centers registering seismic activity in the Arctic and Antarctic," V. Kochetov, chief of the "Pulkovo" seismic station of the USSR Academy of Sciences O. Yu. Schmidt Physics of the Earth Institute, says. "By observing manifestations of the subterranean elements in the earth's polar regions we can register with great accuracy the epicenters of tremors even in regions so distant from us. The absurdity of claims by Washington politicians that underground nuclear testing is impossible to monitor by national technical means is obvious to specialists. International procedure systems, proposals for which are contained in M.S. Gorbachev's statement on a program to eliminate nuclear arsenals by the year 2000, could be especially effective.

"The latest U.S. explosion of a large-yield nuclear device at a testing ground in Nevada is not only a blatant challenge to our country and our unilateral moratorium on nuclear testing, but also a challenge to all countries and peoples and the entire world community. The Reagan administration answered mankind's hopes of stopping the arms race with a 'nuclear spit in the eye.' Speaking on Soviet television, M.S. Gorbachev urged the American people and their government to actively help through practical action to ensure that a ban on nuclear explosions becomes fact.

"The recklessness and danger of using scientific and technical potential for military purposes and of pursuing a course aimed at gaining military and strategic superiority is particularly obvious to us scientists," V. Kochetov noted.

"The forces of science and technology must be oriented toward creativity and the good of every individual. Soviet scientists demand that all nuclear weapons tests be immediately stopped and outlawed."

U.S. CLAIMS ON TEST CURB BREACHES QUESTIONED

PM070840 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 4 Apr 86 First Edition p 5

[Own correspondent A. Tolkunov dispatch under the rubric "Rejoinder": "Feeling Depressed..."]

[Text] New York -- There is alarm in the White House. Do the Russians possess a new secret weapon? Is there new information about the increasing "Soviet threat"? Or perhaps Moscow is "not playing fair" at the arms control talks?

No, it is much worse. It appears that the Russians are not cheating. The point is that secret investigation data of a number of U.S. intelligence services have become known in Washington. They call in question the administration's previous "conclusions" that the Soviet Union is allegedly violating the Treaty on the Limitation of Underground Nuclear Weapon Tests, signed by our countries but, incidentally, not ratified by the U.S. Congress. Yet it is precisely these "conclusions" which provided one of the arguments for the administration's refusal to join the moratorium and much else.

This is why Washington administration staffers are in such a state now. The President has signed Directive 202 which demands that a report be submitted on how the new evaluation of information about Soviet tests will affect earlier U.S. claims that Moscow has violated its treaty obligations. The situation is indeed very tricky if even R. Batzel, the director of the Livermore Laboratory where new nuclear warheads are being developed, declares on the basis of received information that the Russians "have not been deceiving us."

And so they are arguing endlessly in the administration now whether or not to withdraw that accusation. The "hawks" through whose fault nuclear explosions continue to rock the Nevada desert are very loath to lose face. A "Solomonic solution" has been suggested by R. Perle, assistant secretary of defense, who proposed that the administration seal and suppress the compromising intelligence information. As if it had never existed, and have done with it.

WEINBERGER ARTICLE LAUDS 'BIG STICK' DOCTRINE

PM071038 Moscow KRASNAYA ZVEZDA in Russian 5 Apr 86 Second Edition p 5

[TASS report: "Washington's 'Four Pillars'"]

[Text] New York, 4 Apr -- U.S. Defense Secretary C. Weinberger has written a policy article for the journal FOREIGN AFFAIRS, which formulates the basic guidelines of U.S. military policy in the nineties.

Crediting the Reagan administration with "rebuilding U.S. military power" and stepping up the doctrine of nuclear "deterrence," the Pentagon chief stated that the administration's policy is built, as he put it, on "four pillars" -- the "Strategic Defense Initiative" (this is how Washington styles the program for the militarization of space -- TASS note) in conjunction with nuclear "deterrence," the use of military force in parallel with "deterrence" by conventional weapons, "a strategy for arms reduction and control," and "a strategy for rivalry."

The actual order in which Washington's objectives are listed clearly testifies that priority has been given to the position of strength policy, the stepping up of the arms race, and its extension to outer space. It is no accident that Weinberger proclaims: "Progress in the direction of creating [sozdaniye] an effective Strategic Defense Initiative must be achieved simultaneously with the maintenance of an effective offensive potential for deterrence."

This is essentilaly an admission that Washington's clumsy attempts to somehow justify the "star wars" program by references to its alleged "defensive nature" are nothing but a trick calculated to deceive the public in the United States and throughout the world, which is demanding increasingly resolutely that the dangerous plans to transform space into an arena of nuclear confrontation be abandoned.

The Pentagon chief is simultaneously and gradually preparing public opinion for the eventuality that the U.S. Administration may tear up the 1972 ABM Treaty, which is a barrier to the "star wars" program's implementation.

Weinberger admits in words that there can be no victor in a nuclear war and that it must not be fought. Nevertheless, the entire contents of the article, its spirit and orientation, the concept of nuclear "deterrence" it promotes, and the confirmation of the nuclear first strike doctrine indicate that this admission is merely for public consumption.

Touching upon the "strategy of arms reduction and control" and, in this connection, the Soviet-U.S. talks in this sphere, the secretary places emphasis on the fact that the United States "must conduct talks from positions of strength." "This is essentially the only way we can conduct effective talks," he stresses.

It is indicative that the article does not contain a single word about the large-scale initiative envisaging the total elimination of nuclear arms by the year 2000 put forward by the Soviet Union.

Going on the the "strategy of rivalry" (with the USSR -- TASS note), Weinberger urges the "introduction of new weapons systems or fundamental modification of existing ones." The objective of this program for accelerated rearmament is, as he himself admits, the attainment of "relative superiority" over the Soviet Union by the United States.

In conclusion, Weinberger nostalgically harks back to the times of President Theodore Roosevelt, who proclaimed the "big stick" doctrine. "We also must have a big stick," the Pentagon chief declares, as if ignorant of the changes that have occurred in the world since that time, of the irreversible change in the balance of forces.

MBFR DELEGATE ADDRESSES MOSCOW PRESS CONFERENCE

LD251823 Moscow TASS in English 1805 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 25 TASS -- "The stand that the USA and its allies in NATO have held throughout the latest round of the Vienna talks cannot be qualified as constructive". Valerian Mikhailov, ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary, head of the Soviet delegation at the Vienna talks on forces and armaments reduction in Central Europe, said this in the press centre of the USSR Foreign Ministry, addressing Soviet and foreign correspondents today. "Having formally accepted the scheme of initial arrangement proposed by socialist countries, the Western side, in reality, is stubbornly trying to adjust it to its previous obstructionist positions. If it alters anything in them at all, it is only in the direction of their toughening."

"The United States and its closest allies continue reducing to the minimum everything that could indeed carry the matters to a real lowering of the level of military confrontation. Alongside this they arbitrarily and unjustifiably manipulate with measures of verification and control, deliberately bringing them to unrealistic limits that are obviously unacceptable, and thus stalling the talks again".

"The Western side reduced to the minimum the volume of subsequent troop cutbacks", Valerian Mikhaylov siad. "And the West refuses categorically to reduce armaments, alongside forces. The West does not wish either that the obligation to freeze the levels of forces in Central Europe for three years simultaneously apply to armaments".

"As to verification and control, the NATO representatives simply lose all sense of proportion and reasonable realism. For instance, they insist on the exchange of information on the structure of troops down to a batallion and barracks and on the holding of 30 inspections a year for its verification, even though these demands are not at all commensurate either with the nature and content of planned agreement, or with real needs for the ensurance of its implementation, or with specific features of present-day military and political situation."

"Striving to base the talks in Vienna on a realistic and constructive foundation, the Warsaw Treaty member states, as is known, submitted on February 20 of this year their detailed draft 'agreement on the initial reduction of land forces and armaments by the Soviet Union and the United States with subsequently keeping from increasing the levels of forces and armaments and on related measures in Central Europe'", Valerian Mikhaylov said.

"The Warsaw Treaty countries' draft largely develops and specifies the proposals of socialist countries advanced earlier. The draft envisages new steps to meet Western partners halfway on such questions as the volume of initial cutbacks, the exchange in advance of the list of military units that are being cut back or withdrawn, the setting up of three or four permanent check points for the entry of troops into the cutback areas or their withdrawal out of those areas throughout the operation of the agreement, the exchange of information of the volumes of forces that are not to be built up, the possibilities for on-site verification upon a justifiable inquiry, the creation of the mechanism of consulations on the observance of the agreement."

BOGACHEV CONTRASTS CHEMICAL, NUCLEAR ARMS STANDS

LD041930 Moscow TASS in English 1836 GMT 4 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 4 TASS -- By TASS military writer Vladimir Bogachev.

United States representative Donald Lowitz, addressing the Geneva conference on disarmament, dramatically described to the delegates his "renewed hope", "rekindled optimism" and ultimately "disappointment" over the Soviet proposals for a comprehensive chemical weapons war.

The head of the American delegation claimed that the latest Soviet initiatives aimed to eliminate chemical weapons proved to be "insufficient", while the Soviet verification proposals were mere words.

For many years, the United States has refused to agree to a mutually acceptable accord banning chemical weapons, claiming that verification was absolutely necessary, but absolutely impossible. As a matter of fact, it denied the possibility of ending the race of chemical arms.

Later on, compelled to reckon with world public opinion, the U.S. Administration came up with statements expressing its sincere desire to work out a convention on the effective prohibition of the development, production and accumulation of chemical weapons and on their subsequent total destruction.

Nevertheless, American officials "argued" that before destroying chemical weapons, the United States had to build up its arsenals of toxic agents in order to create a stimulus for the Russians tc hold the talks.

The White House responded to the socialist countries' proposals for banning chemical weapons by new programmes of expanding the production of nerve gases and developing fundamentally new binary munitions.

The American side, at the talks in Geneva and other forums, always insisted on the issue of "on-site veification", apparently regarding the problem as a chance for justifying its own obstructionist stand with regard to chemical weapons. Washington's calculations collapsed after the publication of the latest Soviet initiatives.

The Soivet programme for banning chemical weapons provides, in particular, for the declaration by the sides of the location of enterprises producing toxic agents and for the termination of their production. It calls for beginning the elaboration of the procedures on destroying their production base and destroying, soon after the convention enters into force, the stockpiles of chemical weapons. All these measures would be carried out under strict international control, including international on-site verification.

The leaders of the USSR stress that control over compliance with a chemical weapons agreement is no problem for the Soviet Union. Highly assessing the latest Soviet initiatives, the London DAILY TELEGRAPH observed that never before for several decades had the chances for success at the talks been so good. That obviously worried American officials in Washington and the head of the American delegation at the Geneva conference on disarmament.

The U.S. Administration made it a rule lately to accuse the Soviet Union of the sins against peace itself was committing. Washington resorted to the same tactics during the debate on chemical weapons. The U.S. Administration is committed to intensive nuclear tests at a time when the Soviet Union has stuck to its unilateral moratorium on all nuclear blasts for eight months. This does not prevent Washington from blaming the Soviet Union for the absence of an accord banning nuclear explosions.

The United States openly violates the SALT-II Treaty and routinely describes it as a "pseudo arms control agreement". Hardly a day passes without the administration officials advancing absurd charges of non-compliance against the Soviet Union. The United States is preparing to deploy strike armaments, including nuclear weapons, in outer space, while seeking to place the responsibility for the militarization of space on the Soviet Union. Washington's propaganda tricks fully stem from the U.S. Administration's obstructionist position on the entire range of arms reduction and limitation problems.

'INTERNATIONAL SITUATION: QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS'

LD041358 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1615 GMT 3 Apr 86

["International Situation — Questions and Answers" program, presented by Vladimir Pashko, foreign political commentator of All-Union Radio; Vitaliy Yakovlevick Chukseyev, TASS chief editor of foreign news; Prof Bogdanov, deputy director of the USA and Canada Institute: and Sergey Pravdin, Konstantin Patsyuk, and Nikolay Agayants, international affairs jounalists]

[Excerpts] [Pashko] Recently, Secretary of State Shultz seemed to complain that the Soviets are conducting a propaganda campaign in order to put pressure on the United States and to force the White House to join in the moratorium on nuclear explosions. But the real point is that the people whose letters we receive are not forced to pick up their pens. They write what they think: Stop the arms race; get the disarmament process out of its deadlock -- these are the thoughts of our people.

This striving permeates the policy of our whole state. Just like all people, the USSR is concerned because, in such an important question of war and peace as the arms race and reducing nuclear weapons, there is virtually no progress. The Soviet leadership considers that some sort of major step is needed in order to get the talks on reducing nuclear weapons out of the deadlock as Comrade Gorbachev noted in his conversation with the chief editor of the Algerian weekly REVOLUTION AFRICAINE. We consider that an end to nuclear explosions and talks on concluding an agreement on banning them in all environments could be the first step in this direction. Asked whether dialogue is still possible between the USSR and the U.S. Adminstration, Comrade Gorbachev said: I would lay stress on the fact hat dialogue between the leaderships of the USSR and the U.S. Administration is essential. As the general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee said when he spoke on television on 29 March, he is ready to meet President Reagan in the very near future in order to reach agreement on this question.

What has been the reaction in the world, and primarily in the United States to the Soviet peace initiatives? I shall pass this question, which occurs in many of your letters, comrades, to Vitaliy Yakovlevich Chukseyev, TASS chief editor of foreign news.

[Chukseyev] Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev's television statement aroused vast interest throughout the world. For one's approach to the solution of such an important problem as stopping any further nuclear tests is in the final analysis the most convincing proof of the readiness of any state to take a real step toward getting the whole process of nuclear disarmament out of its present deadlock. That is why the moratorium on nuclear explosions, announced by the USSR, met with the warm approval of the world public in its time. Our country's subsequent initiatives in this sphere invariably aroused a wave of optimism and hope. The international community welcomes the USSR's efforts aimed at the successful achievement of accord on banning nuclear tests, UN Secretary General Perez de Cuellar stated in this connection. According to him, the Soviet initiative is a question of great importance.

However, as is now being noted by public figures and politicians and the press of various countries, the U.S. Administration has once again failed the test with regard to having a responsible attitude toward the fate of the world. U.S. President Reagan, who was on vacation in California at the time, made his reply through a White House representative literally an hour after news agencies reported the new Soviet proposal. As is known, this reply was unfortunately negative. Moreover just as in previous cases, the administration did not bother to seek any weighty arguments.

The United States needs nuclear tests, the White House representative stated, to ensure the further reliability, security, and effectiveness of our nuclear deterrent potential. This categorical "no" was accompanied by verbal trumpery about the U.S. striving for the total elimination of nuclear weapons.

The U.S. refusal to attend summit talks in Europe to discuss this question on the pretext that such a summit meeting should embrace the whole complex of problems in relations between the two countries sounded completely unconvincing.

U.S. observers very clearly reveal the reasons for the White House's obstructionist position. An NBC television correspondent reported in this connection: According to an administration representative, the United States still has to test warheads for the Midgetman and MX missiles and also components of the star wars system. It may be recalled that these are ballistic missiles, that is, first-strike weapons. In other words, the administration is being guided in its actions not by a striving to eliminate nuclear weapons, but it is trying under cover of talk about the need for conducting so-called quiet diplomacy to gain time and to try to attain military superiority.

On the same day, Regan, White House chief of staff, held a press conference in Santa Barbara, California, during which he was asked whether there was any change in the U.S. plans to hold a routine nuclear explosion in the Nevada desert in mid-April. "No," came the emphatically defiant reply. See what a forceful attitude the White House has toward tackling a very important question of the present day!

However, the stance of the present administration and the opinions of the U.S. public should not be equated. It may be recalled that a few days ago more than 60 members of the House of Representatives and the Senate sent a letter to Reagan calling on him to clease nuclear blasts. According to THE NEW YORK TIMES there is also on Capitol Hill a considerable group of legislators who think that there should be a freeze on finance allocated for nuclear tests while the USSR adheres to its moratorium. This is a reflection of the moods of millions of Americans, the overwhelming majority of whom during recent opinion polls have invariably come out in favor of the Soviet moratorium and have supported the idea of eliminating all nuclear arsenals on earth by the year 2000.

Here is the opinion of Paul Warnke, the eminent U.S military specialist and former chief of the U.S. delegation at the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks: I believe that the administration is making a very serious mistake; I believe that a buildup of nuclear weapons by the USSR and the United States will undermine our security.

What is now behind the administration's stubborn efforts to cloud the international situation, to wreck the process of normalizing it? In this respect, the opinion of well-known NEW YORK TIMES observer Flora Lewis, which is shared by many other journalists, is interesting. Here is what she wrote: Reagan deemed it necessary to compensate his supporters on the right for making conciliatory statements at the Geneva summit meeting.

Lewis adds: The arrogant refusal to cease nuclear explosions and to reach agreement on strict measures to verify the observation of such a moratorium is only one of the links in Washington's hostile campaign with regard to Moscow. The other acts include sending U.S. naval ships to the USSR's Black Sea coast, the decision to reduce the number of Soviet officials at the United Nations, and provocative actions in various regions. In Flora Lewis' opinion these measures put the United States in a foolish position and create the impression that the United States is unsure of its means and ends regarding other countries. In politics, it is much wiser to think first and only then to undertake something, she concludes.

Not only U.S. newspapers are coming to such conclusions that are unflattering to the Reagan administration, but also the press of its allies in Western Europe. Even though the leaders of Britain and the FRG and a number of other countries that have linked themselves firmly to the U.S. militaristic course have preferred to limit themselves to keeping quiet about Washington's behavior on the question of ceasing nuclear tests, press commentaries quite eloquently show the real moods of the West European public.

In these commentaries the U.S. stake on the nuclear arms race is invariably contrasted with the constructive policy of our country which is in accord with the interests of all people. As the FINANCIAL TIMES, the newspaper of Britain's business circles which can scarcely be suspected of sympathy for our country, wrote, it remains a fact that the U.S. Administration shows very little interest in rapid progress toward banning nuclear explosions. Insofar as the USSR has unilaterally been observing a moratorium on nuclear explosions since last summer, the appeal from the Soviet leader to hold immediate talks on banning nuclear tests is doubly noble, in the opinion of the newspaper.

The new Soviet proposal has become for the shole world yet another convincing proof of the USSR's consistent course of disarmament and detente, its resolve to try to achieve a reduction in the threat of nuclear war. In this millions of people of the world see a real possibility of averting a thermonuclear catastrophe. That is why they demand that Washington display goodwill not in words but in deeds, and show a responsible approach to the very important problem of the modern day.

[Pashko] Thank you, Vitaliy Yakovlevich.

Ilya Mikhaylovich Shumakov from Moscow writes: Please explain what is meant by gunboat diplomacy. The meaning of the expression gunboat diplomacy is clear. We use this expression to describe the imperialist policy of crude pressure with the use of miltiary force or the threat of using it. Such diplomacy is directly connected with the policy of neoglobalism which is now being conducted by the United States. This course is sharply condemned by the Soviet people.

Parfiriy Timofeyevich Domnin, an inhabitant of Insar, Mordovian ASSR, writes that the U.S. Administration readily affords aid worth many millions to various kinds of counterrevolutionary groups in Afghanistan, Angola, Nicaragua, and Cambodia. Surely they know that they are throwing away money? History gets its own way, just the same. The letter writer asks, what is feeding this policy?

Today, comrades, Dr Prof Bogdanov, deputy director of the USA and Canada Institute of the USSR Academy of Sciences, is taking part in our program. Over to you, Radomir Georgiyevich:

[Bogdanov] It seems to me that our esteemed listener's question is very timely. It is very topical and it is foumulated very much to the point. Indeed many people in the world, including in our country, in the Soviet Union, are concerned by the question: What is happening today to the policy of the United States? The novelty lies in the fact -- and naturally I am saying novelty in inverted commas -- that U.S. policy in recent times has become exclusively irresponsible. It has become exclusively provocative, and I would say adventruistic, adventuristic in the sense that it places many situations which have arisen in the world on the verge of very heated situations, very confrontational ones.

I want to remind our listeners that on 14 March, the U.S. President addressed a message to Congress in which he formulated this very Reagan doctrine, or doctrine of neoglobalism, or, if you wish, the doctrine of conflicts of low intensity.

This is a fairly extensive message, a fairly verbose message, but one main idea is formulated in it: that beginning from that moment, from the moment of submitting that message to Congress, the United States began transferring the most active and unconcealed actions in the struggle for restoring so-called democracy. It is switching to open support for all counterrevolutionary and all opposition forces that are waging a struggle against lawful regimes wherever they might be.

Globalism in this sense consists of the fact that the United States is switching to support, open support, including armed, financial and all kinds of other support, if you like, on a world scale. Wherever the counterrevolution is acting against lawful forces, wherever the counterrevolution is waging an armed struggle against regimes established by the people, it is there that the arm of U.S. assistance extends, it is there that U.S. money is sent, and it is there that U.S. weapons are sent. In this sense it is global.

Why is it called neo, that is, a doctrine of new globalism? The fact is that this U.S. policy was to this or that extent characteristic of all U.S. administrations in the postwar period. The matter lay only in how intensively U.S. administrations interfered in internal local conflicts. In this case we are talking, if you like, about unprecedented interference both in volume and, if you wish, in quality.

Well, suffice it to say that the U.S. Administration's assistance to Nicaraguan counterrevolutionary forces has today already increased from some tens of millions of dollars to $100 million. If they also began assistance to the dushmans, counterrevolutionaries in Afghanistan, in tens of millions of dollars, then today the question is about the fact that assistance is already being given at the rate of many hundreds of millions of dollars. According to certain data, this assistance has reached $500 million. And what is qualitatively new?

What is qualitatively new is that a decision has been made to deliver the latest U.S. weaponry to rebels in Nicaragua, Afghanistan, and Angola, which was not done before. The matter is not only about helping with money, about delivering new weapons; the matter concerns direct military acts. In this connection I would like to remind our listeners about the latest events in the Mediterranean. The latest events are connected with the terrorist act by the United States against the Libyan Republic.

Against the Libyan Republic there was a mobilization of a piratical -- I cannot find another word for it, it is difficult to categorize this -- squadrons and armadas. There was only one aim: to provoke so-called Libyan resistance; to neutralize Libya with all this U.S. might; and to demonstrate one thing to the whole world, whoever disagrees with U.S. policy, whoever refuses to follow its lead, receives the punishment of U.S. imperialism.

It has to be said that Americans, it seems to me, did not succeed this time in fulfilling all the tasks they had set themselves. You see, they planned to go away, to break off these provocative maneuvers and basically combat actions, on 1 April, but they did this significantly earlier and ended them on Thursday. This is a very important question: What happened? Why did they end the actions earlier? Here an interesting situation arises. Threats, pressure on Libya, and finally a direct terrorist act, did not yield the result expected by the United States. Instead of isolating Libya, they caused all Arab countries to rally behind Libya with their support. Instead of humiliating and compromising the Libyan leadership, as they had calculated, the effect was utterly different.

Finally, inside the United States itself a definite movement also arose within Congress that began to ask the question: Is not this administration violating the own laws of the United States? For example, the well-known 1973 resolution on the President's military rights?

This administration unleashed military actions against Libya without having obtained U.S. congressional consent for this. In a word, the impression is that the action did not produce the desired results.

I would like to add another fact: Mediterranean states including Italy displayed very great anxiety over U.S. actions in the Mediterranean. Incidentally, Italy is one of the allies, one of the main U.S. allies in NATO, but its anxiety is fully understandable. A hotbed of war fanned by the Americans took shape in the Mediterranean with totally unpredictable consequences, and all Mediterranean states could have found themselves drawn into this war. This caused anxiety. Italian Prime Minister Craxi made several statements warning the Americans against stirring up a conflict against Libya. Thus there was a certain isolation of the United States when it was forced to halt aggressive actions against Libya, having met incidentally with quite active reistance from that country, and to draw off its forces, its fleet, from the Gulf of Sidra. Here is, so to speak, a concrete expression of this doctrine of neoglobalism.

It must be said that the U.S. Administration is trying to create the impression that this doctrine of neoglobalism or the Reagan doctrine has so-called widespread support in the United States. In actual fact it is not at all the case. I believe that our listeners will be interested to know that for example last December, Republican specialists in public opinion polls conducted a poll among the political elite on their attitude toward the Reagan doctrine, and it proved that the arming of freedom fighters -- that is how this doctrine is expressed -- is at the very end of the list of national problems that interest the majority of American people. Heading this list of problems that truly worry Americans are the problems of unemployment, arms control, inflation, the deficit, national security in the true sense of the word, and tax reform.

Knowledgeable Americans who follow the administration's policy point to the fact that the most staunch supporter of this doctrine is the U.S. President himself. These U.S. experts in disclosing the true designs of the latest U.S. doctrines, the doctrine of neoglobalism, say that the real value, in inverted commas, of this policy consists of the fact that it makes it possible to wear the Russians out. Others view the stirring up of conflicts in the Third World, and this is indeed taking place, as some kind of trump cards at the U.S.-Soviet talks.

The United States, unfortunately, has lost a sense of reality. It has lost real contact with the surrounding world, and the loss of this contact is expressed in the fact that the U.S. Administration first and foremost does not feel how the estrangement between itself and the rest of the world is growing. (Sanford Anga), a well-known American political scientist, wrote in a recently published research work devoted to this problem of alienation: The United States today has found itself in greater solitude and isolation than could be predicted by the most cynical and pessimistic observers at the time when U.S. influence peaked after the war. One of the reasons for that, (Anga) believes, is the Americans overestimate themselves and their potential. Americans share a groundless belief that their country is the best country in the world. This faith is inculcated in them from the very 1st day of their studies in school, and every political figure who questions this fundamental truism is branded an apostate. The negative side of this position is in the fact that we believe in our infallibility. Such is the conclusion, and in my view, a very just one, of the well-known American political scientist.

It must be said that people in the Soviet Union are well aware of what is going on. We do not dramatize the situation; we draw absolutely sober conclusions out of it; we understand that conflicts do occur; we aspire to resolve these conflicts; and we are prepared to discuss ways of resolving these conflicts with the U.S. side, but only on one condition: without interference in internal affairs, without imposing one's hegemonist viewpoint or one's imperial decisions on the regions experiencing conflict situations.

U.S., SOVIET MEDITERRANEAN POLICIES DISCUSSED

PM071256 Moscow SOVETSKAYA ROSSIYA in Russian 5 Apr 86 First Edition p 1

[Eduard Kovalev "International Review": "Aircraft Carrier Diplomacy"]

[Excerpt] The U.S. military's piratical actions and the imperial brigandage in the waters of the Gulf of Sidra were condemned not only by the Soviet Union and the socialist community countries, but by the governments of many states, including a number of NATO members. Arab countries and the powerful Nonaligned Movement declared their solidarity with Libya. The Arab League Council, which was meeting at foreign minister level in Tunis, unanimously demanded an end to U.S. aggression. The U.S. Administration found itself in a situation very much like international isolation. The Pentagon had to finish its military maneuvers off the Libyan coast earlier than planned.

The most acute phase of the crisis has passed, but the situation remains unstable. The dark shadow of U.S. aircraft carriers with nuclear weapons on board still looms over the Mediterranean. In these conditions, the Soviet Union represents the hope of peace. The concepts of an all-embracing system of international security was put forward at the 27th CPSU Congress and its fundamental principles were formulated. The Soviet Union's recent proposals on turning the Mediterranean into a zone of stable peace and cooperation, announced by M.S. Gorbachev last week, were in accord with these principles.

While leaving intact our well-known proposals on the extension of coordinated confidence-building measures to the region, the reduction of armed forces, the withdrawal from the Mediterranean of ships carrying nuclear weapons, the nondeployment of nuclear weapons on the territory of Mediterranean countries, and the adoption by nuclear powers of a pledge not to use those weapons against any Mediterranean country that does not permit deployment, we are prepared to go even further. As far as the Soviet Union is concerned, there is basically no need for its Navy to be in the Mediterranean on a permanent basis. We are forced to have our ships there for one reason alone -- the U.S. 6th Fleet is in the region in direct proximity to our borders, equipped with nuclear missiles and posing a threat to the security of the USSR, its allies and friends. So if the United States, situated thousands and thousands of miles away from the Mediterranean, were to withdraw its fleet, the Soviet Union would do likewise. We are prepared to enter into talks on this question forthwith. It is the USSR's view that at the first stage of the talks no restrictions should be placed on the naval activity and naval armaments of the Mediterranean littoral states. Future steps on strengthening security in the region could be determined taking into account the Soviet proposals contained in the 15 January 1986 statement.

The Soviet Union also appreciates the actions of the Mediterranean nonaligned countries which are preparing for their second conference in Malta this year. It is the Soviet Union's view that a broader conference, along the lines of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, would play a useful part in the normalization of the Mediterranean situation. The United States and other interested countries could participate in the forum, along with the Mediterranean states and states adjoining the region.

Unfortunately, it must be noted that the United States and some other Western powers rejected the Soviet proposals out of hand. This kind of reaction by no means contributes to a constructive search for mutually acceptable solutions. But people of goodwill enthusiastically welcomed the Soviet initiatives. This shows that there is an increasing realization of the organic connection between solving problems of strengthening international security and ensuring safe, confident, and independent development for the liberated countries.

SOVIET ACADEMICIANS, CHERVOV DISCUSS WORLD ISSUES

LD220255 Prague Domestic Service in Czech 1630 GMT 21 Mar 86

[Report on interview with USSR Academicians Georgiy Arbatov, Yevgeniy Velikhov, Yevgeniy Primakov; and Colonel General Nikolay Chervov; by Moscow correspondent Stefan Babiak; academicians and Chervov in Russian fading to superimposed Czech translation -- segment from the "Peoples and the World" program, date not given; recorded]

[Text] [Babiak] The Russian writer Leo Tolstoy could have hardly imagined that the title of his novel "War and Peace" would in 100 years become a dilemma of civilization, that a time would come when nations would have to eliminate war from their life in order to preserve it. People are asking more and more frequently and with an ever greater urgency: Is it possible to find in today's turbulent world full of contradictions an effective way of eliminating the threat of nuclear war, of lessening tension caused by military confrontation, and of making our world a more secure place for all? The answer to these questions was given by the Soviet Communists at the recent 27th CPSU Congress. From their platform, Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, put forth a proposal for broad international cooperation which would lead to the building of a comprehensive system of international security.

I invited leading Soviet experts on political, economic, humanitarian, and military questions to discuss this far-reaching proposal. I was interested first of all to know how the concept of general international security has come about and what are its fundamental elements. Academician Arbatov gave me the following reply:

[Arbatov] On 3 October 1985, in Paris, Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev observed, among other things, that human thinking has that regrettable characteristic: It lags behind a rapidly changing reality. He followed up on this observation by saying that we in the Soviet Union have begun to put many traditional deep-rooted things into full harmony with the new realities, and this also applies to the military and political spheres. To put it another way, he had in mind the working out of a new concept of international security, new approaches to it.

At the congress, Comrade Gorbachev explained from what we had proceeded when we set ourselves this objective. He talked above all about the fact that now in our era it is not possible to ensure reliable security merely by military-technical means of defense. Security has become a political problem and can only be ensured by political means. This has been manifested distinctly in connection with the appearance of a new weapon which transformed military power into a real boomerang, a nuclear boomerang, crushing the one using it with the same effectiveness as his adversary.

Second, in working out this new concept we proceeded from the premise that security cannot be achieved on account or to the detriment of the other side. Today we can have either security or the total lack of security only together, whether we talk about the Soviet Union or the United States -- and in a broader viewpoint security can only be general, it can only be security for all.

We proceeded from the premise that such an approach corresponds not only to our, but also to U.S. interests; besides, the United States is not the whole world. Our approach to security corresponds in the true sense of the word to the interest of the entire world community.

And there is another element to our approach, lying in the fact that the world is in the process of rapid change. Maintaining the status quo is not possible; no one can guarantee it -- this complicates things, but it is a reality with which we have to reckon. In the world there are dozens of states that on the whole have their our legitimate interests. But all of them -- regardless of the sharp contradictions we know about -- have to master the science and art of peaceful coexistence, the science and art of conducting themselves on the world arena with restraint and consideration and in a civilized manner; that is, in accordance with the conditions of the correct international coexistence and cooperation. I quoted Comrade Gorbachev. Briefly speaking, the contemporary world has become too small and fragile for power politics. We have drawn the conclusion from this, that if we are to save the world and provide reliable guarantees of survival and security, resolutely once and for all we have to put an end to the manner of thinking and conduct which for centuries regarded wars as acceptable and permissible; that goes too for military conflicts and the arms race.

In this connection the report to the Congress stressed the need to lay the foundation for an all-embracing system of security. I am not going to discuss the individual items. It is a known fact that there were a whole number of problems from the military; political; and economic spheres, including - economic security for all; as well as from the humanitarian sphere. This included the question of cultural cooperation; of purging the spiritual atmosphere of all dangerous elements; problems of the observation of human rights; the area of broad cooperation in culture, science, and art and the like — this all, naturally, has not been put forward as an ultimatum but as a basis for further talks, as a framework for a dialogue.

[Babiak] The basis of the program for strengthening security and reducing international tension is averting the threat of space militarization. The prevention of weapon deployments in space must be the first step taken jointly by the Soviet Union and the United States. Why is such exceptional importance being attached to this very problem? Academician Yevgeniy Velikhov has this to say:

[Velikhov] Several factors exist here. The first is allegedly research, which essentially is the entire star wars program. This research in the present stage and, therefore, more so in the near future, violates the agreements concluded between the Soviet Union and the United States in 1972, when the treaty on the limitation of antimissile defenses was signed. That treaty forms the basis of the entire arms control process and the limitation of such weapons. This is why as soon as that treaty is violated, to which the mentioned research leads, we will find ourselves in a situation when this entire process will begin to crumble.

The second factor lies in the fact that the appearance of arms in space signifies a critical element, whatever arms they may be. There presently exists a certain basic purity of space. There are now no weapons in space with which it would be possible to attack other targets in space, or on the ground, or air, or anywhere else. The appearance of weapons in space will mean a fundamental change. There is still time to talk today on prohibiting such a thing forever. Later it would, however, be necessary to begin talks on various control measures and agreements that are not talks as a rule, as we know from the experiences with nuclear weapons. [as heard]

There also is a third factor, which is the question of whether a situation may arise at any time when arms developed in accordance with the U.S. Strategic Defense Initiative program will change the balance of strategic forces. It is necessary to note that here we have two problems. One is whether such a space military unit can make a certain country invulnerable. Careful scientific research has been carried out in the Soviet Union and the world in general in this connection. And on this basis, the Political Report, at the congress and the resolution thereon, says: The character of contemporary weapons does not give any single state the hope that it can defend itself solely by military-technical means, by creating even the most powerful defense. This is a fundamental question, a military question. It is not a question about which one can conduct ideological disputes.

From the other side, naturally, the creation of such a strong military formation can substantially worsen the situation regarding the strategic balance, render it more unstable, although I believe one should examine things in mutual connections and take both the first-strike space and ground forces into consideration. Even parity ceases to be a factor of military-political deterrence in the nuclear age. This is a very important factor. Not only superiority of which the U.S. Administration talks but even parity can cease to be a factor of military-political deterrence. That is why only one thing can guarantee mankind's survival today: namely, a policy of peaceful coexistence and of nuclear disarmament.

[Babiak] The problems of regional conflicts are placed into the forefront increasingly frequently in the United States. Their significance is often even placed ahead of global military-strategic questions. How is the resolution of regional conflicts reflected in the Soviet concept of worldwide security? Academician Yevgeniy Primakov gave the following answer:

[Primakov] I would dare assert that the questions of settling regional conflicts have an important place in the Soviet concept of international security. We are against regional conflicts being considered in a sphere in which the settlement of such conflicts comes into the forefront and pushes back the questions of reducing armaments and eliminating all nuclear weapons. We have gained the impression that the U.S. side tried to put regional conflicts in the forefront in this way, which would have thwarted discussions on the issues concerning the reduction of armaments. At the same time, I would like to say that arms reduction undoubtedly must generate a more favorable situation for resolving all conflicts. If I am to touch on the Soviet Union's conceptual approach, I would like to draw attention to the notion Mikhail Gorbachev already stressed in Geneva and about which he spoke subsequently as being an exceptionally important fundamental factor. Regional conflicts cannot be considered from the angle of Soviet-U.S. relations or Soviet-U.S. confrontation. Conflicts at the regional level overwhelmingly arise as a consequence of certain objective socioeconomic and political processes in the relevant areas, which cannot be ignored on any account.

The U.S. stand from this viewpoint, considering all conflict situations so to speak through the spectacles of Soviet-U.S. relations, appears as a continuation of the theory applied by former United States Secretary of State John Foster Dulles. He used to say that if a situation arises in the world which runs counter to U.S. interests, a void is formed which the United States itself must necessarily fill, although it must reckon in doing so with conflict situations in relation to the Soviet Union. We reject such approaches. The Soviet Union is willing to engage in consultations, in joint or parallel actions aimed at eliminating conflict situations throughout the world. We also have acted in a similar way with the Americans or have begun to act on certain issues. At the same time, of course, I must say that the United States has adopted a different stance. It attempts to isolate the Soviet Union in a number of instances from active participation in political processes and the settlement of such conflicts.

This line is notably manifest in the Middle East. Thus, a situation has arisen which is truly extremely dangerous for the whole world, when the states directly engaged in the conflict are on the threshold of owning nuclear weapons or, according to some views, have now gone beyond this threshold. This has given rise to a fundamentally new situation in which a nuclear conflict may begin at the local level but can drag in the whole world.

The Soviet Union has consistently and continues to assert the policy of nuclear nonproliferation. It has such a situation in mind when it insists upon the resolution of regional conflicts, on the use of such means that may bring about political settlements of all existing international conflicts.

[Babiak] The situation in the developing countries, that are unable to give the necessary dynamics to their economic development, are inundated with debts, cannot rid themselves of their dependence on their former colonial ruling countries, has become an exceptionally serious problem in world politics. The catastrophic picture of their poverty, hunger, illiteracy, and epidemics stem from this. What kind of prospect does the Soviet Union envisage for the solution of these questions? How does its new concept of international security provide for such areas as the Asian Continent and the Pacific? Academician Arbatov reflected for a while and then said the following:

[Arbatov] I believe this was the first time that the Political Report at the congress began by summing up the problems of this enormously complicated world, full of sharp contradictions and dangers but simultaneously a mutually dependent world that is linked together. We also find views reflecting on understanding of the changes taking place in the world, including that the United States, despite its importance, despite its size and strength does not represent the whole world and does not have either the reason or right to determine the destiny of anyone, including us, and that it also must join actively in the resolution of all these matters. We regard as abnormal when other countries, under any pretext, avoid actively participating in the resolution of the destinies of our world. No one can stay on the sidelines in the nuclear age.

We also find in the Political Report observations on the growing role of the Asian and Pacific areas. I regard as equally important the problems of the developing countries, where the majority of mankind lives in desperate conditions. The situation is continually worsening because they have to pay partially for the luxuries and unnecessary expenditures in the developing countries, above all in the United States, including the feverish arms buildup.

Mechanisms were found to transfer these burdens upon the poorest ones, to compel them to pay for the (?privileges) of the rich. We also expect a dialogue in the Pacific area. We view the situation in that area as abnormal in comparison with Europe. The fact is that two enormous military camps stand against each other in Europe. Never before in world history has such an accumulation of arms by two opposing sides existed as is the case in Europe today. This is a great danger. But, nonetheless, at least it is balanced to a certain extent by the fact that a developed infrastructure of bilateral and multilateral relations, talks and agreements is at our disposal in Europe.

In Asia and in the Pacific we now see an intensifying arms race, a rapid accumulation of arms, and an emergence of many conflict situations, while a simultaneous similar infrastructure of relations does not exist there. We believe this shortcoming must be very rapidly and energetically eliminated. We have not found any great response thus far but I believe the situation has begun to change now. We proposed this when we talked of a system of collective security in Asia. There was also talk about it at the congress and I believe Soviet policy will be generating a great deal of activity in this direction as was (?indicated) recently. Dialogue with Japan has been restored and broadened. Our relations with China, too, have moved from the point on which they were stuck. I believe we will witness very positive and constructive relations.

[Babiak] Up to now we have been talking primarily about the prerequisites of the creation of pillars of security, about the ways of reducing the intolerably high level of tension, of how to stop the arms race and give the world the opportunity to breath more freely. Of course, this process is simultaneously creating a scope for broad international cooperation. Which areas of cooperation do you regard as the most attractive? I put this question to Academician Yevgeniy Velikhov.

[Velikhov] I would like to concentrate your attention above all on the very specific and respectable proposal which Mikhail Gorbachev put forward in Paris. I have in mind that further joint steps be taken to master a directed thermonuclear synthesis on the basis of the Soviet concept of thermonuclear reactor, Tokamak. At issue is one of the most important directions in energy sources in the 21st century in which the use of thermonuclear synthesis is in the whole world's interest. This issue was raised at the congress in the Political Report and in a number of other speeches on cooperation on an international scale. This concerns in particular environmental pollution, which transcends all national borders today. Such problems as the exploration of world oceans now exist. We regularly participate in discussions on it, but we could achieve far more here. Furthermore, there is the study of the earth's structure and various projects connected with the deeper study of the earth's crust. I would like to draw attention here in particular to the very important project, which we could develop jointly and which concerns our planet and involves forecasting natural disasters, above all earthquakes. These disasters threaten a whole number of population centers in both the Soviet Union, Japan and the United States, specifically in California. At the same time deeper knowledge of these processes can, as experience confirms, lessen human and material losses. I believe, therefore, that excellent opportunities are offering themselves now for cooperation not only in conquering space but for a number of specific projects enabling cooperation in conquering the earth and in improving human life on our planet.

[Babiak] The world has appreciated the proposal of a comprehensive system of international security as a realistic, profoundly thought-out, generally acceptable program of political actions. The U.S. attitude has caused disappointment. I was interested to learn how Washington's attitude toward the questions of key disarmament talks is assessed by a military expert. I asked Col Gen Nikolay Chervov about this.

[Chervov] We have not yet received any compromise steps from the United States and NATO, steps that would come some way toward our position. The U.S. leadership continues to think in the categories prevailing in the fifties. It continues to hope it will achieve military superiority and create an invulnerable United States. Star wars, military doctrines and strategies, the concept of deterrence or sabre-rattling -- this is, in effect, the concept of force, the concept of fear, an attempt to interfere in other states' internal affairs. The U.S. President's speech of 26 February was a very telling testimony of that concept's nature. We do not see any steps at the nuclear and space arms talks that constitutes the U.S. Government's reply to our initiative. I can tell you with the full responsibility that the U.S. position in all aspects has not undergone even the smallest change in comparison with 1981, when the talks on strategic arms and on medium-range nuclear missiles started. Regarding medium-range missiles, the self-same notorious zero option, which apparently is known to everyone, is once again put forward and repeated. The difference only rests in that this zero option is now divided into three stages and spread over a 3-year period. The essence is, of course, still the same: specifically, to disarm the Soviet Union and win one-sided advantages.

The U.S. Government officially refused to halt nuclear tests. It refused to join the Soviet moratorium, referring to the fact that its doctrine and strategy is based upon nuclear deterrence. And so long as this doctrine is in force, nuclear tests are essential. Weinberger went even further, directly declaring that the United States will continue nuclear testing as long as nuclear weapons exist, and, as he said, they will exist for a very long time.

Washington also has not accepted another step forward taken by the Soviet Union: namely, the pledge not to continue nuclear testing even after 31 March, up to the first nuclear test carried out by the United States. As President Reagan announced, another U.S. nuclear test is being prepared for the 3d weekend of April. Thus the Americans are maintaining an absurd position. One cannot assess it in any other way but as the continuation of the feverish arms buildup. We do not intend to stand idly by. As the CPSU Central Committee general secretary declared at the 27th congress, the Soviet Union continues with the intention of seeking together with the United States points of contact in the interest of finally succeeding in halting the arms race on earth, not allowing it to enter space at all, and seeking common stands to bring about a reduction in international tension.

[Babiak] It is characteristic that the Soviet Union has not addressed its proposal of a comprehensive system of international security to governments alone, but that it has submitted it to all nations for examination, because nations can and must say their fundamental word, express their will with which the politicians will have to reckon. The proposals Mikhail Gorbachev has put forward augment the USSR's resolute foreign-political steps. It is clear today what must be done to bring about the solution of cardinal world problems. From here hopes also spring, which Academician Georgiy Arbatov summed up at the end of our interview:

[Arbatov] We naturally can link the hopes above all with the fact that this truly is a platform corresponding not only to our but also to the U.S. interests. If we proposed something running counter to U.S. interests, the interests of the NATO member-states, the interests of other countries, it would naturally be a naive proposal and would have no prospects. Instead, our proposal also expresses the other side's most profound and most fundamental interests.

Second, politics is, and always has been, an art of the possible. We have to rely on the political process in this sense. A discussion or dialogue on these issues has totally ceased for a long time. Now, in fact, during the past 6 months, or a bit longer, the discussion and dialogue are being reestablished. They have been reestablished in the West and this also applies to the United States. Where will it lead? The Soviet Union in any case sees its objective as giving truth a chance. Truth is essential, otherwise we would reach irrational attitudes. The U.S. President recognizes that nuclear war cannot be waged and that it cannot be won; however, he has simultaneously asked for a record budget for new nuclear weapons, for a further feverish arms buildup. Taken generally, it is not possible today to conduct such a policy unless one succeeds in deceiving people. True, discussion casts light on these matters. Discussion and being informed are the essential weapons in the struggle against the feverish arms buildup, against militarism, against all these threats. This has something to do with the old Marxist tradition, which requires that international problems be submitted to the public for its judgment. Soviet power, after all, began its foreign policy by this, by the decree of peace. I believe this policy has its very successful continuation in the present time in the form of the latest Soviet initiative of which you are aware.

U.S. MISSILE DELIVERIES TO UNITA, AFGHAN REBELS DECRIED

LD062053 Moscow TASS in English 2045 GMT 6 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 6 TASS -- TASS political news analyst Sergey Kulik writes:

While some sober-minded U.S. congressmen tried to block the delivery of modern U.S. armaments to UNITA [National Union for the Total Independence of Angola] terrorists, the administration, by-passing the Congress and without much noise, managed to deliver to the anti-Angolan gangs many "Stinger" missiles which are considered to be the most sophisticated weapons in the arsenal of the U.S. anti-aircraft defense force.

Reporting this fact, the British newspaper "OBSERVER" writes that the granting of those missiles to the anti-Angolan counterrevolutionaries exposed to the full the true intentions of the U.S. policy in the south African subcontinent and the true worth of Washington's assurances concerning its alleged striving for a "constructive dialogue" and "peaceful settlement" in the region.

Southern Africa is by far not the only region where such developments are taking place. According to the "ABC" television company, the first consignment of 200 "Stinger" missiles is on its way to Afghanistan. CIA agents will soon hand them over to the bandits who raid Afghanistan from the neighbouring Pakistan. The next who are to receive U.S. "ground-to-air" missiles are the Nicaraguan "contras" and anti-Kampuchean rabble.

Washington's intention to expand undeclared wars against those countries whose policy does not suit it evokes strong protests the world over, including in Africa. According to the newspaper KENYA TIMES, the course toward interference in the internal affairs of sovereign countries pursued by the Reagan administration is evidence of the short-sighted nature of the U.S. policy.

Trying to preserve the racist regime in South Africa, Washington follows the course towards the destabilization of the situation in the south of the continent. This shows that the U.S. has not learned any lessons from its ventures in Vietnam, Laos and Cuba. U.S. aid to Savimbi's bandits will not change the situation in Angola in the direction suitable to the U.S. and will not lessen the resolve of the Angolan people and government to rout counterrevolution.

The deliveries of "Stinger" missiles to the terroristic forces in Angola leading to greater involvement of the U.S. in the region on the side of the racist and reactionary forces show that the U.S. policy is determined to ever greater extent by military and ideological considerations of a hegemonistic nature.

"CBS" admitted that the decision concerning the deliveries of the "ground-to-air" missiles to the Angolan counterrevolutionaries raised U.S. interference in the affairs of Angola to a qualitatively new level, showing the intention of the administration to overthrow the Angolan Government by military means.

In this way Washington continues to pursue a policy aimed at whipping up international confrontation and aggravating regional conflicts, which flagrantly runs counter to the interests of developing countries.

Taking into account all these considerations, the Angolan Government sent a letter to the U.N. several days ago asking to remove the U.S. from the position of a mediator in the settlement of the situation in south African region held by Washington in the past several years.

The letter of the Angolan leader Jose Eduardo dos Santos says that Angola is very much indignant at the decision of Reagan to render military assistance to UNITA and for this reason calls in questions confidence in the U.S. Administration.

U.S. HINDERS EFFORTS TO RESOLVE AFGHAN SITUATION

LD042112 Moscow TASS in English 2028 GMT 4 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 4 TASS -- By TASS political analyst Askold Biryukov.

The U.S. Administration is doing its utmost to hinder the international efforts directed at ensuring a peaceful political settlement of the situation around Afghanistan. As soon as changes in this matter, however slight, are observed, they in Washington seek to reduce them to nought as soon as possible and build new, higher barriers in order to undermine the process of political settlement. Washington's latest concrete actions provide irrefutable evidence of that.

Pakistan, the chief staging area of the undeclared war waged by U.S.-led imperialism against the Democratic republic of Afghanistan, was recently visited by President Reagan's close friend, Attorney-General Edwin Meese. During a trip to a camp of Afghan counterrevolution, he handed over to its chieftains the President's message designed to boost the morale of the bandit formations, seriously dented in recent months during their hit-and-run raids inside Afghanistan.

A few days after the visit, the public learned about the administration's yet one more "mark of respect" with regard to the bandits. A decision was adopted in Washington at the highest level (the press referred to the U.S. President) to provide them with anti-aircraft Stinger missiles for hostilities inside Afghanistan.

A few days later, the American mass media informed the Americans that the White House decision was hastily put into life. The first batch of 200 missiles were already on the way and, according to an informed official quoted by THE WASHINGTON POST, even arrived at the destination last week.

They in Washington rubbed their hands with satisfaction. Why not? Yet another victory a CBS Pentagon correspondent effusively reported how the Reagan doctrine of support for "freedom-fighters" was being translated into life. [Sentence as received]

Brisk conservative congressmen, grouped round Senator Dole, were calculating the increased "killing power" of the venal bandit formations, engaged in piracy and lawlessness in Afghanistan. As if what the cutthroats had already done on Afghan soil was not enough.

Sultan 'Ali Keshtmand, head of the Afghan Government, was talking about that the other day. During the years of the undeclared war, he said, tens of enterprises, more than two thousand schoolhouses, half of all medical stations and hundreds of mosques were blown up and burnt. The bandits destroyed 14,000 kilometers of telephone lines and about 50 per cent of power transmission lines. The damage caused by the Washington-backed "freedom-fighters" amounted to about 40,000 million Afghanis. How can one estimate the grief of the people who lost their relatives and dear ones, including as a result of the loss of civilian airliners shot down by the "freedom-fighters" with Washington-supplied anti-aircraft guns?

Pentagon officials, in high spirits due to the White House decision, observed with satisfaction that the administration's step was of "principled importance" because it paved the way for unlimited deliveries of modern weapons to counterrevolutionaries around the world.

As to the rest of America and the world public, they do not conceal their alarm and indignation. The London DAILY TELEGRAPH described the administration's conduct as a serious escalation of American interference. The Japanese YOMIURU pointed to the growing concern that the administration's step might make the regional conflict keener and result in direct confrontation with the Soviet Union. In the United States itself, wrote the GUARDIAN newspaper, Washington's decision to send Stingers to Afghanistan and Third World countries was described as insane by Democratic Party congressmen. The Reagan administration, said Michael Myerson, executive director of the U.S. Peace Council, demonstrated that it was the leader of the counterrevolutionary forces all over the world.

What might be the result of the administration's actions, marked neither by the sense of realism, nor the sense of responsibility? Washington proves by its concrete deeds yet another time the worth of its assurances of "commitment" to the cause of political settlement of the situation around Afghanistan at the negotiating table.

The United States has graphically confirmed its direct complicity in the kindling of regional conflicts which enhance world tension and threaten to grow into a confrontation of unpredictable dimensions.

U.S. PLANNING NEW 'PROVOCATIONS' AGAINST LIBYA

LD071256 Moscow TASS in English 1051 GMT 7 Apr 86

[Text] New York April 7 TASS -- Acting within the framework of the notorious "neoglobalism" doctrine proclaimed by Washington, the Reagan administration is preparing fresh armed provocations against Libya, this time on the plea of the two acts of terrorism staged in Western Europe the other day. The USA is unfoundedly charging Tripoli with "complicity" in those acts of terrorism.

According to the NBC television company, the USA is again preparing to send its Sixth Fleet to the Libyan shores so as, the Pentagon spokesman said, to "complete work". As is known, in the course of the recent U.S. naval exercises in the Gulf of Sidra, Libyan territory ws heavily bombarded. Thus, judging by these threats, the USA is preparing this time a large-scale armed aggression against Libya. The next step will be increased pressure on Al-Qadhdhafi, including the use of force, Robert McFarlane, former assistant to the President for national security affairs, said.

Meanwhile, the newspaper "WASHINGTON POST" pointed out, it has been established that the groups which claimed responsibility for the blast in Western Europe, "are not associated with Libya". Yet, Washington, which is hell-bent on punishing Tripoli, is simply disregarding this fact. We are losing all patience, the newspaper "WASHINGTON POST" quotes an unnamed spokesman for the administration as saying frankly. The developments of recent weeks, the newspaper continues, have drawn the USA close to the state of undeclared war against Libya.

The American press also reports that the U.S. Administration is now pressing the West European governments into the expulsion of Libyan diplomats from their countries. Washington would like to internationalise this way its confrontation policy against the sovereign state. As is known, earlier all attempts of the USA at drawing its allies in the anti-Libyan campaign have failed.

John Oaks, a prominent Ameican publicist, has condemned Washington's dangerous policy and stressed that acting under cover of hypocritical phrases about the "protection of freedom and democracy," the Reagan administration is pursuing in the international arena the "gunboat diplomacy", flouting the very same principles about which, as follows from her own statements, it is concerned.

ARTICLE OUTLINES FORMATION OF U.S. MILITARY POLICY

PM071546 Moscow KRASNAYA ZVEZDA in Russian 5 Apr 86 Second Edition p 5

[Candidate of economic sciences Yu. Katasonov article under the rubric "The United States -- Locomotive of Militarism": "Who Is in Control of the Machinery of Aggression"]

[Text] "The leading militarists in America wear civilian clothes.... Responsibility for national security policy is borne not by generals but by its makers -- politicians, businessmen, and civil servants holding official positions." This opinion by famous U.S. political scientist R. Barnet gives an idea of who it is that plays the leading role in the implementation of the U.S. military strong-arm course, hypocritically styled as "national security" policy in Washington. Barnet shows convincingly that "the leading militarists" are products of the business world and those who represent its interests. One cannot fail to notice that this evaluation, maybe deliberately but certainly clearly, plays down the role of the U.S. military elite. Its generals and admirals come from the same business world and they, together with its representatives in civilian clothes, have been tarred with the same brush, as people say.

And so, big capital uses state power for its own selfish purposes. It does this particularly unceremoniously under the incumbent administration. Obsessed by the craving for profits and the pursuit of external expansion, the monopolies, and primarily the arms monopolies, are calculating more and more on the militarization of all aspects of American life. This gave U.S. economist J. Galbraith reasons to describe the present government as "a highly perverted system under which the military-industrial complex runs the actual military-industrial complex in the interests of the verysame military-industrial complex."

Let us expand: The outburst of militarism in the United States benefits not only the manufacturers of death directly, but also the entire monopolist bourgeoisie. The deepening intertwining of the interests of military-industrial and transnational capital, and at times even their outright fusion, create particularly powerful stimuli for stepping up the aggressiveness of U.S. policy. The monopolies' imperial aspirations are implemented through the machinery of the state, which fans the arms race and effects direct armed violence.

According to foreign press reports, the plan for unleashing a nuclear war against our country and using nuclear weapons against any other state -- the so-called single comprehensive operations plan -- is elaborated by a special nuclear planning group and approved by the organization of the Joint Chiefs of Staff [JCS]. The decision to activate it is the prerogative of the President, who can delegate his power to the secretary of defense, the JCS chairman, or others. In this way, reprsentatives of various components of the state and military machinery make their contribution to the elaboration and implementation of the U.S. strong-arm policy. But some of them play a particularly important role. For example, the basic guidelines of foreign and military policy and programs for the creation [sozdaniye] and deployment of new weapons systems are approved by the President. It is also the President who makes decisions on the use of military force.

His role in the implementation of strong-arm policy can be judged by the actions of the present White House chief. His numerous speeches abound with calls for the continuation of the buildup of military might by the United States and its allies and for the use of military force against sovereign states on the fabricated pretext of "combatting terrorism."

The basic organ on which the President relies in this is the National Security Council [NSC]. Its chairman is the President himself, with the vice president, the secretary of state, and the secretary of defense as members, and the CIA director and JCS chairman as advisers. All major issues concerning U.S. activity in the international arena -- policy toward the USSR, relations with allies, U.S. armed actions in various regions, and so on -- are discussed at NSC sessions. It is noteworthy that all issues, even foreign economic ones, are discussed from the viewpoint of military strong-arm confrontation with socialist and other countries.

The Department of Defense plays a significant role in the shaping and particularly in the practical implementation of the strong-arm policy. It has at its disposal the material base for such a policy -- the actual machinery of aggression and the enormous military and military-economic potential for whose buildup and utilization it is responsible. At $300 billion, the Pentagon's budget is much higher than that of any other U.S. department. The present Pentagon leaders are closely linked with the world of military business. Secretary of Defense C. Weinberger, for example, came from the Bechtel Corporation, where he was vice president. Other high-ranking officials are well matched with him. Assistant Secretary of Defense R. Perle, who has gained unenviable fame as a "hawk" both inside the United States and beyond its borders, was a leading figure in the Northrop and TRW military-industrial corporations prior to his arrival in the Pentagon.

The Pentagon's leaders also play the role of fierce opponents of international detente and of the normalization of the situation in the world. It is well known that it was actually Weinberger who attempted to almost wreck the Soviet-U.S. summit meeting in Geneva. Nor was he alone in this; he was backed by highly influential forces, including some from the world of military business. If U.S. press reports are to be believed, the recent extremely dangerous provocative actions (off the Crimean coast and in the Gulf of Sidra, and the nuclear explosion in Nevada) were sanctioned by the President in order to make it up to those forces for his supposedly "too soft" behavior in Geneva.

Leaders of other government departments, shaping and implementing a militarist course, are also direct proteges of monopoly capital. Prior to his arrival at the Department of State, G. Shultz, like Weinberger, was on the board of the Bechtel Corporation, which was engaged in the construction of petroleum industry and military projects in the Near East -- a region which was and still is a target of aggression by the United States and its allies, primarily Israel. The Department of State's functions include providing diplomatic backup for the use of military force by the United States. Together with the Pentagon, it plays a leading role in the leadership of activities by military blocs headed by Washington.

The secretary of defense himself and his deputies are civilians. It is, however, generally agreed that the military high command is exerting a growing influence in the shaping and implementation of the aggressive U.S. foreign policy. The JCS and other military organs are elaborating plans for the "modernization" of the Armed Forces and the creation [sozdaniye] of new weapons over a 20-year period. These plans provide the practical base for Washington's strong-arm foreign policy.

The U.S. top military leadership also determines in fact the directions of military preparations by the allies and the position each one of them occupies in the militarist "team" led by Washington.

It is no accident that U.S. generals and admirals occupy key positions in the NATO military machine. For example, General B. Rogers, NATO supreme allied commander Europe, plays the role of main "pusher" in the deployment of U.S. first strike nuclear missiles in a number of NATO countries, the buildup of the potential of conventional forces by the allies, and their participation in the "star wars" program.

Militarists in uniform or civilian clothes who head the aforementioned and other government departments are, as people say, in the frontline of the aggressive U.S. policy, which poses a threat to peace and international security. By ensuring the ascent of militarism they all obey the will of more powerful forces -- U.S. monopoly capital and primarily the manufacturers of death. "Everything indicates clearly that the U.S. ruling grouping has placed the narrow selfish interests of military-industrial circles above the interests of all mankind and its own people," M.S. Gorbachev pointed out. "Furthermore, it is worth noting how this is done -- demonstratively, arrogantly, and with disregard for the world community's opinion. Neither a sense of reality, nor a sense of responsibility!"

The capitalist world continues to cherish hopes of strong-arm superiority. These hopes are illusory, but this does not make them any less dangerous.

SHULTZ' TALKS WITH ITALIAN OFFICIALS VIEWED

PM070934 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 30 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 4

[Own Correspondent V. Pershin dispatch: "United States-Italy: Talks in the Apennines"]

[Text] Rome -- After visiting France, Turkey, and Greece, U.S. Secretary of State Shultz arrived in Italy on Friday.

The transatlantic envoy's talks with Italian President Cossiga, Prime Minister Craxi, Foreign Minister Andreotti, and other members of the Italian Government center on the situation in the Medeterranean, particularly in view of the U.S. 6th Fleet's recent maneuvers off the Libyan coast, which have created a crisis situation in the region. It is well known that the Italian leadership has stated that it does not support the solution of disputes by military means and has expressed regret that the United States is resorting once again to such hazardous actions without consulting its allies first.

Italy's position has been confirmed during the current Italian-U.S. talks. In particular, a report from the prime minister's office expresses Italy's concern at the U.S. approach to events around Libya. Craxi also expressed Italy's interest in solving problems connected with the Near East settlement and at reaching understandings on the whole range of East-West relations, stressing in that regard the need to use every opportunity to strengthen mutual understanding.

The influential Italian newspaper LA REPUBBLICA writes that the U.S. representative is using his visit to Rome to pressure the Italian leadership on the issue of Italy's earliest possible involvement in the "Strategic Defense Initiative." In the opinion of political commentators, Shultz' chances of success in this matter are quite high: Yielding to Washington's demands, the Italian cabinet decided at a recent session to hold practical talks with the United States regarding the terms of Italy's involvement in SDI. It is expected that the government will set out its position on the problem in question at a joint session of the parliamentary foreign affairs and national defense commissions, which will be held on 3 April.

LEHMAN'S 'RUSSIAN THREAT' CLAIMS REBUTTED

PM071014 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 31 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 4

[G. Valko "Rejoinder": "Mr Lehman's Rhetoric"]

[Text] Sailors should never be shy, exclaimed one of the heroes of a comedy that was popular in London at one time. [W.S. Gilbert: "H.M.S. Pinafore"] Now is is largely forgotten, and hardly anybody remembers the author. Yet the remark is still current on both sides of the Atlantic. More to the point, there are people who really are not shy.

A few days ago John Lehman, U.S. secretary of the Navy, appeared on an NBC network program. Well, he certainly was not feeling shy and he told so many cock-and-bull stories that you might have laughed. However, the people who were listening to him did not feel like laughing. Incidentally, the secretary's remarks were calculated to intimidate his audience. Here he followed a set pattern. As a representative of the present administration he raised the specter of the "threat from the East," as is customary. And as U.S. Navy secretary he concentrated on the "threat from the Russian Fleet," naturally.

The times of the notorious Forrestal (incidentally, he too was involved with the Navy) are gone, of course -- the time when it was enough to let out a heart-rending cry: "The Russians are coming!" Now the fabrications are more specific and each one of them is accurately targeted.

Thus, according to the secretary, the Russian fleet (together with the Cuban fleet, of course) is capable of "blocking the Gulf of Mexico." This was addressed to the American Americans, who are still not aware of the scale of the "Russian threat."

He went on. It appears that "the Soviet and the Cuban naval forces are capable of creating real difficulties for the reinforcement of NATO forces" in Europe. This poisoned arrow was meant for the allies and was designed to frighten them more so that they do not think about detente. And finally it was claimed on the NBC program that "possibly the President does not even fully appreciate the Soviet naval threat." That was a warning to the "doves" in the Washington corridors of power.

In the old days it was said that a liar needs a particularly good memory. There is no denying that. You cannot seriously believe that people in Washington have forgotten whose fleet "is not shy" -- or rather acts like pirates -- near foreign shores. It cannot be assumed that Washington "has forgotten about" the position of the USSR, which consistently favors a limitation of naval arms. No, people on the Potomac are perfectly well aware of all this, and this is precisely why they are exaggerating the "Soviet naval threat," thus diverting attention from those who actually create such a threat.

There is a naval term "deviation." It denotes the departure of a vessel from the set course. Mr Lehman with his bogeys has clearly deviated from the truth. The point is that he would like public opinion to undergo a similar "deviation." However, the din of aircraft carrier engines in the Gulf of Sidra and the bursts of the U.S. missiles on Libyan soil have drowned his rhetorical exercises.

IVANOV ASSAILS USIA CHIEF'S 'DISINFORMATION'

PM071406 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 6 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 4

[V. Ivanov "Appropriate Remarks": "Saying Too Much"]

[Text] It has been no secret for a long time in America that USIA Director Charles Wick has two weaknesses: He fancies himself as being a very well-informed person and he adores being the center of universal attention.

Experts on the present-day American political scene maintain that you never get bored when listening to Wick's speeches. The only drawback, they complain, is that the USIA chief is too talkative and quite often gets carried away. Recently, while drawing an optimistic picture of the "American way of life" as a model for universal imitation before a session of the Foreign Policy Association in New York, Wick demonstrated this weakness and overdid things. "The truth," he said, "is our greatest and most effective weapon..."

It would be interesting to know just what kind of truth Mr Wick had in mind? Perhaps that which the USIA, at White House bidding, spread around the world just before, during, and after the U.S. Marines' intervention on Grenada, describing it as an "act of true democracy." Or perhaps that which they tried to feed Americans during the proceedings of the 12th World Youth and Students Festival in Moscow, dragging out inanities in the vein of the "primitive anticommunism" of the fifties. Remember that, among other bits of news, U.S. citizens were earnestly assured that in Moscow "young people from throughout the whole world will be stuffed with drugs and recruited as terrorists in the West." And today they are being frightened with the threat of "imminent Nicaraguan aggression against the United States." That is what Mr Wick's truth turns out to be.

Fully exploiting, as is the custom, the traditional array of anti-Soviet cliches and stereotypes, the propaganda department chief served up his latest fable to his listeners. In a dramatic tone of voice, he spoke about "Moscow's hand" being behind the organization of the peace movement in West European countries and about the Soviets' having put simply astronomical sums into financing West European protests against the neutron bomb.

Apparently it is not Washington, but Moscow which is pushing mankind to the brink of the nuclear abyss by refusing to adopt any, even the most insignificant measures, to improve the world political climate. And yet is precisely a course directed toward preparing for war that gives rise to the mass protest demonstrations in both the United States itself and other countries. The USIA chief, however, is not bothered in the least by lack of logic in his speeches. Nor does lack of evidence embarrass him: The President's old buddy has to be believed and that is the end of it!

Wick went on at length about the aid that the United States, in his words, is giving to the developing countries, leading them like lost sheep from poverty onto the "path of prosperity." But what prosperity are they concerned with on the banks of the Potomac? The Washington flock -- puppet regimes in Asia, Africa, and Central and Latin America -- is well known. Its "clients" include Afghan dushmans, Nicarguan "contras," cutthroats from anti-Angolan formations of the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola, as well as other groupings that terrorize the activity of sovereign governments that are not to the White House's liking. And Washington simply turns a blind eye to the blood of innocent women, children, and old people shed in Afghanistan, Angola, and Nicaragua -- that way it is easier to make generous gifts to the bandits.

And whereas previously those gifts included booby-trapped children's toys, which killed and maimed hundreds of Afghan children, nowadays it is much more serious things -- Stinger antiafircraft missiles, for example, -- which emerge from the gift package.

As for Wick's statement that the information presented by the USIA is "the most reliable and important instrument of American foreign policy," that could, perhaps, be agreed with. Albeit with one small but highly essential addition: Namely, the placing of the prefix "dis-" in front of "information."

U.S. HOPES OF WEAKENING SOVIET ECONOMY 'FUTILE

PM070830 Moscow SELSKAYA ZHIZN in Russian 2 Apr 86 p 3

[TASS report: "Futile Hopes"]

[Text] Washington, 1 Apr -- Washington strategists' hopes "of exhausting" the USSR economically by means of the arms race are completely unfounded. This has been pointed out by prominent U.S. economist Lester Thurow, professor at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, in an article published in the journal TECHNOLOGY REVIEW.

From the day it came to power the Reagan administration has nurtured the idea of undermining the USSR's economy by building up and upgrading its military arsenals, the scientist recalls. However the advocates of the course aimed at "exhausting" the Soviet Union simply forgot the lessons of history. "The Soviet economy survived the times of Hitler's onslaught," he emphasizes, "and it will not collapse in the conditions of the relentless buildup of U.S. military spending."

The present administration's course toward an escalation of the arms race and its transfer to space is fraught with negative consequences above all for the U.S. economy, L. Thurow believes. The present buildup of the U.S. military potential is sapping the U.S. economy because it is being funded at he expense of the budget deficit and a curtailment of capital investment in civilian sectors of the economy.

TASS VIEWS U.S.-ISRAELI INTELLIGENCE COOPERATION

LD071441 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 1100 GMT 7 Apr 86

[Text] Washington, 7 Apr (TASS) -- TASS correspondent Nikolay Orekhov reports: The existence of close cooperation between the CIA and the Israeli intelligence Service Mossad has been acknowledged by W. Casey, director of the U.S. spy and subversion department.

Speaking at a conference of the American-Israeli Public Affairs Committee -- one of the leading pro-Israeli lobbies of the United States -- he declared that on the whole, there is a close link in the area of exchange of intelligence information between the American and Israeli special services. Casey did not hide the fact that this cooperation was directed primarily against such countries as Syria, Libya, and Iran, and also against the Palestine Liberation Organization.

As follows from the speech by the CIA director, under the pretext of the fight against "international terrorism," Washington and Tel Aviv would like to draw the intelligence services of states allied to the United States into their secret operations. Thus, he confirmed that over the past few years American intelligence had expanded its cooperation with "friendly Arab countries."

Casey further stated that "recently there has been created a world antiterrorist network based on an active exchange of intelligence information between the special services of the United States and our friends around the world." To judge from the words of the head of the spy and subversion department, it is also a matter of an all-round buildup of the potential of the special service of these states.

In effect, Casey was admitting that in ensuring the so-called doctrine of neoglobalism, which provides for an escalation of interference by U.S. imperialism in the internal affairs of other countries, the United States is carrying out an all-around expansion of secret subversion operations, and dragging their allies in with them.

U.S. COMPLETES MILITARY AIRPORT IN HONDURAS

LD052309 Moscow TASS in English 2247 GMT 5 Apr 86

[Text] Managua April 5 TASS -- According to reports from Honduras, engineer units of the U.S. Army have completed the construction of a new military airfield there in direct proximity to the border with Nicaragua. The runway is capable of receiving heavy military transportation planes of "C-130 Hercules" type which are used by the Pentagon to airlift soldiers and military hardware to the areas of regional conflicts.

U.S. TO PRODUCE 'NEW GENERATION' BOMBS

LD070834 Moscow TASS in English 0741 GMT 7 Apr 86

[Text] New York April 7 TASS — The Pentagon has granted almost 22 million dollars to "Lockheed missiles and space" to produce a thousand bombs of a new generation. The I-2,000 bombs will be made of increased strength steel and supplied with a special propulsion unit for the bomb to pierce through concrete fortifications, missile silos and explode deep underground.

As was stated in an AP interview by General Robert Iglet, new cluster bombs are also ready for production, each consisting of 202 grenades that can simultaneously hit both materiel and manpower. Individual guidance bomb production will also start soon. A target is set to each bomb beforehand, which it finds with the help of "a visual" computer and an ultra-red guidance system and hits.

U.S. DEVELOPING NUCLEAR ANTISUBMARINE WEAPON

LD052249 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1430 GMT 5 Apr 86

[From the "Vremya" newscast]

[Text] The U.S. WASHINGTON POST reports that the Pentagon has secretly begun developing a new type of nuclear weapon for use by the U.S. Navy. The newspaper says it involves the development of a new antisubmarine defense system equipped with a nuclear or neutron warhead. This is a missile launched from a surface vessel which enters the water at a set point and then explodes like a depth charge, destroying an enemy submarine.

POLITICAL CONSULTATIONS WITH PRC RESUME IN MOSCOW

Qian Qichen Arrives

PM071051 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 7 Apr 86 First Edition p 4

[Text] The special representative of the Chinese Government, Qian Qichen, vice minister of foreign affairs of the PRC, arrived in Moscow on 6 April in order to participate in Soviet-Chinese political consultations. He was greeted by the special representative of the Soviet Government Leonid Ilichev, USSR deputy minister of foreign affairs, and by other officials at the airport. Li Zewang, ambassador of the PRC in the USSR, was among the welcoming party. The current round of Soviet-Chinese political consultations is to begin on 7 April.

COMMENTARY VIEWS U.S. MILITARY PRESENCE IN ASIA

OW052356 Moscow in Mandarin to China 0700 GMT 5 Apr 86

[Excerpts] The amendments to the CPSU Program adopted by the 27th CPSU Congress that was held from the end of February to early March this year made a convincing appraisal of imperialist policy today. The document pointed out: Imperialists seek to control the world and presumptuously regard vast areas as their spheres of influence. In a talk, Soviet scholar and expert on international issues (Glev) said:

The United States has tried hard to make the Pacific region serve its interests. The U.S. ruling circles have long coveted turning the Pacific region into their own area. At the beginning of this century, U.S. President Roosevelt had already openly mentioned this imperialist plan. People often linked his name with U.S. gunboat diplomacy and the big stick policy.

In recent years, the United States has more actively implemented this imperialist plan, because the monopoly financial groups in California and other states have acquired important positions in the Reagan administration. These groups seek economic expansion in the Pacific region. This has served to raise the degree of aggressiveness of U.S. foreign policy in the past few years. The U.S. ruling circles also presumptuously consider the whole Pacific region as their sphere of influence without taking into consideration the interests of the scores of sovereign states in that region. In order to achieve its goal of seeking hegemony there, the United States has deployed some 400,000 soldiers, over 200 warships, and more than 1,500 airplanes to that region. It relies on its military bases in that region to support the large number of troops with military hardware. It has attached great importance to Subic Bay Naval Base and Clark Air Force Base in the Philippines.

Subic Bay Naval Base and Clark Air Force Base play a significant role in providing logistical support to other U.S. bases of aggression in Asia.

It is precisely for this reason that Washington seeks to desperately cling to these bases, and it is precisely for this reason that Washington is so worried about the future of these two bases. It is exactly for this reason that Washington flagrantly interferes with the internal affairs of a sovereign state -- the Philippines. Not long ago, the whole world became an eyewitness to this interference.

The Pentagon has deployed the U.S. 7th Fleet in the Western Pacific region. Its main task is to control the sealanes

In discussing the role of the 7th Fleet in Sino-U.S. relations, a famous Soviet scholar and expert on U.S. foreign policy (Korofemik) said: The U.S. naval force in that region is the major trump card of the United States to prevent China from using force in settling the issue of Taiwan. Washington seeks to show Beijing that the United States enjoys naval predominance even in areas off China's coasts. The U.S. Pacific strategy is a component part of its global imperialist strategy. This strategy aims at completely Americanizing the Pacific Ocean, endangering the cause of peace, the safety of the peoples of various countries, and the sovereignty of nations in the Pacific region.

TELEVISION PRESENTS TRAVELOGUE ON SHANGHAI

LD061743 [Editorial Report] Moscow Television Service in Russian at 0730 GMT on 6 April 1986 presents a report within the "Traveler's Club" program by Yuriy Aleksandrovich Senkevich, about the city of Shanghai. Senkevich introduces international affairs journalists Vladimir Semenovich Kulikov, who conducts the video tour of the city.

Kulikov recalls how back in the 19th century the imperialists' presence in Shanghai brought many unpleasant features to the city, including crime, corruption, and poverty, but at the same time their presence led to the increase in the city's size and strength. In 1921 the city was the venue for the first congress of the Chinese Communist Party, and in the 1930s it was a focal point for the revolution.

Referring to present-day Shanghai, Kulikov describes the city as very interesting and modern, and yet a very Chinese city. It is the biggest and noisiest Chinese city, responsible for creating one-sixth of the national income.

Viewers are then shown a film clip of modern Shanghai. It opens with a gymnastics performance on the river embankment by the city's inhabitants. Then a view of the river and its bridges from the roof of a hotel are shown, as well as other street scenes. Kulikov mentions the city's huge population and the problem of overcrowding.

Kulikov goes on to say: "The results of the open-door policy that China has proclaimed are particularly evident in this gigantic city. It is not just the fact, of course, that English is more and more likely to be heard in the street, nor the presence of numerous advertisements for foreign goods like these ultramodern tape recorders." As video shows windows displaying electrical goods labeled in Chinese and English, with Betamax and Sony brands visible; Kulikov continues: "Foreign capital is infiltrating ever more confidently and deeply into all spheres of life in Shanghai. Over the last few years 80 Chinese and foreign mixed enterprises have been set up there, using foreign technology and capital."

The film continues, showing large ships in the river. Kulikov says that large modern ships are built in the city. As video shows pictures of docks, Kulikov goes on to say: "These are the wharves of the Baoshan metallurgical combine near Shanghai, which was built with the assistance of Japanese and West German firms. The first stage of the combine entered into service in September 1985. It has a capacity of 3 million metric tons of pig iron, over 3 million metric tons of steel, and 500,000 metric tons of seamless pipes annually. However, in accordance with the Japanese project the combine is only able to operate on the basis of imported ore from Australia or Brazil. Is this a miscalculation on the part of the planners or are there more complex reasons behind this? One gets the impression that certain people very much want to fasten the Chinese economy more closely to the capitalist market. At any rate there have been no few arguments in China over the construction of the Baoshan combine."

The travelogue continues, showing viewers traditional street artists at work, a very ancient park in the city center, circus acts including performing pandas, restaurants, and scenes of Chinese cuisine being prepared. Captions at the end of the feature say that a May edition of "Traveler's Club" will be devoted to Chinese cuisine and that the film used in this program was "The Land and Peoples of China," which was produced by the Hungarian People's Republic.

SOVIET SEAMEN RESCUE CHINESE FISHERMAN

PM070828 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 30 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 6

[Own correspondent Yu. Balakirev dispatch: "Incident in Port"]

[Text] Vladivostok -- A memorial friendship pennant has been presented to the crew of the Far Eastern Steamship Company's motor vessel Komsomolets Artema by the inhabitants of the Chinese village of (Tstusan).

... The incident occurred on a March evening in the port of Qinhuangdao. The deck officer of the watch on the Soviet motor vessel noticed that a ship with Chinese fishermen on board had capsized. The alarm -- "Man overboard!" -- was immediately sounded. With the permission of the port authorities, a launch under the command of First Mate M. Prokonkin sped to the scene of the disaster. Help arrived in time, although fisherman Yen Hupin was no longer able to move. The victim was taken to the motor vessel, where he was immediately attended by the ship's doctor, G. Slaykovskaya. The crew donated warm clothing, a hat, and shoes to the rescued man.

Afterwards the Komsomolets Artema received guests -- activists of the Chinese-Soviet Friendship Society and the International Club. They expressed cordial gratitude to the Soviet sailors.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON WEINBERGER VISIT TO FAR EAST

Nikolayev Examines Japan Visit

OW051001 Moscow in Japanese to Japan 1000 GMT 4 Apr 86

[Nikolayev commentary]

[Text] On U.S. Defense Secretary Weinberger's visit to Japan, Radio Moscow commentator Nikolayev comments as follows:

At the working-level consultations on Japan-U.S. security issues, held in Honolulu in January this year, it was stressed that Japan's supplementary role in U.S. strategy against the USSR had become more significant. U.S. Assistant Defense Secretary Armitage said that Japan would be like a "lock on the bear's cage," blocking the USSR's exit to the sea.

In this connection, it is noteworthy that Defense Secretary Weinberger's current visit to Japan has started from none other than Hokkaido. The largest corps in the Japanese forces, made up of four divisions, including a tank division, is stationed on Hokkaido, located close to Soviet territory. The United States plans to build a large armory on Hokkaido in preparation for long-term combat action.

It is observed that Defense Secretary Weinberger will ask Japan, during his current visit, to increase its share in maintaining U.S. military bases in Japan. The largest U.S. forces, next to those in West Germany, are stationed in Japan. In other words, some 45,000 American officers and soldiers are stationed at 127 military bases and facilities. Each year, Japanese taxpayers spend over $1 billion in maintaining U.S. military bases, and yet Washington's ambition proves that this amount is insufficient.

In addition to the issue of the armory on Hokkaido, there still remain various issues on the agenda for Japan-U.S. military cooperation yet to be resolved. They include building an airport for night landing training on Miyake Island, and a new command center and other facilities at Atsugi. In an attempt to justify its war preparations in the Far East, the United States acted as if these facilities were necessary to strengthen Japan's security.

However, there are recent incidents indicating that the Pentagon, the U.S. Defense Department, pays no attention at all to Japan's security. In his article, published in the January issue of the NAVY BULLETIN, Admiral Watkins, chief of U.S. Naval Operations, wrote that the United States would launch nuclear strikes at Soviet facilities from the Sea of Okhotsk in case of military confrontation. Japanese commentators point out, with misgiving, that this indicates the Pacific, the Sea of Okhotsk, and the Sea of Japan will become the main theater of U.S. military operations using nuclear weapons. There is no need to explain how such action would impose danger on the Japanese people. This has also aroused greater and more serious attention by the people of Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

Another disquieting piece of news was reported in the Japanese papers the other day. The Pentagon has requested the Japanese side to take measures to protect U.S. facilities in case of nuclear confrontation. It is quite clear from this that the Pentagon regards it is as quite possible for a nuclear war to take place on Japanese territory. There are events which might actually prove this possibility. For example, F-16 fighter-bombers, capable of carrying nuclear weapons, have been deployed at Misawa base, and nuclear-powered submarines, carrying Tomahawk nuclear missiles, have already called at Yokosuka Port nine times this year.

Since the end of World War II, the United States has established a large nuclear structure in Japan, including a strategic communications network and a command center, equipped with special facilities. The United States will need all these facilities merely for launching, from the shortest distance, a nuclear strike on the eastern part of the USSR in case of the so-called emergency. It has been calculated that, in such cases, it will not be the mainland United States which will be the target of retaliatory attacks, but the military facilities thousands of kilometers away from its own borders. This is the best time to take this issue into consideration. Exactly 1 week before Defense Secretary Weinberger left for his visit to Asian countries, a nuclear test was conducted in Nevada in the United States. The act was a hostile challenge to world public opinion as a whole. In his protest message, the Hiroshima mayor pointed out that the explosion was conducted under the USSR's unilateral moratorium. Exercising the utmost self-control, the USSR has extended the moratorium's deadline of 31 March on condition that the United States does not hold any nuclear tests. In its approach to the nuclear issues Washington has clearly indicated its intention of (?endangering) the destiny of all mankind, not to mention that of the Japanese and its own people.

After conducting nuclear tests in Nevada, the U.S. Government has indicated its intention of stressing nuclear confrontation with the USSR. It is clear that Defense Secretary Weinberger will seek support for this dangerous policy. Included on the current agenda is an issue concerning Japan's participation in the star wars program, a nuclear program posing great danger to peace. The SDI -- Strategic Defense Iniative -- and nuclear tests are roads leading directly to intensification of global military tension, as well as to global destruction. However, the major purpose of Defense Secretary Weinberger's visit to Japan is to seek support for pursuing such a dangerous policy.

Tokyo Wary of SDI

LD060453 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 1219 GMT 5 Apr 86

[Text] Tokyo, 5 Apr (TASS) -- U.S. Defense Secretary C. Weinberger, who is here, has demanded Japan's speedy involvement in Reagan's "star wars" program. At talks here today the Pentagon chief tried to butter up the Japanese Government with questionable advantages for Tokyo's participation in SDI, asserting that this was supposedly "very important" for Japan. During the news conference held later he did not conceal the Pentagon's interest in using Japanese scientific and technological potential to implement the plans for the militarization of space. The Pentagon chief tried to justify the aggressive ambitions of the "hawks" from across the ocean with the help of hackneyed conjectures about the "Soviet threat."

However, despite massive pressure, the American visitor did not manage to extract an official agreement from Tokyo to participate in SDI. Prime Minister Y. Nakasone indicated that Japan had a "wary approach" to the "star wars" program and would reach a final decision only on the basis of careful study of the results from a current visit to the United States by a group of Japanese experts. After the talks, Nakasone stated to journalists that he also did not intend to answer on Japan's involvement in SDI at the meeting he will have this month with President R. Reagan.

As the press points out, Tokyo's procrastination over its reply to Washington's demands is caused by internal political considerations. The opposition parties and broad circles of the public are opposed to Japan's involvement in the militarization of space. The leaders of the ruling Liberal Democratic Party fear that officially joining SDI will cause acute dissatisfaction in the country and weaken the conservatives' position at the coming parliamentary elections.

DPRK Condemns Seoul Visit

LD071012 Moscow TASS in English 1032 GMT 7 Apr 86

[Text] Pyongyang April 7 TASS -- The visit of Caspar Weinberger, U.S. secretary of defence, to South Korea has been an open challenge to the Korean and other peace-loving peoples favouring peace in Korea and her peaceful reunification, says the statement issued here by the DPRK Foreign Ministry. The DPRK Government, the statement says, strongly condemns the actions of the United States, which are heightening tensions in Korea and threatening peace in Asia and all over the world. The statement urges the governments and peoples of all countries to come out jointly in the international year of peace against the dangerous intrigues of the USA on the Korean Peninsula.

JAPAN INCREASES MILITARY SPENDING

OW060256 Moscow in Japanese to Japan 1200 GMT 5 Apr 86

[Report by Tokyo Correspondent Pavel Potapov]

[Excerpts] According to the 1986 budget approved by the Budget Committee of the House of Councilors on the evening of 4 April, military spending will increase by 6.8 percent and reach an enormous amount of Y3.34 billion.

Naturally, top officials of the Defense Agency are pleased as they expect that Tokyo's efforts aimed at strengthening the Japan-U.S. military alliance will be highly appraised by the U.S. side, particularly by the U.S. Secretary of Defense Weinberger who is currently visiting Japan. Adopting an austere financial policy, the Nakasone cabinet has cut down other expenditures but increased military spending year after year. The military spending increased by 6.4 percent in 1982, by 6.3 percent in 1984 and will increase by 6.8 percent in 1986. The rate of increase of Japan's military spending far exceeds that of NATO countries.

It is, of course, (?one-sided) to state that the rapid increase of Japan's military spending is caused merely by Washington's intensified pressure. It goes without saying that the pressure imposed by the United States is fairly strong and that the pressure has appeared as [words indistinct]. For example, as pointed out by Japanese commentators, Defense Secretary Weinberger may possibly ask Japan, in his talks with Defense Agency Director-General Kato, to take basic steps to promote a military buildup, particularly in the areas close to the USSR. While complying with Washington's request, Tokyo plans to force Washington to make compromises on trade and economic issues.

The munitions industry applauded when the next 5-year defense plans were adopted. To carry out these plans, it will be necessary to increase military spending by a large margin and to practically abolish the policy of limiting military spending within 1 percent of the GNP. Moreover, the munitions industry is interested in the star wars program of the United States. There must be some good reasons that representatives from 21 companies have joined in the third SDI study group currently visiting the United States to study the issue of Japan's participation. Of course, Japan's SDI participation will also become a topic for discussion at the talks between Secretary Weinberger and Japan's top officials.

The progressive forces in Japan are strongly opposed to the actions taken by the conservative forces aimed at turning Japan into a military power. To follow submissively in the wake of the U.S. strategy not only runs counter to Japan's national interests but also may impose danger on Japan by involving it in armed conflicts.

IZVESTIYA REPORTS ON DPRK DELEGATION VISIT TO USSR

Uzbekistan Toured

PM071128 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 1 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 4

[TASS report: "Acquaintance With Uzbekistan"]

[Text] Tashkent, 31 Mar -- A delegation of the DPRK Supreme People's Assembly headed by Yang Hyong-sop, chairman of the Assembly's Standing Committee, has familiarized itself with life in Uzbekistan.

A meeting was held between the guests and A. U. Salimov, chairman of the Uzbek SSR Supreme Soviet Presidium, who spoke about Soviet activity in the republic aimed at fulfilling the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress.

Yang Hyong-sop appraised the USSR's new peace initiatives set out in the speech by Comrade M.S. Gorbachev on Soviet television on 29 March.

The DPRK parlaimentarians visited the Uzbek SSR Exhibition of Economic Achievements and met with the collective of the "Uzbekselmash" plant and with activitists from the Uzbek Society of Friendship and Cultural Ties with Foreign Countries. The guests surveyed new development regions in Tashkent and Samarkand.

Meeting With Gromyko

PM041405 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 4 Apr 86 Morning Edition pp 1-2

[TASS report: "Conversation With DPRK Delegation in the Kremlin"]

[Text] On 2 April A.A. Gromyko, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and chairman of the USSR Surpeme Soviet Presidium, received in the Kremlin a delegation of the DPRK Supreme People's Assembly headed by Yang Hyong-sop, chairman of the Assembly's Standing Committee, who is also a member of the Workers Party of Korea (RPK) Central Committee, chairman of the Supreme People's Assembly, president of the Academy of Social Sciences in Pyongyang, chairman of the Democratic Front for the Reunification of the Fatherland Central Committee, and chairman of the DPRK Parliamentary Group.

Examining during the conversation the prevailing international situation, which has become increasingly complex in recent weeks as a consequence of aggressive actions by imperialism. A.A. Gromyko stressed that the Soviet Union is continuing its peace-loving efforts. They are aimed at averting nuclear catastrophe, preventing the arms race spreading into outer space, and stopping it on earth.

Banning nuclear tests could be the first step toward this. The Soviet Union is ready to start immediate talks on this question at any level -- as was talked about in the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium's appeal to the U.S. Congress.

The Soviet Union considers the immediate halting of nuclear weapons tests a question of paramount importance, and this idea ran throughout the television address by M.S. Gorbahcev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, on 29 March this year.

He announced the Soviet Union's decision to refrain from conducting nuclear explosions after the expiry of the unilateral moratorium on 31 March this year if the United States would also not carry out such explosions. The Soviet Union is ready to attend a Soviet-American summit meeting in the very near future to reach agreement on ending nuclear tests.

However, the Soviet Union has not received a positive response to its proposals, although the present times require the most serious approach to politics, appreciation of the complexity of the world today, deep understanding of its problems, and, in general, new thinking. This leads to the logical and cogent conclusion that mutual security can only be ensured by means of political solutions, and not by saber-rattling or stockpiling nuclear combat charges.

The sides expressed joint satisfaction with the continuing development of Soviet-Korean relations in line with the accord reached at the summit meeting in Moscow in May 1984. The expansion of bilateral Soviet-Korean cooperation in both the economic and cultural sphere and in matters of international politics is yielding appreciable results.

Soviet people, A.A. Gromyko stressed, have invariably expressed solidarity with the Korean people's just struggle to improve the situation on the Korean peninsula and create favorable conditions for the country's peaceful, democratic unification. The desire on the part of the CPSU and the USSR to strengthen fraternal friendship with the WPK and the DPRK on the basis of the principles of Marxism-Leninism is a constant one. This year's celebration of the 15th anniversary of the Treaty on Friendship, Cooperation, and Mutual Assistance between the USSR and the DPRK will undoubtedly demonstrate the two sides' resolve to step up collaboration in the interests of socialism and peace in the Far East, Asia, and throughout the world.

The guests were told about how Soviet people are working to implement the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress.

Yang Hyong-sop rated highly the Soviet people's successes and wished them new achievements in implementing the plans to speed up the Soviet Union's socioeconomic development outlined by the congress.

The Korean people's support was expressed for the Soviet peace initiatives contained in the CPSU Central Committee general secretary's 15 January statement, the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress, and M.S. Gorbachev's 29 March television address. The Korean delegation leader gave assurances that the DPRK will do everything possible to strengthen friendship and cooperation with the Soviet Union, the other socialist countries, and all progressive forces in the struggle for lasting world peace.

The sides were united in their intention to step up ties between the supreme organs of state power.

The conversation proceeded in the warm, friendly atmosphere characteristic of USSR-DPRK relations.

The following took part in the conversation: from the Soviet of the Union; L.N. Tolkunov, chairman of the USSR Supreme Soviet Soviet of the Union; T.N. Menteshashvili, secretary of the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium; A. Ya. Rybakov, USSR Supreme Soviet deputy; V.G. Vysotin, chief of the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium International Relations Department; and I.A. Rogachev, chief of the USSR Foreign Ministry First Far Eastern Department; and on the Korean side -- Kwon Hui-kyong, DPRK ambassador to the USSR.

Delegation Ends Visit

PM071130 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 5 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 4

[TASS report: "Visit Concluded"]

[Text] A delegation of the DPRK Supreme People's Assembly headed by Yang Hyong-sop, chairman of the Assembly's Standing Committee, met with lecturers and students from Moscow's A.N. Kosygin Textile Institute on 3 April.

It was noted in the speeches that strengthening multilaterial Soviet-Korean relations promotes the socioeconomic development of the two countries and the consolidation of peace and socialism.

Yang Hyong-sop expressed profound gratitude to all Soviet people for assisting the Korean people in building socialism.

On the same day the parliamentarians visited the USSR Exhibition of National Economic Achievements.

In the evening the delegation left the Soviet Union. It was in our country at the invitation of the USSR Supreme Soviet on an official friendly visit.

The guests were seen off at the airport by L.N. Tolkunov, chairman of the USSR Supreme Soviet; A. Ya. Rybakov, USSR Supreme Soviet deputy; and other officials. Kwong Hui-kyong, DPRK ambassador to the USSR, was among the sendoff party.

We are totally satisfied with the results of the visit, Yang Hyong-sop said before his departure. We are sure that it will make a significant contribution to the further development of parliamentary relations between the two countries, which are an important form of Korean-Soviet relations. DPRK and USSR parliamentary groups successfully cooperate in the international arena in the struggle against the increasing danger of nuclear war and for lasting peace on earth.

USSR-DPRK ECONOMIC ZONE TREATY RATIFIED

U.S. SUBSIDIZES, ENCOURAGES KABUL CAR BOMBERS

LD072216 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1630 GMT 7 Apr 86

[Vladimir Fadeyev commentary]

[Text] U.S. special services' subversive activities against the DRA continue to increase. At the microphone is Vladimir Fadeyev:

According to a BAKHTAR report, the dushmans yesterday carried out their latest bloody crime in Kabul. In one of the capital's district a car filled with explosives was blown up. Over 20 people were injured and several buildings in the vicinity of the explosion were damaged.

Unfortunately this kind of report from Afghanistan is received fairly frequently. This latest explosion is far from being the last because the dushmans who for almost 8 years have been committing crimes on Afghan soil, have their own reliable protector and godfather. This is official Washington, which, through one of its secret departments, the CIA, lavishly subsidizes and encourages the dirty work of the enemies of the Afghan people.

Judge for yourselves, comrades, the magnitude of this lavishness. Under the present administration, CIA aid to the dushmans has risen from $100 million to $500 million a year. It is this money that is being used to buy weapons for the counterrevolutionaries, under U.S. leadership, in sabotage and methods of murder, near the Afghan border on the territory of neighboring Pakistan. There is no doubt that yesterday's explosion was the work of murderers trained by espionage experts from the U.S. special services.

Washington, however, is not content with its role of lavish, but sometimes secret, protector of the dushmans. Interference in Afghanistan's internal affairs is being taken to a qualitatively new level. There is proof of this in the recent meeting in Pakistan between U.S. Attorney General Edwin Meese and the leaders of the dushman bands. He passed on to the bandits a personal message from the President. The White House chief's establishment of direct contact with the enemies of the Afghan people has its special feature: This delicate commission from the President was carried out by a regular military man, an ex-official of the U.S. Army Intelligence Corps.

INCREASED AID TO REBELS 'THWARTING' SETTLEMENT

PM071306 Moscow KRASNAYA ZVEZDA in Russian 5 Apr 86 Second Edition p 5

[Report on interview with Major General Nazar Muhammad, candidate member of the PDPA Central Committee Politburo and DRA minister of defense, by unnamed KRASNAYA ZVEZDA sorrespondent: "An Event of Particular Importance" -- date and place not given; paragraph is a KRASNAYA ZVEZDA introduction]

[Text] The attention of broad strata of Afghan people is centered on the results of the 27th CPSU Congress. The mass media, politicians, and public figures emphasize that the decisions of the congress of Soviet Communists give new strength to all who are struggling for the triumph of peace and social progress on the planet. This is what Lieutenant General Nazar Mohammad, candidate member of the PDPA Central Committee Politburo and DRA minister of defense, said in a conversation with a KRASNAYA ZVEZDA correspondent:

The 27th CPSU Congress is an event of particular importance not only for Soviet people but also for the peoples in all countries on the planet, including the people of revolutionary Afghanistan and the soldiers of its Armed Forces. The forum of Soviet Communists showed with renewed strength that the Soviet Union is loyal to the slogan emblazoned on October's banner: "Peace to the peoples."

The CPSU Central Committee Political Report not only mapped out with impressive force specific ways to accelerate the socioeconomic development of the Land of the Soviets and enhance Soviet people's prosperity, but also put forward important peace initiatives and formulated the foundations for creating an all-embracing system of international security.

One of these foundations is the just political settlement of international crises and regional conflicts. Potential for such a settlement also exists with respect to one of the most acute crises -- the conflict around Afghanistan. It must ensure the termination of foreign military interference in the affairs of democratic Afghanistan and guarantee its nonresumption.

The speediest termination of the undeclared war against the Afghan people is prevented by the very forces which oppose an improvement of international relations as a whole. We are primarily talking about the United States, which has turned Pakistan into an instrument of its policy. The buildup of financial "aid" to the counterrevolution and the constant encouragement of Islamabad's aggressive policy against democratic Afghanistan -- these are elements of the course of thwarting a political settlement.

I want to stress that the struggle waged by the Afghan people and their Armed Forces for freedom and sovereignty, as the 16th PDPA Central Committee Plenum pointed out, means a struggle to create a democratic society marching along the path of important socioeconomic transformations. These transformations meet the Afghan people's fundamental interests. This is why the statements by reactionary circles in the West that human rights are being violated in the DRA stand out like blatant hypocrisy.

Our struggle is leading toward the elimination of a dangerous hot spot in the Asian Continent. This is why our struggle against the counterrevolution is also a struggle for peace. It shares common elements with the USSR's persistent efforts to eliminate the seats of conflicts everywhere in the world and to achieve lasting peace throughout the world.

It is very important for us Afghans, while preparing to celebrate the April Revolution anniversary on 27 April, to realize that we are not alone in our struggle and that we have many friends, primarily the great Soviet people who give us all-round assistance, including military assistance. I would like to express most heartfelt gratitude to the Soviet people and their party for this selfless aid.

The historic decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress are being discussed with profound attention and interest by the Afghan Army soldiers. Evidence of this is provided by the atmosphere at meetings, conversations, and other mass political events devoted to the CPSU congress which are now taking place in units and formations. Comrades from the limited contingent of Soviet troops in the DRA are very helpful in the work on studying and explaining the historical decisions of the congress.

The Afghan people and their soldiers, Lt Gen Nazar Mohammad said in conclusion, wish the Soviet Communists and the entire Soviet people successful implementation of the ambitious tasks set by the congress.

PROGRESS OF AFGHAN-PAKISTANI TALKS REVIEWED

LD072019 Moscow TASS in English 1539 GMT 7 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 7 TASS -- TASS commentator Valeriy Vavilov writes: The U.N. secretary-general's personal envoy Diego Cordovez has expressed satisfaction with the results of Afghan-Pakistani talks aimed at settling the situation around Afghanistan. He told a news conference in Geneva that the talks in Kabul and Islamabad had made it possible to break the deadlock. He added that a package of unambiguous, clear, promising agreements had been worked out, which made it possible to find a concrete solution to the problem. The U.N. representative, who has been the mediator in these talks, thus already sees real prospects for a settlement.

A huge contribution towards such a settlement has been made by the Government of the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan (DRA). The Afghan side has exerted maximum efforts, made most concrete proposals and displayed good will. As a result, accord has been reached on many acute issues and mutually acceptable wordings have been found for the future agreement on non-interference, international guarantees, and the voluntary returning of refugees.

There have emerged prospects for hammering out also the other details which could be discussed, as democratic Afghanistan insists, in the course of direct Afghan-Pakistani talks without the mediation of the U.N. representative, although Pakistan continues to object to this.

Things seem to be in a fair way. The accord reached, Cordovez stressed, appeared highly important as it testified to the political will of the sides concerned to make headway towards a settlement. But it also appears that not all welcome the prospect of a settlement of the situation around Afghanistan. As soon as there emerge the slightest signs of subsiding tension and as soon as there emerge, thanks to Afghanistan's constructive and flexible position, prospects for progress, there immediately comes from overseas the peremptory shout: "Step up rather than slacken the undeclared war on the DRA."

Washington's aim clearly is to throw up a barrier in the way of an Afghan-Pakistani settlement, preserve tension on the south approaches to the Soviet Union, and buck the process of stabilizing the situation in the region in order to consolidate the dominant role of the United States which has arrogated the "right" to dictate its will and use the territories of other countries in its strategic military interests. It is also practical action to implement the neoglobalism doctrine and kindle global conflicts. It is these aims that are being served by a U.S. Government program for supplying Stinger missiles to Afghan counter-revolutionaries.

According to THE WASHINGTON TIMES, the program is an important step in executing the "Reagan doctrine" which provides for supporting "fighters against communism". Washington chooses to turn a blind eye to the fact that these "fighters" commit the most heinous crimes, that they kill old people, women and children and that they do not and will not stop short of using missiles to shoot down civilian airliners.

Washington intends to continue reinforcing the barrier to a settlement around Afghanistan. Even today plans are being mooted to send not hundreds but thousands of Stinger missiles and even TOW anti-tank missiles to Afghan bandits.

Even today willingness is being expressed to send, along with the arms, an extra contingent of U.S. instructors to train the bandits in handling them. This U.S. position is conducive not to a settlement around Afghanistan, which overseas they claim they want, but to a flareup of tension and to the aggravation of the conflict and prevents a political resolution of the problem in the interests of the Afghan and Pakistani people.

KARMAL REMARKS AT DRA COUNCIL SESSION CITED

PM041315 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 30 Mar 86 First Edition p 4

[TASS report: "DRA Revolutionary Council Session"]

[Text] Kabul, 29 Mar -- A routine session of the DRA Revolutionary Council was held here today, at which the plan for the economic and social development of the DRA for the current Afghan year (beginning 21 March) was approved and the results of fulfillment of the state plan last year were summed up. B. Karmal, general secretary of the PDPA Central Committee and chairman of the DRA Revolutionary Council, addressed the session.

From the high rostrum of the 27th CPSU Congress, B. Karmal said, M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, once again stressed that the Soviet Union stands wholly on the side of the DRA people in their struggle for independence and social progress and supports Afghanistan's peace-loving and constructive initiatives.

Today we would like once again to state, B. Karmal continued, that the DRA pursues and will continue to pursue a policy aimed at improving relations with neighboring countries and establishing an atmosphere of peace and security in the region, and that it urges its neighbors to contribute to the task of peacefully settling the situation surrounding Afghanistan.

Last year, B. Karmal continues, was a year of most important events in the history of Afghanistan. The holding of the Loya Jirga (the supreme DRA council) and the supreme jirga of border tribes, in which more than 6,000 people participated, showed the growing support for the revolutionary power among all strata of Afghan society and representatives of all of the country's nationalities, peoples and tribes.

The recent scheduled PDPA Central Committee plenum, B. Karmal said, discussed and approved the basic guidelines for the economic and social development of the DRA for 1986-1991. Every Afghan, B. Karmal stressed, must clearly realize that our country's progress and prosperity primarily depend on his contribution and his selfless work. Only by this means can we fulfill the aims of the April Revolution.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC GROUP MEETING CONCLUDES

LD041844 Moscow TASS in English 1738 GMT 4 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 4 TASS -- TASS news analyst Vasiliy Kharkov writes:

A meeting of ministers of commerce of the member countries of the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation (SAARC) that ended in Islamabad on Thursday, showed how the Association operates, [as received] indicated its resolve to achieve lofty aims proclaimed in the constituent declaration when SAARC was formed in December last.

Seven states of South Asia that are the association's members -- India, Pakistan, Bangladesh, Nepal, Sri Lanka, Bhutan, and the Republic of Maldives -- are neighbour countries, have much in common in their historical past, and are now solving similar tasks connected with the consolidation of economic independence. They play a considerable role in the life of the world community, vigorously participating in the Non-Aligned Movement.

External forces are trying to aggravate the situation in the region, to bring elements of confrontation into relations between separate countries, to apply levers of economic and military pressure. But the vital interests of the peoples of South Asia are linked with goodneighbourhood and peaceful coexistence. And the widening and deepening of mutually advantageous economic ties is the priority task in this which is sufficiently confirmed by the very fact that SAARC was formed.

The member countries of the Association have a lot of problems that require united effort to be resolved. Their solution largely depends on the political climate in the region. It is not accidental that the constituent declaration, alongside tasks of social and economic development, advances the demands to end the arms race, to ban nuclear weapons.

The forming of SAARC was met skeptically in the West. Those who bank on power methods tried to call in question the association's effectiveness. The Islamabad meeting showed the viability of SAARC. Its participants declared for joint actions of countries of South Asia in the struggle to establish an equitable international economic order.

The resolution adopted at the meeting contains a call for the widening of cooperation between the Association' member countries and all developing countries, for working out a single approach to the solution of complex social and economic problems faced by them. The ministers of the seven South Asian countries were unanimous in their opinions as to who and why aggravates these problems.

The West is conducting ever tougher financial and economic policies, resorts to protectionism ever more often, and is striving to solve its economic difficulties at the expense of developing countries, which leads to the increase of their external debt, the resolution says.

The establishment of equal commercial and economic ties, devoid of any discrimination, and the ensurance of economic security of states become ever more pressing in the current international situation. And this is linked directly with the ensurance of peace, ending of the arms race, decisive improvement of the entire international situation.

The Soviet Union, which submitted to the United Nations Organisation the memorandum "International Economic Security of States as Important Condition of the Improvement of International Economic Relations," proceeds from the view that peace and development are inseparable. And the interests of socialist and developing countries cannot but coincide in this, too.

FURTHER REPORTS ON WEINBERGER'S ASIAN TOUR

'Arm Twisting' Tactics Cited

LD072036 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1445 GMT 7 Apr 86

[From "The World Today" program presented by Aleksandr Zholkver]

[Text] The enterprises of countries that are becoming involved in U.S. military programs would like to grab their share of profits from the sale of military products. Such projects were discussed in detail during the visit to Japan by Pentagon boss Weinberger. On the Japanese islands, especially the northernmost island of Hokkaido, which is situated in the immediate vicinity of our borders, Weinberger became acquainted with the latest military technology. At the same time he demonstratively directed his binoculars in our direction. The head of the U.S. Defense Department held talks the Japanese premier on the question of using the latest Japanese technology in U.S. star wars plans, according to reports in the Japanese press. Meanwhile the Australian press points out that Weinberger intends to discuss this question in Canberra, where he will visit this week. However, Australian Defense Minister Beazley says that Australia does not support SDI, either from the feasibility point of view or in connection with the consequences it could have for the strategic balance.

So clearly the Pentagon boss, while in the Australian capital will use his tried, and tested trick -- arm twisting.

He is engaged in the same act in Manila, where he arrived this morning. [as heard] As news agencies indicate, at the talks with President Corazon Aquino the main topic of discussion was maintaining the large U.S. military bases in the country; their elimination is being demanded by broad circles of the Philippines public. According to reports, Weinberger also tried to elucidate the position of the Philippines leadership with regard to importing U.S. nuclear weapons. I would point out that the Philippines Vice President Laurel states that his government will conduct policies directed at creating a zone of peace, freedom, and neutrality in Southeast Asia.

Weinberger Leaves Philippines

[Text] Manila April 7 TASS -- U.S. Defence Secretary Caspar Weinberger completed his negotiations with President Corazon Aquino of the Philippines and left Manila by air for Thailand today. Weinberger's visit was marked with mass demonstrations of protest in Manila. The demonstrators demanded immediate dismantling of the U.S. military bases and an end to interference. At a press conference held after the negotiations, Caspar Weinberger said that Washington wanted to give Manila greater "military aid" which is known to be a tool of drawing foreign states into the U.S. strategy.

Arrival in Bangkok

[Text] Tokyo April 7 TASS -- U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger arrived from Manila to the Thai capital today on another leg of his Asian tour.

During the two-day visit to Thailand he will make a provocative trip to the border with Vietnam as well is confer with high-ranking Thai Government officials and servicemen.

The Pentagon chief is going to discuss with them plans to set up "contingency" dumps for U.S. military hardware on Thai soil, which have touched off sharp public protests in Thailand. The BANGKOK POST newspaper said implementing those plans would only aggravate regional conflicts.

KHMER COALITION PROPOSALS SEEN AS 'PROVOCATIVE'

PM071508 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 31 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 4

[B. Vinogradov "International Commentary" under the rubric "Topics of The Day": "The Real Reason for the Interference"]

[Text] It has been reported that a few days ago the leaders of the three groups of the Khmer reaction issued a kind of communique in which they set forth their proposals for a political settlement of the "Cambodian problem."

The provocative nature of this document is quite obvious at first glance. It represents the situation as if there was no lawful government in Cambodia, no government elected by the people, no government which has for more than 7 years now exercised its full authority throughout the country's territory. Furthermore, the reactionary emigre leaders present themselves -- that is, the "coalition government" which has been formed on instructions from outside -- as the main, if not the only, representatives of the Cambodian people. The "coalition government" includes Pol Pot supporters who committed terrible atrocities in Cambodia and are guilty of wiping out over 3 million completely innocent citizens. It is no secret that the Pol Pot military are the main force in the notorious coalition.

And now, suddenly, as if seized by "a desire for national unity and reconciliation," the leaders of the counterrevolution have started talking about dialogue. However, they are not addressing themselves to the PRK Government, but to Vietnam, proposing to the latter to discsuss the procedure for a cessation of combat operations and a plan for forming some kind of "quadripartite government" in Cambodia. Is it necessary to prove the complete absurdity of such a step and its complete lack of validity?

The SRV Foreign Ministry, which has issued a statement in Hanio in this context, has quite correctly assessed the aforementioned "proposals" as a provocation and gross interference in the internal affairs of the sovereign PRK. The statement exposes the simple reason for this step, whose aim is to besmirch Vietnam, hamper the growing trend toward equal dialogue in Southeast Asia, and boost the surviving Pol Pot supporters.

The "initiatives" put forward by the reactionaries are nothing but an attempt to prepare the political conditions for a restoration of the Pol Pot clique's rule in the country, a KCNA commentary notes. The Cambodian people resolutely denounce these intrigues and declare that they will allow no one to interfere in their internal affairs.

A constructive basis for a just settlement of the problems in the said area of Southeast Asia does exist. It is provided by the proposals of the three Indochinese countries which were reaffirmed at the recent conference of the foreign ministers of Laos, Vietnam, and the PRK. These proposals point out that there are two aspects to the settlement, a domestic one and an external one. The PRK Government is prepared to enter into negotiations with individual Khmer representatives and groups abroad about holding general and free elections, but only on the basis that the Pol Pot clique is excluded from this process.

The external aspect consists in the implementation of the accord between the PRK and the SRV on the phased withdrawal of the Vietnamese volunteers. At the same time, all support for the Pol Pot men and other reactionary groups which carry out armed attacks against the PRK must stop. Only on this basis can peace in the region be ensured and an agreement reached on the creation of a zone of peace and stability in Southeast Asia.

To anyone capable of soberly assessing the situation it is obvious that the changes in Cambodia are irreversible. Disregarding the PRK's successed in the national revival and the strengthening of the country's economy and defense capability means deliberately driving the settlement process into deadlock. However, judging by appearances, it is not a settlement that Khmer reaction and its patrons are pursuing. On the contrary, they are interested in fueling tension and are hoping to regain their old positions in Indochina.

If must be said that these are futile hopes.

MORE REPORTS ON BCP CONGRESS PROCEEDINGS

Razumovskiy Speaks

PM071504 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 5 Apr 86 First Edition p 4

[TASS report: "Guest of Varna's Working People"]

[Text] Varna, 4 Apr -- The CPSU delegation headed by N.I. Ryzhkov, member of the Central Committee Politburo and chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers, which is participating in the work of the 13th BCP Congress, today familiarized itself with the lives and achievements of the working people of Varna -- a large industrial, scientific, and cultural center in socialist Bulgaria.

In the morning the Soviet guests visited the "Cherno More" Scientific and Production Combine, which produces radio navigation apparatus. They familiarized themselves with the work of the front-ranking enterprise and its output, a considerable proportion of which is exported to the USSR. The combine's leaders spoke of plans for intensifying production processes on the basis of the introduction of the achievements of scientific and technical progress. N.I. Ryzhkov signed the visitors book, wishing the labor collective great successes in further developing production.

A Bulgarian-Soviet friendship rally was held at the enterprise at which G.P. Razumovskiy, delegation member and member of the CPSU Central Committee, spoke. On the CPSU delegation's behalf he cordially congratulated the workers, engineering and technical workers, and the combine's entire collective.

The work of the 13th BCP Congress, he said, is of intense interest to Soviet Communists and all Soviet people. The speech by Comrade Todor Zhivkov, general secretary of the BCP Central Committee, the Central Committee Report, and the delegates' speeches revealed the essence of the profound and truly revolutionary changes which socialism has brought to Bulgaria's ancient soil. The creative energy of a people inspired by socialism has wrenched the country out of its backwardness and turned it into a state with developed industry and agriculture and a high level of education, science, and culture. People's Bulgaria enjoys respect in the international arena and is a strong link in the socialist community.

The speaker went on to talk about the work of the 27th CPSU Congress, which was a truly outstanding event. The congress was held in the spirit of Leninist traditions and an atmosphere of party principledness and Bolshevik truth, provided clear and politically accurate answers to the fundamental questions which life has set the party and Soviet society, and armed people with a clear view of the prospects for social development.

The core of the congress was the CPSU Central Committee Political Report delivered by M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee. The congress documents, the resolutions it adopted, and the delegates' speeches were distinguished by profound realism, innovatory boldness reinforced by sober calculation, and unshakable conviction in the inexhaustible potential of the socialist system and the masses' creativity.

The main political result of the work of the 27th congress was the ratification of the general line of the CPSU's domestic and foreign policy -- the line of accelerating the country's socioeconomic development and strengthening world peace.

By helping each other and through joint efforts the fraternal countries have an opportunity to implement the large-scale plans outlined by our parties' congresses and the tasks of making fuller use of socialism's advantages in conjunction with the scientific and technical revolution. And therein lies the vital strength of the socialist community, the strength of the unity of our Marxist-Leninist parties, and the triumph of proletarian socialist internationalism.

In developing socialist economic integration and in implementing the Comprehensive Program for Scientific and Technical Progress direct collaboration among enterprises and sectors of the CEMA countries, the deepening of direct economic ties, and the creation of joint associations, design bureaus, and laboratories are now increasingly important. It is gratifying to recognize that the USSR and Bulgaria are in the front ranks of this movement.

In the broad spectrum of Soviet-Bulgarian ties a special place is occupied by direct contacts between people and labor collectives. The constant mutual enrichment of all the fraternal parties and countries with the thoughts, ideas, and experience of socialist building and the putting into practice of this experience are the socialist world's immense reserve. The CPSU will continue to promote the development of this life-giving process in every possible way. Economics and science, culture and education, defense and foreign policy -- today there is no sphere where our cooperation has not developed dynamically and fruitfully.

The close cooperation between our Marxist-Leninist parties -- the CPSU and the BCP -- is at the heart of Soviet-Bulgarian relations. The meetings between M.S. Gorbachev and T. Zhivkov in Moscow and Sofia and their talk during the 27th CPSU Congress confirmed that these genuinely fraternal ties are on the ascendant. They are steadily strengthening and developing for the good of our countries and peoples and for the good of socialism and peace.

Now that the arms race unleashed by imperialism is jeopardizing the future of human civilization, the socialist countries are striving to use every opportunity for normalizing the international situation and stopping material preparations for war. A conference of the Warsaw Pact Political Consultative Committee was held in Sofia last October. Held on the eve of the Soviet-U.S. summit in Geneva, it made it possible to work out the allied states' joint line according with current conditions in the struggle to remove the nuclear threat and ensure a turn for the better in European and world affairs.

Socialism unreservedly rejects war as a means of resolving contradictions among states. Our countries are seeking a way out of the prevailing situation along fundamentally different lines. Today we cannot live by the categories of the past or rely on force of arms. This was clearly stated once again at the 27th CPSU Congress and at the 13th BCP Congress. the specific and realistic program for eliminating nuclear and other mass destruction weapons set out in the 15 January statement by the general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee and the principled foundations for the creation of a comprehensive international security system formulated at the 27th CPSU Congress have rightly been assessed in the world as a new contribution to [slovo v] peace policy.

International security in our day means the possibility of coexistence and the tranquil and peaceful development of all countries irrespective of their political or social systems. This approach, as is well known, has its opponents. For the moment it does not seem that U.S. ruling circles and the U.S. NATO allies are prepared to eschew their militarist line and their attempts to dictate their own conditions. On the contrary, they are continuing to cling to the policy of strength and confrontation and are creating a new threat to peace in preparing to transfer the arms race to space.

With stubbornness worthy of better things the United States is refusing to support the Soviet initiatives, including the initiative on the complete ending of nuclear weapons tests as the first step on the road toward curbing the nuclear arms race.

Our country, collaborating with the fraternal socialist countries and all countries and peoples, will continue to build up efforts to ensure universal security. We will not move from the course of maintaining and strengthening peace -- this was clearly and definitely stated by Comrade M.S. Gorbachev in his 29 March speech this year.

In conclusion, G.P. Razumovskiy said that Soviet-Bulgarian friendship has deep historical roots. In our time this friendship has become a powerful accelerator of the extensive collaboration and rapprochement between the USSR and Bulgaria and a factor of security and peace. May the friendship between our peoples live through the centuries.

The CPSU delegation then visited the Bulgarian Ship Hydrodynamics Institute -- the largest scientific research institute in the sector. It maintains extensive contacts with similar institutes in the CEMA countries. The guests familiarized themselves with the institute's laboratories.

The warm meetings with Varna's working people were held under the sign of indissoluble Soviet-Bulgarian friendship.

In the afternoon the CPSU delegation returned to Sofia.

Gorbachev Message to Zhivkov

PM071109 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 7 Apr 86 First Edition p 1

[Text] To Comrade Todor Zhivkov, general secretary of the BCP Central Committee.

Dear Comrade Zhivkov!

On behalf of the CPSU Central Committee and on my own account I cordially congratulate you on your reelection to the high post of general secretary of the BCP Central Committee. Soviet people know and value your great contribution to the process of socialist building in Bulgaria, the deepening of collaboration between our countries, and the strengthening of socialism and peace.

Lively interest was aroused in the Soviet Union by the work of the 13th BCP Congress and its decisions aimed at accelerating the socioeconomic development of Bulgaria, whose prestige in the international arena is constantly growing. We value the Bulgarian Communists' concern that the indissoluble Soviet-Bulgarian friendship should flourish eternally. For our part, we will continue tirelessly to strengthen the all-around cooperation between our parties, countries, and peoples and their political and ideological unity on the basis of the principles of Marxism-Leninism and socialist internationalism.

I wish you, Comrade Zhivkov, your comrades in the leadership of the party and country, the Communists, and all Bulgarian working people success in attaining new heights in the development of the economy and culture and the enhancement of the people's prosperity, as planned by the 13th BCP Congress.

With communist greetings,

M. Gorbachev,

General secretary of the CPSU Central Committee

Zhivkov Closing Remarks

PM071501 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 7 Apr 86 First Edition p 4

[Special correspondents B. Averchenko and L. Zhmyrev report: "The 13th BCP Congress Has Ended"]

[Text] Sofia, 6 Apr -- The 13th BCP Congress ended in Sofia yesterday evening. It elected the party's new leadership organs: the BCP Central Committee and the BCP Central Control and Auditing Commission.

Todor Zhivkov delivered a brief concluding address. He noted that the 13th BCP Congress gave concrete form to and enriched the party's program in the new conditions of the domestic and international situation. The paths and tasks for the country's further development along the socialist path were defined. Our congress is oriented toward the future. The changes we are implementing will create the preconditions for Bulgaria to become a highly developed socialist state capable of meeting the challenge of the 21st century.

The congress' work was centered on questions of the acceleration of scientific and technical progress. During these days our people's readiness to fulfill the party's intentions has been demonstrated with new force. We are on the right path. The Communists, millions of working people, and our young people are full of faith in the implementation of the plans outlined. The realistic nature of these plans is based on our active participation in further integration and cooperation with the fraternal countries. Our plans are realistic because we rely on friendship, collaboration, and rapprochement with the Soviet Union, which has a vast economic, scientific, and technical potential.

The successful implementation of our congress' decisions, the BCP Central Committee general secretary went on to say, will help to improve our people's life. Concern for people and for satisfying their growing needs permeated all our congress' work.

We realize that considerable difficulties lie ahead. In order to fulfill our plans, we must work much and selflessly. Now more than ever before we need a high level of organization, order, and discipline. Tremendous work is also needed, tremendous in its quality.

In conclusion Todor Zhivkov thanked all the working people for their warm approval and support for the congress decisions. He also thanked the foreign delegations which took part in the forum and which expressed solidarity with Bulgarian communists. The speaker gave assurances that the BCP will always be true to tis international duty and will make its contribution to the cause of strengthening peace.

The 13th BCP Congress was declared closed.

The "Internationale" rang out in the auditorium.

ZHIVKOV CONGRESS SPEECH, BCP REPORT CITED

PM041416 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 3 Apr 86 First Edition pp 4-5

[Tass Report: "13th BCP Congress: Speech by Comrade Todor Zhivkov"]

[Text] T. Zhivkov, general secretary of the BCP Central Committee, delivered a speech at the 13th BCP Congress which opened today. It expounds fundamental questions of party policy concerning the further building of developed socialist society in Bulgaria and the party's foreign policy activity.

The speaker emphasized that the 13th BCP Congress will examine problems concerning the country's development in the next 15 years, the final years of the 20th century.

From the viewpoint of domestic life these are acute and immediate problems concerning the all-around progress of socialist society and fundamental changes in its economy, policies, culture, way of life, and management -- to put it briefly, in all spheres of life. The main thing for us today is to implement a scientific and technical revolution, which will make it possible to utilize even more the advantages of the socialist system and also to deepen socialist democracy and satisfy increasingly fully the people's material, social, and spiritual needs. This is our course. The BCP and all working people will apply all their efforts to implement it.

From the viewpoint of international relations, we have the fundamental problem of preserving peace on earth and saving mankind. The arms race, whipped up by the most reactionary circles of imperialism, is presenting mankind with the alternative of either surviving or perishing in the flames of a nuclear war.

From the viewpoint of the development of socialism, we have the problems of mastering the dialectics of contemporary socialist social development and further strengthening the interconnection between the plans of communist parties and the aspirations of millions of working people.

The 27th CPSU Congress was a historic event in the socialist world's development. If we were to define its significance briefly, it could be summed up as follows: Acceleration and the achievement of a new qualitative level in the development of socialist society in the USSR. The 27th CPSU Congress will play an exceptionally important role for the dynamic economic and political development of the world socialist system, for the implementation of the Leninist course of peaceful coexistence between states with different social systems, and for cooperation and peaceful competition for the benefit of mankind.

A BCP delegation attended the 27th CPSU Congress. We, T. Zhivkov stressed, returned from Moscow inspired and even more fully resolved to continue the line of socialist-building in Bulgaria and to really effect a historic breakthrough in our country too so as to lead Bulgaria to greater heights of progress. I was filled with this determination as we got ready for the 13th BCP Congress. We are convinced that we are well prepared for it.

A guarantee of this is provided by the party's theoretical and practical work since the 12th congress and particularly since the BCP Central Committee February (1985) and January (1986) Plenums.

To provide a generalized evaluation of the period under review it has to be said that, despite the difficulties caused not just by the complexity of the problems we were solving but also by our own mistakes and shortcomings, this was a fruitful period. Implementing the program adopted by the BCP for building developed socialism, the party and the working people basically fulfilled the tasks set by the 12th congress. When the 10th party congress adopted this program, we proceeded from the belief that that party had not said the last word, that life is more complex and richer. Practice has shown that building a developed socialist society is a much lengthier process than we had imagined.

In the process of the building of developed socialist society, production relations improve still further and the advantages inherent in socialism as the first phase of the communist socioeconomic formation are displayed with growing strength. At the same time, the shoots of communism appear already under socialism, in the course of its building and improvement, and preconditions are created for the gradual transition to communism. Marxism-Leninism is an eternally living teaching. It develops and is enriched simultaneously with the development of the historical process and world revolutionary experience. Our party perceives it as its international duty to study and interpret communist parties' theoretical and practical experience, and primarily the CPSU's experience. For its own part, the BCP strives to make its contribution to the common treasurehouse of the study and development of socialist society. This was the goal pursued by our party's theoretical and practical activity during the period under review.

Almost 30 years have passed since the BCP Central Committee April (1956) plenum. It marked the beginning of the BCP's general political line. The plenum effected a profound turnabout in our development. It restored Leninist norms and principles in the life of the party and society and turned the party face to face with the demands of the objective laws governing the economy, politics, and all aspects of life, with the interests of the people.

Bulgaria has achieved rapid and steady rates of economic growth. The value of fixed capital in the national economy increased tenfold in 1956-1985, social labor productivity increased 8.4 times, and national income increased eightfold. Profound changes occurred in the structure of industry. Sectors like metallurgy, machine building, chemical industry, and the power industry, which are so important for the country's economy, are developing at preferential rates. Rapid rates of development are typical of electronics, microelectronics, robot building, and the production of electric trucks. There has been a sharp increase in the level of the people's education and culture.

Our successes are indisputable. At the same time, we are aware that a number of factors, which previously furthered our progress, have now exhausted their potential. Our party and people are now facing new tasks. It can be said that the scientific and technical revolution today is a law-governed phenomenon. For us the question is as follows: Implementing the scientific and technical revolution means building a developed socialist society, and building a developed socialist society means implementing the scientific and technical revolution. The Central Committee February (1985) and January (1986) Plenums occupy an exceptionally important position in the life of the party and the country. They elaborated new concepts of scientific and technical policy and outlined ways and methods for implementing it.

We understand well that history has allowed us only a brief period to accomplish this. It is within this brief period that we have to lead the country to advanced positions. The question no longer involves just an awareness of the significance of modern scientific and technical progress. Profound changes are necessary. To put it figuratively, we must "harness" the scientific and technical revolution.

This congress is setting the task of accelerating the rate of economic development, making it even more dynamic and making maximum use of all the factors of intensive growth. So what are the factors promoting the achievement of this objective? Science comes first and foremost. It has already made a certain contribution to socialist Bulgaria's economic and sociopolitical development. At the same time, under the fundamentally new circumstances in which we are at present, we must be clearly aware that what is needed is a qualitative turnabout in our thinking and in the understanding of the role played by science in social life.

A divergence -- and a dangerous one, at that -- will develop between realities and our intentions unless we implement changes in the material base of science, and its organization and management, in its cadre potential, and in the forms of methods of incentives for scientific creativity, unless we create conditions for the rapid and widespread introduction of our own and other countries' scientific achievements into production and other spheres of practical work. It must be said openly that, despite our efforts and individual successes, our science is detached from practice to a considerable extent. It has yet to become a universal production force which drives and inexorably spurs ahead all spheres of social life. The scientific front must be totally restructured. Its organizational structure, its material and technical re-equipping, its supply of cadres, and particularly its research content must be resolutely brought into line with the integrated strategy for Bulgaria's technological re-equipping and socioeconomic development during the Ninth 5-Year Plan period and in the period through the year 2000.

The experience of the Soviet Union and other countries shows that, in our priority spheres of scientific and technical progress, technological centers must provide organizational unity between fundamental and applied research and the experimental base and must have a component for the development of the necessary original devices and experimental production sectors.

The fraternal socialist countries' efforts are currently channeled toward the creation and assimilation of scientific and technical achievements. The Comprehensive Program for CEMA Countries' Scientific and Technical Progress Through the Year 2000 is a qualitatively new factor for the deepening of integration in this sphere. We have a vital interest in the complete fulfillment of the commitments adopted by our country and in the maximum utilization of scientific achievements in socialist countries.

In the development of our science and technology we must follow the line of establishing closer ties with the Soviet Union. Here it is also necessary to seek out forms of cooperation and integration similar to the ones we are already creating in industry.

Questions of the technological renewal of production and the improvement of the national economy's structure are coming to the fore today. Efforts must be aimed at the development of electronics and bioengineering and at the production and application of new materials.

As far as the structure is concerned, the role of machine building as the fundamental factor of scientific and technical progress will increase still further in the coming period. We will continue to place stress on the development of the electronics industry and primarily on the production and introduction of cybernetic automated systems. This will make it possible to resolve the main quesiton of the automation of our industry, where we still lag seriously. The fundamental question of the development of our electronics industry concerns maximum unification with the CEMA countries.

It is necessary to continue the line of steady development of the chemical industry. Heavy machine building capacities are to be commissioned. Any delays here can lead to enormous losses. Urgent problems involving the renewal of the technical and raw materials base also exist in other sectors of the national economy. Nor can there be any deferring of the questions of output quality, technological and financial discipline, and the improvement of manpower skills. All this generates the need for a coordinated solution to questions concerning the technological renewal of production and the implementation of structural changes.

T. Zhivkov went on to dwell on questions concerning the formulation and consolidation of the principles of self-management by enterprises and organizations and its speediest practical implementation. I want to re-emphasize from the congress rostrum, he said, that a heavy blow will be dealt to our political and socioeconomic strategy unless we create in practice all the conditions necessary for ensuring that economic organizations and scientific links can really function as self-managing organizations. The task is to overcome the departmental approach in the economy, eliminate bureaucracy, and switch to a new system of planning and management.

A self-managing organization, based on socialist property entrusted to it and resolving state tasks, must enjoy all the necessary rights enabling it to make independent decisions in the spheres of the planning and development of production, trade, and scientific and experimental activity. It is obvious that we are not talking about some kind of cosmetic measures, but of qualitative changes.

The principle of self-management, which we consider to be of exceptional significance at the present stage of our development, currently encompasses only the economy and science. It likely that life will demand the gradual establishment of self-managing organizations also in other spheres -- in accordance with their specific nature, of course. The objective is to ensure that education is even more closely linked with science, science with education, culture with science, and so on.

The main driving force of production under socialism is the satisfaction of the people's needs. It is incumbent upon all who elaborate and apply our socioeconomic policy and upon all self-managing organizations to bring production into line with the needs and demands of the domestic and international markets in terms of quantity, variety, and -- of course -- quality. This will ensure that our output is competitive. It follows from this that the economic machinery must be an effective means for expanding competition among socialist enterprises and for boosting their competitiveness. It must take into account the interests of both consumers and commodity producers. This is how we perceive the philosophy of the economic machinery.

The development of the national economy now also makes exceptionally high demands in other spheres. Production and social relations have become so complex that all dilettantism and all improvisations in management are ruled out. The ensuring of high standards of professionalism in the activity of management cadres at all levels is already becoming a political question of paramount importance. It is necessary to constantly improve the style and methods of leadership. It is necessary to resolutely improve the economic information system. A merciless struggle must be waged against all distortions of this information, against unrealistic reports and ostentation. Our economy needs no varnishing. Our task is not to conceal weakness and shortcomings, not to cover up the factors causing them, but to overcome and eliminate them, to boost the efficiency of the entire economy everywhere.

The avenues we have mapped out in the spheres of economic development, scientific and technical progress, and improvement of organizational structures and management machinery are not an end in themselves. They are objectively necessary for the implementation of our social policy, with man and his happiness and prosperity at its center. This is the basis of our plans and all the BCP's initiatives.

Social policy's central place in our strategy is determined by the humanitarianism of socialist ideas and the humanitarian nature of our system. It is no accident that it displays the fundamental principle of socialist society, for whose sake it was created and for whose sake it develops -- the principle of social justice. When our party first led the workers, peasants, and people's intelligentsia in the struggle against the bourgeois system, we promised the people social justice and equality. Have we deceived the working class and the working people? No, we have not. The party has kept its word. People in socialist Bulgaria today are together instead of being one against the other.

The fundamental basis of equality is the socialist principle of distribution according to the quantity and quality of labor. There is not and there cannot be any other basis of social equality at the present stage.

Any violation of the distribution principle "From each according to his abilities, to each according to the quantity and quality of labor" inevitably leads to a violation of equality. Such violations of the socialist principle of distribution and any wage leveling create serious difficulties both in the implementation of social policy and in educational work and ideological activity. They lead to stagnation and deformations. The problem now is to review the entire system of labor remuneration and create flexible methods for wage determination which would correspond to actual results and the actual contribution made by every individual worker.

It is written in the 12th party congress decisions that one of the important tasks of social policy is to comprehensively satisfy the working people's material and cultural needs in line with their growing purchasing power. This stipulation demands that we stimulate people's labor activeness and satisfy their desire to live better on the amount they earn. We will continue to observe the demand that a significant part of social consumption funds is expended in proportion to needs. This is fair and humane. Social funds, however, must not undermine the effect of the principle of material motivation, which plays the main and determining role under socialism.

The new approaches and tasks in social policy present in a new light the question of combatting negative phenomena. It msut be admitted that some negative phenomena in our life have acquired the features of social deformations. They profoundly offend people's ideas of social justice and equality and diminish the power of our ideals. Our people, working class, agricultural workers, intelligentsia, and young people are justified in demanding from their authorities measures and guarantees offering protection against distortions and deformations alien to the nature of the new social system.

The frank, and for some people impartial [nelitsepriyatnyy], conversation that is now under way within the party and in the country testifies that this task -- to wage a resolute struggle against negative phenomena and social deformations in our society -- is not a [short-lived] campaign or an isolated operation. It is part of the task to create an atmosphere in which everyone must benefit according to merit and everyone must occupy the position he has earned by his personal qualities and deeds.

In the period between congresses the party did extensive theoretical and practical work in this direction. It culminated in the adoption of the new Labor Code and the approval of regulations for self-managing organizations. We do not consider that everything has been done, and that from now everything will run smoothly and without problems. We are, however, in a position to say: Labor collectives and working people in socialist Bulgaria today enjoy rights and opportunities they have never had throughout our history. Not many peoples in the contemporary world enjoy such rights and opportunities. This is a remarkable accomplishment and achievement by the party and the people, and we must sacredly preserve our new labor constitution.

We are entering a new stage in the expansion of socialist democracy.

We are advancing, making creative use of the Leninist principle of democratic centralism. This, and this alone, provides the basis for combining the broadest democracy with centralized management, and freedom of creative labor with the necessary social discipline. This will protect us from bureaucratic phenomena which could develop even in self-managing organizations.

In the period that lies ahead it is necessary to ensure a normal and natural process for the shaping and functioning of self-managing organizations and their leadership structures. The main thing here is to guarantee the right of every working person, be he a member of the BCP or the Bulgarian National Agrarian Union, or a nonparty person, to occupy a leading position on the strength of his political, professional, and creative qualities. The widespread application of the competition principle is exceptionally important. We already have some practical experience in this respect, and we also have quite a few successes. There are, however, also quite a few instances which bring the very idea of competitions into disrepute.

I want to emphasize in particular the role of trade unions. In the process of the shaping and functioning of self-managing organizations, the trade unions must be the guarantee of public interests and the working people's rights. A proper struggle must be launched for the observance of rights and obligations, for order and discipline.

The sacred concept of "servant of the people" has been forgotten by many. The time has come to stop just saying that rights and obligations are inseparable, and that order and discipline are not a matter of consent and goodwill. It is the duty of the public, of all state and party organs and organizations, and of all Communists to impose order in all spheres of social life. Responsibility, order, and discipline -- these constitute the inalienable foundation of life. And let no one expect any liberalism or any privileges at all relieving him of the obligation to be a proper citizen of socialist Bulgaria.

The role of social information is increasing immeasurably now, when we are involving many new people in the process of management. Without such information neither leading cadres nor working people will be in a position to correctly substantiate their opinions and initiatives. This means that there is a need for publicity for decisions that have been made and measures that have been approved, which are not and cannot be the preserve of the elected aktiv or of a leader's personal entourage.

Great importance also attaches to the question of criticism and self-criticism. We still tolerate suppression of criticism and some people's attempts to place themselves beyond the reach of criticism. We have had plenums, report memorandums, partywide and nationwide discussions which have helped us to overcome a number of weaknesses in our activity. And I think that it is now clear to us all that the time has come to abandon our liberalism and to make criticism one of the driving forces of our development.

Our party will continue to provide even more resolutely and effectively the necessary guarantees ensuring that social democracy exerts its fruitful influence on all aspects of life.

The turnabout which we must accomplish, T. Zhivkov went on, depends to a decisive extent on the unity and combat capability of the party and on the level of its leading role. Our party has at its disposal everything it needs to head the processes of renewal, to establish a new economic, political, and ideological climate, and to ensure lofty social activeness and creativity by the masses in the struggle to accomplish the scientific and technical revolution and improve socialist social relations.

At the present stage of party organizational and ideological work it is necessary to introduce qualitatively new elements and to apply forms, methods, and a style of work in line with the new conditions.

What are the basic elements of this restructuring? We will ensure the enhancement of the party's leading role not by expanding and intensifying directive methods but by intensifying the scientifically substantiated and strategic nature of work by central party organs and expanding the initiative of party organs and organizations, attentively heeding the working people's opinions.

We must all thoroughly understand that the enhancement of the party's leading role will take place primarily by enhancing the role and responsibility of grassroots party components at enterprises, educational establishments and scientific organizations, and in all spheres.

Constraint and routine are a current feature of the life of many organizations. Stage-managed speeches gloss over the urgency of problems. An atmosphere of passiveness and equanimity, of ostentation and pretension is created. It is necessary to bear in mind Lenin's demand concerning the need to oppose sensationalism. It is necessary to engage in direct and living practical work, particularly in primary party organizations.

Today it is incumbent on every Communist to participate, according to his strength and potential, in the implementation of the country's scientific and technical strategy. Participation in the scientific and technical revolution is, in our view, primarily a political question, a question of people's interrelationships and interests.

It is necessary to seriously improve work with cadres. How will we, under the new conditions, seek out and select suitable and efficient people? Such people are to be found everywhere in Bulgaria. We can find them in the course of practical work, relying on primary party organizations and labor collectives. We are all perfectly aware that none other than the collective knows best the capabilities of every one of its members, knows best his positive qualities and his shortcomings. The main thing is to evaluate the work of cadres not by individual mistakes and successes but by the overall results of their work.

We must be attentive toward failures in the work of individual leaders and must make principled decisions in every specific instance, regardless of official position or past services. There is a pressing need for wide publicity both for real successes and for sanctions imposed.

The restructuring of party and organizational work also applies to the party membership. The Central Committee Report shows that the party is correctly regulating its membership. We will continue to consolidate its nature as a workers party, to expand the participation of party members in all spheres of social activity, and to increase the influx of young people into the party. It is particularly important at this time to create a powerful party nucleus among scientific workers, engineering and technical cadres, and highly skilled specialists.

The party counts on active and assertive ideological work in all spheres of social life in the struggle for radical changes in the base and superstructure, the struggle for its development. The enhancement of the role played by the human factor in our development is the main task on the ideological front at the present stage.

The development of Marxist-Leninist ideology must march in step with innovative questing on the part of party thinking and the social sciences, must express the creative spirit of the Marxist-Leninist teaching, and must educate in this spirit. At the same time, we must pursue with unflagging energy the struggle for the purity of our ideals, the struggle against attempts by bourgeois ideology and propaganda aimed at eroding the values of socialism. The speaker noted in particular the growing importance of the social sciences for the further elaboration and implementation of the party's political course.

These, T. Zhivkov emphasized, are the main paths and tasks of the development of the Bulgarian People's Republic during the Ninth 5-Year Plan period and in the period through the year 2000. Our prospects are part of the general prospects of the socialist world, social progress, and the peoples' struggle for a better and just life. We are convinced of the triumph of the communist ideals.

The victory of the Great October Socialist Revolution put an end to domination by imperialism and marked the beginning of a new era in world history. The emergence of the world socialist system fundamentally changed the correlation of forces in the international arena and blocked the attempts by imperialism to reverse the wheels of history.

In our time capitalism is still a strong and dangerous opponent. The imperialist states are making efforts to create a common front against socialism, the international communist and workers movement, the national liberation forces, and the forces of progress. The monopolist bourgeoisie is seeking a way out of the crisis by attacking working people's rights and the freedom and sovereignty of independent states.

The most reactionary circles of imperialism are cold-bloodedly preparing the destruction of mankind. Imperialism, in its desire to remain in the saddle of history, resorts to all kinds of means, including militarism which, as Comrade M.S. Gorbachev pointed out at the 27th CPSU Congress, is becoming the ugliest and most dangerous monster of the 20th century.

In the late seventies the United States and its allies embarked on a course of confrontation, of unleashing a vehement anticommunist campaign. But they have not dared to cross the line beyond which the life of mankind could be at stake. Why? Because of the existence of the world socialist system and the cohesive and combat-capable Warsaw Pact Organization. Because the Soviet Union, with its vast economic, scientific, and military potential has achieved a historic gain -- equilibrium with the forces of imperialism in the military sphere. There is no doubt that the fraternal socialist countries will do everything necessary to prevent any disruption of the military-strategic equilibrium.

The Bulgarian People's Republic will continue to strengthen its defense capability and to make a contribution to the consolidation of the Warsaw Pact Organization.

The prevailing situation in the world gives no grounds for complacency. The U.S. Administration continues to whip up the arms race. Disregarding peace proposals, including the unilateral moratorium, the United States is conducting new nuclear tests and is preparing to turn peaceful outer space into a theater of military operations. Ignoring the realities of the contemporary world, U.S. imperialism is trying to pursue a stategy of neoglobalism which, as recent events testify, leads to destabilization of the entire international situation in general. This is just one step away from a nuclear conflict.

This is why today the problem of peace and war is the ultimate problem. The fate of not just the socialist countries but of all the peoples and all people on the planet depends on it. This is because mankind, regardless of racial, national, political, and religious differences, has one common enemy -- the threat of nuclear destruction, and one common task -- the elimination of this threat and the preservation of civilization. The forces existing today which are interested in the strengthening of peace are virtually unlimited in size.

The peace program mapped out by the 27th CPSU Congress offers mankind the prospect of entering the 21st century beneath peaceful skies, free of the terrors of nuclear nightmare and "star wars." No sensible person today can remain indifferent to M.S. Gorbachev's call that nuclear tests be terminated.

Allow me, on behalf of all Bulgarian Communists and the entire Bulgarian people, to voice yet again our fervent support for the new Soviet initiatives which correspond to the aspirations of all peoples on the planet. For us Communists the prevention of nuclear catastrophe and the preservation of universal peace constitute the supreme goal and an expression of the humanitarian nature of our ideology and our system.

The Bulgarian People's Republic will continue to make a contribution to strengthening the unity and cohesion of the fraternal socialist countries, to implementing joint actions in the struggle to avert the nuclear threat and achieve a turn for the better in European and world affairs.

The Bulgarian People's Republic will participate actively in the implementation of the Comprehensive Program for CEMA Countries' Scientific and Technical Progress Through the Year 2000. We will continue to implement a course of all-around cooperation and rapprochement with the Soviet Union, the CPSU, and the Soviet people. Bulgarian-Soviet cooperation is entering a qualitatively new stage. The future holds exceptionally great opportunities at all levels and in all spheres.

Profoundly committed to the principles of internationalism, the BCP attaches enormous significance to the development of mutual relations with all socialist countries. Full and fruitful ties between the socialist states are exceptionally important in the present tense international situation and the struggle for the strengthening of peace. They are particularly necessary because we all face big and complex tasks of intensifying and increasing the efficiency of social production.

The BCP is developing and will constantly deepenits ties with the international communist and workers movement, of which it is a part. In this activity the party proceeds from the premise that, under contemporary conditions, our movement has no other task more important than the salvation of human civilization.

We are in favor of further strengthening interaction and solidarity with the different streams of the workers movement, socialist and social democratic parties, revolutionary-democratic and national liberation movements, international organizations, agrarian parties, trade union, women's, and youth organizations, and antiwar and antinuclear movements. We are obliged to do this by the command of the age -- to preserve and strengthen peace.

Our positions in relations with developing countries are invariable. We feel solidarity with the struggle against imperialism and neocolonialism, against racism and apartheid. We fully support the demands by developing countries for the restructuring of international relations on a democratic and just basis and for the establishment of a new international economic order.

We are in favor of equal and mutually advantageous relations with the developed capitalist countries and in favor of political dialogue and economic, scientific, technical, and cultural cooperation without any discrimination in the interests of peaceful coexistence.

Our party give considerable attention -- and this is completely understandable -- to mutual relations with Balkan states. Our policy in the Balkans is principled, constructive, and realistic. It is and will remain aimed at peace, good neighborliness, and cooperation and at the deepening of mutually advantageous bilateral and multilateral relations.

We will continue to work to implement the initiatives aimed at transforming the Balkans into a zone free of nuclear and chemical weapons. We believe that the need has ripened for Balkan states to elaborate and sign a treaty on the ecological protection of the Balkan Peninsula and to adopt an appeal to all countries and peoples of the European Continent on this question.

We have declared and will continue to declare: Our people, engaged in creative labor, need detente and peace, good-neighborly relations, trust, and mutual understanding more than anything else.

The Bulgarian people have always been famous for their lofty patriotism. Today this gives them even more reason not only to ardently love but also to feel proud of modern socialist Bulgaria. Our people cast off the yoke of capitalism on 9 September 1944. For over 40 years we have been building the new socialist life in our country. We are aware of our mistakes and weaknesses, we perceive clearly what still remains to be done and the paths we still have to travel. But we are rightly proud of what we have achieved on Bulgarian soil. Our people are not alone in the building of socialism in Bulgaria. They march shoulder to shoulder with and enjoy the powerful support of the Soviet Union and the other socialist countries. And the Bulgarian people themselves are making a contribution to their development. They draw inspiration from the heroic struggle waged by the world proletariat, the peoples upholding their freedom and independence, and all progressive forces. They themselves both set an example and support them. This is a practical demonstration of the unity of socialist patriotism and internationalism.

Contemporary socialist Bulgaria is primarily our arena of labor and creativity. There can be no doubt, T. Zhivkov emphasized in conclusion, that the Bulgarian Communists and their loyal allies -- members of the Bulgarian National Agrarian Union and the Fatherland Front, Komsomol members, and all Bulgarian patriots will dedicate their energy, talent, knowledge, and labor in order to elevate our motherland to the level which is persistently demanded by the new age and the struggle for social progress. This is indeed our patriotic and international duty.

The BCP Central Committee's written report to the 13th congress, which was distributed to delegates, emphasizes that during the period under review the party carried out vast political, organizational, and ideological education work among working people and the entire people for the fulfillment of the responsible tasks set by the previous congress. As a result of this, the plan for socioeconomic development during the Eighth 5-Year Plan period was fulfilled on the whole. Bulgaria fittingly marked the 40th anniversary of its 9 September 1944 socialist revolution with these successes.

Economically backward and mainly agrarian in the past, the Bulgarian People's Republic now ranks among the industrially developed states with modern agriculture. The rates of its economic and industrial growth are among the most rapid in the world.

The world is now living under the enormous influence of the 27th CPSU Congress. This event is of crucial significance for the Soviet Union's further upsurge and is a powerful accelerator of the development of the world socialist system and of social progress in the world.

M.S. Gorbachev's Political Report, the new edition of the CPSU Program, the Basic Guidelines for the Economic and Social Development of the USSR, and the other congress documents are an invaluable treasurehouse of ideas and practical experience which inspire and encourage the millions of fighters for peace and socialism on the planet. They offer eloquent proof that Lenin's great party is rising to the challenge of the time fully armed and is mobilizing the inexhaustible energy and potential of the Soviet people for enthusiastic labor to accelerate socioeconomic development, to combine the advantages of the socialist system with the achievements of the scientific and technical revolution, to further expand socialist democracy, and to raise Soviet people's living standards.

During the period since the 12th BCP Congress the activity of the party and the state took palce in an increasingly complex international situation. The United States and NATO stepped up the arms race to a scale hitherto unprecedented in history, launched new military programs, and resorted to the crudest and most aggressive forms of ideological and economic warfare. The U.S. preparations for "star wars," or the so-called "Strategic Defense Initiative," are a key element in the strategy of tension. The implementation of this program would cause an unrestricted and uncontrollable arms race and would break the prevailing strategic balance.

The socialist community countries with their active and constructive policy, their close interaction in the international arena, and their economic and defense potential are the main factor for resisting the strategy of tension and creating the prerequisites for a turn to the better in international affairs.

The great importance of the meeting between M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, and U.S. President R. Reagan in Geneva lies in the fact that it opened the way to the normalization of Soviet-U.S. relations, and thus in international relations themselves as a whole. Great fundamental importance also attaches to the accords reached there and, in particular, to the jointly confirmed viewpoint that nuclear war is impermissible, that any war between the USSR and the United States, be it nuclear or conventional, must be prevented, and that neither side will pursue military superiority over the other.

In the opinion of our party and state, the most important thing now is not to allow actions which could lead to a termination of dialogue. The peoples are justified in demanding that the United States follows the example of the Soviet Union, whose determination and sincere readiness to follow the path mapped out in Geneva have been demonstrated in action.

During the period under review the Soviet Union, the Bulgarian People's Republic, and the other fraternal socialist countries consistently implemented a peace-loving foreign policy. The Sofia conference of the Warsaw Pact States' Political Consultative Committee in 1985 elaborated a broad and all-embracing platform for the solution of the most immediate international problems and the preservation of universal peace. Many of the Warsaw Pact's initiatives have become program demands of various peace-loving forces.

The numerous proposals and bold steps of goodwill unilaterally made by the Soviet Union generate a broad international response and have a major political influence. Comrade M.S. Gorbachev's 15 January 1986 statement particularly stands out among them for its broad and specific nature. This is an inspiring, specific, and simultaneously realistic program which will make it possible to free the planet from mass destruction weapons, and primarily nuclear weapons, by the year 2000. This is a platform according with the fundamental interests of all people in the world. It is an eloquent expression of the Soviet leadership's new dynamic style in international relations and the assertive nature of its foreign policy initiatives which take into account not only its own but also its partner's interests.

During the period under review, the foreign policy activity of the BCP and the Bulgarian People's Republic, conducted in close interaction with the Soviet Union and the other fraternal socialist countries, was aimed mainly at averting the threat of a new war and affirming peaceful coexistence between states with different social systems. The main avenue of the party's and the state's international activity was to strengthen unity and cohesion and deepen cooperation with our closest allies -- the socialist community countries. The ties between the socialist countries' fraternal communist parties are the main driving force in the cause of strengthening relations and deepening mutual understanding and unity of action.

The Bulgarian People's Republic plays a direct part in shaping and implementing the fraternal countries' coordinated foreign policy. The Warsaw Pact, whose term has been extended for an additional 20 years, plays a decisive role in defending the gains of socialism and preserving peace in Europe and all over the world. Our country participates actively in all forums of Warsaw Pact states.

The participation of the Bulgarian People's Republic in CEMA and in socialist economic integration has been and remains of vital importance for the country's successful socioeconomic development. The volume of its commodity exchange with CEMA countries increased by 49.8 percent in 1981-1985; they account for 78 percent of total commodity turnover, with the USSR accounting for 56.3 percent.

We attach particular significance to the Comprehensive Program for CEMA Countries' Scientific and Technical Progress Through the Year 2000. Bulgaria's scientific and technical potential is most directly involved in the program's implementation, and our state will fulfill the obligations stemming from it.

Our participation in new progressive forms of bilateral and multilateral cooperation, including direct ties between enterprises and scientific institutes and the creation of joint economic, science-and-production, and other organizations, offers new opportunities for the successful solution of important tasks of economic development. The creation of the first joint science-and-production associations in machine building by the Bulgarian People's Republic and the USSR is of fundamental importance in this direction.

The basis of our foreign policy is the course of fraternal interaction, friendship, and all-around rapprochement with the CPSU and the Soviet Union. It was given an additional impetus at the meetings and conversations between T. Zhivkov and M.S. Gorbachev held in June 1985 in Moscow and in October 1985 in Sofia. Held in an atmosphere of complete trust and sincere fraternal friendship, they confirmed the unity of views on all questions concerning the building of new society and the foreign policy of the BCP and the CPSU, of the Bulgarian People's Republic and the USSR. New strategic avenues of Bulgarian-Soviet cooperation and rapprochement were mapped out in the course of these meetings and conversations. This makes greater demands on our work in all spheres. Particularly important and large-scale tasks are connected with the fulfillment of the Long-Term Program for the Development of Economic, Scientific, and Technical Cooperation Between the Bulgarian People's Republic and the USSR Through the Year 2000. The historic 27th CPSU Congress gave a new and powerful boost to the deepening of ties between our parties and countries.

We, the BCP Central Committee Report to the congress emphasizes, express the most profound gratitude and sincere thanks to the party of Soviet Communists, the Soviet Union's party and state leadership, and the entire Soviet people for everything they are doing for the development of the fraternal Bulgarian-Soviet friendship and our countries' all-around cooperation. As before, we will march shoulder to shouder with our Soviet brothers in the struggle for peace, for strengthening the unity, cohesion, and might of the socialist community, and for consolidating class solidarity within the international communist and workers movement, the struggle for communism.

GREETINGS EXCHANGED ON HUNGARIAN LIBERATION DAY

Greetings to Hungarians

PM061512 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 4 Apr 86 First Edition p 1

[Text] To Comrade Janos Kadar, general secretary of the MSZMP: To Comrade Pal Losonczi, president of the Hungarian Presidential Council; To Comrade Gyorgy Lazar, premier of the Hungarian Council of Ministers;

Dear Comrades!

The CPSU Central Committee, the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium, the USSR Council of Ministers, and the Soviet people send you, the MSZMP Central Committee, the Hungarian Presidential Council and Council of Ministers, and the fraternal Hungarian people cordial congratulations and best wishes on the 41st anniversary of the liberation of Hungary from fascism.

More than 40 years have passed since the memorable day of 4 April 1945, which was a turning point in Hungary's history. Broad prospects for a new life free of all forms of exploitation and oppression opened up before the Hungarian people as a result of the victory over fascism and the liberation of the country by the Soviet Army.

Embarking on the road of socialist building, the Hungarian working people, under the leadership of the Communist Party and in close cooperation with the Soviet Union and the other fraternal socialist countries, implemented profound political and socioeconomic transformations within a historically short period. Hungary's considerable successes in the development of the economy, science, culture, and the increased well-being of the working people testify to the vitality of Marxism-Leninism and to the advantages and extensive potential of the socialist system.

Soviet-Hungarian relations, based on the principles of Marxism-Leninism and socialist internationalism and sealed by the treaty of Friendship, Cooperation, and Mutual Assistance, are developing dynamically and serve the fundamental interests of the Soviet and Hungarian peoples and the socialist community as a whole. The deepening of bilateral economic relations and of cooperation within the CEMA framework and the implementation of the Comprehensive Program for Scientific and Technical Progress by the CEMA Member-Countries Through the Year 2000 represent an important contribution to the implementation of the course toward accelerated socioeconomic development on which the USSR and Hungary have embarked. The CPSU and the Soviet state will continue to consistently implement the line of further strengthening relations of friendship and all-around cooperation between our parties, countries, and peoples and among all socialist states, as was reaffirmed at the 27th CPSU Congress.

The strengthening of the cohesion and unity of action of the member-states of the Warsaw Pact, which is one of the main factors in the successful struggle for a fundamental improvement of the situation in the world, is of great importance at the present crucial stage of international development in conditions where the reactionary forces of imperialism, and primarily U.S. imperialism, are heightening the nuclear threat. The course of peace and cooperation steered unswervingly by the USSR, Hungary, and the other socialist community countries is reliably countering the aggressive policy of imperialism. Our new peace initiatives, the program for the elimination of mass destruction weapons and the removal of the nuclear threat, and the basic principles for establishing a comprehensive international security system open up real opportunities for curbing the arms race and preserving and strengthening peace.

On the occasion of fraternal Hungary's National Day, we wish you, dear Comrades, the Hungarian Communists, and all working people new successes in implementing the decisions of the 13th MSZMP Congress and building a developed socialist society.

CPSU Central Committee; USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium; USSR Council of Ministers

Hungarians Greet Soviets

PM061450 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 4 Apr 86 First Edition p 1

[Text] To M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee; To A.A. Gromyko, chairman of the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium; To N.I. Ryzhkov, chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers; Dear Comrades! On behalf of the MSZMP Central Committee, the Hungarian Presidential Council and Council of Ministers, and the entire Hungarian people, we express gratitude for your friendly congratulations and best wishes on the occasion of our National Day, the 41st anniversary of the liberation of our motherland.

Marking the 41st anniversary of the liberation of Hungary, we greet the Soviet people with feelings of sincere respect and friendship. Our people honor the memory of the Soviet heroes who gave their lives for Hungary's freedom.

A new society which guarantees all citizens living conditions that are worthy of man has been built in Hungary over the past few decades. The development of socialist industry, profound transformations in the countryside, and social and cultural gains are bright pages inscribed in Hungary's most recent history.

On this day we reiterate our intention to continue to strengthen and expand Hungarian-Soviet relations, which cover all spheres of life and are based on ideas of Marxism-Leninism, the ideas of socialist internationalism, our common aims and interests, mutual advantage, and the desire to further enrich the friendship between the Hungarian and the Soviet peoples.

The Hungarian working people followed with special attention the proceedings of the 27th CPSU Congress, which took place in an atmosphere of exactingness and creativity and analyzed the Soviet Union's domestic and foreign policy and the present situation in the world. The tasks in the accelerated socioeconomic development of the USSR outlined by the 27th congress are a source of inspiration to all champions of social progress and socialism in Hungary and thoughout the world. We assure the Soviet Union of our active support for its consistent peace policy, which was reaffirmed by the 27th CPSU Congress. The Hungarian people are also convinced that socialism will prove its superiority not by force of arms but by the example it sets. The proposals put forward by the Soviet Union in the sphere of disarmament represent a comprehensive program for creating a world free of wars and weapons.

Expressing our gratitude for your best wishes on the occasion of our National Day, the 41st anniversary of liberation, we wish the CPSU Central Committee, the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium, the USSR Council of Ministers, and the fraternal Soviet people new successes in building a developed socialist society and implementing the historic program of peace and creation put forward by the 27th CPSU Congress.

Janos Kadar, general secretary of the MSZMP; Pal Losonczi, president of the Hungarian Presidential Council; Gyorgy Lazar, premier of the Hungarian Council of Ministers

SOVIET ENVOY ON REPERCUSSIONS OF FRG SDI PACT

LD041611 Hamburg DPA In German 1507 GMT 4 Apr 86

[Excerpt] Bonn, 4 Apr (DPA) -- Soviet Ambassador Vladimir Semenov todav personally conveyed a formal criticism of the German SDI agreements to West German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher. Semenov, who was received by Genscher in the foreign Ministry at his own request, announced the possibility of political and defense policy consequences toward the Federal Republic.

The Foreign Ministry had made it known that Genscher rejected the Soviet criticism and expounded the Federal Government's position. The foreign minister explained to the Soviet Ambassador that the Soviet interpretation of the German-U.S. agreements derived from false assumptions.

Genscher stressed that the participation of German firms and research institutes in the U.S. project for a space-based missile defense system was within the framework of international law and also within the 1972 ABM Treaty. In the Soviet criticism, the Germans were accused of participating in undermining the treaty.

In his detailed rejoinder, Genscher expressed the hope that Moscow, on closer examination, would also come to a more just assessment and one corresponding to its own interests. The Soviet Government also must know that Bonn had, from the start, supported the Soviet-U.S. commitment of 8 January 1985, aimed at preventing the arms race in space.

MOSCOW PAPERS REPORT USSR-FRG COOPERATION TALKS

PM080816 [Editorial Report] Moscow PRAVDA in Russian on 6 April 1986 in the First Edition carries on page 4 a TASS report headlined "Cooperation Developing," which reads as follows:

"The 14th session of the USSR-FRG Commission for Economic, Scientific, and Technical Cooperation, under the chairmanship of A.K. Antonov, deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers, was held in Moscow 3-4 April. The FRG delegation was headed by Federal Minister for Economics M. Bangemann.

"It was noted that the existing economic agreements between the two states are being fulfilled and that bilateral trade and economic ties have continued to develop on a mutually beneficial basis.

"The potential for expanding and deepening cooperation in various machine building sectors was analyzed. Questions of mutual collaboration in the sphere of ferrous and nonferrous metallurgy and in the sphere of consumer goods production were discussed. Practical ways for carrying out joint work in these spheres were outlined."

Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian on 6 April 1986 in the Morning Edition carries on page 4 under the general headline "Official Reports" one paragraph on the session -- identical to the first paragraph of the PRAVDA report -- and adds the following:

"At a press conference for Soviet and foreign journalists A.K. Antonov and M. Bangemann gave a positive assessment of the results of the session's work and advocated further developing trade and economic relations between the two countries.

"I.S. Silayev, deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers, received M. Bangemann at the latter's request and held a conversation with him on certain questions concerned with further developing economic cooperation.

"J. Kastl, FRG ambassador to the USSR, took part in the conversation."

COMMENTARY ON HOWE'S VISIT TO DRA 'BANDITS'

LD042224 Moscow TASS in English 2128 GMT 4 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 4 TASS -- Following commentary by TASS writer Aleksandr Bokhonko:

The visits of Western political figures to Pakistan are held following the same scenario, the only difference being that the settings and characters are different, yet all the Western guests without exception believe it to be their duty to visit the camps of Afghan counter-revolutionary bandits, whose number is large in the north-western border province of Pakistan. It was only a few days ago that Edwin Meese, U.S. attorney general, "fraternized" in public with the counter-revolutionary cutthroats. Today their guest of "honour" is Geoffrey Howe, British foreign and Commonwealth secretary.

Taking in the footsteps of his senior overseas partner, upon arrival on an official visit in Islamabad Sir Geoffrey Howe at once met with chiefs of anti-Afghan gangs. He ensured the latter of Britain's support and even went to the Khyber pass, where, as is known, the Pakistani military are trying to suppress by force of arms the actions of the Pashtun tribes protesting against the use of their territory in the "undeclared war" against Afghanistan.

The provocative character of this trip by Sir Geoffrey Howe is obvious. Another point is noteworthy. They in the West in general and in London in particular, talk much about the need for combating terrorism. A lot of high-flown speeches and calls have been made in the Western capitals. Yet in practice this looks quite differently. While talking of the need to put an end to terrorism, the Western politicians never miss a chance to visit the Afghan counter-revolutionaries, who sow death and destruction in Afghanistan. Not only do they visit these camps, but also assist the bandits with money and weapons. Fresh evidence of that is the supply of Stinger anti-aircraft missiles, which has been started through the CIA channels. But how does the West match its word to its deed? At hand is a clear double-dealing of the imperialist powers. They hate the people's revolution in Afghanistan and therefore are making desperate attempts at regaining the positions imperialism has lost in that region.

FURTHER COMMENT ON BUSH'S REGIONAL VISIT

Intentions Criticized

LD061213 Moscow TASS in English 1146 GMT 6 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 6 TASS — Follows commentary by TASS writer Mikhail Krutikhin:

U.S. Vice President George Bush is currently on a tour to the countries of the Arabian Peninsula. He paid his first visit in the tour to Riyadh, the capital of Saudi Arabia. As the London OBSERVER points out today, the U.S. vice president has several objectives. First, to achieve a stabilisation of the prices of oil, second, to try to convince the countries of the region of U.S. invariable support for them, and, at last, to solicit support from several Arab nations for Washington's anti-Libyan campaign.

Before his departure for the Middle East tour George Bush said that the recent trend towards a sharp drop in the prices of oil was becoming a threat to the national interests of the United States. Western observers concluded from that statement that the high-ranking United States emissary would try to pressure the Arab petroleum-exporting countries, in the first place Saudi Arabia, into cutting their oil output and thus help towards stabilizing the oil prices.

Yet such conclusions are, to put it mildly, too hasty. A part of major American firms are known to proceed in their activity from interests that are diametrically opposite to those which the vice-president described as "national". These companies importing oil and oil products in the USA are bending every effort to purchase oil from foreign exporters at the lowest possible prices. The current drop in the prices of oil is, in a large measure, a result of their activity. George Bush himself has indirectly confirmed the controversial character of the interests of those industrial and financial forces, which stand behind the U.S. Administration and determine, in the final analysis, its policy. He said that he would only "listen" to the opinion of the Arab oil producers about the causes making them increase oil output.

The statements by the U.S. vice president strike one as being by far more determined when he touches upon other issues in connection with his Arabian tour. George Bush has again reminded that the USA believes the Persian Gulf area to be a zone of its "vital interests" and commits itself to protect the security of the oil routes running across that area.

This is a familiar stand. Using as a pretext the tensions, which have emerged as a result of the protracted Iran-Iraq war, Washington is building up its military presence in the area of the Persian and Oman Gulfs. Hence the speculation on the preparedness of the USA to shoulder the burden of "preserving the security" of the states of the Arabian Peninsula and promises of military aid.

At the same time it is apt to recall that this "aid" designed allegedly for ensuring the stability of the Arab states, has more than once been used by the American politicos as a lever for crude pressure. It is also apt to recall how U.S. Congress demanded that Amman should display "greater complaisance" in its approach to the American-Israeli plans of separate deals with Tel Aviv, as a prerequisite for arms supplies to Jordan. It must be recalled that the contract for the supply of a large consignment of weapons to Saudi Arabia "hangs poised" in Congress, and George Bush is sure to use that in his attempts at forcing Riyadh to its side in the anti-Libyan campaign and in the attitude to the separate deals with Israel.

Obviously all the aims of the current tour of the American vice president have nothing to do with the real interests of the Arab countries.

Seeks Opposition to DRA

GF071310 Baku International Service in Azeri 1200 GMT 7 Apr 86

[From "Important Developments in the World Last Week" program]

[Text] Vice President George Bush's visits to Saudi Arabia, Oman, Behrain, and the YAR [Yemen Arab Republic] is yet another example of the policy of pressure -- the policy of pressure executed through diplomatic channels. The main objective of Bush's visit, which began near the end of last week, is to sound out the possibility of U.S. use of the military objects possessed by these Arab countries.

However, other additional anxieties exist as well. In addition to forging an agreement on the oil price policy, there is the task of forcing certain countries to support the Afghan counterrevolutionaries in a more active way. Recently, the tendency of the U.S. (?instigators) of the undeclared war against the DRA to further provoke the centers of the Afghan counterrevolutionaries has gradually become more obvious.

USSR ECONOMIC DELEGATION ARRIVES IN LIBYA

LD080524 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 0505 GMT 8 Apr 86

[Text] Tripoli, 8 Apr -- (TASS) -- A USSR Government delegation led by Konstantin Katushev, chairman of the USSR State Committee for Foreign Economic Relations and member of the CPSU Central Committee, has arrived in Libya on a visit at the invitation of the Libyan leadership.

During the visit, questions will be discussed concerning the development of bilateral relations in light of the long-term program for the development of economic, scientific, technical, and trade cooperation between the USSR and the Libyan Jamahiriyah which was signed by Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, and Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi, leader of the Libyan revolution, during the official friendly visit of the Libyan leader to the Soviet Union in October 1985.

LIGACHEV, YAKOVLEV MEET SYRIAN CP DELEGATION

LD071922 Moscow TASS in English 1832 GMT 7 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 7 TASS -- A meeting was held at the CPSU Central Committee today between member of the Political Bureau of the CPSU Central Committee, secretary of the CPSU Central Committee Yegor Ligachev, secretary of the CPSU Central Committee Aleksander Yakovlev, alternate member of the CPSU Central Committee, deputy chief of the International Department of the CPSU Central Committee Karen Brutents and a delegation of the Communist Party of Syria consisting of General Secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Syria Khalid Bakhdash, Deputy General Secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Syria Yusuf Faysal, members of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Syria Ibrahim Bahri, (Daniel Naime), (Khalid Khammami), (Ramu Shaykhu), members of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Syria (R. Kurdi) and (A.W. Rashwani).

During the conversation which passed in a comradely atmosphere, the representatives of the CPSU spoke about the work in the USSR to implement the strategic course at the speeding up of the country's social and economic development set out by the 27th CPSU Congress.

Much attention was paid to the party's foreign policy activity aimed at the solution of the main task facing humanity: the ending of nuclear weapon tests and elimination of nuclear arms, the curbing of the ever more dangerous arms race whipped up by the militaristic circles, safeguarding and consolidation of world peace.

It was stressed that the course of the 27th congress and practical steps of the party to implement it rely on strong support and vigorous constructive efforts of the Communists, of the entire Soviet people.

The Syrian comrades summed up the political line of the Communist Party of Syria which upholds the vital interests of the working class and broad masses of the working people, which, jointly with the Arab Socialist Renaissance Party and other organizations participating in the Progressive National Front consistently supports Syria's independent anti-imperialist policy opposing the U.S.-Israeli aggressive plans, declares for the rallying of all patriotic, democratic forces of the country. They spoke about the preparation for a regular Sixth Congress of the Communist Party of Syria which is to promote the party's cohesion, strengthen its ties with the masses so as to increase the role of the Communist Party of Syria in the struggle against hostile intrigues of imperialism, Zionism and reaction.

The representatives of the Communist Party of Syria declared that the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress set an example of creative application and development of the Marxist-Leninist teaching, of the principled approach to the problems of social development and party affairs and have great international significance, give an impetus to the struggle for peace and social progress. They emphasized that the Communist Party of Syria wholly supports the peaceful foreign policy of the CPSU, the historic initiatives advanced at the 27th CPSU Congress, in the January 15, 1986 statement of Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee.

The participants in the meeting condemned the United States' and Israel's aggressive policy in the Middle East, their sabotaging of the efforts aimed at a just and all-embracing settlement in the region. They declared that this policy fully matches the imperialist concept of "neoglobalism" assumed by the U.S. ruling circles, the concept that envisages interference in internal affairs of sovereign countries, the imposing of U.S. domination on them.

The representatives of the CPSU and the Communist Party of Syria expressed satisfaction over successful development of Soviet-Syrian relations on the basis of the treaty of Friendship and Cooperation between the Soviet Union and the Syrian Arab Republic. It was stated that the CPSU is in solidarity with the anti-imperialist struggle of progressive, patriotic forces of Syria, of other Arab countries.

The representatives of the CPSU and of the Communist Party of Syria confirmed the striving of both parties to strengthen their bonds of friendship and fraternal cooperation on the basis of the principles of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism.

U.S., ISRAEL ALLEGEDLY PREPARING MILITARY OPERATIONS

LD051943 Moscow International Service in Arabic 1600 GMT 5 Apr 86

[From the "Window on the Arab World" program, presented by Aleksandr Timoshkin]

[Text] With Washington's approval, Israel is preparing for military operations against Syria and Lebanon. It is possible this was discussed during talks which Israeli Prime Minister Peres held with U.S. Administration officials in Washington, where they detailed the duties of the two strategic allies.

Israel will participate in U.S. actions against the Libyan Jamahiriyah, but Israel now has to prepare a military strike against steadfast Syria and also against the patriotic forces in Lebanon. Yitzhaq Rabin predicted that Israel will win in a war against Syria. [Passage indistinct]. It seems that the Israeli minister [words indistinct] of the U.S. President that the United States will try to [Passage indistinct].

In addition to the military operations against the Libyan Jamahiriyah, Syria, and Lebanon, the two strategic allies are carrying out a political campaign against the Arabs. (?For this purpose) in particular, Reagan sent two envoys to the Arab world: U.S. Vice President Bush and U.S. Assistant Secretary of State Murphy. They will meet in Riyadh to exchange the information they collect from Saudi Arabia, Oman, the YAR, Bahrain, Kuwaity, the UAE, and Qatar. The U.S. newspapers talked about the aims of their tour, the main aim of which is to protect and consolidate U.S. military, economic, and political positions. Well-informed U.S. observers and journalists say that the principal aim of the [words indistinct] could be summarized in preserving the U.S. right to attack military targets in some Arab countries. Another purpose is to reach more understanding and support by the moderate Arab leaders for Washington's policies in the Middle East.

For instance, according to UPI, Bush intends holding consultations with the leaders of four Arab countries concerning the Libyan-U.S. confrontation. It is no difficult to guesss the nature of these consultations. It is possible that Bush might be able to convince these Arabs to abandon their support for Libya against U.S. military threats.

THE NEW YORK TIMES points out that George Bush will express the concern of Reagan's administration to Saudi Arabia at the negative effect of the reduction of oil prices on U.S. industry. Yet it is known that the United States, more than any other country, helped in creating the current situation in the capitalist oil market.

Bush's and Murphy's tour have nothing to do with establishing peace -- as Washington tries to convince the world -- because the principal issue for the region, which is securing a just political settlement for the Arab-Israeli conflict, is not included in the program set by Washington for Bush's and Murphy's talks with the leaders of the seven Arab countries in the Arab Peninsula and the Gulf.

ANGOLAN PRESIDENT URGES UN ACTION ON S. AFRICA

PM071428 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 30 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 4

[IZVESTIYA press service article: "Trust Undermined"]

[Text] President J.E. dos Santos of the People's Republic of Angola has sent UN Secretary General J. Perez de Cuellar a message in which he urges him to take urgent measures to solve the problems in southern Africa.

In his message he stated that the Republic of South Africa (RSA) has failed to fulfill the conditions of the agreements earlier entered into by Angola for the sake of a peaceful settlement to the region's problems. Pretoria has not ceased aggression against Angola, continues to occupy part of Angolan territory, and is increasing its support for the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola [UNITA] terrorist group. Also no agreement has been reached on a cease-fire between the South-West African People's Organization and the RSA.

The Angolan president noted that the American Administration, which poses as mediator in settling the problems between Angola and the RSA, in reality has shown no interest in contributing to the search for a just and peaceful solution to the problems of southern Africa. What is more, Washington has switched to open military and financial support for UNITA gangs, which carry out sabotage and have not ceased the practice of seizing hostages and of mass murders of innocent citizens. The United States has included the "Angolan problem" in the section of so-called regional conflicts in order to drag out solving the problem of Namibia's decolonization and prolong the existence of the apartheid system. Openly supporting UNITA and the RSA in their aggressive actions against Angola, the president stressed, the Reagan administration has undermined trust in itself as mediator in solving the region's problems.

In the conditions that have taken shape, the Angolan Government believes that the further holding of talks to fulfill Resolution 435 of the UN Security Council on granting Namibia independence and also to achieve security and peace in southern Africa is the responsibility of the UN secretary general. It reaffirmed its willingness to continue diplomatic efforts to decolonize Namibia and establish peace in the region.

Forcing its "mediation" on Angola, Washington has never been interested in seriously holding talks on settling the region's problems. It was Washington that was the author of the infamous "linkage" of the question of Namibia's decolonization with the withdrawal from Angola of the Cuban military contingent, which is there to defend the country against aggression from the RSA. The American Administration has always supported the subversive activities of the Angolan people's betrayers against Angola, Having solemnly received the UNITA chief, Savimbi, recently, Washington is preparing for a meeting with another traitor expelled by the Angolan people -- Holden Roberto. U.S. representatives to the United Nations have repeatedly wrecked the efforts of the international community to stop Pretoria's aggressive actions against Angola. It is clear that in such conditions there can be no talk of any faith in the United States as an "impartial mediator" in settling the problems of southern Africa.

ANGOLA REPORTS DOWNING OF HERCULES PLANES

LD062025 Moscow TASS in English 1952 GMT 6 Apr 86

[Text] Luanda April 6 TASS -- According to a statement of the Defense Ministry of the People's Republic of Angola circulated here, last Thursday Angolan pilots brought down over Bie Province one of the three "Hercules C-130" transport planes that violated the air space of Angola.

The statement pointed out that the intruders had been intercepted by planes of the Angolan Air Force at the moment when they were dropping arms and other munitions to the puppet UNITA group which is on the payroll of the CIA and the secret services of the Pretoria regime.

Several days ago the White House authorized the delivery to the terrorists of a large consignment of "ground-to-air" "Stinger" missiles.

CPSU CABLES CONGRATULATIONS TO ETHIOPIA'S MENGISTU

LD051112 Moscow TASS in English 1046 GMT 5 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 5 TASS - The Central Committee of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the USSR and the Council of Ministers of the USSR sent a congratulatory telegram to Mengistu Haile Mariam on the occasion of the Victory Day holiday of Socialist Ethiopia. The heroic people of your country, who have upheld their freedom and independence in the fight with fascism, are today giving a decisive rebuff to internal and external reactionaries and firmly protecting the gains of the revolution and their right to the peaceful building of a new life. True to the Treaty of Friendship and Cooperation between our countries, the Soviet Union will continue to identify with this struggle by the Ethiopian people.

CONTADORA MEETING 'SMASHED' BY EXIT OF REPRESENTATIVES

LD080958 Moscow Television Service in Russian 0742 GMT 8 Apr 86

[From the "Novosti" newscast]

[Text] The representatives of El Salvador, Honduras, and Costa Rica, under an invented pretext, have halted their participation in the conference of foreign affairs ministers of the member-countries of the Contador Group and the support group with the delegates of the five Central American states. By their demonstrative step, they in effect smashed the work of the conference, which is discussing the position in Central America that has become sharply aggravated recently as a result of the unceasing armed provocations by CIA mercenaries against Nicaragua.

U.S. PLANS TO SEND MILITARY TO TRAIN 'CONTRAS'

LD041821 Moscow TASS in English 1714 GMT 4 Apr 86

[Text] Washington April 4 TASS -- THE WASHINGTON POST newspaper reports that the U.S. Administration is nurturing plans to send several tens of servicemen from among the special Army forces to countries neighbouring on Nicaragua. These are the selfsame "Green Berets" who had won notoriety as ruthless killers during the U.S. aggression in Vietman, and "confirmed" it during the occupation of Grenada. It is planned that they will train the Nicaraguan "contras" in using Washington-supplied weapons and in methods of conducting bandit actions against the people who drove them from Nicaragua. The Somozistas will be trained at "contras" camps in the territories of El Salvador and Honduras. Part of the bandits will take a course of training at U.S. military bases. At the same time plans are being worked out in Washington to bring representatives of the U.S. CIA into training the "contras".

The U.S. Administration's plans to give greater scope to interference in the internal affairs of Nicaragua give rise to mounting opposition of the public and political figure figures. Joseph Brennan, the governor of Maine, speaking of U.S. policy in Central America, has told journalists that the USA in virtually following the way which will lead it to a new Vietnam.

The NBC TV network reports that this year 54,000 U.S. servicemen will take part in exercises in Honduras which are held in direct proximity to the border with Nicaragua. Commenting on joint U.S.-Honduran exercises, Bruce Babbit, the governor of Arizona, has pointed out that this is tantamount to a gradual drawing of U.S. troops into the armed conflict.

Gorbachev Tours Kuybyshev, Meets With People

Moscow TV Coverage

LD072254 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1700 GMT 7 Apr 86

[Report on visit to Kuybyshev by Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, on 7 April; all members of the public participating in recorded conversations are referred to as "unidentified speaker" — from the "Vremya" newscast]

[Text] [Video shows motorcade arriving in Revolution Square in Kuybyshev. Gorbachev gets out of the car and is joined by Muravyev, followed by Raisa Gorbacheva. The crowd is seen applauding; Gorbachev is then seen addressing the crowd.]

[Gorbachev] I have wanted to meet the people of Kuybyshev for a long time. Moreover, it is a very ancient region, one which has been from time immemorial. Well, they say that our state formed around the Volga, but today the people of Kuybyshev still represent a powerful region from an industrial, cultural, scientific, and agricultural point of view. Although, I shall be telling your leaders that the time has come for subsidies to end and for us to stop sending you things here; you must produce more for yourselves.

[Muravyev, standing next to Gorbachev] We shall try.

[Gorbachev] That's what I'll tell you [giggles from crowd].

[Muravyev] So, (?by our common efforts), comrades.

[Gorbachev] What is life like for people in Kuybyshev?

[Unidentified speaker] Good.

[Unidentified speaker] No worse than it is for others. [Video shows Gorbachev stepping closer to the crowd]

[Gorbachev] Now, that's the right answer! [laughter in crowd] When they say good, you know, I feel a little mistrustful, when they say that everything is good, that is. It is never true that everything is good, but in principle, probably, one cannot agree with (?the pace). Our country is vast; it is growing, life is improving, cities are being built, villages are being revived, culture is developing, there are more goods. But there is not enough of all this, not enough. And all these things — what has to be done for there to be more of all this, for it all to be in the service of people, for living conditions to be better — all of this was the focus of attention at the congress as you probably noticed. [voices from crowd concur]

[Unidentified speaker] And how do you like our (?city)

[Gorbachev] You know, I still have not seen it. [laughter all around] Evidently, your city is a large one. I have already been told that the population is between 1.2 and 1.3 million.

[Unidentified speaker] Yes, it's already 1.3 million.

[Gorbachev] Of course, that means the economy cannot be simple.

[Unidentified speaker] We'll have to build more housing.

[Gorbachev] Build even more. We discussed this question — that of housing — the other day in the Politburo. There are a number of questions which must be given priority: housing, food, and the quality of goods. These are probably the most ... There are many other problems, too. Urban transport, medicine, health — all these need to be improved. I would say we must start picking up in the social services sphere; it has been lagging behind. Here, in this Kuybyshev of ours, new works capacities are being built, workshops [tsekha] are being expanded; they are developing, but there is a lag. What are workshops without people? Nothing. However, in order for people to live here, settle down, and work actively, you must have housing. That means you must have a service system — in consumer goods, trade, health, and food. Children must be educated. The people must have somewhere to spend their leisure, recover their energy, and get into a good mood.

[Unidentified speaker] Yes, that's right.

[Gorbachev] That is everything that determines a person's attitude, his mood, his productivity, and so on. Questions in the social sphere have today, I would say, grown more acute, more acute. One must be frank. But once we realize this, then this must be taken into account both up there at the top where they do the planning, and here, where the questions of implementing these plans and the assimilation of the funds allocated for development are tackled. One must also work actively in this sphere.

On the one hand, it seems there is a lack of housing and there are problems with health services and urban transport. But when we start to look at how the funds allocated for this are being used, what do we see? They are being used badly. With this sort of need, we find that housing is not being handed over in time, funds are not being fully utilized, kindergartens and hospitals are taking years to be built. Construction is taking a long time here, and that is a matter for you. I hope the people of Kuybyshev, who are able to work and who have already done a lot for the country — huge capacities have been created here on the Volga by Kuybyshev people within the framework of Kuybyshev Oblast — will try to ensure that these capacities really work.

What was all right yesterday is not enough today. Therefore, we must not concentrate on how things were yesterday, but on what must be done today, and especially tomorrow. You know, everybody says, we are in favor of the congress and we support the party's decisions, then they go back to their place of work and continue working in the same old way.

[Unidentified speaker] But Mikhail Sergeyevich, I...

[Gorbachev interrupts] And this is not because they are against it, but because the most difficult thing is readapting ourselves to new methods, to new attitudes to the matter. Without a new attitude and without new responsibility, without new discipline so that one gives one's heart and soul to the common cause — without this (?things won't get going). You must understand that everyone has to readapt, including the general secretary, down to...

[Unidentified speaker interrupts]...to the rank and file, to each workstation...

[Gorbachev continues]...each worker. Everyone has to readapt. [Video shows brief shot of woman in crowd nodding] And if anyone is thinking: Thank God, we've got through the congress; we can rest now and everything will get back into the old rut...[Gorbachev leaves sentence unfinished]

[Unidentified speaker] That's not the way we're thinking. [Video shows brief close-up shot of Raisa Gorbachev standing behind Gorbachev, followed by shot of people in the crowd]

[Gorbachev] Let that not be the way people think. Already, I think already since the congress the country will not want to live the way it did up to then.

[Unidentified speaker] No!

[Gorbachev] One must go forward and make everything better. And who are we doing this for? For all of us. However, there are some people who are contriving to live beyond their means. We know some and you know some. By the way, we have already discussed this in the Politburo — this is the first time I've given away its secrets...[laughter among crowd] — and soon some laws will be introduced concerning income not obtained from labor. We will bring order. Indeed, even if these are individual points the main thing is that people understand, and understand everything that is happening in the country and everything which [words indistinct].

[Crowd heard shouting: The majority approves! The people support! The people always support and will work as necessary! Thank you!]

[Gorbachev] All the best. [Video shows Gorbachev, followed by shots of crowd applauding]

[Chorus of voices] (?We wish you the same) [applause]

[Unidentified correspondent] Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev laid flowers in Revolution Square where one of the country's first monuments to Vladimir Ilyich Lenin was built. [Video shows two soldiers carrying a basket of red flowers and placing it at the monument; they salute and march off. Gorbachev and Muravyev touch the flowers, then stand with their hats removed and bow. The onlookers applaud.]

The Monument of Glory is situated at the highest point of the Volga embankment. Mikhail Sergeyevich laid flowers at the foot of this momument also. [Video shows Gorbachev and Muravyev following soldiers carrying flowers; there is a brief shot of Raisa Gorbacheva further back with her own bouquet. Gorbachev and Muravyev place the flowers at the monument and bow with their hats off, then Raisa Gorbacheva places her bouquet alongside.]

[Gorbachev] The people of Kuybyshev are making a huge contribution, but, nevertheless, I have not come here to praise you. [laughter from crowd and remarks: We understand, we know] [Video shows medium close-ups and close-ups of Gorbachev speaking to unseen people and occasional shots of people in the crowd.]

[Gorbachev] No, you know what has been done is for our common (?cause). It is our foundation upon which we stand firmly and, as they say, we can raise our heads and see where we are going. This should be borne in mind. We in the Central Committee know what the people's mood is like — to change everything for the better. In my view, the congress gave good directions as to what we should be doing — in the economy, in the social sphere, in our political system, in the system of our democracy, in our collectives, and in our familes. Yes, our families. We began to forget about our families in the sense of their significance and the role they play. Everything, comrades, should be set in motion: the economy, the political system, the spiritual system, and the family — all spheres.

You know, it used to be said often, well, strictly speaking, why do we criticize things so much? Why do we say all this? After all, our enemies and anyone else will use it to harm socialism. Nothing of the kind! Thanks to the fact that we got things going so well, both in the party and in the country, in towns, oblasts, and work forces — you know it is not only that our society got going, but the fact that it began to move and thus, to show what it can do — this is being felt everywhere, both in the socialist countries and throughout the world. Our country is huge and when it begins to gather momentum and get under way, when it proposes new policies, domestic ones which are peacelov... which are calcul... which are oriented toward man's interests and peaceloving foreign policies — all this, comrades, produces a huge reaction in the world.

I think the most important thing — we are talking about the congress — is the fact that we have, nevertheless, managed, on the basis of an active participation by all people — the whole of the party — to work out a domestic policy which, if we implement it, will bring the country to new levels in all spheres: in the economy, in the social sphere, in the cultural sphere, in the spiritual sphere, in everything.

And how peace-loving is our policy, the foreign policy line which we elaborated and outlined at the congress. If we implement it consistently, then we will have more and more supporters. Even now, it has met with a huge response and support in the world; now you all read it in the press and it is making itself felt. What has changed is simply the opinion and views of the USSR, as it should. The USSR should set an example. We (?often speak of) the unity of the party and people. If a policy reflects the interests of the people and if the people is behind the party, then, you know, we can move mountains.

We began last year very badly: Industrial growth in the first quarter of last year was practically 2.5 percent. We ended with almost 4 percent. This is what the people can do, you understand. Nothing had changed over that period — no particular capacities, technical lines, or automation were added. No, it was us. There was more order and discipline. A person — his attitude, his understanding — that is the main thing. For, nevertheless, everything remains at a standstill if a person is not interested, if he does not have the attitude to work at full efficiency. If he does not have that, everything collapses, comrades.

[Correspondent A. Tikhomirov] From the Monument to Glory, Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev set off for Kuybyshev metallurgical works. [Video shows Kuybyshev streets lined with people as seen from a car following the official motorcade].

It is the district known as Bezymyanka where many enterprises from Moscow and Leningrad were moved to or evacuated to during the years of the Great Patriotic War. These streets are unusually interesting and rich in important historical events. Many streets are named after renowned revolutionaries and commanders who have left deep marks on the life history of the city. [Video shows new housing blocks]

Now on the right as the car moves along is a new housing estate — Privolzhskiy. This whole estate was completed in the 11th 5-Year Plan and about 60,000 people moved in. If you ask inhabitants of Kuybyshev what the city's main feature is, the first thing they say is the Volga. Of course, the city stands on that great Russian river. The second thing they say is that it is a working country. Well, the geography of the city is such that there is a historical center, but all the rest is working districts. One in three inhabitants of Kuybyshev is a worker. [Video shows motorcade approaching the works; Gorbachev is seen standing in the center of a large crowd and speaking to the people]

This meeting is taking place alongside the entrance to the Kuybyshev Lenin Metallurgical Works — one of the major works of its kind in Europe. One would be hard-pressed to name an industry which does not use the output from this enterprise — sheet aluminium. This enterprise is relatively young if compared to the age of other works of merit in Kuybyshev. It is a fraction over 1/4 of a century old, the Kuybyshev metallurgical works. [Video shows the interior of the works and Gorbachev talking with officials] However, this work is interesting not only because of the unique nature of output but also because of its experience in restructuring its production process. The third stage of reconstruction was carried out on the sheet metal manufacturing facilities in the last 5-year plan. Here in this section technical reequipment has been carried out; two modern high-productivity cold-rolling mills — a 1800 and 2300 — have been brought into use. The figures denote the width of the metal sheet. The Kuybyshev metallurgy workers had every right to proudly show off this new equipment today, for here, in conditions of continuing production — please note that — the works' capacity has been increased by 2.3 fold and that is due to rise to a threefold increase in the near future. In other words, through reconstruction enough funds have been saved to build another large works. [Video shows the official party walking through the works and entering a control room. Gorbachev puts on glasses as a team leader explains the control panel; other officials group around them]

This is the conversation taking place at the 1800 rolling mill control room:

[Gorbachev] Hello, commanders. What are you commanding here?

[Unidentified team leader] Aluminum sheet measuring [words indistinct]. Here is the thickness tolerance. The sheet must have a thickness tolerance of plus or minus about 5 microns in thickness.

[Unidentified speaker] (?Those of average) sizes.

[Gorbachev] And what (?communications) do you have from the central control room?

[Team leader] Here we have communications with each section, with each [word indistinct]. In other words, I give the instruction to start up or whatever. So, if anything goes wrong ...

[Gorbachev interrupts] And they can see what is going on there?

[Team leader] Of course, it must be so. The operator on that stand also has the same panel. Each (?stand) has its (?thickness), its (?standard thickness).

[Gorbachev] And can you switch off [word indistinct] from here?

[Team leader] Of course. I am in control of the rolling process.

[Indistinct question from Gorbachev]

[Team leader] Our production plan for a shift is 250 metric tons, but we can turn out up to 500 metric tons or more.

[Gorbachev] How did you do for the first quarter, from the point of view of...Were there any complaints about quality, infringements, technology? Did you fulfill [words indistinct]

[Team leader] We adopted pledges for the 27th congress that our shift would complete its schedule 2 days early. In fact, we were a bit further ahead, by some 100 metric tons. We produced 600 metric tons. Our shift is now ahead of its yearly plan at the beginning of 1986 by 1,300 metric tons.

[Gorbachev] The shift?

[Team leader] Yes, the shift. As for quality, the quality we supply generally satisfies the customers for whom...

[Gorbachev, interrupting] Let us put the question this way: Any complaints from customers?

[Team leader] We have had complaints about the quality of the hot rolling mill. The billets are of very poor quality. [Gorbachev and others repeat the phrase "hot rolling mill"] We can provide quality to world standards on this mill only if the billets are better.

[Gorbachev] How many people on a shift?

[Team leader] We have 22 people per shift. We use the team contract method.

[Gorbachev] Now long have you been using the team contract method?

[Team leader] About 3 or 4 years.

[Gorbachev] Have you had occasion to persuade each other?

[Team leader] No, we haven't. They even try to train themselves, that is they go into it thoroughly, try to work and learn on this mill. [Video shows the operating areas with camera turning up to bridge area overhead with Gorbachev and other viewing the work; scenes of metal rolling process]

[Tikhomirov] Team leader Voytsovshchikov of Aleksandr Obedin's Komsomol youth team is a party group organizer. He's young, but in the shop he is considered the most valuable specialist. Indeed, in a very short time he and the members of his team succeeded in mastering the most complex electronic equipment on the new mill. I would like to emphasize, incidentally, that aircraft and even space apparatus are lined with metal from this works.

[Announcer] During his visit to the works, Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev was accompanied by Comrade Muravyev, first secretary of the party obkom. Explanations were provided by Comrade Aladinko, a works director, and leading specialists at the enterprise.

Further Reportage

[Text] On 7 April Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, left Moscow for Kuybyshev. He was seen off at the airport by members of the Politburo of the CPSU Central Committee, Comrades Aliyev, Vorotnikov, Gromyko, Zaykov, Ligachev, Ryzhkov, Solomentsev, Chebrikov, and Shevardnadze, and other comrades. At Kuybyshev airport Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev was met by Comrade Muravyev, first secretary of the oblast committee of the CPSU, by members of the bureau of the Kuybyshev Obkom, and by leaders of a number of ministries and departments.

The general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee laid flowers at the monument to Vladimir Ilyich Lenin. Then flowers were laid at the Monument of Glory over the Volga, the symbol of the valor in work and at war of the city's working people.

From the first moments of his arrival, he held businesslike and frank conversations with the working people. They began on one of the main thoroughfares, Kuybyshev street. I have long wanted to meet the people of Kuybyshev, said Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev. You live in a truly Russian part of the country; it was around the Volga that the Russian state grew up. Today the oblast is a mighty area from the point of view of industry, culture, science, and agriculture. Our country is a huge one. Life is getting better. We are building big cities and villages and reconstructing enterprises. Culture is developing. We are producing more goods. There are, however, not yet enough of them. What has to be done so that there is more of everything, so it all serves man better, and so conditions of life get better? That was what was at the center of attention in the work of the congress, and it was a frank discussion also.

A few days ago we discussed the question of housing at the Politburo. I can tell you that there are some problems we have to solve now before anything else: housing, food, and the quality of goods. Of course, there are many other problems also — urban transport, health care. The point is that we have to pull up the entire social sphere; it has fallen behind. Here in Kuybyshev, for example, there has been a noticeable increase in heavy industry. We are building new capacities, factories, and workshops, but we do not achieve the desired result. That is because we forget that new factories and workshops, without profound concern for man, are a nonstarter [mertvoye delo].

In order for a person to work successfully, a system of consumer and domestic services, trade, and health care is necessary; good schools and places of leisure, in order to gather strength before the new working day, are necessary. All this, continued Comrade Gorbachev, determines a person's mood and his attitude toward the matter at hand — in short, productivity of public-sector labor as a whole. It must be said openly that questions of the social sphere have today become more acute and have to a certain extent acquired a determining nature. Solving these questions needs to be done both where the planning takes place and here, where questions of realizing our plans and assimilating funds are solved. It is also necessary to act energetically here. On the one hand, it seems there is a shortage of housing and problems in health care and city transport. When we begin to examine how the funds allocated for this are being assimilated, however, it turns out that this is being done badly. In the face of such a need, housing is not being brought into service on time, funds are not being fully assimilated, and hospitals and kindergartens take years to build.

You, as I have been told, also have cases of construction taking a long time [dolgostroy]. That means it is necessary to look into the specific reasons on the spot. There can be no indifference to the pressing questions of improving the social sphere, noted Comrade Gorbachev.

I am glad of the opportunity, he continued, during this first of my trips since the congress, to discuss urgent matters. I hope the people of Kuybyshev, who are able to do shock work and have already done much for the country — developing enormous capacities on the Volga — will do everything to see that these capacities should do real work. I would also request that you pass on our conversations to all comrades. I would like to say this to everyone, but you cannot get the whole city together; it has to live and work. I would, however, like to convey these words to all people of Kuybyshev on behalf of the Central Committee of the party. We are putting our hopes on you.

Today, Comrade Gorbachev stressed, both discipline, order, quality, and organization should be better. Technology should be improved and modernized. A broad path to all this should be opened up. All that was good yesterday is already insufficient today. We will be guided by what needs to be done today and, especially, tomorrow.

The main thing is that our plans, which we have thought through well, must be reinforced with just as good joint work. Thus, everything we will have tomorrow, and in several years time, must be made today. As for restructuring, everyone has to reorganize themselves. You have probably felt that we in the Central Committee are working in a new way, reorganizing ourselves, and in a sufficiently critical way. This was said at the congress openly and directly. Everyone must reorganize themselves, comrades, because we have become a little feeble; we have neglected discipline, exactingness, and conscientiousness. Some people have forgotten that good conscience is needed at work among comrades and within the family circle. We have to live by our conscience, that is our Soviet morality.

My conversation with you, the CPSU Central Committee's general secretary continued, is serious work of mine. We are relying on all of you. Our country is vast, we have many resources, people are well educated, and our science is among the world's best. Comrades, we must rouse ourselves, and a spur to this was provided at the congress.

At the Glory Monument there was a conversation with veterans of the party and labor, honored inhabitants of the town of Kuybyshev, and representatives of young people. We, said Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev, on the eve of the congress began, and at the congress consolidated, the open discussion of everything — supporting everything good, rendering what is due to all who work honestly, and speaking openly of those who want to stand to one side or shift from one foot to the other. People sometimes say to us, why is it that we castigate ourselves and criticize so? I think there is nothing terrible in that. Because we have started doing things this way, in the party, in the country, in the towns and oblasts, and in the labor collectives, you know, but advancement has come in more than just our society; our advancement has made itself felt everywhere, in the socialist countries and worldwide. Our country is vast. When it gathers pace, when it extends itself, when it proffers a new domestic policy aimed at the interests of the individual and a foreign policy aimed at the preservation of peace — all this gives rise to immense reactions on our planet, Comrade Gorbachev said.

The main thing today, comrades, if we are to put it bluntly, without self-glorification and without getting carried away, is that we have succeeded on the basis of active participation by all the people and the whole party in elaborating a policy which, if we implement it, will bring the country to new levels in all spheres and will be supported worldwide. This is how it should be. The Soviet Union should set an example in everything. For this to be so, all of us must work well. We can be pleased that people have responded from the heart to this appeal of the party. The people's support lends inspiration to the party's plans. If the party policy reflects people's interests, if the people follow the party, then we can move mountains, Comrade Gorbachev stressed.

A meeting in the workshops of the Vladimir Ilyich Lenin Metallurgical Works lasted about 2 hours. A crane operator, Belova; a delegate to the 27th Congress of the CPSU, Yashin; a rolling mill operator, Samarkina; a cutter; and others said that the entire collective takes the congress' decisions as a specific working program. It is implemented in the plan for raising the enterprise to a qualitative new level, to a reconstruction that has already entered its fourth stage. With the help of the party organization and the entire working collective, many new and bold solutions have been found and many of them are being implemented without the production being stopped. They will help to cut sharply the time needed for the reconstruction, to make do without time-consuming and expensive work, and to tie firmly together as a single package the expansion of production capacities, growth of labor productivity, and the increase of output's quality.

Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev goes upstairs to the control room of a cold rolling mill. A conversation with the team leader, Comrade Obedin:

Comrade Gorbachev: What are the results for the first quarter here? Have you any comments? What is the mood like?

Comrade Obedin: Our pledge in honor of the congress was to do our work 2 days ahead of schedule, and we have done this. We have given a little more, by 100 tons. Now a shift exceeds the schedule for the year by 1,300 tons.

Comrade Gorbachev: Do you have any comments on quality, as consumers?

Comrade Obedin: Yes, there are comments on the hot rolling mill. Very bad blanks come from there. We can achieve world standard quality if the blanks get better.

Comrade Gorbachev: You say world standard. What do you mean?

Comrade Obedin: Comrades have been abroad, studied the experiences and, naturally, compared.

Comrade Gorbachev: How many people work in one shift here?

Comrade Obedin: Three teams per shift. We have team contracting here. I am a team leader.

Comrade Gorbachev: Is there a team council?

Comrade Obedin: Of course.

Comrade Gorbachev: Satisfied?

Comrade Obedin: Yes, very much. People have pulled themselves together, so now we do not have to persuade each other. We have complex equipment. The boys are interested in it. They try to learn, penetrating more into matters for themselves. It is interesting to work in this mill.

Comrade Gorbachev: Tell me, Aleksandr, what do workers say about the 27th Congress? Tell me how it is.

Comrade Obedin: Workers understand that all is done for them and they in their turn want to reply in the same way.

Comrade Gorbachev: Well, this is very important.

Departing from the works Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev thanked the collective for the warm, cordial meeting. I am very pleased, he said, that I visited you. It is a good works. I am also pleased that you think about how to make it better all the time.

'Information Report' Published on AUCCTU Plenum

PM071532 Moscow TRUD in Russian 5 Apr 86 p 1

["Information Report on AUCCTU Plenum" — TRUD headline]

[Text] The 10th AUCCTU Plenum was held in Moscow yesterday.

The plenum examined the question "On Trade Unions' Tasks Arising out of the Decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress."

The report was delivered by AUCCTU chairman S.A. Shalayev.

Contributions were made to the discussion of the report by V.A. Sologub, chairman of the Ukrainian Republic Council of Trade Unions; A.D. Khamrakulov, chairman of the trade union committee at the "Yuganskneftegas" production association in Tyumen Oblast; M.B. Ryzhikov, chairman of the Agricultural Workers Union Central Committee; D.Ye. Anisimov, team leader in the "Tyndatransstroy" Trust No 573 construction and installation train; V.N. Ksintaris, first deputy chairman of the USSR Gossnab; L.V. Petrov, chairman of the Moscow City Council of Trade Unions; D.M. Rostovtsev, rector of the Leningrad ship-building institute; Hero of Socialist Labor S.N. Zaichenko, leader of a multiskilled team at the Kremenchug motor vehicle plant named for the 50th anniversary of the Soviet Ukraine in Poltava Oblast; N.O. Yuganson, chairman of the Estonian Republic Council of Trade Unions; USSR People's Physician Ye.U. Lukashevich, head of a department at the No 6 teaching hospital in Minsk; M.V. Kuleshov, chairman of the Timber, Paper, and Wood-Processing Industry Workers Trade Union Central Committee; A. Zhamaldinova, sewing machine operator at the Frunze "40 Let Oktyabrya" sewn goods factory; O.S. Nikityuk, chairman of the Krasnodar Kray Council of Trade Unions; and M.I. Pakholkina, livestock unit chief at the "Luch Revolyutsii" Kolkhoz in Uritskiy Rayon, Orel Oblast.

The AUCCTU plenum noted with profound satisfaction that the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress met with the warm approval of working people and the entire Soviet people. The congress documents are being studied and extensively discussed in trade union organizations and in all labor collectives. Everywhere a great deal of creative work is being organized in order to achieve a qualitatively new state for our society.

Expressing the opinion of millions of working people who are trade union members, the AUCCTU plenum participants ardently backed the decisions of the 27th party congress and the provisions and conclusions set out in the CPSU Central Committee Political Report and pledged to follow them undeviatingly and to implement them.

In its resolution the plenum made it incumbent on trade union councils and committees to do extensive work to explain the congress decisions to every trade union member and every soviet person, to consolidate in every labor collective the lofty moral and practical tone set by the congress and the atmosphere of party principledness, exactingness, and Bolshevik truth generated by it, and to mobilize all working people to implement the plans set by the party.

The plenum considered some organizational matters. In connection with her election as CPSU Central Committee secretary A.P. Biryukova was relieved of the post of AUCCTU deputy chairman. In connection with his appointment as chairman of the USSR State Committee for Labor and Social Problems I.I. Gladkiy was relieved of the post of AUCCTU secretary. The plenum relieved S.V. Kozlov of the post of AUCCTU secretary and member of the AUCCTU Presidium in connection with his retirement. It was decided to relieve N.M. Makhmudova of the post of member of the AUCCTU Presidium in connection with her retirement.

The plenum elected AUCCTU member V.G. Lomonosov deputy chairman of the AUCCTU and member of the AUCCTU Presidium. The plenum elected AUCCTU Presidium member K. Turysov as AUCCTU secretary. M.B. Ryzhikov, member of the AUCCTU Presidium and chairman of the Agricultural Workers Union Central Committee, was elected secretary of the AUCCTU.

A.P. Biryukova, secretary of the CPSU Central Committee; Ye.Z. Razumov, first deputy chief of the CPSU Central Committee Organizational Party Work Department; senior personnel of the CPSU Central Committee, and leaders of ministries and departments participated in the plenum work.

Commission Examines Recycling, Water Quality Work

PM071456 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 29 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 3

[TASS report: "Concern for Nature"]

[Text] A routine session of the USSR Council of Ministers Presidium Commission for Environmental Protection and the Rational Utilization of Natural Resources was held 27 March.

The commission examined the question of the measures envisaged by the USSR Ministry of the Construction Materials Industry for expanding the use for construction materials production of industrial waste products created in sectors concerned with the extraction and processing of mineral raw materials. In this regard, the commission noted that the resources policy being implemented by the ministry still does not satisfy party and government demands on the fundamental improvement of the use of secondary resources.

The commission drew the USSR Ministry of the Construction Materials Industry's attention to the serious underrating of questions connected with reorienting the sector toward the radical expansion of the use of solid industrial waste products for construction materials production and instructed that ministry to review the all-union intersectoral mineral raw materials extraction and consumption balance for the production of construction materials in 1986-1990.

There was an examination of the question on the observance of nature conservation legislation at enterprises of the USSR Ministry of Nonferrous Metallurgy, the USSR Ministry of the Timber, Pulp and Paper, and Wood Processing Industry, and the USSR Ministry of Power and Electrification in the Bratsk region. As a result of measures adopted at those enterprises in 1984-1985, there has been a substantial reduction in the discharge of pollutants into the environment. However, the ecological situation in the region remains difficult. The greatest backlog is in the implementation by the USSR Ministry of the Timber, Pulp and Paper, and Wood Processing Industry of the necessary environmental protection measures at the "Bratskiy Lesopromyshlennyy Kompleks" production association.

The commission instructed the USSR Ministry of the Timber, Pulp and Paper, and Wood Processing Industry, the USSR Ministry of Nonferrous Metallurgy, and the USSR Ministry of Power and Electrification to ensure a further reduction in the discharge of pollutants into the environment by enterprises under their jurisdiction in the Bratsk region and established the strict monitoring of the fulfillment of that decision.

There was an examination of the question of the status of work done to prevent reservoirs from being overgrown with algae, which have an adverse effect on water quality, and other harmful consequences of the eutrophication of bodies of water. The commission instructed the USSR Ministry of Land Reclamation and Water Resources, the USSR State Agro-Industrial Committee, and the USSR State Committee for Forestry, in conjunction with other interested USSR Ministries and departments and union republic councils of ministers, to formulate and implement additional measures to reduce the amount of organic and biogenic substances in reservoirs.

The commission session was conducted by V.S. Murakhovskiy, first deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers.

Afanasyev Comments on Responsibilities of Press

PM071545 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 3 Apr 86 p 4

[Pilar Bonet report: "PRAVDA Editor Analyzes 'Gorbachev Era' in Interview"]

[Text] Moscow — The controlled criticism that Mikhail Gorbachev is stimulating in the USSR has ceased to be directed toward past leaders without having directly named the top leaders, including Leonid Brezhnev. From now on, it will center on "anything hindering the implementation of the 27th CPSU Congress resolutions," according to Viktor Afanasyev, editor of PRAVDA (circulation 11.5 million), the CPSU Central Committee's daily organ.

In his Moscow office, Viktor Afanasyev, 64, a Central Committee member since 1976, has a direct telephone line linking him to Gorbachev. He uses it, he said, when Central Committee members responsible for press affairs — the Propaganda Section headed by Aleksandr Yakovlev or, rather higher up, Politburo ideology chief Yegor Ligachev — are unable to settle the matter in hand. "Whereas, previously we used to criticize the past more in order to put the blame on someone, now we have nobody to blame. We crossed a dividing line at the congress. Now its decisions must be implemented. This is our principal task," the PRAVDA editor said.

Afanasyev, who appeared tired, was called to order by Ligachev, from the platform of the 27th congress over an article published in February, based on readers' letters and attacking "deliquent Communists." The article, headed "Purification," criticized those seeking party membership in the hope of possible privileges. Some even went as far as to propose periodic purges within the CPSU.

Purges were rejected and privileges confined to trade union facilities. Afanasyev now believes that what was said in the article — "10 of the strongest letters" — remains valid. But, he says, "it was expressed in an infelicitous manner. There was an unjustified generalization and it said that the entire apparatus was bureaucratized. Whereas, in fact, this concerns an intermediate sector between the workers and the Central Committee."

At a recent meeting of the principal Soviet media chiefs, Gorbachev called for a continuation of the criticism and greater lucidity of reporting launched by the April 1985 Central Committee Plenum — now an obligatory official reference point in indicating the change of style. According to Afanasyev, Gorbachev agreed that the PRAVDA article embodied "an unjustified generalization and an ambiguity in its formulation." "Under no circumstances," he claimed, "will we cease the criticism, which will become sharper and more thorough." "Implementing the congress decisions," centered on accelerating economic growth, Afanasyev said, now constitutes "a serious struggle," since "there are people who are waiting to see how things turn out, and some people do not want changes, which is why they are leaving and will continue to leave."

One of the things that the Soviet press owes to the "April plenum" is the publication of the Politburo's regular communiques. Some Central Committee debates and dismissals of republican leaders are also reported, Afanasyev said. "Even space has become more open," he added, with reference to the preannouncement of the latest Soviet manned spaceflight. "We have been told directly that there is no aspect of the USSR that is exempt from criticism."

"I Myself Decide"

"I myself decide what can or cannot be published in PRAVDA. I also have advisers and an editorial board." During the 4 hours he spent with editors on 14 March, Gorbachev "said once again that our duty as editorial heads is to shoulder more responsibilities." Gorbachev spoke out in favor of the reproduction of colloquial language as it stands, out of respect for the speaker's style — "including stammering," Afanasyev said. The strengthening of the family was another point raised by the leader with press chiefs.

The ceiling on personal criticism in the USSR has reached the level of low-ranking or provincial leaders. With regard to the nonmention of the names of Brezhnev and other major leaders, Afanasyev said that "there are purely political and ethical reasons. Brezhnev was chief of state. He does not need to be named. When one talks about errors in the economy one is obviously talking about Brezhnev and his circle. Brezhnev was not the only one to blame. We have a collective leadership and it would not be fair to name Brezhnev alone."

Comparison of PRAVDA Report on Politburo Session

Moscow PRAVDA in Russian on 5 April carries in its First Edition on page 1 an unattributed report on the Politburo session held on 3 April. The PRAVDA report has been compared with the Moscow TASS in English version published in the 4 April Soviet Union DAILY REPORT, page R 1, revealing the following variations:

Paragraph one, line one reads in PRAVDA: [Text] At its meeting 3 April the CPSU Central Committee Politburo endorsed the slogans (adding "3 April" and picking up paragraph four, line one. PRAVDA transposes the remainder of the first three paragraphs to the end of the report.)

Paragraph five, line seven reads in PRAVDA: the working people. The task of strictly fulfilling the plans for housing construction and repair and the complete assimilation of the capital investment, enterprise funds, local potential, and resources allocated for this purpose was stressed. Attention was drawn to the need to make more rational use of the existing housing stock, to establish the strictest procedure for housing demolition, and to establish control over the settlement use made of the housing area thereby released.

The political bureau (adding passage)

Paragraph six, line two reads in PRAVDA: for the introduction and utilization of the results (changing wording)

The last paragraph, last line reads in PRAVDA: of these innovations.

The politburo approved the results (picking up the first paragraph, line one through the end of paragraph three)

RSFSR Leading Bodies Discuss Congress Decisions

PM041417 Moscow SOVETSKAYA ROSSIYA in Russian 30 Mar 86 Single Edition pp 1-2

[TASS report: "At the RSFSR Supreme Soviet Presidium and the RSFSR Council of Ministers"]

[Text] A session of the RSFSR Supreme Soviet Presidium and the RSFSR Council of Ministers was held 29 March with the participation of chairmen of autonomous republic councils of ministers, krayispolkoms, and oblispolkoms. The question of the tasks of RSFSR soviet and economic organs stemming from the 27th CPSU Congress decisions was discussed at the session. The report was delivered by V.I. Vorotnikov, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and chairman of the RSFSR Council of Ministers.

The 27th CPSU Congress, the report pointed out, was an historic event in the life of the party and the whole of Soviet society, profoundly consonant with the times and with the needs of the objective situation which has taken shape in the country and in the international arena. It armed the party with modern strategy and tactics of struggle and with theoretical and political guidelines of tremendous creative force.

RSFSR working people, like all Soviet people, unanimously support the CPSU Central Committee's political course and practical activity and are full of determination to make their contribution to the practical realization of the tasks set by the congress.

During the years of the 11th 5-Year Plan the RSFSR advanced in all directions of economic building. At the same time, the 5-year plan targets were not fulfilled with regard to a number of indicators. The average annual rates of increase for national income were lower than planned. The republic's industry failed to ensure the fulfillment of the output sales plan with regard to pledges on deliveries. The scientific and technical level of production in a number of sectors of the republic's economy does not correspond to modern demands. Many enterprises produce low-quality products and do not show proper concern for extending and updating the range of consumer goods. In agriculture the planned indicators for grain purchases have not been reached and production of livestock products is increasing only slowly. There are many unsolved problems in transportation. The needs of the national economy and the population for transport operations are not being satisfied in full. Construction remains a bottleneck. The targets for commissioning many production capacities and housing, municipal, and sociocultural projects are constantly not fulfilled.

These and other shortcomings were the subject of acute and principled criticism in the report and the speeches. Measures were defined to eliminate them and ways outlined to realize the great tasks of accelerating the republic's socioeconomic development and ensuring a fundamental breakthrough in raising social production efficiency in the 12th 5-Year Plan.

The RSFSR must increase its contribution to strengthening the country's unified national economic complex. The average annual rates of increase for industrial output are to be increased by almost one-third and for agricultural output by 200 percent. It is necessary to further improve the distribution of production forces, ensure the regions' comprehensive economic and social development, increase the production potential, and open up the natural resources of Siberia and the Far East.

The RSFSR Supreme Soviet Presidium and the RSFSR Council of Ministers instructed soviet and economic organs to adopt the 27th CPSU Congress decisions for unswerving guidance and execution, basing all their economic activity on them.

RSFSR ministries and departments, autonomous republic supreme soviet presidiums and councils of ministers, local soviets, and their executive and administrative organs are obliged to ensure active work on the practical realization of the 27th party congress guidelines and the propositions, conclusions, and tasks set forth in the 27th party congress resolution, the CPSU Central Committee Political Report to the congress, and the Basic Guidelines for the Economic and Social Development of the USSR for 1986-1990 and the Period Through the Year 2000. Efforts are to be concentrated on substantially enhancing production efficiency and output quality on the basis of the cardinal acceleration of scientific and technical progress and the broad introduction of new generations of equipment and fundamentally new technologies ensuring the highest labor productivity. Special attention is to be devoted to the profound technical modernization of the national economy.

The report and the speeches pointed out that it is now important to restructure thinking, to ensure that soviet and economic cadres and the broad masses of the working people clearly understand the new tasks and the need for a creative approach to solving them, and to ensure the enhanced effectiveness of economic methods of leadership and the improvement of the economic mechanism and organizational structures of management in all sectors of the national economy. Emphasis was placed on the need to broaden the independence of enterprises and associations, to increase their responsibility for achieving the highest end results on the basis of introducing genuine autonomous financing, paying one's way, and self-financing, to make wide use of stable economic normatives, and to deepen socialist self-management in production with a view to creating an integral, efficient, and flexible management system.

It is necessary to resolutely improve the work style and methods; eradicate red tape, departmentalism, and parochialism; strengthen organization, discipline, and order; and create conditions for the development of working people's creative initiative and activeness and the consistent assertion in every labor collective of the atmosphere of party principledness, criticism, and self-criticism created by the congress.

It is necessary to step up exactingness toward cadres, enhance their responsibility for the assigned task, strive for high efficiency and quality in the work of the managerial apparatus, and foster in workers the need to keep in contact with the masses and live for people's interests and needs.

In completing the draft State Plan for the Economic and Social Development of the RSFSR for 1986-1990, the RSFSR Gosplan is entrusted with providing for measures to realize the targets set by the congress and aimed at enhancing the pace and efficiency of the economy's development and achieving a further rise in the population's living standards.

The attention of the RSFSR State Agro-Industrial Committee, the RSFSR Ministry of Land Reclamation and Water Resources, the RSFSR Ministry of Grain Products, the RSFSR Potrebsoyuz, other RSFSR ministries and departments, and local soviet and economic organs was drawn to the need for persistent implementation of the party's modern agrarian policy and the accelerated fulfillment of the RSFSR Food Program so as to substantially improve the supply of food to the population as early as in the 12th 5-Year Plan.

RSFSR soviets and their executive and administrative organs are instructed to exercise more fully the powers vested in them, to deepen democratic principles in their activity, to ensure the broad participation of citizens in the management of state and public affairs, and to consistently develop businesslike cooperation with trade union, Komsomol, and other public organizations. The effectiveness of soviet sessions is to be enhanced, the analytical and monitoring activity of standing commissions is to be stepped up, the political and labor activeness of deputies in realizing the 27th CPSU Congress decisions is to be enhanced, and the work with voters' mandates is to be improved and they are to be taken more fully into account when drawing up economic and social development plans. The strictest observance of laws and other acts of organs of state power and management and the safeguarding of law and order, socialist property, and citizens' rights and lawful interests are to be ensured.

Publicity is to be widened in all activities of the soviets and their organs, the population is to be regularly informed about the fulfillment of soviets' decisions and the implementation of voters' mandates and more attention is to be devoted to reports by ispolkoms, their departments and administrations, and deputies at meetings of labor collectives and at citizens' places of residence.

The RSFSR Supreme Soviet Presidium and the RSFSR Council of Ministers instructed RSFSR ministries and departments, autonomous republic supreme soviet presidiums and councils of ministers, and local soviets and their executive organs, guided by the instructions of the 27th CPSU Congress on implementing an active social policy, to secure an increase in the scale of housing construction, to update and broaden the material base of the sociocultural sphere, and to radically change their attitude to questions of saturating the market with quality goods and services. The unconditional fulfillment of the Comprehensive Program for the Development of Consumer Goods Production and the Services Sphere is to be ensured. The reform of general educational and vocational schools is to be consistently implemented, protection of the population's health is to be improved, mass physical culture and sport are to be developed, people's meaningful leisure is to be ensured, particularly for young people, and a healthy way of life is to be asserted.

The session approved a plan of measures to implement the tasks stemming from the 27th CPSU Congress decisions.

The RSFSR Supreme Soviet Presidium and the RSFSR Council of Ministers voiced firm confidence that the republic's working people, implementing the 27th CPSU Congress decisions, will achieve new successes in communist building and in strengthening our socialist motherland's might.

Participating in the session's work were L.A. Voronin, deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers; A.G. Melnikov, chief of a CPSU Central Committee section; leaders of union ministries and departments, and senior officials of the CPSU Central Committee, the AUCCTU, the Komsomol Central Committee, and the apparatus of the RSFSR Supreme Soviet Presidium and the RSFSR Council of Ministers.

Uzbek Presidium Meeting Looks at Soviets' Tasks

GF071225 Tashkent Domestic Service in Uzbek 0115 GMT 5 Apr 86

[Summary from poor reception] "In its regular meeting, the Uzbek SSR Supreme Soviet Presidium discussed the tasks of the republic's people's deputies soviets derived from the decisions adopted by the 27th CPSU Congress."

It heard a report on the work of the Fergana Oblast people's deputies soviets designed to attract the people and work collectives to participate in the effort to realize the party decisions. The decision it adopted on the matter advised the oblast people's deputies soviets to take concrete measures to guarantee a broader participation of the people and the work collectives in the work of the state sovereignty organs.

"The convocation also discussed the report drawn up by the Kashka Darya Oblast Soviet Executive Committee related to the work carried out by the oblast's local soviets and the republic's ministries and administrations for upgrading the use and productivity of irrigated lands. It also heard reports on the same matter by [words indistinct] and the Uzbek SSR Supreme Soviet permanent commissions for the agro-industrial complex and water resources.

"The presidium charged the Kashka Darya Oblast local soviets with the task of consolidating their guidance to the (?agro-industrial) complex, increasing the accountability of leaders in all domains for the successful realization of the state plans, and intensifying the struggle against those who disrupt [words indistinct], plan, work, and technical discipline. Meanwhile, it also made various recommendations to the main trust for sovkhoz construction, the Uzbek SSR permanent commission for the agro-industrial complex, the Ministry of Land Reclamation and Water Resources, and the [words indistinct]. "The meeting also drew up the results of the talks held between the supreme soviet deputies and the people during the special week organized last February and discussed other matters. Various decisons were taken on the matters discussed."

Overview of Uzbek Oblast Plenums, Speakers

GF071656 Tashkent Domestic Service in Uzbek 0115 GMT 6 Apr 86

[Text] The plenums held yesterday by the Uzbek Communist Party Bukhara, Dzhizak, Kashka Darya, and Syr-Darya Oblast committees discussed the tasks of the oblast party committees concerning the realization of the results and decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress. Comrades Dzhabbarov, first secretary of the Bukhara Oblast Party Committee; Umarov, first secretary of the Dzhizak Oblast Party Committee; Turapov, first secretary of the Kashka Darya Oblast Party Committee; and (?Kiretikov), first secretary of the Syr-Darya Oblast Party Committee, read reports in their respective plenums.

The plenum held by the Syr-Darya Oblast Party Committee also discussed the question of organization. Due to being appointed to another post, Comrade Azimbekov was relieved of his responsibilities as secretary of the oblast party committee. Comrade Makhmudov, who used to work as secretary of the [words indistinct], was appointed as secretary of the Syr-Darya Oblast Party Committee.

Comrade Dogonkin, chief of the Uzbek Communist Party Central Committee Organizational Party Work Department, addressed the plenum held in Bukhara City by the oblast party committee; Comrade Khaydurov, chairman of the Uzbek SSR Committee of People's Control, addressed the plenum held in Dzhizak City by the oblast party committee; Comrade Mikhaylov, first deputy chairman of the Uzbek SSR Council of Ministers Presidium, addressed the plenum held in Karshi City by the oblast party committee; and Comrade Romanovskiy, deputy chairman of the Uzbek SSR Supreme Soviet Presidium, addressed the plenum held in Gulistan City by the oblast party committee.

Comrade Ponomarev, deputy sector chief of the CPSU Central Committee Organizational Party Work Department, participated in the work of the plenum held by the Kashka Darya Oblast Party Committee.

Estonian Plenum Examines Failings in Completing Tasks

PM070943 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 1 Apr 86 First Edition p 2

[Undated report by correspondent V. Shirokov on Estonian Communist Party Central Committee Plenum under general heading: "With High Exactingness"]

[Text] The Estonian Communist Party Central Committee, which discussed the results of the 27th CPSU Congress and the tasks of the republic's Communists in fulfilling its decisions, cites the following fact: Last year Tallinn's Morskoy Raykom repeatedly examined the activity of the "Prompribor," "Estonbumprom," and "Eesti Kabel" associations, but to this day there has been no substantial improvement in the situation there.

Analyzing the practice of the raykom's work, K. Vayno, first secretary of the Estonian Communist Party Central Committee, noted that the party committee together with persistent organizational work and the increase of control, is continuing to be enamored of general decisions abounding in recommendations to "take necessary steps," "to point out," and "to draw attention" — a worthless, obviously obsolete style.

In the unanimous opinion of those taking part in the plenum, the overcoming of formalism and cliche in party work and the renunciation of the habit of replacing practical efforts with all kinds of sessions are an essential condition for the restructuring which has begun in the republic. It is the Communists who must raise the collectives to seek specific paths of acceleration. Unfortunately, this is so far not being done everywhere. For instance, the question of replacing obsolete equipment is acute at the "Estremrybilot" association. But the renewal of fixed production capital in the present 5-year plan is planned at one-fourth less than in the previous 5-year plan although even then the retooling rates were only 1-2 percent a year. But this has alarmed neither the party organization nor Tallinn's Kalininskiy Party Raykom.

These instances are not isolated. Because of the enterprise's technical backwardness, the cement workers at the "Punane Kunda" plant were responsible for a plan shortfall of hundreds of thousands of metric tons of output in the last 5-year plan. The collective began this year in arrears as well. Nonetheless, the Ministry of the Construction Materials Industry, which is headed by L. Ananich, and the republic Council of Ministers Construction Commission headed by P. Palu are displaying insufficient vigor in seeking to reequip the plant. Nor has the Rakvereskiy Party Raykom succeeded in raising the Communists to a resolute struggle to introduce order and improve labor organization.

The fate of scientific-technical progress is determined to a considerable extent by how modern the reconstruction projects are. Yet a number of the republic's construction sites have documentation drawn up 10 years ago.

Those taking part in the plenum said that 1986 is the most crucial year in the 12th 5-Year Plan. The results of the first 2 months were assessed from these positions. The majority of labor collectives are working vigorously. Labor productivity has grown. The prime cost of output has been reduced. The plans for retail trade turnover and consumer services have been overfulfilled. But not all sectors have gotten off to a good start. The plan for the sale of output with a consideration for delivery commitments has not been fulfilled. Construction is still operating sporadically. The production of articles with the seal of quality has declined 3.5 percent. The plenum demanded that the party committees and primary party organizations give a principled assessment of each instance of the deterioration of the quality of articles.

Those assembled noted that organizational forms of collaboration between science and production are developing only slowly. For instance, the Estonian biology center, which should already be in operations, has not been opened because the republic's Council of Ministers and Academy of Sciences are quite incapable of clearly defining the range of its tasks. The republic's Gosplan is still having scant influence on the formation of the subject matter for scientific research and, in particular, problems of an applied nature.

Great tasks also face the workers of the agro-industrial complex. The republic has become a unique testing ground for verifying the new conditions of economic management. So it has been with the agro-industrial complex. The experiment is now under wayin the Ministry of Light Industry, to which the wholesale bases with the network of stores for the organization of tradename [firmennaya] trade have been transferred. Time is confirming that this mechanism is indeed progressive, that this is the mechanism which can lead to the satisfaction of the requirements of all groups of the population, while at the same time enhancing production efficiency.

As of 1 July this year, following the example of the Belorussian railroad, the labor collectives of the republic's railroads are also preparing to switch to the new conditions of economic management. It is planned to achieve a substantial increase in labor productivity and wages while reducing the number of workers. Supporting the atmosphere of quest, the Estonian Communist Party Central Committee Politburo recently concluded that, as of next year, it is expedient to gradually transfer the national economy of the entire republic to these conditions of economic management on an experimental basis.

Those taking part in the plenum urged the Communists and all working people of Estonia to persistently seek to accelerate the republic's socioeconomic development and to ensure the unconditional fulfillment of the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress.

Minister of Machine Tool Building Discusses Issues

LD062304 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1430 GMT 4 Apr 86

[Interview with Boris Vladimirovich Balmont, USSR minister of the machine tool and tool building industry, by unidentified correspondent — recorded]

[Text][Correspondent] Boris Vladimirovich, the basic guidelines of our country's social and economic development in the present 5-year plan and the period up to the year 2000 envision a rapid development of the machine-building complex, especially machine tool building and a number of other industries that are catalysts of scientific-technical progress. How will this most important task be realized in the 12th 5-Year Plan?

[Balmont] During the 5-year period we are due to increase the volume of production by over 54 percent. The increase in rate must be attained while, at the same time, substantially altering the structure of production and considerably increasing the creation and output of automated equipment. The radical restructuring of investment policy is planned. We are directing over 60 percent of capital investment toward technically reequipping or reconstructing existing enterprises. A program has been set out whereby the basic portion of these funds is being channelled toward a limited circle of factories that produce automated equipment which is in the shortest supply. It should be noted that this increase in rate must be attained on the basis of comprehensive and consistent intensification.

We must ensure that these tasks are solved without having to increase the size of the work force and on the basis of production and scientific-technical potential, the utilization of production reserves, and bold, enterprising elimination of all obstacles standing in the way of technical progress.

[Correspondent] But what kind of reserves will be utilized by the industry to carry out acceleration?

[Balmont] The loading factor of machine tools is still low at many factories. There are instances of delay in the commissioning of new production capacities. In the past 5-year plan there was some dissipation of capital investments. Renovation of fixed assets and introduction of automated equipment has been proceeding slowly. Unjustified wastage of metal and other materials has not been eliminated in the production process. The present stage of automation depends on the revolution in computer technology. Even in the current year the output of machine tools with manual control is being reduced by 20,000. The production of digitally programmed machine tools is being increased. There will be a sixfold increase in new-generation machine tools developed in the machining center over the 5-year plan period. The production of flexible production modules and systems, rotor and rotor-conveyor and other automated lines and machine complexes will be widely developed.

[Correspondent] At the 27th CPSU Congress great importance was attached to the problem of quality. How do you evaluate the situation in the industry with regard to output quality, and what plans are there for raising the level of output?

[Balmont] We have to admit that there are many things in this area which we have not worked on properly. This was said in the speeches by a number of delegates to the 27th party congress. In particular, Comrade Aleshnikov, a foreman from the Kirov works in Leningrad; and Comrade Vedernikov, first secretary of the Chelyabinsk Obkom, voiced serious, well-founded criticisms about the production of certain types of low-efficiency, unreliable, and expensive equipment. We were subjected to criticism in the Political Report of the CPSU Central Committee for the intolerable delay in putting into production high-torque hydraulic motors which enable the question of improving the efficiency of mining and other equipment to be solved. We have carefully studied all the suggestions, remarks, and criticisms made by the delegates to the 27th congress and concrete measures are being taken on them. In particular, it is planned to tighten up the requirements regarding the assessment of quality and the technical standard of output at all stages, starting with design and development. We have nearly completed drawing up comprehensive programs entitled "Technical Level," "Reliability" and "Quality." The implementation of those programs will enable the output capacity of equipment to be increased by a minimum of 50 percent at the same time as bringing about a considerable improvement in equipment precision. It has to be said honestly that until recently the sector's scientific, design and technology organizations have not shown a profound interest in the problem of improving equipment reliability. We are now seriously rectifying that shortcoming by joint efforts. The types of equipment that are now going into production will be 50-100 percent more reliable than present ones.

[Correspondent] Boris Vladimirovich, is anything being done to automate monitoring systems, which is, after all, something very important today?

[Balmont] That's quite right. I think that in the near future this problem will be solved, and we will virtually abandon the purchase of measuring equipment from abroad.

Kazakhstan Coal Deposit — Moscow, March 10 TASS — A coal deposit whose reserves amount to close to two billion tonnes was discovered near the Shubarkol Lake in Kazakhstan. There are plans to build three opencast mines there with a total capacity of 22 million tonnes a year, the newspaper IZVESTIYA writes today. Ash content of local coals is up to 10 per cent, their heat of combustion is high. It is also essential that coal extraction conditions there are favourable. The upper coal floor which is 25 to 30 metres thick can be extracted by opencast method. The coal is to be produced in the remote and scarcely-populated area. Work is under way to build a railway and motor road and string a power transmission line there. Miners are working hard to put valuable seams to commercial use. Cosmonauts Hold Televised Press Conference

Question on Military Projects

LD071734 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1430 GMT 7 Apr 86

[Report on the Mir cosmonauts' 7 April press conference by S. Slipchenko]

[Text] The start of the link-up with the space station was awaited impatiently, for at the moment there is very high interest throughout the world in the permanent orbital station of a new generation, the Mir. For the first time, a press conference for Soviet and foreign journalists was held via the relay satellite Luch. A great many questions have accumulated about the future of industrial modules, about the new living conditions for cosmonauts, and about possible cooperation in space on board the Mir station. The conversation proved to be long and detailed; evidently, even the staff of the flight control center have not become accustomed to such prolonged zones [zona] for communications. A correspondent for the U.S. (?TIME) magazine asked: Is it true that 80 percent of the Soviet space program is for military purposes? That is what U.S. officials assert. Will Leonid Kizim and Vladimir Solovyev work on military projects on board the station? [Begin recording]

[Kizim] The program for our work on board the Mir scientific station does not contain any experiments for military purposes. As for the statements by U.S. officials, it seems to us that they are being made in order to justify their own plans for transferring the arms race to space. Our country, as from the very beginning of the space age, advocated peaceful research in space and is now struggling actively against militarization of outer space. The station is a peaceful space house. When the scientific modules are docked with it, the station will become a major scientific laboratory that, apart from research into fundamental scientific problems, will carry out a great deal of work in the interests of the national economy.

[Solovyev] In our opinion, going by the results of nearly 1 month's manned operation of the Mir station, one can say that the station is controlled well both from earth and by the crew. The station is able to take freight and transport craft. The prolonged radio and television communications sessions system has been checked via the Luch satellite relay and is working reliably enough. Regarding living conditions, the station is more comfortable than stations of the Salyut series. [end recording]

[Slipchenko] After the communications session ended, the conversation was continued in the main press center of the USSR Foreign Affairs Ministry. Leaders in the training of Soviet cosmonauts and prominent Soviet scientists answered questions from journalists.

Continuation of Conference

LD072118 Moscow TASS in English 1716 GMT 7 APR 86

[Text] Moscow April 7 TASS — "The exploration of near-earth space for peaceful purposes — this task was set by Soviet cosmonautics from the very start. And its nature remains peaceful", said Vladimir Kotelnikov, vice-president of the USSR Academy of Sciences. He spoke today at a press conference for Soviet and foreign journalists devoted to the 25th anniversary of Yuriy Gagarin's flight.

Kotelnikov said that neither the Salyut-7 station that had been orbited earlier, nor the new station Mir envisages the implementation of any military programmes. A Syrian and a French cosmonauts who are to work on board the Mir station as members of international crews will be able to get convinced of this.

Vladimir Kotelnikov laid special emphasis on applied research which had been of global importance in many spheres — from weather forecasts to prospecting for new deposits of oil and gas.

"We have succeeded in receiving a general picture of the evolution of the universe", said Academician Yakov Zeldovich, prominent expert in the sphere of cosmology. Dwelling on the achievements of space medicine, Academician Oleg Gazenko said: "Soviet medics succeeded in reducing to the minimum the difficulties against which cosmonauts come up after prolonged space flights".

Dwelling on the prospects of Soviet cosmonautics, superviser of the training of Soviet cosmonauts Vladimir Shatalov said that the first stage of the stay of Syria's representatives, who are soon to become participants in an international expedition, is being concluded in Star City. The main and the stand-by crews are to be formed at the end of the summer. Candidates for the second Soviet-French flight are being selected in France.

The exploration of outer space with the use of automatic apparatus will be continued. Following the study of Venus, it is planned to implement an equally thorough programme of exploration of Mars and its satellite Phobos. Work will be conducted both from orbit and with the use of landing craft.

TV Highlights

LD080821 [Editorial Report] Moscow Television Service in Russian at 1045 GMT on 7 April broadcasts a 15-minute program "Space: Deeds, Problems, Prospects" by commentator Petr Pelekhov about the 7 April news conference between the cosmonauts on the Mir space station and journalists at the flight control center. Pelekhov notes that the conference was attended by over 450 Soviet and foreign journalists. Their questions were answered by the chiefs of the Soviet space program, prominent Soviet scientists, cosmonauts on earth, and the Mir space station cosmonauts, Leonid Kizim and Vladimir Solovyev. This was accomplished using a radio-and-TV link off the Luch satellite and Pelekhov adds that the window of radio visibility for the TV link was unusually long.

The first question asked is: Why name the station Mir? Crew commander Leonid Kizim, is heard answering that the name reflects the Soviet people's aspiration toward peace: "The station is a peaceful house in space. When the scientific modules are docked with it, the station will be turned a large scientific laboratory, which, aside from research on fundamental scientific problems, will carry out a large volume of work in the interests of the national economy." He says that their concept of peace embraces everything from friendship between peoples, fruitful work, and family happiness. For cosmonauts, he says "peace is above all space without weapons."

Solovyev then notes that the station, after a month's operation in space, is functioning well, whether controlled by the crew directly or remotely from earth. "The station can take on cargo-transport vessels. Via the satellite relay Luch the system for lengthy radio and TV communications sessions has been tested and works reliably enough." Solovyev says the station is more comfortable than the Salyut stations. "It must be said that we have our own comments to make. There are some failures in the operation of the equipment. You cannot avoid that, but together with ground control we are trying to overcome this." The Mir space station is the future in this kind of scientific space station, notes Solovyev.

Pelekhov informs listeners that the Mir station is a third generation station, equipped with a computer complex allowing the automation of many operations previously carried out by the crew. Pelekhov wonders, whether cosmonauts worry about being forced out of orbit by machines?

Solovyev, replies that while automation is a great help and saving in labor and improves conditions for living in space; no machine can replace man in space with his capacity to react immediately to a changing situation and his capability as a researcher and experimenter. People in space will carry out the functions, program machines with the necessary information they have acquired, and then the machines will carry out such functions for them — that is the way things are going.

Journalists express interest in the possibility Soviet space stations would take international crews on board. Pelekhov reminds listeners about the training of a joint Soviet-Syrian crew in progress and the agreement concluded for sending up a joint Soviet-French team. There will be other such ventures if there is the goodwill and the desire to cooperate. In connection with this, journalists ask the cosmonauts what they think can be done within the framework of the world organization for study and research into space for peaceful purposes, which was proposed by the Soviet Union.

Kizim, responds that "the creation of a world space organization would significantly expand access by many states to these achievements of scientific and technical progress" and refers to recent advancements in space communications and navigation, meteorology, and natural history. Here he points to the example of the Vega-Giotto project as a predecessor of such international cooperation in space.

Pelekhov then notes that the recent Challenger shuttle disaster was on many journalists minds: Michael (Davidov) of the U.S. newspaper DAILY WORLD comments that the Challenger tragedy raised the question of security on spaceflights. He asks "what measures are being undertaken by the Soviet Union to reduce the danger on spaceflights to a minimum? Can the USSR and the United States cooperate in this area? Are steps being taken to establish such cooperation? What role in this affair is the new International Cosmonauts Organization playing?"

Solovyev answers that "cosmonauts' safety is one of the main requirements in the Soviet manned-spaceflight program. In this connection very serious, responsible, special measures are being undertaken. For example, on launch, in the event of an accident in the launch vehicle, the vessel itself and the cosmonauts in it are removed to a safe system and are rescued by means of an accident-rescue system. During the course of the flight and its basic elements — launch into orbit, docking, undocking, landing — the cosmonauts are in their spacesuits on board the vessel. Enhancing security is helped by activating a number of basic systems and standby units for the most important units. Rescue of the cosmonauts is also envisaged from the space station in the event it becomes unsealed. For this we have special stores of compressed air."

Solovyev continues by recalling the Soyuz-Apollo project as an example of cooperation in space and how it helped in the study of spaceflight safety. "We believe that the two leading space powers, the USSR and the United States, could cooperate in this sphere significantly more energetically. And it is just this cooperation for which the International Cosmonauts' Organization is calling. We could work jointly on a very wide circle of questons — for example, carrying out a flight to Mars, and creating large orbital scientific complexes and new manned space ships. We think that cooperation in this sphere of cosmonautics between the USSR and the United States has many supporters, including cosmonauts."

Frank Burwalter of NBC TV asks the cosmonauts if they agree with the growing U.S. view that only professionally trained people should be sent into space.

Solovyev notes that the Challenger disaster was not a result of the type of crew training; even now, the technology has improved such that cosmonauts' physical requirements are not as high as they were. "I think the time is not far off when scientists and specialists who are not especially physically fit will be able to fly into space in spaceships."

Pelekhov notes that Gagarin opened the way for the peaceful use of space. He continues adding that "today in the West, on U.S. initiative, plans are being fostered to put arms in space. And again, as happened more than once before, when they have to justify their black deeds somehow, instead of arguments they lie. Both the cosmonauts and earth-participants at the press conference literally answered several questions with one and the same essential: No. There are no systems for military purposes on the Mir station and none are included in its program."

Christian Mess of GDR radio asks the cosmonauts if they ever thought their station would be attacked and what would they do then? Solovyev replies that he is terrified at the thought of the destruction of his house in space. That is why, he stresses, the road for weapons in space should be closed.

In conclusion, a question is asked about which module the cosmonauts would like to see docked with one of the four currently free docking ports. Kizim replies: "We would like a module with geophysical apparatus to dock first with our station. We both like to study the earth from space and this seems completely natural to us. Our planet looks so beautiful and interesting from here that it's hard to take our eyes off it. Of course, to fly on board the station when the scientific modules have been docked with it and get straight down to the research would be nice. However, getting the station ready to receive the modules is a no less important and interesting task."

Cosmonauts Continue Tests Aboard 'Mir'

LD041138 Moscow TASS in English 1032 GMT 4 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow, April 4 TASS — Special TASS correspondent reports from the mission control centre:

The third week of Leonid Kizim's and Vladimir Solovyev's work on board the space research station Mir is coming to a close.

The flight program for the past several days included further testing of improved systems and units of the station and the assembly of the equipment brought by the cargo spaceship. Along with this work, the geophysical study on the order of specialists of various branches of the national economy was started.

The crew planned for today visual observations and the photographing with manual photo cameras of separate regions of the USSR. The purpose of it is to evaluate from outer space the state of winter crops after winter.

The timetable also envisages the checking of the functioning of on-board systems of the orbital complex, medical check-up and physical exercises.

According to telemetric data and reports of the cosmonauts, the flight is going on normally.

The cosmonauts are in good health and feel well.

Cosmonauts' Training Chief Views Modular Spacecraft

LD061628 Moscow World Service in English 1500 GMT 6 Apr 86

[Text] The man in charge of training Soviet cosmonauts, General Vladimir Shatalov, has said that a research complex of any size can be assembled from separate units in orbit. This is being checked out by Leonid Kizim and Vladimir Solovyev aboard the Mir station. This station has six docking units and just as many spacecraft can dock with it. The craft can operate on their own to free the docking unit for a new transport ship or research module and dock with the orbital complex only from time to time. Modules can be equipped on earth as workshops, laboratories, hothouses, or observatories. Shatalov said the unit principle can be followed to build orbital cosmodromes as well.

Antarctic Expedition — The five vessels making up the 31st Antarctic Expedition are now embarking on the final stage of their work as the weather deteriorates to winter there. The dry cargo carrier Pioner Estonii has carried out one of its last transport operations in Prydz Bay, taking on a large group of specialists from the Soyuz seasonal geological-geophysical base. These specialists have been carrying out research in the mountains and ice floes of eastern Antarctica. Afterwards the Pioner Estonii set off for Mirnaya observatory. The Kapitan Gotskiy and Baykal are heading toward Novolazarevskaya station and then will visit the Molodezhnaya weather center. The Professor Zubov will also be arriving there with equipment for the winter crew. [Summary] [Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 2100 GMT 31 Mar 86 LD]

Space System Rescues Ships — KOSPAS-SARSAT, the international space rescue system, has saved some 600 lives to date. At the Moscow terminal for the system a computer determines the location of an emergency beacon. Yuriy Atserov heads the satellite communications organization of the Ministry of Merchant Marine. In 1990 the international maritime organization will make KOSPAS-SARSAT beacons aboard ships compulsory. They are a good example of international cooperation, but only a fraction of what can be accomplished in the peaceful uses of outer space. Atserov is convinced that the possible saturation of space with military systems will not only prevent the emergence of new peaceful programs but will make it difficult to implement existing programs. WARSAW PACT PROPOSES NUCLEAR-FREE ZONES IN EUROPE

Pact Message to West

PM091306 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 9 Apr 86 First Edition p 4

["Socialist Countries Proposal in the Interest of Freeing Europe From Nuclear Weapons"]

[Text] The address by the Warsaw Treaty member-states to the European nations, the United States, and Canada on the question of establishing nuclear-free zones in Europe was given to the Embassies of Austria, Belgium, Great Britain, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Denmark, Spain, Italy, Cyprus, the Netherlands, Portugal, the United States, Turkey, Finland, France, Switzerland, Sweden, and Yugoslavia at the Bulgarian Foreign Ministry on 8 April 1986, as agreed by the Warsaw Treaty member-states.

The document is being handed over to the other European nations and Canada through the Bulgarian Embassies in Moscow, Belgrade, Berne, London, Luxembourg, Paris, and Rome.

The latest initiative by the allied Socialist countries is a concrete manifestation of the agreed foreign policy course worked out at the Sofia meeting of the Warsaw Treaty Political Consultative Committee.

It accords with the program for establishing a nuclear-free world advanced in Mikhail Gorbachev's 15 January 1986 statement and with the proposals set out in the communique of the Warsaw meeting of the Foreign Ministers Committee.

The Warsaw Treaty member-states express the hope that the European countries, the United States, and Canada will give attention to the address and respond to it in a constructive spirit. Address by the Warsaw Pact member-states to the European states, the United States, and Canada on the Question of Establishing Nuclear-Free Zones in Europe:

In today's complex international situation, when the peoples of Europe and the whole of mankind are faced with a question in all its acuteness -- to live in peace or to perish in nuclear war -- the Warsaw Pact member-states believe that decisive actions and specific measures are necessary more than ever in order to immediately end the arms race, primarily the nuclear arms race; to prevent its spread into space; and to begin disarmament and the elimination of the nuclear threat.

In connection with this, they support the program put forward by the Soviet Union for the total elimination everywhere of nuclear and chemical weapons before the end of this century, a program that also envisages the reduction of conventional weapons and armed forces.

They are convinced that the implementation of nuclear disarmament would lead to the creation of a secure peace for all the European peoples, and for the peoples of the whole planet. The complete elimination of the medium-range missiles of the USSR and United States in Europe would be an exceptionally important initial step in the cause of freeing the European Continent from nuclear arms, and of strengthening European Security.

Proposals for the creation of zones free of nuclear arms in different areas of the European Continent, which the Warsaw Pact member-states consistently and persistently support, follow in the general line of efforts to remove the nuclear threat. They note that in several areas of the world, nonnuclear zones are already a political reality.

The creation of nonnuclear zones in Europe at the present time is as topical as ever. Here, as nowhere else, the concentration of armed forces and armaments has reached dangerous limits. The level of nuclear confrontation is high and the risk of an accidental breakout of nuclear war great.

It is the belief of the member-states that the creation of nuclear zones in Europe would promote a strengthening of security for participant countries in such zones, as well as European and universal security; consolidation of stability and mutual trust; a restoration of detente; a reduction in armed forces and armaments; a strengthening of the procedure relating to the nonproliferation of nuclear weapons; and an expansion of the peaceful use of nuclear energy. The creation of nonnuclear zones is closely linked with the development of good-neighborliness, mutual understanding, and cooperation.

The governments of a number of other European states are also in favor of the establishment of nuclear-free zones in various parts of Europe. This idea enjoys the support of parliaments, political parties, and broad public circles. Proposals on the establishment of such zones in the continent have been put forward as an important measure for strengthening confidence at the Stockholm conference, and are being examined at other international forums. The United Nations attaches great importance to the establishment of nuclear-free zones.

The Warsaw Pact member-states are against the buildup of nuclear arms both in Europe and everywhere in the world. They are in favor of halting further siting of nuclear arms on the continent, in favor of the reduction of nuclear arms, and for the complete liberation of Europe from both medium-range and tactical nuclear arms. Their proposals on this account remain valid.

The Warsaw Pact member-states base their views on the fact that the realization of proposals for the creation of zones completely free of nuclear weapons in various regions of Europe depends on political will, and on the joint decision of the interested states of the corresponding regions. Further efforts on their part, and an increase in the constructive contribution on the part of other states, are required. Accords for the creation of nuclear-free zones should correspond to the commonly recognized norms of international law, and should secure a reliable observance of their genuinely nuclear-free status with appropriate verification.

Moreover, states possessing nuclear weapons should take on an obligation to strictly respect the status of nuclear-free zones, and refrain from using or threatening to use nuclear weapons against states forming part of such zones.

The Warsaw Pact member-states are convinced that the creation and effectiveness of nonnuclear zones depend to a large extent also on how other states, above all nuclear ones, view them. They noted that the USSR, resolutely supporting the creation of nonnuclear zones in Europe, expresses its readiness to give the appropriate guarantees to such zones and they expect the United States and also Britain and France to manifest the same attitude.

The allied states welcome the efforts of corresponding states designed to create a nonnuclear zone in northern Europe. The prospect of consolidating the current virtually nonnuclear status of this region is becoming more realistic, thanks to the readiness of the USSR to give the appropriate guarantees to the countries that are members of this zone by concluding multilateral or bilateral agreements with them.

Similar guarantees by the United States, Britain, and France would help to raise the effectiveness of this zone. The member-states of the Warsaw Pact also note the readiness of the USSR to undertake other concrete steps for the implementation of the idea of creating a nonnuclear zone in northern Europe.

They also come out in favor of the creation of zones free of nuclear weapons in the Balkans, and of efforts to strengthen security, and to develop trust, good neighborliness and cooperation between the Balkan states. They welcome the multilateral dialogue on this question which has begun between the Balkan states and call on them to continue and deepen it.

The Warsaw Pact member-states support Sweden's proposal to create a corridor free of battlefield nuclear arms along the line where the states of the Warsaw Pact and those of NATO meet. They believe that, in order to raise the effectiveness of the corridor, it should be widened on both sides of the line of contact, taking into account the tactical-technical characteristics of these arms. It would be possible to begin creating this corridor with central Europe.

Adoption by the Soviet Union and the United States of a mutual commitment to refrain from siting any nuclear arms on the territory of states where there are no such weapons, and also not to build up stocks of nuclear arms and not to replace them with new ones in those countries where they are already sited, would be of great significance for the practical implementation of the idea of setting up nuclear-free zones in Europe. At the same time, it is necessary that nonnuclear states, on whose territory nuclear arms are not at present sited, do not allow such arms to be sited on their territory. These measures would assist the prevention of the territorial proliferation of nuclear arms, the limitation of the nuclear arms race, the safeguarding of the balance of forces at the lowest level, and the preservation of the de facto nuclear-free status of those states on whose territory there are no nuclear arms.

Taking as a premise the need to free Europe of the nuclear threat; desiring the total elimination of nuclear arms from the lives of peoples; bearing in mind the experience that has been acquired in the sphere of forming nuclear-free zones and the principles and provisions of the Helsinki Final Act; and striving to develop the all-European process, the Warsaw Pact member-states:

-- Appeal to the states of Europe, the United States, and Canada to embark on energetic actions to implement the proposals for formation of zones free of nuclear weapons on the European Continent;

-- Call for support for the efforts of states that advocate the formation of nuclear-free zones, including their efforts in the relevant international forums;

-- Express their readiness to take part in the conducting of an intensified and specific exchange of opinions between the appropriate interested states with the aim of furthering the implementation of practical steps toward creating nonnuclear zones in northern Europe and on the Balkans;

-- Speak out in favor of talks being held between the interested states on the matter of creating a corridor free of nuclear weapons battlefield in the center of Europe.

Member-states of the Warsaw Pact are convinced that the nuclear danger can and must be removed. This demands the vigorous and decisive action of all states, nuclear and nonnuclear; all participants in military and political alliances; the neutral and the nonaligned. The creation of nonnuclear zones on the European Continent should become an important step on the road to ensuring the security of peoples in this continent, and ridding Europe of nuclear weapons.

'Cousonant' With Gorbachev

LD081928 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1445 GMT 8 Apr 86

[From "The World Today" program presented by Vsevolod Shishkovskiy]

[Text] The Warsaw Pact member-countries have addressed to European states, and also to the United States and Canada, a new proposal directed at delivering Europe from nuclear weapons. It is a matter of the pressing need to support the efforts of the world public, which is demanding the creation of nuclear-free zones on the continent. It is the conviction of the states of the Warsaw Pact that the creation of such zones would contribute to the strengthening of not only European, but also overall security.

For their part the Warsaw Pact states confirm their readiness to take part in the holding of a deepened and specific exchange of opinions among the interested countries with the aim of promoting the realization of practical steps in creating nuclear-free zones in northern Europe and in the Balkans. The new initiative of the allied socialist countries is another manifestation of the coordinated foreign policy line worked out at the Sofia conference of the Political Consultative Committee of the Warsaw Pact member-states. It is consonant with the program for the creation of a nuclear-free world put forward in the statement by Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev on 15 January, and also with the proposals set out in the communique of the recent meeting of the foreign ministers committee in Warsaw.

Lomeyko Holds News Conference

LD081652 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 1552 GMT 8 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow, 8 Apr (TASS) -- The Warsaw Pact countries' appeal to the European states, the United States, and Canada on the creation in various parts of Europe of zones totally free of nuclear weapons is explained by the need to take specific efforts to create a nuclear-free world, Vladimir Lomeyko, head of the Press Department of the USSR Ministry of Foreign Affairs, stated here at a press conference today.

The formation of nuclear-free zones would be a concrete step on the path toward reducing the nuclear danger and toward creating a nuclear-free Europe, and a nuclear-free world. This is the sense of the Warsaw Pact countries' initiative, which aims at searching for ways of finding points of contact and mutually acceptable agreements.

One of the main reasons for the fact that up to now the idea of creating nonnuclear zones in Europe has been coming up against resistance and is not being implemented lies in pressure from the U.S. Administration -- specifically, on NATO member-countries in northern Europe -- and in the overall negative U.S. attitude toward this idea, Vladimir Lomeyko said. The negative stance of the United States regarding the creation of a nonnuclear zone in the Balkans is also well-known. Therefore, a response to the question of how realistic is the creation of a nonnuclear zone in the Balkans depends on the political will, persistence, and specific efforts of the interested countries, and on the political responsibility of those state figures on whom the growing pressure from the United States falls.

As for the USSR, its position is clear. We support the creation of nonnuclear zones and are prepared to guarantee nonnuclear status: in other words, never to threaten with nuclear weapons and not to use them against countires where there are none of these weapons, Lomeyko stressed.

THE LOS ANGELES TIMES correspondent noted at the press conference that Chicago had declared itself a nuclear-free city, and he asked in this connection whether there were towns in the USSR which had done likewise.

In the Soviet Union the need does not arise to declare individual towns nuclear-free, because there is no conflict between the wishes of the populations of individual towns and the wishes of the government, the USSR Ministry of Foreign Affairs representative replied.

The Soviet Union is in favor of not just individual towns, but the whole of Europe, becoming nuclear-free. Additionally, Mikhail Gorbachev's 15 January statement proposes a specific program for freeing the whole world from nuclear weapons.

Unfortunately, in those countries whose governments are not embarking upon a specific program for eliminating nuclear weapons, the demand arises for individual towns to declare themselves nuclear-free. This demand illustrates the mood of the population, which supports the idea of eliminating weapons of mass destruction, and the idea of a nuclear-free world, the head of the Press Department of the USSR Ministry of Foreign Affairs emphasized.

REPORTS, COMMENTS ON UPCOMING U.S. NUCLEAR TEST

Test Plans Provoke 'Indignation'

LD081210 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 0230 GMT 8 Apr 86

[From the "International Diary" program presented by Vladimir Beloshapko]

[Excerpt] Hello Comrades! We have already reported that the United States has planned a nuclear test under the code-name "Might Oak" for today at the Nevada site. As is known, Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev in his address on Soviet television would not carry out nuclear explosions even after March 31 if the United States acted likewise. Our country otherwise would be forced in the interests of its own security to renew nuclear tests. For this reason the explosion planned for today in Nevada is not simply a regular test: This explosion, if it is carried out, will nullify the exclusively favorable opportunity for ending the nuclear arms race and for making the first but very important step in the cause of preventing nuclear war.

Along with the U.S. nuclear test the hopes of the world public tied to the Soviet moratorium on nuclear explosions will also be nullified. It is no surprise that Washington's actions have provoked throughout the world, including in the U.S. itself, a storm of indignation.

Petitioners Complain of Reception

LD081729 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1400 GMT 8 Apr 86

[Text] Representatives of the Soviet Peace Committee -- deputy chairman of the committee, writer Borovik; Cosmonaut-airman Grechko; doctor of physical and mathematical sciences (Masseyevich); IZVESTIYA political observer Matveyev; members of the committee, poet Kazakova and USSR People's Artist Matveyev -- visited the U.S. Embassy in the Soviet Union today. They handed a petition to a counsellor at the embassy addressed to U.S. President Reagan voicing Soviet public concern over the U.S. Administration's intention to conduct a new test of a nuclear device in the state of Nevada on 8 April.

After the petition had been handed in, a TASS correspondent asked Genrikh Borovik to describe how it went. We all had the impression that our completely peaceful arrival at the embassy startled the staff there, the writer said. We were in an anteroom of the embassy, shut in between two doors. Apart from us there was a U.S. Marine and a woman secretary seated there behind bulletproof glass screens. And next to them, by a door leading into an inner room was a young woman with an electromagnetic probe for searching visitors. After a few minutes an anxious-looking bearded man in a bow tie came out to us saying he was a security officer. We told him we wanted to hand our petition to U.S. Ambassador Hartman. The officer went away.

After some time he came back saying that neither the ambassador nor any senior embassy staff were there and that as a security officer he was prepared to accept the petition. We objected that we could hand it only to a senior diplomat to whom we wished to talk about the Soviet people's alarm over the nuclear explosions in Nevada. The officer once again went away somewhere, and eventually Economic Counsellor (Ober) came out to us. Having told him the purpose of our visit we inquired whether we were to continue the conversation in the anteroom, measuring roughly 1.5 by 2.5 meters, between closed doors or whether it might not be more comfortable talking in a normal setting. The counsellor shook his head in dismay and replied that the regulations do not permit this. We are afraid of terrorists. That surprised us and made us laugh: Surely it could not be that at the U.S. Embassy in our country there reigns the same hysteria as is whipped up on that country's territory overseas.

We said that our intentions were most peaceful and expressed surprise at such a nervous reaction to the simple handing-over of a letter. Mr (Ober) replied that if we had warned them about our visit in advance...We had not had time to warn you in advance; the nuclear blast in Nevada is to take place on 8 April, we replied. This is not a courtesy visit; our purpose is to convey to your government an appeal from Soviet people to change the decision about the blast before it is too late.

In the end, Genrikh Borovik said in conclusion, Mr (Ober) took the petition and promised to confer with his superiors about what to do with it. He was holding our sheet of paper as though it were burning his hands. American staff at the embassy could be seen in a huddle behind two glass doors. They too were not allowed into our anteroom, though under which antiterrorist regulations I cannot imagine.

U.S. Postpones Test

LD082127 Moscow in English to Great Britain and Ireland 1900 GMT 8 Apr 86

[Text] According to news reports, the United States has postponed a nuclear blast at the Nevada proving range slated for Tuesday. The French news agency and UPI say a spokesman for the United States Energy Department has declined to elaborate on the reason or report any details.

Strong Winds Cause Postponement

LD091102 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1000 GMT 9 Apr 86

[Text] The new nuclear explosion planned by the Reagan administration for 8 April was postponed for technical reasons. This was reported to the UPI news agency by representatives of the Department of Energy. They said the postponement was caused by strong winds that would have carried the dust cloud raised by the explosion toward populated areas. Moreover, they stressed that the test would be carried out as soon as the weather permits.

COMMENTATORS REVIEW U.S. TEST BAN STANCE

Explosions 'Intensify' Arms Race

PM081300 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 6 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 4

[Vikentiy Matveyev "Political Observer's Opinion": "SDI's Nuclear Trigger"]

[Text] U.S. militarist circles have always fought against ending nuclear weapons tests, mobilizing every layer of political power at their disposal.

However, there have been major statesmen in postwar U.S. history who have become aware and appreciative of a grim truth: Even so-called "experimental explosions" of weapons of mass destruction not only bring a dangerous intensification of the arms race but also have a destructive impact on the environment.

During a trip to the western United States in 1963 President Kennedy was shown a large crater in New Mexico. It had been formed as a result of an underground nuclear explosion carried out there. Two U.S. nuclear scientists who accompanied the President on the trip enthusiastically described to him their work to devise a smaller but more powerful nuclear bomb. Kennedy listened without comment and then, finding himself alone with one of his advisers, observed: How is it possible to talk about such a matter with enthusiasm! People assure me that it is essential to continue nuclear weapons tests to produce a "clean bomb." But what difference does it make how millions of people will be killed!

Aware of the consequences of the unlimited continuation of nuclear tests and conscious of the pressure of world, including U.S. public opinion, President Kennedy's administration signed with our country and Britain in that same year of 1963 a treaty on a partial ban on nuclear weapons tests in the atmosphere, in outer space, and under water.

The U.S. President's trip to the west of the country, during which he was shown the crater caused by the underground nuclear explosion in New Mexico, took place after he had decided to sign the aforementioned treaty. It was only some time after his death, in a book published in the United States in 1972, that three very close advisers to J. Kennedy shared their recollections of his attitude toward the nuclear test ban. The book describes how fervently ordinary Americans responded to the treaty's conclusion. Military circles in Washington, however, greeted it with a gnashing of teeth. A bitter struggle began in Congress. On 24 September 1963, when the Senate had approved the treaty after heated debate, Kennedy went off on the aforementioned trip. This is what the book's authors write: "The President discovered that the audience he was addressing in the west showed much more enthusiasm for the nuclear test ban treaty than for the (White House) plans to protect natural resources." And up to that time Kennedy had thought it was the latter issue which was the most popular. Seeing how things stood, he made the ending of nuclear explosions the main theme of his speeches and received an enthusiastic reception everywhere.

Does it need to be spelled out that we are not dealing here simply with recent history? The world community, in the proper meaning of that term, including the vast majority of Americans, demands a positive response in Washington to the Soviet Union's goodwill and to the readiness it has shown to work to obtain, in concert with the United States, an all-embracing, complete ban on all nuclear tests in the world. As in 1963, the USSR and the United States can and must set an example of a responsible attitude toward this topical question.

As was the case 23 years back, the pillars of the powerful military-industrial complex in the United States are bitterly opposed to a complete cessation of nuclear tests, because they are eager to develop new kinds of weapons of mass destruction. And from this standpoint it can be said that a complete ban on such tests, since this depends on Washington's stance, is being sacrificed to the Pentagon's "star wars" program. Let us explain what is meant here.

There is much evidence from members of the present American Administration, up to and including the White House chief, the U.S. secretary of defense, and other figures, who speak unambiguously about the fact that the underground nuclear explosions being carried out by the American military are an important part of the so-called "Strategic Defense Initiative" (SDI), that is to say, the spreading of the arms race into outer space.

Thus, in a recent speech, Pentagon chief C. Weinberger acknowledged that study of the potention for destroying an enemy missile "using nuclear energy" -- nuclear explosions -- is one avenue of the SDI program.

Representative E. Markey has described the tests of nuclear-pumped X-ray lasers being conducted by the Pentagon as a key element of the "star wars" program.

The Soviet side has has repeatedly pointed out that a refusal by the United States to commit itself, together with other countries, not to proceed with the militarization of outer space would have the most fatal consequences for the cause of disarmament and, therefore, for the fortunes of world peace.

Will the complete ban on nuclear tests, which the world community is seeking, not be sacrificed to the Pentagon's "star wars" program? The question is a legitimate and urgent one.

Policy 'Robbed of All Sense'

PM081421 Moscow KRASNAYA ZVEZDA in Russian 8 Apr 86 Second Edition p 3

[Yu. Kornilov article under the rubric "The Comprehensive Peace Program": "Central Avenue"]

[Text] The modern world is complex and multifaceted, filled with concerns and hopes. A keen, intense struggle rages in the international arena. The arms race unleashed by imperialism has led to a situation where the 20th century is nearing its end in world politics overshadowed by this question: Will mankind manage to escape the nuclear danger, or will the policy of confrontation, leading to the increased likelihood of nuclear conflict, prevail? The atmosphere of nuclear confrontation dictates the need to double and treble our efforts to overcome the negative trends that have grown up in the world arena in recent years. It calls for new approaches, methods, and forms of mutual relations between the various social systems, states, and regions.

The profound, genuinely scientific analysis of the nature and scale of the nuclear threat carried out by the CPSU Central Committee and vividly expressed in the documents of the 27th party congress made it possible to formulate a conclusion of great theoretical and practical significance, namely that objective conditions have now emerged in the international arena in which the confrontation between socialism and capitalism can proceed solely and exclusively in the forms of peaceful competition and peaceful rivalry; in the conditions of the total unacceptability of nuclear war, not confrontation, but peaceful coexistence between systems must become the law in interstate relations. On the basis of this inescapable political axiom, the congress stressed that the struggle against the nuclear danger and the arms race and for the preservation and strengthening of universal peace is the party's main line in the world arena.

An all-embracing program for this struggle, taking the form of an alloy of the philosophy of the formation of a secure world in the nuclear and space age and a platform of concrete actions, was put forward in the 15 January 1986 statement by M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, and developed in the congress documents. "It is a question specifically of a concrete plan of action with a strict time frame," the CPSU Central Committee Political Report to the congress stressed. "The USSR intends to strive persistently for its implementation, seeing this as the central avenue of its foreign policy in the coming years."

The large-scale Soviet initiatives are at the center of the world public's attention. The international reactions to them are to be found in millions of lines of print in newspapers and magazines and thousands of kilometers of teletype tape. Of course, these reactions are not identical -- they depend on the positions expressed by the particular mass information organ and the forces behind it. But if we highlight the basic, main element from among the flow of remarks, there is every reason to say: The Soviet initiatives have been assessed on all continents as historic in their scale and significance, because their implementation would open up for mankind a fundamentally different phase of development and an opportunity to concentrate on creation alone. It is stressed particularly that the international policy of the CPSU and the Soviet state arises from the humane nature of the socialist society, which is free of exploitation and oppression and has no classes or social groups with an interest in unleashing wars, and that this policy is indissoulubly linked with the strategic tasks of the USSR's accelerated socioeconomic development and expresses the Soviet people's one desire -- to engage in creative labor and live in peace with all the peoples.

And that is indeed so. What, in fact, are the basic principles of the program for universal security through disarmament which is today the pivot of Soviet foreign policy strategy and tactics? The core of this program, which is based on the premise that true security in our age is guaranteed not by an extremely high level, but by an extremely low level of the strategic balance, is the proposal on the elimination of nuclear weapons by stages, with a ban on space strike arms. Mankind can and must enter the 3d millenium free from the fear of nuclear catastrophe. A real step along the path to this goal is the complete ending and prohibition of nuclear weapon tests, because not conducting such tests means beginning to move toward the elimination of nuclear arsenals. At the same time the USSR is in favor of completely eliminating chemical weapons. Renouncing other weapons of mass destruction. Making conventional arms and armed forces the subject of agreed reductions. Bringing into play the entire existing system of talks and ensuring the best possible performance of disarmament mechanisms. There is no weapon in the world which the Soviet Union would not be prepared to limit or ban on a reciprocal basis with the use of effective verification; with a view to ending the accelerated material preparations for war, our country, which advocates that the whole range of disarmament problems be examined as a whole, is prepared to go as far as other states are prepared to go. "By getting rid of the spine-chilling fear of the nuclear winter, your unprecedented actions and long-term plans create the potential and engender hopes for a flowering spring in a world without nuclear weapons -- weapons of mass destruction," the American Communist leader Gus Hall stated from the platform of the 27th CPSU Congress.

That is one approach to the pivotal international problem of today -- the problem of war and peace; an approach which is a model of comprehensive analysis of the realities of the age and of the present-day international situation. But there are still forces in the world which adhere to a different approach, indeed a diametrically opposed approach to the same problem. Characteristically, during the very period in which the world has been warmly welcoming the program put forward by the 27th CPSU Congress for disarmament and for ensuring the reliable security of all states and peoples -- during that very period, the U.S. President, the Pentagon chief, and other leaders of the American Administration have been delivering a series of addresses and speeches publicizing the thesis that strength and strength alone is the "most convincing argument" of American foreign policy. "The summit meeting opened the door to a world of hope," M.S. Gorbachev noted in his interview for the Algerian magazine REVOLUTION AFRICAINE. "But how people connected with the U.S. military-industrial complex took fright at this ray of light! How forcefully they flung themselves upon this 'door' to slam it shut!"

Acting as the locomotive of militarism in the international arena, the United States stubbornly refuses to resolve the main, fundamental question -- that of preventing an arms race in space. Regarding strategic arms and medium-range systems, the old American proposal, which is calculated to secure unilateral advantages, is repeated. Instead of untying the European missile "knot," they try to tie it still tighter. A storm of public indignation was aroused by Washington's refusal to respond to the USSR's good initiative and consent to the ending of all nuclear tests. Also of considerable importance is the way in which the U.S. ruling circles reject or block all peace-loving initiatives -- ostentatiously, arrogantly, with disregard for the opinion of the world community. No sense of realism or responsibility!

History has confirmed repeatedly that attempts by the U.S. imperialist circles to achieve military superiority over the USSR have always failed. That was the case with the attempt at nuclear blackmail, in response to which the USSR created its own nuclear shield. The same thing happened when the United States tried to outstrip our country in terms of the might of the nuclear arsenal; and the same will happen with any other attempt to violate the parity of strategic forces.

Today too, the Soviet Union is ready and able to do everything to respond suitably to any aggressvie designs and protect its own security. The imperialist circles' hopes of hiding from retribution are illusory.

At the same time this should be said equally clearly: The potential and nature of modern weapons are such that the policy of confrontation and antagonism is robbed of all sense. Statistics show: Between 1601 and 1700 -- a whole century -- 3.3 million people died in wars; between 1701 and 1800, 5.2 million; and between 1801 and 1913, 5.6 million. World War I cost mankind 10 million dead and 20 million crippled, and World War II took more than 50 million human lives. And what would a military conflagration mean to the planet today, when the nuclear arsenals stockpiled in the world are such that specialists argue only about how many times or dozens of times over mankind could be eliminated?!

The world has become too small and fragile for wars or any kind of "strong-arms methods," and the awareness of this fact is -- albeit with great difficulty -- finding its way through imperial ambitions, through the dense layer of preconceptions and prejudice, to penetrate the thinking of many representatives of the ruling class in the NATO states. "Only fools could stand up for victory in a nuclear war now," U.S. President J. Kennedy stated back in the early sixties. And here is a remark, dated March of this year, from another former White House incumbent -- R. Nixon: "Forty years ago the United States had a monopoly of nuclear weapons -- it had nine atom bombs, while the Soviet Union had no such bombs. Today the United States and the USSR have more than 10,000 nuclear warheads each, installed on intercontinental weapons, and the smallest of them is 10 times more powerful than the bomb which destroyed Hiroshima. In these conditions, to continue the nuclear arms race is madness."

Madness true enough, but what is the way out? It lies in realizing clearly, in formulating the foundations of foreign policy, that in the nuclear age you cannot find reasonable solutions -- either international or domestic -- on the nuclear path. This is what the Soviet Union emphasizes again and again.

Time will tell whether the Western ruling circles, above all the United States, having soberly assessed the realities of the modern world, will be able to renounce the political philosophy of hegemonism and the militarist doctrines which life refutes. As for our country, it proceeds on the basis that however great the threat to peace created by the policy of the aggressive circles of imperialism, world war is not a fatal inevitability. Success in the battle against war must be achieved without fail, it was stressed at the 27th CPSU Congress. The CPSU sees active participation in this battle as the very essence of its foreign policy strategy.

ORTHODOX SYNOD ISSUES PEACE MESSAGE

LD081352 Moscow TASS in English 1303 GMT 8 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 8 TASS -- The present-day reality requires urgent measures to deliver mankind completely from the nuclear threat, the Holy Synod of the Russian Orthodox Chruch said in a message on war and peace in a nuclear age.

The message was circulated at a news conference for Soviet and foreign journalists at the Moscow Patriarchate's publishing department today.

Speaking there, Metropolitan Filaret of Kiev and Galich said the Russian Orthodox Church, which is active in the worldwide peace-making movement, has found it essential "ahead of the 1,000 anniversary of the Christianization of Russia in 1988 to sum up the experience of the religious interpretation of the problems of war and peace and define the pressing tasks of saving peace and the very life on earth from destruction in a nuclear conflagration."

He said it has taken two years to draw up the message which contains such chapters as "Christian attitude to war" and "Christian understanding of peace" and sets forth the reasons for reinterpreting the views on war and peace.

The message said: "Our time is characterized by peoples' search for political and economic independence, for social justice, for the development of their own identities, for building such a society as will ensure life in dignity for its every member.

"But the legitimate desire of peoples to follow their own ways of development has been often met not with understanding but opposition on the part of many powers that be.

"A strongest manifestation of it is the policy pursued today by U.S. ruling circles. Ascribing the natural processes of liberation and development that go on in the world to the intervention of the Soviet Union, they maintain a policy of confrontation towards our country, reinforcing this policy by their search for military superiority, which has found its manifestation in the arms race.

"All this has led to the escalation of international tension and increased the threat of a nuclear war." Naturally enough, the message added, the increasing threat of war has caused profound concern among religious, public and political figures, scientists and many other peace-makers from all walks of life. It recalled that Christian world outlook has made a certain impact on international relations. "Both in theory and in practice, Christians have sought to realize in the world the principles of truth," the message remarked.

From the Christian point of view, it added, "The notion of moral truth in international relations should be based on the following basic principles: 1) love of one's neighbours, of one's people and homeland, 2) the recognition of the needs of other nations and 3) the conviction that the welfare of one's nation cannot be promoted by immoral means."

The commandment to live, it emphasized, should not serve to cover the evil. "It is absolutely impossible to interpret this appeal to be kind and humble in personal human relations in terms of spineless contemplation of atrocities and injustices being inflicted on our neighbours," the message said. It recalled the tragedy of Hiroshima and Nagasaki, which were flattened by atomic bombings, and added:

"The disastrous physical consequences of a nuclear war are terrifying not only because an unpredictable number of people will be killed. They will be no less terrible for the survivors". That is why it is a moral imperative not to make first use of nuclear weapons, the message said.

A large part of the message dealt with the arms race, condemning it as "an inhuman waste of resources", natural, material and manpower.

"The arms race, especially the nuclear arms race, does not only bring the world nearer to a possible nuclear disaster," the message said. "Even today, it has become one of the most terrible evils which humanity has ever experienced. It reveals the sinful squander of resources which have been given by God to human beings for living and rational use."

The Holy Synod voiced approval for the program for bringing about disarmament and ridding the earth of nuclear weapons stage by stage by the end of this century, which was unveiled by the Soviet state in the middle of January 1986. The Soviet program provides for the USSR and the United States to jointly renounce the development of space strike weapons.

The message said: "We call upon the governments of all nuclear powers to gather courage to embark on the road of delivering the earth from nuclear weapons."

It stressed that outer space should be used exclusively for peaceful purposes. The message defined the tasks of the Christians and non-religious peace-makers in protecting peace and justice for all mankind. It stressed the importance of detente, peaceful co-existence, respect for legal norms, first of all the U.N. Charter, and a search for ways of defusing political tension.

"The United Nations Organization has declared 1986 the year of peace," the message said. "We welcome this decision and hope that every state in the world will make in this year its own contribution to achieving a lasting, just and universal peace."

U.S. SEEKS TO MODERNIZE NUCLEAR POTENTIAL

LD081541 Moscow TASS in English 1248 GMT 8 Apr 86

[Text] Washington April 8 TASS -- The Reagan administration, which is going ahead with the most ambitious program for the development of nuclear weapons of new types in the past 20 years, is simultaneously seeking ways to expand and modernize the whole of the U.S. nuclear potential. THE WASHINGTON POST says that the administration would like to rebuild the existing plants producing tritium, uranium and plutonium and to set up new laboratories to study the possible use of the energy of nuclear explosions for the "star wars" program.

U.S. SENATORS SAY TESTS NEEDED FOR 'STAR WARS'

LD090619 Moscow TASS in English 0559 GMT 9 Apr 86

[Text] Washington April 9 TASS -- Prominent U.S. Politicians Senators Edward Kennedy, Charles Mathias, Gary Hart and a number of other lawmakers told a press conference at the U.S. Congress that having taken an obstructionist stand on the issue of the moratorium on nuclear explosions, the Reagan administration let the opportunity to arrest and reverse the arms race pass. Senator Kennedy stressed that President Reagan's intention to go ahead with nuclear testing undermined the prospects for control over armaments. He said that the reason behind the Reagan administration's unwillingness to join the moratorium is that continued nuclear explosions were needed for the implementation of the "star wars" programme.

Senator Claiborne Pell considers that the U.S. moves to go ahead with nuclear tests would be an irrational step detrimental to the United States itself. He emphasized that there were no reasons whatsoever to conduct nuclear tests at a time when the Soviet Union abided by the moratorium introduced by it. Senator Tom Harkin said that common sense and security considerations imperatively dictated the need to work for achieving a comprehensive nuclear test ban.

U.S. ROLE IN CHEMICAL WEAPONS BAN REVIEWED

LD090649 Moscow TASS in English 0619 GMT 9 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 9 TASS -- by TASS commentator Valeriy Abarenkov.

The convention on the prohibition of the development production and stockpiling of bacteriological (biological) and toxin weapons and on their destruction was opened for signing 14 years ago, on April 10, 1972.

In 1975, the convention entered into force.

The USSR and its allies proposed a simultaneous ban on bacteriological and chemical weapons, because both were directed at destroying people, all living things. The stance of the Western countries, first of all the United States, prevented that.

Nevertheless, the convention became the first practical step towards disarmament: It provided for the destruction of a whole group of the most dangerous weapon of mass annihilation.

Moreover, the parties to the convention undertook the pledge to continue talks in good faith with a view to prohibiting chemical weapons as well.

Regrettably, the aim has not been achieved so far, and not because the problem of banning chemical weapons has lost its significance. On the contrary. There were only five countries which possessed chemical weapons in 1963. Now their number is 13-15.

The world is facing the threat of the production of new, ever more deadly types of chemical weapon -- binary ones. The Reagan administration is seeking congressional approval for their production, banned by Congress from 1969.

Congress seems to be giving in, although with several reservations. It is clear that such a step will only complicate the current talks on prohibiting chemical weapons.

The problem of banning chemical weapons is beset with difficulties due to the character of chemical production, which makes it hard to verify compliance with an agreement.

Statesmanlike approach should prevail here. It should be based, firstly on the firm commitment to seek the prohibition of chemical weapons, and, secondly, on the aspiration to create a proper political atmosphere that would facilitate advancement towards this objective.

Concrete ideas and proposals have already been advanced: to create zones free from chemical weapons, for instance, in Europe, or to agree on the further non-proliferation of these weapons.

The main thing is that actions in this area should not lose from sight the central task of ultimately banning chemical weapons.

VIENNA FORUM DISCUSSES DISARMAMENT ISSUES

PM081310 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 8 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 4

[Own correspondent N. Novikov dispatch: "Constructive Dialogue"]

[Text] Vienna -- A dialogue meeting on problems of peace and security was held here at the initiative of the International Forum for Ties Between Peace-Loving Forces.

Taking part in it were representatives of more than 20 countries and a number of international organizations. The Soviet delegation was headed by Academician V.G. Afanasyev, chairman of the Soviet Committee for Ties Between Peace-Loving Forces.

The dialogue was opened by Romesh Chandra, president of the International Forum for Ties between Peace-Loving Forces. Representatives from all continents on the planet spoke about the most pressing task of our time -- to avert the threat of nuclear war and strengthen peace and peoples' security. The participants in the dialogue were unanimous in the desire to do everything to ensure that 1986, proclaimed as International Year of Peace by the United Nations, is marked by real progress for the better in international affairs.

The speakers emphasized that people of goodwill throughout the world appraised highly the program for the elimination of all arsenals of nuclear and chemical weapons by the end of this century, put forward in the 15 January 1986 statement by the general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee. Participants in the dialogue also emphasized that the termination of nuclear tests offers a real way toward the termination of the arms race. This is precisely why the peoples approved the Soviet Union's initiative to unilaterally introduce a moratorium on all nuclear explosions and its decision not to conduct any nuclear tests after 31 March provided the United States also does the same.

Maud Frolich, Sweden's representative at the Vienna forum, read an address from the Swedish Peace Movement, which cites an interview given by O. Palme on the day before his death. "Let us believe," he said, "in a mutual and verifiable ban on nuclear weapon tests. A test ban offers an opportunity and time for talks and deliberations. The verification of its observance must be stepped up. It is obvious that if all nuclear explosions are terminated we will live in a safer world. I see 1986 as a year of enormous possibilities, and we all must make our constructive contribution today to ensure that the existing potential materializes."

The participants in the Vienna dialogue meeting adopted a number of documents. One of them expresses indignation and alarm in connection with the U.S. intention to conduct another nuclear explosion at the Nevada test site 8 April. The documents which were adopted contain an appeal to step up the struggle for the elimination of the nuclear threat. It is necessary to act jointly. The main task now is to strengthen peace.

HUNGARY SUPPLIES INSTRUMENTS FOR SOVIET FUSION PLANTS

LD071419 Budapest MTI in English 1026 GMT 7 Apr 86

[Text] Budapest, April 7 (MTI) -- Experts of the Central Physics Research Institute (KFKI) of Budapest have developed plasma-diagnostic instruments that Hungary will deliver, in the framework of CMEA cooperation, to thermo-nuclear fusion installations under construction in the Soviet Union. According to plans, the world's fourth large-size installation will become operative in the Kurchatov Institute in Moscow in 1987.

Some of the diagnostic instruments connected with the device to be established in the Soviet Union are designed and produced in other CMEA countries. Experts of the Central Physics Research Institute of Budapest have developed two instruments in the sphere of advanced technology. One of these measures the radiation of plasma in the range of X-ray waves, and defines the composition and temperature of the plasma on the basis of the strength of this radiation and wave-length. The component parts of the instrument, consisting of several sensing devices, were designed and made at the Nucleus Research Institute of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, and at the KFKI. The X-ray sensors are assembled at KFKI and seven pieces are to be delivered to Moscow this year.

Hungarian experts have begun development of the other instrument, a special infra-red laser source necessary for the so-called interferometre suitable for measuring the density of plasma.

Experiments with the world's fourth largest-sized thermo-nuclear fusion installation are scheduled to begin at the end of 1987 in the Soviet Union. The 'Tokamak' T-15 type installation will also be used by researchers of other CMEA countries for various measurements. Several small installations are operating in the Soviet Union and other socialist countries, and experts make use of these to solve certain partial tasks and to try out new methods.

In Hungary, the small-size Soviet-made Tokamak at the Central Physics Research Institute is used to examine the various vibrations of plasma and the movement of the impurities in it. Hungarian experts developed the plasma-diagnostic instruments on the basis of experiences acquired this way.

USSR TO JOIN VIENNA CONVENTION ON TREATIES

LD071606 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 1530 GMT 7 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow, 7 Apr (TASS) -- By a decree issued on 4 April 1986, the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium decided that the USSR is joining the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties.

EEC REALIGNS CURRENCY TO COMBAT U.S. 'PRESSURE'

LD071850 Moscow TASS in English 1509 GMT 7 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 7 TASS -- Following commentary by Ivan Ablamov, a TASS news analyst:

At their meeting in the Netherlands, the finance ministers of the EEC member countries passed a decision on a new exchange rate realignment of the currencies of the nations belonging to the so-called "currency snake". The French franc has been devalued and the West German mark, the Dutch guilder, the Belgian-Luxembourg franc and the Danish kroner have been revalued. The change in the parities of the national currencies pursued, in part, the aim of assisting France. Yet, it reflects, in a large measure the wish of the Common Market member countries to oppose U.S. trade and currency pressure, which has recently become intolerable.

It is noteworthy that the decision of the ministers has been taken in the wake of a fresh outbreak of currency instability in the West European exchange markets as a result of very strong pressure of the dollar on the French and Belgian francs. Prior to that Washington threatened in a high-handed imperial manner protectionist measure against the farm produce of the EEC member countries on the plea that the terms of Spain's and Portugal's accession to the EEC have been detrimental to the U.S. food exports.

The USA demanded that the EEC member countries should cancel within thirty days the provisions of the treaty on Spain's and Portugal's accession to the "Common Market" limiting the import of farm produce from the countries, which do not belong to the EEC, into those two aforementioned countries.

The defiant attempt of the USA at forcing its diktat on the Common Market member countries in the field of their agricultural trade, Washington's wish to act in the West as the supreme judge of all issues, including economic ones, could not but touch off a wave of indignation in Western Europe.

"The mad American wolf is again baring its teeth", this reference made by the Belgian newspaper "LA CITE" was typical of the reaction among the West European countries, where the actions of the USA were evaluated as the wish to torpedo the EEC's farm policy, to infringe upon the trade positions of its rivals in the world markets, and simultaneously, resolve its own foreign trade problems at the expense of its allies.

The EEC charged the USA with waging a "trade war". As the West German "FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE" said, agreement was reached at the meeting of foreign ministers of France and the FRG in Bonn on joint actions against trade restrictions imposed by the USA against the "Common Market" countries.

To all appearances, these actions have also been substantiated by measures in the monetary field. "The situation which has emerged on both sides of the Atlantic after Washington's new strike is reminiscent of a military one in many respects, the French newspaper "LE MONDE" said in conclusion. It is absolutely obvious that Washington's impudent claims are in increasing conflict with the interests of even its closest partners.

TSVETOV CONDUCTS ROUNDTABLE ON ASIA, PACIFIC

LD071655 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 0840 GMT 7 Apr 86

["Roundtable on Questions of Security in Asia and the Pacific" presented by Vladimir Yakovlevich Tsvetov, political observer of Central Television and All-Union Radio]

[Text] [Tsvetov] Hello, Comrades. Today we are gathered around the roundtable not in the studio of All-Union Radio, but in the Soviet Committee for Solidarity With Asian and African Countries. Taking part in the roundtable are leading Soviet scholars concerned with the problems of Asia and the Pacific Ocean. I will introduce them to you as they take part in the conversation.

The composition of participants arises from another unusual feature of today's roundtable. It is devoted not simply to recent international events, but to those concerning the Asia-Pacific region. In analyzing these events, we would like to discuss Soviet policy in the area as it was formulated at the 27th CPSU Congress. But first, a few words about the position of the Asia-Pacific region in world economy and politics, and the dynamism of that area's development. Let me remind you that the 27th CPSU Congress pointed out the growing significance of this area. I would like to invite Vladimir Nikolayevich (Khlynov), doctor of economic science, to speak:

[(Khlynov)] Today the entire Pacific region plays an ever more important role in both the world economy and in international relations. About half of all mankind lives here, and currently more than 50 percent of all industrial output is produced here. Not only that, but this region is responsible for about one-third of all foreign trade links. If we compare the countries' economic growth rates, we can see that the countries of this region are developing faster than the West or the United States. This is aided to a large extent by such factors as the presence of significant energy and raw material resources, the existence of a highly developed transport infrastructure and so forth.

[Tsvetov] Academician Sergey Leonidovich Tikhvinskiy has devoted his activity to studying the history of this area. We now ask him about problems in this regard:

[Tikhvinskiy] As our chairman has already said, in Asia and the Pacific basin region, the dynamism of economic development significantly surpasses the economic growth rates observed in European countries. This is taking into account the huge natural resources and human potential of the Asian countries and the dynamism of the developing young states of this area, and the fact that in the Asian region there are such large socialist states as the Soviet Union, the PRC, the SRV and the DPRK.

Other large countries such as Japan, the United States, and Indonesia, are also in this area and have recently been acquiring ever-growing importance. It is not fortuitous that in the Western press one comes upon such assertions as that the 21st century will be the century of the Pacific.

This region, however, is also fraught with a huge concentration of military danger. Numerous unsettled conflicts continue in the area that carry the risk of escalating into large-scale conflict. Therefore, the question is posed in all its urgency that we must not wait until the end of the 2d millenium to settle these conflicts and to make this region one of peace, prosperity, neighborliness, and mutual cooperation.

[Tsvetov] Sergey Leonidovich, forgive me for interrupting you, but it seems to me that it is very relevant here to point out the basic reason for the huge difficulties in the movement toward peace, prosperity, neighborliness, and mutual cooperation among the liberated countries of the Asia and Pacific area -- and such countries form the majority here. The party congress spoke of this: It is the plundering of the liberated countries by imperialist powers through unfair trade and capital investment that does not stimulate the development of the liberated countries, but which is very profitable for the imperialist countries.

And finally, militarism, which is the fruit of imperialist policy. I invite Georgiy Fedorovich Kim, corresponding member of the USSR Academy of Sciences, to express his opinion on this point.

[Kim] The ending of the arms race is the very first essential condition for the development of the huge area that we call the region of liberated countries.

Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev said perfectly correctly in his 15 January statement that in place of the principle imposed by militarism of arms instead of development, the opposite order should appear: disarmament for development. At the moment, just think, the simply astronomical sum of $1 trillion is being spent every year on armaments and military needs on earth. Of this, the developing countries spend about $150-160 billion. This, comrades, comprises about 16 percent of the entire world's military spending. And what does $160 billion mean for the liberated countries, including, and perhaps most especially, for the Asian countries, bearing in mind that more than half of mankind lives in Asia?

A second factor: There are now 18 million people under arms in the developing countries. They are the most active part of the male population. Then, in order to support the army and military production, another 240 million people in the developing countries -- not the developed, but the developing countries -- are involved.

So this system of the global arms race is drawing the individual developing countries in, in a most active way, and even at faster rates, and so-called hotspots of miniarms races are formed, which draw in others. This has the well-known domino effect: One country arms itself, buying new arms and new weapons, and the neighboring country immediately responds by doing the same. It is now calculated that every year 70-75 percent of all arms thrown into the arms market are bought by developing countries. They are the main consumers, so to speak, of this industry, this business, this military business.

Furthermore, in recent years what I consider a very dangerous tendency has appeared. I mean the establishment in a number of Asian and African countries of their own military production, especially in Asian countries. It is now calculated that military production has been organized in about 30 developing countries. They produce aircraft, missiles, and other expensive weapons which to a large extend devour these countries' material, scientific, and human resources.

An even more dangerous trend is that many developing countries have crossed the threshold of creating nuclear weapons. At the moment there are about 15 or 16 countries among the developing countries that could very quickly begin production of nuclear weapons. Many of these are on the Asian Continent.

The current rates of military spending in developing countries, which, I repeat, comprises 6 percent of the GNP, leads -- and just think about this figure, comrades -- to a 2 percent decrease in the yearly rates of economic development in the developing countries.

[Tsvetov] I would like to add the following to what Georgiy Fedorovich Kim said: The arms race is one side of militarism. The other side is the aggressive actions of imperialism, primarily by the United States.

Two elements of the so-called strategic triad of the Pentagon, with which Washington strengthens its neoglobalist ambitions, are present in the Asia-Pacific region. What are these elements? Atomic submarines, of the Ohio type, which go on military patrols in the Pacific. Second, strategic B-52 bombers, which are on duty close to the Asian Continent. To this must be added Tomahawk cruise missiles, deployed on the ships of the U.S. 7th Fleet.

Throughout the postwar period, Asia and the Pacific Ocean have been used by the United States as a sort of proving ground for the testing of various kinds of military and political doctrines. These involve turning back communism, waging limited wars, and following doctrines formulated in turn by Presidents Johnson, Nixon, and Ford. Now coming into force is the doctrine of low intensity conflicts. Although we we the first manifestation of this in other areas of the world -- remember Grenada and the Gulf of Sidra off the coast of Libya -- its main target is nevertheless the Asia and Pacific zone. It is no accident that the Pentagon retains in this area the greatest percentage of U.S. troops deployed outside the United States. I ask Dmitriy Vasilyevich Petrov, doctor of historical science, to give his opinion on this question.

[Petrov] It must be said that militarily the United States attaches particular importance to the Asia-Pacific region as a whole. Suffice it to say that out of the eight military alliances that the United States has, one way or another, it has formed five of them with countries in this region, both multilateral and bilateral alliances. Within the overall system of those alliances, the United States gives pride of place to two of its allies: South Korea and Japan.

South Korea today has been turned into a major U.S. bridgehead on the Asian Continent in direct proximity to socialist countries -- the Soviet Union, the PRC, and the DPRK. There are more than 40,000 U.S. soldiers and officers there, and what is particularly important is that South Korea has become the chief region for the stationing of U.S. nuclear weapons on Asian territory. At the same time, the United States is pursuing a course of rapidly building up the combat might of the South Korean Armed Forces. The Army of the Seoul regime today numbers about 700,000 men -- the largest of the capitalist countries in the region. Georgiy Fedorovich Kim spoke here of the inordinate burden borne by the developing countries that are being urged into the arms race, and South Korea is one of the most vivid examples of this. It is a country whose economy is one of the most militarized in the world; about 40 percent of its budget is spent on military needs. One can imagine what is left over for social needs and why South Korea has one of the lowest socioeconomic levels in the world. The point, however, is not just that the U.S. Armed Forces on South Korean territory are being built, and not just that a rapid militarization is taking place, but that a direct threat is being created for neighboring countries.

Now, let us take a look at what is happening to the Japanese-U.S. alliance. Japan has been turned, as you know, into one of the chief bases of the U.S. Armed Forces. There are 127 various military installations here out of the roughly 300 which the United States has in the entire Asia-Pacific region. But that again is not enough. Japan, in violation of the basic provisions of its Constitution, has today become one of the most powerful military forces in the world. U.S. military experts calculate that its Army currently ranks roughly sixth or seventh among the armies of the capitalist countries in terms of firepower, mobility, and other combat parameters.

When we look at the military ties between the United States and South Korea and between the United States and Japan, we see that what is missing, as it were, in this triangle is the third and last line -- that is direct military links between Japan and South Korea. However, while there is no formal treaty of that kind, does this mean that there are no contacts and relations at all? No, it does not. That is where the secret lies, that there is a buildup of nonformalized contacts and relations which in practice take the place of such a treaty or agreement. Primarily, the closest possible military ties are maintained through the United States, with which both Japan and South Korea, as I have already said, have official military treaties.

Their weaponries have been completely standardized. The United States trains the command corps of the Japanese and the South Korean Armed Forces under a single program. Strategic and operational plans are coordinated. In summary, we can say that in practice this alliance between the United States, Japan, and South Korea is becoming more and more clearly defined and is becoming a more and more dangerous and destabilizing factor in the Asia-Pacific region.

[Tsvetov] Here I would like to return to what academician Sergey Leonidovich Tikhvinskiy said about the region being fraught with an enormously concentrated military danger. The reason for that is not only the knocking together of the aggressive U.S.-Japanese-South Korean alliance that Dmitriy Vasilyevich Petrov spoke of, also lies in the fact that the United States, promoting the militarization of the economies of Thailand, Malaysia, the Philippines, Indonesia, and Singapore -- of which Georgiy Fedorovich Kim spoke -- is striving to make those countries their direct military allies. What do you have to say, Sergey Leonidovich?

[Tikhvinskiy] Another thing I would like to draw to the attention of those present is that the Asia-Pacific region is one where U.S. imperialism is trying by all available and unavailable means to stop the growing inclination of the people of that region toward socialism. This striving on the part of U.S. imperialism to unite these countries into a market economy and set them against the socialist countries, resorting here to military and political pressure on the countries of the region, contains a great danger and a great threat.

[Tsvetov] At the 27th CPSU Congress, the idea was suggested of starting coordination and then pooling of efforts in the interests of finding a political settlement ot the problems that complicate the situation in the Asia-Pacific region. The all-embracing system of international security that was formulated at the congress could well become the ultimate aim of such efforts. Naturally, the ending of all nuclear tests, which the Soviet Union is calling for so insistently, could affect the situation in the region in the most favorable way. After all, there are nuclear test sites belonging to a number of countries in the Pacific and adjoining zone. The Soviet Union, together with other socialist countries, is working for peace and good-neighborliness in the Asia-Pacific region. I would like to mention here the initiative of the MPR, the DPRK, and the socialist countries of Indochina. At our roundtable is Mikhail Leonidovich Titarenko, doctor of philosophy, whom I will ask to speak.

[Titarenko] I would like here to stress the importance of such initiatives as those of the MPR, including the holding of a broad consultative dialogue between the states of the Asian Continent with the aim of drawing up and signing a convention on mutual nonaggression and nonuse of force in relations between the states of Asia and the Pacific. As we know, that initiative was supported by the Soviet Union. It must be said that in the speeches by our guests from the Asian states at the 27th congress, these ideas of both the Soviet Union and the other socialist countries -- ideas aimed at strengthening peace and security -- were also not only given further support but were put in more specific terms. In this connection, I would like to stress the importance of the active steps taken by our Korean friends. These, first and foremost are the initiatives regarding the elimination, or initially the reduction, of the political and military confrontation on the Korean peninsula. Another aspect of this is the search for ways of solving the great national task -- the unification of the homeland, with the question of an inter-Korean summit meeting standing on the agenda.

A whole package of initiatives has been put forth by three socialist countries of Indochina to solve the Cambodian problem and to normalize relations with the PRC. The Vietnamese comrades, showing goodwill and demonstrating their readiness for a constructive dialogue with the ASEAN countries and the PRC, stated that they were ready to withdraw their volunteer forces from Cambodia by 1990 regardless or whether a political solution to the Cambodian problem is achieved or not.

They are ready for political contacts and dialogue with Sihanouk and Son Sann in order to achieve national reconciliation and, subject to the removal of the Pol Pot clique, the holding of free general elections after the complete withdrawal of the Vietnamese volunteer forces from Cambodia.

Finally, of long-term significance, I think, is the initiative put forth by the socialist countries of Indochina, and which is actively supported by the Soviet Union, to create a zone of peace and stability in Southeast Asia.

[Tsvetov] In other words, the socialist countries envisage both bilateral and multilateral measures which at some stage could lead to a search for a common, comprehensive approach to solving the problem of security and peace in the Asia-Pacific region. Mikhail Leonidovich, what is the position of the PRC on all these issues?

[Titarenko] The statements and actions by the PRC regarding questions of peace and security have recently contained proposals and initiatives that are in keeping with, or have something in common with, the corresponding proposals, including the far-reaching program for the complete elimination of nuclear weapons which was put forth by Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev on 15 January 1986.

I would like to recall very briefly these, as I would call them, are common or coinciding positions. Both the Soviet Union and China have pledged no first use of nuclear weapons. Another important thing is that both the Soviet Union and the PRC — although each in their own way -- have come out with a proposal for the complete elimination of nuclear weapons. Another thing in common with our initiative and proposals is the PRC's view that the ending of nuclear tests should be started first of all by the Soviet Union and the USA, and then, after halving their nuclear forces, it should be started by the other nuclear powers including, of course, the PRC. Here there is also a certain closeness in our positions. The PRC comes out with criticism against the United States on the questions of star wars.

To sum up, comrades, although there are certain differences between the Soviet Union and China on questions of peace and security, there are also points that coincide with -- and this was stressed in the Central Committee report at the congress -- the potential for cooperation to make a mutual search for ways to secure peace and security in the Far East.

[Tsvetov] A component of the all-embracing system of international security that was proposed by the 27th CPSU Congress is a renunciation of the policy of economic blockades and sanctions and the establishment of a new economic order. In other words, close and mutually advantageous trade and economic relations should lead to peace and cooperation among states. At the start of our roundtable discussion, Doctor of Economic Sciences Vladimir Nikolayevich (Khlynov) began to speak about the economic problems of the Asia-Pacific region. Vladimir Nikolayevich, could you please continue with your thoughts.

[Khlynov] There is, of course, no doubt that developing mutually advantageous foreign trade ties is an important way of ensuring peace and security in the region. Trade has always been, and always will be, the business of peace. I would like to remind the comrades here that in the 10 years from 1970 to 1980 the volume of the Soviet Union's foreign economic links with this region increased by over 50 percent over the previous decade. Moreover, we conduct trade here not only with the socialist countries of the region, but also with the developing countries, virtually all of them, including Indonesia, Malaysia, Singapore, Thailand, and the Philippines. We also conduct trade with the capitalist countries: Japan, Australia, and New Zealand. This shows that for the development of mutually advantageous foreign trade relations social systems do not matter. The social systems may be different, but both sides must have an interest in trade.

Together with the normal foreign trade operations, such forms of cooperation as compensation agreements have recently assumed a substantial and wide scale. In particular, chemical enterprises have been set up in the Far East on a compensation basis which have then gone on to produce goods for export. What a good idea, too, it would be to think about a second construction project of the century, so to speak, on the lines of the more than 3,000-km long Urengoy-Pomary-Uzhgorod gas pipeline which went into service in 1984 to deliver gas to the Pacific countries.

[Tsvetov] Among us is Valeriy Petrovich Chichkanov, director of the Economic Research Institute under the USSR Academy of Sciences Far East Science Center and corresponding member of the USSR Academy of Sciences. He, of course, has something to say about trade and economic ties in the region.

[Chichkanov] I also agree with the opinion that the Pacific Ocean should not divide, but unite people. The forms of association are indeed various, and as experience, world experience, has shown, the development of foreign economic ties and others really does provide the chance for (?strongly) uniting people.

I would like to support this thesis with some examples. Literally very recently, last year the peace train, as journalists called it figuratively, left southern Yakutiya for Japan. The train was loaded with coking coal from Neryungri. In this way, the activity of one of the biggest projects being implemented between Japan and our country on a compensatory basis was stressed. It is a project that will function up to the year 2000. I did not mention this example by chance, because as experience has already shown, the development of long-term projects is truly important. There is a very interesting project connected with exploiting the Sakhalin shelf for oil, which is today also being implemented along with the Japanese.

I would like to speak about another form which more closely links the peoples of the Pacific basin countries, and particularly us as Far Easterners, with the countries of the area. This is the development of scientific relations. In particular, the Far East Scientific Center is implementing the development of a number of joint projects with countries of the Pacific basin -- Japan and the United States. What is interesting is that very recently they completed a project with the western states of the United States and issued a monograph with the title: "Soviet-American Relations in the Pacific Ocean Zone: Past, Present, and Future." In studying these possibilities in detail, we came to the conclusion -- and this affects not only the western states of the United States, but also Japan and a number of other countries of the Pacific basin -- that today our countries' economies complement each other. This complementarity will not come to an end tomorrow, for example, or the day after. That is, it seems to me that the further development of such forms will give us the chance to really turn the Pacific Ocean into a zone of peace, and to do everything to make sure that it really does unite the people who live there.

[Tsvetov] In conclusion, I would like to hand over the microphone to Aleksandr Sergeyevich Dzasokhov, first deputy chairman of the Soviet Committee for Solidarity With Asian and African Countries, who gathered us all for this roundtable.

[Dzasokhov] It is well-known that our country is not only a European state but that it is also the biggest one in Asia. It is therefore quite natural that in its foreign policy activity the CPSU and the Soviet state take into account the fact that in the extensive Asia and Pacific area complex and worrisome situations could arise. In these complex conditions, dear comrades, the CPSU and the Soviet state are persistently conducting a policy aimed at a just settlement of the hotspots of conflicts and tension.

Last year our country presented a whole package of proposals on the creation of an atmosphere of trust, neighborliness and cooperation between the people of this extensive region, and invited the states of Asia to coordinate and unity their efforts in the interest of a political settlement of the urgent problems of the Asian Continent. This peaceful and farsighted line was confirmed in the materials of the 27th congress.

I would also like to stress that it was on the Asian Continent in the postwar years that remarkable initiatives arose, including the Bandung principles. Let us recall the prophetic words of Marx, that the Pacific Ocean would be the ocean of the 20th century. May Marx' dream come true, so that the Pacific Ocean basin becomes an ocean of peace, neighborliness, and many interesting deeds that might serve mankind in its humanistic aspirations and save the peoples of Asia and the Pacific, and those of our entire world, from the threat of a nuclear catastrophe.

[Tsvetov] This is where we end our roundtable conversation. All the best.

U.S. DENOUNCED FOR ATTEMPTS TO 'UNDERMINE' UN

LD080844 Moscow TASS in English 0830 GMT 8 Apr 86

[Text] New York April 8 TASS -- TASS correspondent Vyacheslav Chernyshev reports:

A regular session of the Special Committee on the Charter of the U.N. and the strengthening of the role of the organization opened Monday at a tense moment of the escalation by Washington of the war against the United Nations.

In keeping with the decision of the 40th General Assembly session, the top item on the agenda of the committee's session is strengthening the role of the United Nations Organization in maintaining peace and security, which acquires particular topicality in the International Year of Peace proclaimed by the United Nations.

The striving of the international community to use effectively the instrument of collective cooperation of states, including the United Nations, the largest and most authoritative organisation, in solving key issues of our time generates undisguised irritation in Washington. In its attempt to complicate to the maximum the activity of the United Nations, to hamper the normal participation in it of sovereign countries, which pursue the policy unsuitable to the United States, the U.S. Administration has recently taken a whole number of arbitrary unilateral steps in violation of both its own commitments to the U.N. and norms of international law. These are illegitimate demands made on a whole number of states concerning the size of their U.N. missions, the attcks on UNESCO and other specialized agencies which are not to Washington's liking, financial blackmail of the U.N., the launching of slanderous campaigns against it in the press and the moves to create an atmosphere of intimidation and terror around foreign diplomats accredited at its headquarters in New York.

The U.S. actions give rise to natural indignation in the international community which calls for taking decisive measures in order to counterpose effective actions to strengthen the United Nations to cowboy-style arbitrary moves designed to undermine it.

WPC'S 'ASIA WEEK' TO 'DEMAND' END OF U.S. POLICIES

LD052355 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1800 GMT 5 Apr 86

[Text] By decision of the WPC, the democratic public of various countries will mark 5-12 April as Asia Week. Political observer Vladimir Tsvetov comments:

Asia Week is marked each year with the aim of galvanizing Asian peoples' efforts directed toward achieving peace in their continents. This year, the WPC's initiative is especially necessary and important, for it is precisely in Asia that the most dangerous conflicts are taking place. I am thinking of Israel's aggressive behavior toward the Arab states and the Iran-Iraq war. It is in Asia that the most restless borders have developed -- the Pakistan-Afghanistan border, across which the counterrevolution in Afghanistan receives military and material assistance from imperialism; the Pakistan-Indian border, across which infiltrate agents exacerbating civil strife in India; the Cambodia-Thailand border, where the Pol Pot remnants are happy with the two countries' good-neighborliness. Asia is seen by imperialism as a second front against the socialist countries. If we include the Pacific Ocean zone, adjacent to Asia, here are concentrated the majority of U.S. bases outside the United States.

It is this situation in the continent which lends a clearly expressed anti-imperialist nature to the current Asia Week. The peoples of Asia are presented with two cardinally different approaches to solving the burning problems of their continent. The first of these, the Soviet approach, ensues from the all-embracing system of international security proposed at the 27th CPSU Congress, a system which is universal and perfectly feasible in Asia. The other approach, the U.S. one, is expressed in Washington's new doctrine under the name of the strategy of low intensity conflicts; in other words, a doctrine which envisages possible U.S. interference in conflicts such as the Israeli-Arab or the Iran-Iraq conflicts. Such interference is real, not only in the Near East but also in the Far East: The U.S. assistant secretary of defense has stated, and I quote, that the U.S. border now lies more than 5,000 miles west of the Golden Gates of San Francisco.

The slogans which will accompany demonstrations, rallies, and conferences in the Asiatic countries during Asia Week will include an appeal to support the proposals by the USSR, the other socialist states and participant states in the Nonaligned Movement to establish relations of peace, good-neighborliness and cooperation on the continent. The slogans will express the demand for an end to the U.S. policy of exacerbating hotspots of military-political tension, the very policy which has been given the name neoglobalism.

GILASHVILI VIEWS MIDDLE EAST, WORLD ISSUES

PM081052 Cairo AL-MUSAWWAR in Arabic 4 Apr 86 pp 18,19

[Interview with Pavel Gilashvili, deputy chairman of the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium, by Mustafa al-Bakri in Cairo; date not given]

[Excerpt] [Al-Bakri] Why is the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan continuing despite the fact that you bear aloft the standard of world peace?

[Gilashvili] We strongly support the achievement of a political settlement of the situation in Afghanistan, but the main stumbling block on this road is the intensive U.S. interference and the interference in Afghanistan's internal affairs by some other countries. There is in particular the billions of dollars in aid given to the enemies of the revolution. I would like to say in this regard that there is an agreement between us and the Afghan Government regarding the stages of withdrawal of the Soviet forces as soon as foreign interference ends and steps are taken by the countries concerned regarding this matter and guarantees are laid down to ensure that interference is not resumed. The forces stationed in Afghanistan will then be withdrawn.

[Al-Bakri] When Palestinian leader Yasir 'Arafat signed the 11 February accord with King Husayn you announced your rejection of the agreement and you even attacked it. What are your reservations regarding the provisions of the Jordanian-Palestinian accord, which is now facing a severe crisis?

[Gilashvili] The Jordanian-Palestinian accord, as is known, does not enjoy the support of some of the Arabs. Also it does not enjoy the support of the majority of the Palestinian factions. The reason appears to be the provisions of this agreement, that was first submitted to Washington for approval. The aim of the agreement is to curb the PLO's role in the peace process and eventually abolish the PLO from existence and delete the principal problem of a settlement regarding the establishment of an independent Palestinian state from the agenda. I do not think that there is any use in dwelling too long on the question of the agreement because life itself has killed it.

[Al-Bakri] How do you view the present dispute between King Husayn and Yasir 'Arafat?

[Gilashvili] If what happened between King Husayn and the PLO leadership is called a dispute, then we are sincerely sorry for any disputes that occur in the Arab world. We call on the Arabs to close ranks and to unite in order to confront the dangers threatening them. The events of the past years have proved that the aggressor's weapons do not differentiate between Arab targets in Beirut, Tunis, or Baghdad.

[Al-Bakri] Soviet First Deputy Foreign Minister Korniyenko recently visited Iran. What is the reason for his visit and what is your attitude toward the Iranian attacks on the Iraqi borders, given that your country has a friendship treaty with Iraq?

[Gilashvili] Our attitude toward the Iraq-Iran conflict is simply that we are strongly opposed to the war and against the continuation of the destruction that is being inflicted on the people of Iraq and Iran. We are opposed to this war because it leads to escalating military and political tension in the Gulf region and in the Middle East in general. This war is a source of joy for both the United States and Israel. Its continuation is a means for greater Arab dispersion and for weakening their struggle against Israeli aggression in the Middle East. We are currently seeking to reactivate good offices efforts within the framework of the United Nations and other international bodies with the aim of helping to end this war. Regarding the Soviet first deputy foreign minister's visit to Iran there is nothing unusual in it. We seek to establish good relations with all countries that wish to establish such relations on the basis of mutual respect, whether these countries are big or small, advanced or developing.

[Al-Bakri] Do you believe that it is possible for an international conference for solving the Palestinian problem to be held shortly?

[Gilashvili] The reasons for lack of progress in achieving peace are well-known. The United States has done and is still doing all it can to benefit from the present state of tension here and to hinder the achievement of the Arab peoples' legitimate rights, foremost of which is the Palestinian people's right to self-determination. In the first place, because of the content of our philosphy, we are optimistic. Victory will be for the just cause because history is always on the side of people in their struggle against the enemies and conspirators. With regard to an international conference, we believe that the Soviet proposals on this subject are gaining increasing recognition and support. An international conference could lead to a just settlement without being used as an umbrella to reach agreeements concluded behind the scenes.

[Al-Bakri] What about your attitude toward the PLO and the question of its national unity?

[Gilashvili] We support the unity of the Palestinians in order to overcome the critical situation within the PLO, which has to play an important role in the struggle for gaining the Palestinian people's legitimate rights.

The principal objective is the unity of Palestinians on the basis of an anti-imperialist principle. Faruq Qaddumi [head of the PLO Political Department] took part in the 27th CPSU Congress meetings.

[Al-Bakri] What is the state of your relations with the Gulf states? Is there any hope of establishing full political relations in the near future between the USSR and Saudi Arabia?

[Gilashvili] We are for establishing cordial relations with all the Gulf states on the basis of the principles of mutual respect and noninterference in the internal affairs. This is beneficial for both sides. An example of this is the fruitful cooperation between Kuwait and the Soviet Union in various fields. I am sure that there is nothing that could hinder the strengthening of good relations between us and the countries of the region. The same thing can be said about Saudi Arabia. The Soviet Union was among the first countries that recognized its independence. This played an important role in bolstering its sovereignty and in the Saudi people's success in the struggle against the colonialists' attacks.

[Al-Bakri] Recently you held the 27th CPSU Congress. It has been said that changes have been made in the political and economic course of Soviet policy and that the door is open to further changes. What is the economic view and what are the changes that the Congress has adopted?

[Gilashvili] The 27th CPSU Congress has laid down the future programs of economic and social development in our country for the coming period. The most significant thing in this regard is that in our future programs we rely on the realistic achievements of the past years. In fact in the past 25 years we have rebuilt our country and achieved tremendous rates of success in the economy and culture as well as in the social field.

[Al-Bakri] How was this achieved and what were the rates?

[Gilashvili] National economic production, for example, has increased sevenfold, national income fourfold, and industrial production fivefold. Here are some of the figures as an example. Oil production increased from 148 million tons in 1968 to 600 million tons in 1985. Gas production increased from 45 billion cubic meters to 643 billion cubic meters. But on the other hand we know our shortcomings and difficulties as well as the policies that are unsuitable for our economy. For this reason, during the congress we incorporated, in the basis of our strategy for the future, the theory of speeding up economic and social development in order to give dynamism to production and to modernize the production forces. Therefore we expect the implementation of the measures approved to lead to an increase in national income by twofold [di'fayn] by the end of the century and production capacity to double [marratayn] [as published]. This is in addition to improvements in quality. We are also looking forward to increasing the resources directed toward improving the citizens' living conditions during the coming 15 years by twofold. We also aim to raise realistic profits [as published] for all citizens. For the achievement of all these objectives we undoubtedly rely on the masses' creative inventiveness and the maximum utilization of available resources. We believe that the acheivement of these objectives should be followed by the achievement of world peace which we seek and desire.

[Al-Bakri] A few days ago, the Soviet Union announced its decision to halt nuclear testing in response to an appeal by the leaders of six countries; India, Mexico, Argentina, Tanzania, Sweden, and Greece. Do you believe that there is a possibility of the United States agreeing to halt nuclear testing?

[Gilashvili] Nuclear tests are one of the results of the arms race that allows the production of modern and more sophisticated nuclear weapons. Therefore, we are aiming at reaching agreement on halting all nuclear tests as a first step toward disarmament.

[Al-Bakri] But what is your attitude toward nuclear arms control?

[Gilashvili] If the United States agrees to stop all nuclear testing on a mutual basis, then we too are prepared to agree on control using national means and international measures even if they may require on-site inspection. In any case, the Soviet Union's decision to halt nuclear tests is considered a new element in the proposal to begin bilateral Soviet-U.S. negotiations on this issue in Moscow, Washington, and Geneva next April.

[Al-Bakri] Is it for this reason that you are betting on the establishment of the new economic order and why you link it to halting the arms race?

[Gilashvili] Yes, we believe in the establishment of a new world economic order that would ensure equal economic security for all countries. It is an indivisible part of the comprehensive international security system. We believe that stopping the arms race will allow for the provision of vast funds and resources that could be used in the interest of the development of all countries, especially the developing countries. It could also resolve the urgent problem of these countries, namely debts.

KAPITSA CHAIRS UNESCO MEETING IN MOSCOW

LD081239 Moscow TASS in English 1152 GMT 8 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 8 TASS -- The USSR's UNESCO commission held its regular meeting in Moscow today. It was attended by the heads of several ministries and departments, scientists, educators, culture and mass media officials, representatives of public organizations.

They discussed the commission's tasks in the light of the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress and questions connected with the elaboration of UNESCO'S third mid-term plan for 1990-1995.

The session was chaired by Mikhail Kapitsa, deputy foreign minister and chairman of the USSR's UNESCO commission.

REAGAN RECEIVES DOBRYNIN, GORBACHEV MESSAGE

LD081803 Moscow TASS in English 1755 GMT 8 Apr 86

[Text] Washington April 8 TASS -- Anatoliy Dobrynin had a meeting in the White House today with U.S. President Ronald Reagan in conjunction with the former's completion of his tour of duty as the ambassador of the USSR to the United States.

During the meeting a message from Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, was handed to Ronald Reagan, which analyzes the present state of Soviet-U.S. relations and substantiates the need for steps to improve them. Anatoliy Dobrynin and Ronald Reagan had a thorough exchange of opinions of these issues.

SOVIET, U.S. UN ASSOCIATION MEET; ARBATOV CITED

PM081328 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 8 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 4

[Own correspondent L. Koryavin report under general headline "A Realistic Way to Preserve Peace"]

[Text] Washington -- A number of joint representative meetings and important discussions have been held here, with famous Soviet and U.S. scientists and public figures taking part.

A joint Soviet-U.S. session of the two countries' United Nations Associations was held. A delegation from the Associaton of Soviet Jurists conducted a dialgoue with U.S. colleagues from the organization Lawyers Alliance for Nuclear Arms Control. Soviet scientists representing the USSR Academy of Sciences met with delegations from the U.S. National Academy of Sciences and the Federation of American Scientists.

Your correspondent spoke with participants in the Soviet-U.S. meetings that took place in Washington. Academician G.A. Arbatov, leader of the Soviet delegation at the session of the United Nations Associations, emphasized that in the course of the discussion particular attention was given to the problems of curbing and terminating the arms race and preventing the threat of nuclear war. The Soviet delegation again drew the U.S. side's attention to the wide range of Soviet peace initiatives.

Particular importance is attached to the question of nuclear tests. The Soviet Union actively advocates their prohibition, perceiving this as the most realistic way to terminte the arms race. The continuation of nuclear tests by the United States cannot be seen as anything else but a demonstrative challenge not only to the Soviet Union but also to the entire world and all peoples, including the American people.

During the joint sessions of the United Nations Associations there was an active discussion on questions concerning the activity of these important international organizations and the consolidation of their prestige mainly as instruments of peace on earth. Having proclaimed 1986 to be International Year of Peace, the United Nations received broad support for this initiative from the Soviet people.

COMMENT ON U.S. LINKING OF LIBYA TO BERLIN BLAST

U.S. Uses Bombings as 'Pretext'

LD081250 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 0230 GMT 8 Apr 86

[From the "International Diary" program presented by Vladimir Beloshapko]

[Text] An essentially destructive and aggressive policy is being carried out by the U.S. Administration not only in questions of war and peace, but also in its approach to regional problems. There are more than enough examples of this.

Thus NBC TV has reported preparations for a new armed provocation against Libya. Two terrorist acts recently committed in Western Europe, which Washington sweepingly accuses Tripoli of involvement, are being used this time as a pretext. It has become known to the television company that the U.S. 6th Fleet is once again to be sent to the shores of Libya so as to finish the job, as Pentagon spokesmen stated.

Let me remind you that during the recent U.S. naval maneuvers in the Gulf of Sidra, Libyan territory was subjected to massive fire. Thus it cannot be ruled out that by finishing the job, they have in mind large-scale armed aggression against Libya. Simultaneously the administration is now trying to secure from West European governments the expulsion of Libyan diplomats from their countries. There are efforts here to internationalize the confrontation with respect to Libya. Let me remind you that until now all Washington's attempts to draw their West European allies into anti-Libyan actions have ended without result.

Campaign Tied to Nuclear Tests

LD090257 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1645 GMT 8 Apr 86

["International Diary -- Events, Facts, Opinions" presented by Konstantin Patsyuk with commentary by Viktor Levin]

[Text] U.S. mass media are stubbornly whipping up accusations against Libya in connection with its possible complicity in the terrorist act in West Berlin. There, as has already been reported, the blast of an explosive device took place on Saturday in La Belle discotheque. Two people were killed and some 150 were injured. According to foreign news agency reports, the responsibility for the explosion was assumed by three terrorist groups. Nevertheless, the United States is clearly attempting to use this case in order to stir up an anti-Libyan campaign. I request my colleague Viktor Levin to tell us in greater detail of this campaign and its aims:

[Levin] I will stress from the very start that it is not as if the United States has any proof or even any weighty indirect grounds for accusing Libya of organizing the terrorist blast in West Berlin. I will cite the most characteristic utterances by the American press. The terrorist action in West Berlin, the leading program of CBS television said, took place a week after the United States had ended its military maneuvers in the Gulf of Sidra. This arouses fears among U.S. officials that the Libyan leader Al-Qadhdhafi has possibly begun a terror campaign. A similar formulation was also presented on the NBC broadcast: It looks as if the explosion in the West Berlin discotheque is part of a Libyan master plan for terrorist acts against American targets abroad.

From informed persons, the NBC correspondent continues, it has become known that this most recent explosion, it seems, was perpetrated in response to the recent American maneuvers in the Gulf of Sidra.

As you can see the attacks are dotted with the words possibly, as it seems, etc, which somehow is evidence that only an assumption is being expressed. However, at the same time this assumption is being uttered so obtrusively without attempts to even substantiate it that the Americans -- who for many years now have had it suggested to them that Libya is allegedly nothing other than a bulwark of terrorism, and had this suggested to such an extent that many in the United States are ready to accuse Libya of all mortal sins without proof -- do not pay any attention to those conditional words. Moreover, such information, if one can call it that, is also being served with the appropriate sauce.

U.S. officials admit that so far they have no proof whatsoever that Libya is behind the explosion, ABC reports. However, it is reported that representatives of the FRG security service are believed privy to this. Why is it privy to this?! What confirmation of the U.S. view does the FRG security services have?! Never a sound of that. But the reproach has been made. Quite a few such examples could be cited -- sort of, it seems -- and then the thought is entwined in such as way as though the proof is on hand and is beyond doubt. The next day the conditional words disappear and confirmed accusations against Libya are in full flow.

The indecent method that the U.S. mass media are resorting to on the administration's instructions is typical of these very media. It is appropriate to ask the question why is this being done? For what reason? There are several answers. The first is that the U.S. Administration is being driven out of its mind by Libya's independent policy, its actions against imperialist policy. It is this that fosters official Washington's anger against Libya. But this is only the first answer.

The second concerns the problem why it is precisely now that the anti-Libyan campaign is being fanned so brazenly -- for there is no proof at all, not the slightest -- it is being fanned in such a way that by its organizers' design it must muffle everything on earth, including -- no, primarily -- the nuclear blasts in Nevada. For these tests throw down a challenge to world public opinion and wreck the moratorium on nuclear explosions for which the Soviet Union is fighting, not only with appeals to the U.S. Administration but also with practical actions, a unilateral moratorium that started as long ago as 6 August of last year.

I am sure that Washington cannot but realize that the new tests in Nevada will provoke a gigantic explosion of indignation. So, it was decided beforehand to muffle this indignation with a slanderous campaign against Libya. Dirty methods! Methods that are well matched with the policy.

U.S. Accused of 'Double Morality'

PM081134 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 8 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 4

["IZVESTIYA Press Service" article: "A Double Approach Toward Terrorists" -- uppercase passage is a report by own correspondent G. Ustinov]

[Text] It has already been reported that a powerful explosion occurred in West Berlin's La Belle discotheque in the night of 4-5 April. It resulted in 2 persons being killed and some 150 injured, 30 seriously. A major fire ensued.

More than 500 persons were in the discotheque at the time, including U.S. servicemen stationed in West Berlin. About 50 Americans were injured in the explosion.

According to foreign press reports, responsibility has been claimed by three terrorist groups. Nonetheless, the United States is trying to exploit this incident to fan an anti-Libyan campaign. THE WASHINGTON POST emphasizes: "In response to the latest terrorist action, R. Reagan's administration is asking West European governments to expel Libyan diplomats."

Foreign newspapers write that there is no proof at all of Libyan complicity in the West Berlin explosion. Even U.S. Secretary of Defense C. Weinberger was forced to admit this. Nonetheless, "the U.S. Administration has worked out possible scenarios for bombing Libya," the London FINANCIAL TIMES warns.

And so, there is no proof, but plans for bombing have already been drawn up. This is how Washington operates... It would be interesting to know what people in the U.S. capital will say when they read the following report:

KABUL -- TERRORISTS FROM A DUSHMAN "FIFTH COLUMN" CAUSED A POWERFUL EXPLOSION IN A BUSY KABUL STREET 6 APRIL. AS A RESULT OF THE EXPLOSION, 26 PERSONS SUFFERED INJURIES OF VARYING DEGREES. SOME OF THEM RECEIVED EMERGENCY MEDICAL ASSISTANCE ON THE SPOT, OTHERS WERE HOPITALIZED. THE BUILDING OF THE "KABUL" HOTEL AND THE STATE BANK OF AFGHANISTAN OPPOSITE IT WERE DAMAGED.

It is perfectly clear who organized the terrorist act in this instance. Something else is also known: Who it is that trains the terrorists, supplies them with weapons and explosives, and generously finances them? It is, furthermore, well-known who receives them as guests of honor. What is this if not an example of double morality?

U.S. VIEW OF TERRORISM, REGIONAL CONFLICTS DECRIED

LD082108 Moscow TASS in English 2145 GMT 8 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 8 TASS -- Following commentary by Boris Shabayev, TASS political news analyst:

They in Washington are again fulminating, again calling their allies to rally under the banners of a "crusade" against international terrorism. They are again keeping to the old, beaten track: the U.S. Administration's senior and most senior officials are pointing their fingers towards Tripoli, Managua and, certainly, Moscow. They are bending over backwards, trying to find "Moscow's hand" among the ruins of blown up buildings or the wreckage of aircraft, find nothing to prove their allegations, but do not lose heart. Yet the main point is not the proofs, which do not and cannot exist, but the high pitch of the propaganda outcry about the Soviet Union's alleged "involvement" in international terrorism.

Mr William Casey, the CIA chief, does not stand aloof from that slanderous campaign and has again lashed out against the USSR. It might seem that that super-terrorist would do well to keep mum rather than attract too much attention to his own office, but he thinks he is in a position to "expose" someone... it certainly depends by what ethics he is guided.

As far as ethics of those in Washington, who are exposing international terrorism, is concerned, today's L'HUMANITE says that the CIA is trying to distract attention from the buildup of U.S. aid to the Angolan, Afghan and Nicaraguan counterrevolutionaries. In other words they are using the ancient trick of crying thief as loudly as they possibly can.

I have recently returned for Afghanistan, where I could see with my own eyes and touch with my own hands all types of U.S.-made weapons captured from counterrevolutionary bandits, including mortars and grenade launchers, submachine guns, mines, and booby-traps. Now they have decided to add anti-aircraft missiles Stinger to that arsenal. The American CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR describes these missiles as an ideal weapon for the terrorists. Wasn't the passenger plane of the Afghan air company with 52 passengers on board downed a few months ago with a surface-to-air missile a test of that weapon's effectiveness in the hands of hired bandits and murderers? Washington supplies the same missiles to its mercenaries in Angola, the terrorist Savimbi gangs. The next clients to get the missiles are the Nicaraguan countras.

Such facts of Washington's direct encouragement for open international terrorism are so numerous and so obvious that it makes no sense to deny them. The vulgar propaganda trick of naming these terrorists as "freedom fighters" won't work. It won't work even in America itself. Thus for example, THE LOS ANGELES TIMES, which is far from being in sympathy with progressive forces and movements, has drawn the conclusion that by assisting international terrorism and racism, the White House is leading things to even greater bloodshed in the world, and is lessening chances for a political settlement of the so-called "regional conflicts."

One cannot but agree with that conclusion. There is a direct connection between undeclared wars, all forms of export of counter-revolution broadly practiced by Washington and international terrorism. That is precisely why the Soviet Union, which rejects terrorism, consistently comes out for immediate peaceful, political settlement of crisis and conflicts, whether they be around Afghanistan and Nicaragua, or Middle East and Africa. And however hard the slanderers may try to present that clear-cut stand in a distorted light, they will never be able to do so.

APN CITED ON BACKGROUND TO BLACK SEA INCIDENT

AU082103 Prague RUDE PRAVO in Czech 4 Apr 86 p 8

[CTK report: "Background of a Provocation; APN on the Recent U.S. Intelligence Operation Against the USSR"]

[Text] Moscow -- The analysis of the recent hostile U.S. action in the Black Sea has revealed new circumstances and facts. This is stated by APN, with reference to Soviet experts.

The penetration of the Yorktown cruiser and the Caron destroyer into Soviet territorial waters near the southern coast of the Crimea on 13 March 1986 was part of an extensive intelligence operation, the news agency remarks. The moment of penetration was synchronized with the overflight of the Soviet Union by Ferret espionage satellites. The U.S. warships stayed for more than 2 hours only 8 miles away from the Soviet coast. During that time their navigation route was crossed three times by the satellites, which are earmarked for radio and radiotechnical espionage.

According to reports in the American press, the two vessels mentioned above, which are used for acquiring special information about the USSR and its Armed Forces, were equipped with a multitude of monitoring apparatuses and other electronic devices. Such and similar operations, which are intended to trigger the Soviet means for uncovering, identifying, and warding off attacks in a state of emergency, are aimed at acquiring data that is then used for compiling plans for conducting real wars, APN emphasizes.

ARTICLE ASSESSES ROLE OF U.S. AIRFIELD IN HONDURAS

[S. Zyubanov article under the rubric "The Press Attests": "The Pentagon's Ruses"]

[Text] The U.S. Administration has "reequipped" the small state of Honduras as a bridgehead for the possible use of the American Armed Forces in Central America, bypassing Congress in this matter. The West German magazine DER SPIEGEL recently described the tricks to which the American military resorted here.

At the beginning of 1983, the magazine writes, Honduras had just four airfields, too small for conducting any serious military operation. Now, just 3 years later, this "shortcoming" has been completely eliminated. As though at the wave of a magic wand, 11 modern airfields with concrete surfaces, fuel stocks, weapons dumps, and barracks for the service personnel and soldiers have appeared in Honduras. And the majority of the airfields are in direct proxomity to the Nicaraguan border. And the Pentagon "rushed" all this through behind the back of the U.S. Congress, without obtaining its permission to fund the construction.

As is known, the Pentagon has its own millions that it can spend, for example, on conducting military maneuvers without asking obstinate legislators in Washington every time. And the American military has conducted such maneuvers in Honduras practically continuously since 1983.

Here, in addition to seeking to intimidate the partisans in El Salvador and the Nicaraguan Government, the war games have another function of considerable importance. American engineering units in Honduras are constructing airfields with corresponding surface structures and fuel and weapon dumps in the guise of temporary structures that are supposedly needed to conduct maneuvers. And so that Congress does not get wind of anything, military bookkeepers send it falsified reports on the cost of holding the "games." If these fake reports are to be believed, it turns out, for example, that it cost the Pentagon just ... $500 to construct one of these airfields! And road construction is still cheaper.

True, in the end the congressmen suspected deception. But in reply to their question W. Taft, U.S. first deputy defense secretary, declared without batting an eyelid: "The United States does not have a military base or any permanent structures in Honduras. Nor do we have any intention of constructing any..." However, the Pentagon itself recently totally exposed that undisguised lie. Its report to Congress outlines a 5-year program for the modernization of landing strips in Honduras and the construction of hangars, soldiers' barracks, and so forth at a total cost of $50 million!

The United States is continuing feverishly to create a springboard for aggression in Central America, sparing neither dollars nor hypocrisy.

U.S. TO SELL CHINA PARTS TO MODERNIZE FIGHTERS

LD090751 Moscow TASS in English 0728 GMT 9 Apr 86

[Text] Washington April 9 TASS -- The U.S. Department of Defense has notified Congress that it is going to sell 55 sets of aircraft electronic gear to China to be used in the modernization of Chinese F-8 fighter planes. The value of the deal is 550 million dollars. Each set containes a radar and air navigation equipment. The decision on the sale will go into force if Congress does not veto the deal inside of 30 days.

PRAVDA CITED ON ACTIVITIES OF PEACE CORPS

LD071427 Moscow TASS in English 0853 GMT 7 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow, April 7 TASS -- The American "Peace Corps" is nothing else but a tool of Washington's interference in the home affairs of the developing countries, says the newspaper PRAVDA, commenting on that organization's activity. Acting under its signboard, the CIA, military intelligence and other secret services of the USA are engaged in an effort to destabilise the regimes unwelcome to Washington. They bend every effort in an attempt at undermining the trust of the population of the young independent states in the socialist countries. In personal conversations and through the mass media the "volunteers" are impressing on the inhabitants the anti-communist ideas of "Red menace", lauding to the skies the "American way of life". That organization's real aims, as the Mexican PRENSA LIBRE newspaper says, are to spread imperialist propaganda, collect intelligence and recruit agents...

The organization particularly badly discredited itself during the years of the dirty war waged by the USA in Vietnam, where "volunteers" were trying to establish order American style, the newspaper reports. In Brazil the "Peace Corps" was more than once accused of unlawful prospecting for minerals and was in the long run ordered out, as happened in the past in India. The same story repeated also in many other countries. A total of 30 countries have rejected the assistance of "corpsmen" as the volunteers of the "Peace Corps" name themselves.

In connection with the intention of the current United States Administration to intensify the activity of the "Peace Corps", the newspaper stresses that the U.S. President has recently signed a decree under which it is planned to expand the personnel of the corps to reach ten thousand, i.e. to double it by 1990. While in the past fiscal year, the organization's budget was 115 million dollars, in 1986 it will reach already 130 million.

The shameless attempts of the "corpsmen" at interfering on the affairs of other countires are a source of well-founded indignation for the freedom-loving peoples, the newspaper PRAVDA says in conclusion.

U.S. INTELLIGENCE BUDGET FINANCES 'STATE TERRORISM'

LD070723 Moscow TASS in English 0700 GMT 7 Apr 86

["CIA -- Billions on Dirty Work" -- TASS identifier]

[Text] Moscow April 7 TASS -- "The subversive activity of American special services has since long become one of the chief instruments of U.S. foreign policy," PRAVDA said today.

"But never before has the dirty work by the cloak-and-dagger agency been encouraged and financed so generously by official Washington as under the present administration which is sticking to a policy of state terrorism."

Referring to THE WASHINGTON POST, the newspaper observed that the intelligence budget for the 1987 financial year, starting on October 1, was set above 24 billion dollars. It was distributed between four arms of the service and espionage agencies -- the CIA, the Defense Intelligence Agency, the National Reconnaissance Agency [as received] and the National Security Agency.

Under the Reagan administration, the size of CIA assistance to Afghan dushmans alone raised from 100 million to 500 million dollars a year, PRAVDA stressed.

In recent years, the CIA expanded interference in other countries' affairs to an extent compelling the administration to set up a special interagency committee to monitor the increasingly complicated system of covert operations. The group, which called itself the "208 committee", decided late in February to expand considerably four paramilitary operations. The obvious implication was that the matter concerned Afghanistan, Nicaragua, Angola and Kampuchea.

GROMYKO, LOMEYKO ADDRESS U.S. 'NEOGLOBALISM'

LD042237 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 1930 GMT 4 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow, 4 Apr (TASS) -- The world public saw a fundamentally new approach to solving the most acute problem of the day -- the creation of an all-encompassing system of international security -- in the Soviet proposals set forth in the Political Report of the CPSU Central Committee to the 27th Congress, Anatoliy Gromyko and Vladimir Lomeyko write in the journal MEZHDUNARODNAYA ZHIZN (April 1986).

Concern for the fate of the world is incompatible with the policy of preparing for war and banking on force. The authors note that it is only necessary to draw attention to this plain truth because virtually every day statements are made by representatives of the U.S. Administration that are peace-loving in form but conceal threats of sanctions and covert and overt interference in the internal affairs of other countries.

Having started out with an appeal to understand the new realities of the world and to adapt to them, Washington came to the conclusion that now that the Vietnam syndrome is "happily over and done with" and America is on its high horse again, it is possible to establish order all over the world as it deems fit, in accordance with its imperial concepts of human morals, values and ideals. But where is the new political thinking here? For this is "neoglobalism" in its purest form, in other words, the old doctrine that everything is permitted, which proclaims the right of the United States to interfere in the internal affairs of other countries and in the development of events in any part of the world.

At the present stage of civilization, the article notes, the human community has a vital need for a radical turn for the better, toward a stable normalization of international relations. In other words, we all need, in order to survive, a different -- or from the point of view of civilization, higher -- level of relations.

The new civilized level in international relations must rule out the strong-arm approach. Confrontation inevitably leads to a further arms race and raises the risk of nuclear war. Whether started intentionally (a first strike) or unintentionally (technical mistake, human error), a nuclear war could lead to the suicide of mankind.

The new way of thinking in the nuclear age, as the Soviet leadership has repeatedly noted, means renouncing the ambition of foisting one's own ideology, way of thinking, and values on others by force. Socialism rejects wars as a means of solving ideological arguments and contradictions between states. The advantages of social systems prove themselves by peaceful competition, not by the policy of "position of strength".

SCHOOLGIRL COMMENTS ON U.S. TRIP, REAGAN MEETING

LD042208 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1700 GMT 4 Apr 86

[S. Starodomskaya report From the "Vremya" newscast]

[Text] A press conference was held in Moscow today at the Soviet Peace Defense Committee at which Katya Lycheva told Soviet and foreign journalists about her trip to the United States.

[Lycheva] People there formed a kind of corridor and each one of them offered me his hand. I did not have enough hands to greet everyone and I ended up walking along like this. [video shows Katya crossing her arms]

[Starodomskays] In the United States Katya was representing all Soviet children, above all, those with whom she goes to school and carries out pioneer work. Therefore, all the smiles, handshakes, and good wishes from the children and adults who met Katya in the United States, were directed towards all Soviet children. At the press conference the journalists asked all kinds of questions, including the following:

[NOVOYE VREMYA correspondent] In the White House you met President Reagan. What was it like and, if possible, tell us what you talked about and the impression the U.S. President made on you?

[Lycheva] Well first of all, we went on a tour around the White House and then we were taken into a kind of hall where we met President Reagan. I brought him a toy from Soviet children, a globe that waves with one hand and has a little dove of peace in the other. I said that I am giving you this toy that shows you how all our people and all our children want peace. He said that he is no longer a child but that this is his dream as well and that he will try to do everything possible so that our planet becomes nuclear-free.

[Starodomskaya] It would be nice if that were the really the case. Many issues were discussed at the conference and whatever the matter in question, the whole essence of the conversation was that everything must be done to ensure that people in different countries understand each other better, and that means trust each other. Here is the conclusion reached by Katya:

[Lycheva] All people throughout the world are brothers and sisters. They must...[Unidentified male speaker] be friends...

[Lycheva] ...must be friends and, of course, not kill each other.

MULATOV STRESSES IMPORTANCE OF USSR-PRC COOPERATION

OW090135 Moscow in Mandarin to China 1600 GMT 8 Apr 86

[Mulatov commentary: "Cooperation for Strengthening Peace in Asia"]

[Text] In response to a proposal by the World Peace Council, political and social organizations in many Asian countries have recently launched the International Week of Asia and actively participated in antiwar activities. Following is a commentary by our station observer Mulatov, "Cooperation for Strengthening Peace in Asia," in which he will discuss the importance of mutual understanding and cooperation between the two socialist powers, the Soviet Union and China, in the struggle for strengthening the security of Asia.

One of the important aims of the International Week of Asia, sponsored by the World Peace Council, is to extensively mobilize all peace-loving forces to take effective action to shatter imperialist aggressive war preparations and strengthen the foundation for the security of Asia, so that it can become a continent of peace and goodneighborly cooperation.

Dear Chinese listeners, I believe the significance of Soviet-Chinese cooperation in the struggle for a peaceful future in Asia is immeasurable. My reason for this is based, not only on the triumph of the principles of peaceful coexistence observed by our two countries in Asia, but also on the rich and fruitful experience in our cooperation in the struggle to thwart imperialist military adventures and aggressive schemes. The role played by the Soviet Union and China in stopping U.S. aggression in Korea in the fifties suffices to prove this point. Moreover, Chinese-Soviet (?combatant) unity in the late fifties enabled China to overcome the threat of imminent imperialist armed intervention during the so-called Taiwan Strait crisis, caused by the U.S. ruling clique. Here, I want to repeat not only that the past experience explains the merits of Soviet-Chinese joint efforts in the struggle for peace and security in Asia, but also that our two socialist countries face the important task of safeguarding peace in Asia and the whole world today. In order to create favorable external conditions for peaceful socialist construction, the survival interests of our two countries call for mutual understanding and cooperation between the Soviet Union and China in the international arena.

It should be pointed out with satisfaction that the Soviet Union and China share identical, or similar, views on a number of fundamental global and Asian regional issues. For example, among the five nuclear powers, only the Soviet Union and China have promised not to become the first country to use nuclear weapons, and both countries are firmly opposed to space militarization. As for issues purely concerning Asia, both countries support Democratic Korea's proposal for a political settlement of the Korean peninsula issue, as well as maintain vigilance against the tendency of revival of militarism and revanchism in the policy of the Japanese ruling clique. It should also be noted that both the Soviet Union and China support the proposal by nonaligned countries to turn the Indian Ocean into a region of peace and unity, and for the Palestinian Arabs' just struggle. There exist great possibilities for cooperation between the Soviet Union and China for strengthening peace in Asia.

PRAVDA VIEWS JAPAN STAGE OF WEINBERGER TOUR

PM081343 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 6 Apr 86 First Edition p 5

[Vsevolod Ovchinnikov "Commentator's Column": "Tightening the Reins"]

[Text] U.S. Defense Secretary Weinberger is making a 2-week foreign tour. Its itinerary includes South Korea, Japan, the Philippines, Thailand, and Australia.

Washington is clearly alarmed at the growth of antinuclear sentiments in the South Pacific and, in particular, at New Zealand's refusal to let ships carrying nuclear weapons into its ports. They are also concerned about the fate of the American military bases in the Philippines. Moreover, the echo of the Philippine events has spread as far as South Korea, where actions against the dictatorship of Chon Tu-hwan are assuming an increasingly mass nature.

Under these conditions, the Japanese newspaper SANKIE SHIMBUN points out, Washington is seeking to strengthen the strategic ties which link it with Tokyo and Seoul and also with Manila and Canberra. This was clearly demonstrated on the main stage of his tour, in Japan. The Pentagon chief set off for Hokkaido Island to inspect combat exercises by Japanese troops off the USSR's borders, and then for Misawa Air Base, where American F-16 fighter-bombers are stationed, threatening the Soviet Maritime Kray. The "star aspect" of Weinberger's trip also speaks for itself.

More than a year has passed since Nakasone declared in the United States that he regards SDI with "understanding." But the Tokyo ruling circles have not yet decided openly to follow the example of London and Bonn. For participation in the "star wars" program runs counter to three parliamentary resolutions at once: on investigating and opening up space exclusively for peaceful purposes; on renouncing the production, acquisition, and deployment of nuclear weapons; and on banning exports of military equipment and technology. Tokyo's retreat from these positions would give the opposition strong trump cards in the parliamentary election due this summer.

Therefore, a "quiet creeping" into SDI would be preferable for the Nakasone cabinet. I mean giving its blessing to the participation of private corporations in this program without signing an official document between the governments.

To make Japan a direct or indirect participant in the "star wars" program, to equip the South Korean Air Force with an additional number of F-16 aircraft, to expand military aid to the Philippines and Thailand as Southeast Asian "frontline" states (to use Pentagon terminology), to compensate for the crack in the ANZUS bloc by strengthening bilateral American-Australian military ties -- these are the chief aims of Weinberger's tour. It is perfectly obvious that Washington's new attempt to accelerate militarist preparations in the Asian and Pacific region is fraught with very dangerous consequences for the peoples of the states situated there.

JAPANESE MINISTER IN MOSCOW FOR FISHING TALKS

LD082059 Moscow TASS in English 1715 GMT 8 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 8 TASS - Prospects for developing Soviet-Japanese cooperation in fisheries are being discussed in the course of a visit to Moscow by Tsutomu Hata, Japanese minister of agriculture, forestry and fisheries, which began today.

Hata is to have a meeting with Soviet Fisheries Minister Vladimir Kamentsev.

One of the important issues on the agenda of the talks is reciprocal fishing in the two countries' 200-mile economic zones. Which was suspended last January in the absence of an agreement on the terms of such catching operations in 1986.

The terms have been dicussed for more than three months at a Moscow session of a bilateral commission on fisheries, which has been formed under the intergovernmental agreement of December 7, 1984.

Some issues have on the whole been settled now but there still remains disagreements on fishing methods and catch quotas. These should be ironed in a way complying with the demand for rational use of maritime resources.

The USSR and Japan have maintained close relations in fisheries for many years, with their experts cooperating in the preservation, rational use and reproduction of salmon species and in concerted studies of fish stocks in the northwest Pacific and exchanging science and technology documents and fish fry.

Soviet and Japanese ships whose crews include specialists of both countries have conducted joint catching operations since 1979. Last year Japanese fishermen participating in such operations caught thrice more crabs in areas adjoining the Soviet coast than in 1984.

ROK'S CHON TOURS EUROPE TO BOLSTER SECURITY

LD081620 Moscow TASS in English 1546 GMT 8 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 8 TASS -- TASS news analyst Vasiliy Kharkov writes:

The Seoul regime which is patronized by Washington and which heavily depends on Tokyo strives to get backing in Western Europe, too. This striving is the essence of a ten-day tour of the Seoul dictator Chon Tu-hwan which will take him to a number of West European countries and which started with a visit to Britain on Monday. It is the first time since the coming to power that Chon Tu-hwan makes a trip to Western Europe. Besides Britain, he also intends to visit the FRG, France and Belgium.

The London "TIMES" writes today that Chon Tu-hwan seeks to get West Europe's backing in matters related to South Korea's security. Going by what Washington and Seoul mean under such matters, -- and this was shown again by U.S. Defense Secretary Weinberger's recent visit to South Korea -- the build-up of military preparations in the south of the Korean peninsula is envisaged.

The Seoul regime is now living through difficult times. A mass movement for democratic transformations that swept South Korea aggravates the political crisis of the dictatorship. Ever wider sections of the public rally around the opposition. They demand the revision of the constitution, the ensurance of fundamental civil rights. The campaign to collect signatures under the petition containing these demands assumed the unprecedented scope. It is intended to collect no less than ten million signatures. The recent stormy events in the Philippines were echoed in South Korea, giving a new impetus to the struggle against the regime of arbitrariness and violence. In these conditions the Seoul dictator and his patrons look for the ways to create the impression that the international positions of the regime are strengthened.

Now that the formation of the Washington-Seoul-Tokyo triangle is being completed, its sponsors seek to build a bridge to NATO, thus emphasizing Atlantic solidarity with a new bloc in the Far East, the result of Washington's policy of blocs.

Chon Tu-hwan's tour of Western Europe also pursues one more aim -- the widening of commercial and economic ties of the Seoul regime with EEC countries and using them as a new source of the financing of military preparations. According to the information of the British newspaper "FINANCIAL TIMES" the volume of trade turnover between South Korea and the EEC reached last year the record level of 5,900 million dollars. Seoul intends to double this figure within the next few years. Seoul which views the EEC as a vast market is backed by numerous Japanese and U.S. companies that are ready to use those ties to their own advantage.

The first day of Chon Tu-hwan's talks in London showed that not a word was said at them about glaring violations of human rights by the Seoul regime, about the rampage of lawlessness and police terror is South Korea. Those who so noisily proclaim themselves to be champions of human rights keep mum. Passed in silence is also such a vital question as the creation of conditions for peaceful unification of Korea, for withdrawal of U.S forces from South Korea, the relaxation of the explosive situation on the peninsula. And precisely this was demanded by the resolution of the United Nations General Assmebly that was adopted way back in 1975, at the 30th session of the U.S. General Assembly.

COMMENTS ON U.S.-S. KOREAN MILITARY COOPERATION

Moscow Sees U.S. 'Aggression'

SK031347 Moscow International Service in Korean 0930 GMT 29 Mar

[Talk by unidentified station commentator]

[Text] Shultz, the U.S. secretary of state, made the very noteworthy confession that the United States has sent its forces to other countries on at least 185 occasions since World War II in order to alter situations it believed threatened its political and economic interests. However, it is not necessary for Washington to send its forces to South Korea, which has been given an important role in the U.S. aggression strategy in the Far East. Large-scale forces of aggression have been stationed there for more than 40 years. Therefore, the White House has given none other than the Seoul regime an important role in realizing its foreign policy plan called the new globalist doctrine.

What is the point of this new political term used by the United States? This is aimed at establishing the right of the United States to interfere in the internal affairs of independent countries in the global sphere, to wage [word indistinct] wars against these countries, and to conduct covert or overt operations of destruction -- in other words, the right to seek a policy of state terrorism. It is expected that Washington will have its cat's paws commit such vicious conduct. The Seoul regime is the first to be among them, because the Korean peninsula has long been within the sphere of the U.S. imperialists' authority. Various sorts of military exercises and mobile exercises have served as important means of intimidation. The large-scale "Team Spirit-86" military exercise of the United States and South Korea is completely compatible with the new globalist doctrine. Observers regard this as an exercise designed to invade the neighboring peoples. Conducting this exercise was designed to imbue other countries with militarism. A network of U.S. bases spread all over the world, like a spider's web, plays an important role in guaranteeing the realization of the neoglobalist doctrine.

In South Korea, there are 40 of the Pentagon's bases, where tens of thousands of U.S. soldiers are stationed. The southern half of the Korean peninsula has become a powder magazine of the U.S. militarists in the Far East. Various sorts of U.S. nuclear weapons are deployed there.

Another direction of Washington's neoglobalist policy is to incite its allies to strengthen their military power. Seoul plans to buy ultramodern weapons, including F-16 fighter-bombers; destroyers laden with missiles; and helicopters. During the period from 1985 to 1989, the Pentagon plans to supply South Korea with combat gear and military equipment worth up to $1 billion. [Word indistinct] and some Pentagon officials still regard John Foster Dulles' concept as a guideline. Dulles once babbled that even though it is part of Asia, Korea is like a peninsula that can be excised. Therefore, it is not surprising that the U.S. forces command is planning to test its ultramodern aggression plan to deal a so-called preventive strike against remote areas of the enemy country's territory while conducting the "Team Spirit-86" military exercise. Of course, the Pentagon is not planning to use only South Korea's territory. As it did during the turbulent war against the Indochinese people, Washington is calculating to use the Seoul regime's armed forces, which are 600,000 strong, in realizing its aggression attempt.

In his Political Report at the 27th CPSU Congress, Comrade Mikhail Gorbachev's general secretary of the Central Committee, pointed out that [passage indistinct]. Washington's act of involving Seoul in realizing its neoglobalist doctrine aggravates the situation on the Korean peninsula and the entire Far East and runs counter to the peace, security, and interest of this region.

It is the DPRK's peaceful proposals that can contribute to the alleviation of tension on the Korean peninsula. It is also the socialist countries' efforts and [word indistinct] in the struggle to promote peace and security for the people and to remove the danger of a nuclear calamity that can contribute to this. One of the prerequisites for removing the root of the danger of war, including the one on the Korean peninsula, is for Washington to give up its dangerous neoglobalist policy.

DPRK on 'Team Spirit' Exercises

PM080948 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 7 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 4

[TASS report: "For Peaceful Dialogue"]

[Text] Pyongyang, 6 Apr -- The DPRK resolutely rejects the South Korean attempts to conduct a North-South dialogue from a "position of strength," an article published in the newspaper NODONG SINMUN states.

While the U.S.-South Korean "Team Spirit '86" maneuvers are continuing with the participation of more than 200,000 servicemen, while nuclear-capable aircraft are taking off, and while airborne assault and other offensive operations simulating "strikes against the North" are being held, claims about some kind of "treaty from the North" are utterly groundless.

The newspaper recalls that, with a view to easing the tension in Korea and creating a favorable atmosphere for a North-South dialogue, the DPRK has proposed ending the holding of military maneuvers and has unilaterally taken steps in this direction.

DPRK ENVOY COMMENTS ON CULTURAL ACCORD SIGNING

LD042155 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1805 GMT 4 Apr 86

[Text] A plan for cultural and scientific cooperation between the Soviet Union and the DPRK for the years 1986-87 was signed in Moscow today at the USSR Foreign Ministry. Our correspondent Vladimir Savchenko reports:

The new plan provides for a further expansion of cooperation between the Academies of Sciences of the USSR and the DPRK in various fields, including agriculture. The numbers of Korean students, postgraduates, and people on non-degree courses at Soviet higher educational institutions will be increased. There will be an active exchange of artistic collectives.

On the Soviet side the document was signed by Mikhail Stepanovich Kapitsa, USSR deputy foreign minister. He noted that the new plan for cultural and scientific cooperation will promote the exchange of experience in socialist construction, the mutual enrichment of the cultures of our peoples, and a strengthening of the traditional links between the USSR and the DPRK.

Kwon Hui-kyong, the DPRK's ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary to the Soviet Union, who signed the document, addressed those assembled. He said, among other things:

[Begin Kwon Hui-kyong recording in Korean, with superimposed Russian translation] Recently we marked the 37th anniversary of the economic cooperation agreement between the DPRK and the USSR, and this year we are marking the 30th anniversary of the agreement in the realm of culture and science. We are very content with the way that cooperation has been steadfastly developing on the basis of these agreements. Contacts between the two countries in the fields of the economy, culture, health care and sports, and in all spheres, are being enriched and deepened with every passing day; we will make every effort to successfully carry out this new cooperation plan, which will serve to strengthen friendship between the peoples of the DPRK and the Soviet Union. FURTHER ON WEINBERGER'S REGIONAL TOUR

Filipinos Protest U.S. Presence

LD081626 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 0730 GMT 8 Apr 86

[Text] According to news agency reports, the visit of U.S. Secretary of Defense Weinberger to the Philippines was accompanied by mass anti-U.S. demonstrations, where participants demanded that the U.S. military bases on Philippine territory be removed. This report is commented upon by Sergey Fanton:

In its relations with the Philippines, Washington is most worried about the fate of its military installations. There are about 20 there, including the strategic Air Force and naval bases, Clark Field and Subic Bay. This is the largest U.S. bridgehead in the Pacific basin, and it plays a key role in the chain of U.S. bases extending from Australia via Micronesia, to the Philippines and Japan, to the Aleutian Islands. The status of the bases is determined by an agreement, foisted on Manila, which expires in 1991. As this date approaches, more and more Filipinos are speaking out in favor of removing the U.S. military presence and of conducting a more independent policy. Washington's argument, common knowledge for a long time now, about the so-called Soviet threat and the mythical need to protect sea communications seems unconvincing to Filipinos.

On the other hand, the threat the military bases themselves pose to Filipinos is becoming increasingly obvious. The news about the death of four Philippine workers after their having received a high dose of radiation in the O'Donnell military base evoked just indignation in the country. The source of the radiation is as yet unknown, as the U.S. command categorically refuses to give the authorities the appropriate information. At the same time the press reports that there have been frequent claims that the Pentagon has already sited nuclear warheads in depots on the Philippines. It has not been ruled out, the Manila TIMES JOURNAL writes in this connection, that the United States, while ignoring the national sovereignty of the Philippines has turned the country into an arsenal of strategic weapons of mass destruction.

Antiwar demonstrations continue outside the U.S. Embassy in Manila. Fifty-nine public organizations are in favor of the immediate removal of all U.S military bases and installations. The Filipinos do not want to resign themselves to the role of a nuclear hostage and hope that the changes now taking place in the country are not confined to purely outward, cosmetic alterations.

Weinberger Seeks Depots in Thailand

LD081802 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1300 GMT 8 Apr 86

[Vladimir Beloshapko commentary]

[Text] The chief of the Pentagon has started his stay in Thailand on an explicitly provocative note. By visiting areas bordering upon Cambodia this morning, where bands of Khmer reactionaries have entrenched themselves, and dropping in on the positions of Thailand's artillery, which has more than once opened fire on the territory of the neighboring states, Weinberger made it plain that in U.S. headquarters Thailand is still regarded as a bridgehead for intervention in the affairs of the countries of Indochina.

But this far from exhausts the purposes of his voyage. A plan to set up depots of U.S. weapons in Thailand is being discussed at talks held in Bangkok. Washington maintains that such depots are intended to be used exclusively by Thailand's Armed Forces in the event their national security is threatened. In its comment on that line of argument, the BANGKOK POST lamented that the installation of U.S. military depots might be seen erroneously as an infringement upon Thailand's national sovereignty. Are they really erroneous, these misgivings? Indeed, according to U.S. laws, the Pentagon may set up its depots in those countries only where U.S. troops are stationed. In this case, the following question would not be out of place: Are not U.S. soldiers going to appear on Thai soil in the wake of weapons so as not to violate the U.S. legislation in force, so to speak? In my opinion, such a possibility should on no account be dismissed.

But what a direct U.S. presence is fraught with has been vividly shown by the U.S. aggression in Indochina. Its infamous collapse delivered a strong blow to Thailand's prestige too, as it was from Pentagon bases on Thai territory that U.S. aircraft took off to bomb towns and villages of Vietnam, Laos, and Cambodia. This was a bitter experience and not all in Thailand have forgotten it, by any means. As some of the country's leading scientists emphasized at a seminar in Bangkok held on the eve of Weinberger's arrival, storing of U.S. weapons could again draw Thailand into a military confrontation in the region.

Leaves Bangkok for Canberra

LD090851 Moscow TASS in English 0705 GMT 9 Apr 86

[Text] Tokyo April 9 TASS -- U.S. Defence Secretary Caspar Weinberger, making a tour of Asian and Pacific countries, today left Bangkok for Canberra.

During his talks in the Thai capital the Pentagon chief succeeded in imposing on that country's prime minister an agreement to start talks on the construction of arms and munitions depots on Thai territory for American "Rapid Deployment Forces."

The MAINICHI newspaper reported today, however, that Bangkok refused to give its final consent to the implementation of the dangerous design.

Weinberger's trip to Bangkok was marked by powerful demonstrations in protest at the establishment of a bridgehead for the gendarme "rapid Deployment Forces" in the country.

MORE ON ANGOLAN DOWNING OF S. AFRICAN PLANE

PM081314 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 8 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 4

[Own correspondent S. Nikonov report: "Angola: A 'Hercules' Shot Down"]

[Text] Luanda — Angola's ANGOP News Agency has reported that Air Defense Forces servicemen from the People's Armed Forces for the Liberation of Angola [FAPLA] shot down on 3 April one of three South African Air Force "Hercules" transport aircraft from which the racists were dropping weapons and ammunition for the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola [UNITA] gangs operating in the central provinces of the People's Republic of Angola.

It has been known for a long time from testimony by captures bandits and reports by local residents that the racists, under cover of night, regularly transport combat munitions for terrorist groups from the territory of Namibia. And even though FAPLA subunits have repeatedly captured parachuted and the military materiel from NATO and South African stores there were dropped, Pretoria still stubbornly refuses to admit that its Air Force is being used to supply UNITA gangs.

But, as people say, facts are stubborn things. The aircraft that was shot down is the latest piece of irrefutable proof of interaction between the racists and the traitors of the Angolan people.

Many Angolans with whom we spoke in this connection do not rule out that this time the "Hercules" aircraft were carrying weapons recently appropriated by the Pentagon and the CIA to support UNITA gangs, including "Stinger" missiles.

ANC OFFICIAL CALLS FOR RELEASE OF LEADERS

MB081749 Moscow in Zulu to Southern Africa 1800 GMT 4 Apr 86

[Text] Today as part of our programs we have an ANC executive committee member, Henry Makoti, as our guest speaker. He is a veteran of the South African struggle for independence and has been jailed in South Africa because of his contributions to the antiapartheid struggle. Today we will talk about the situation facing political detainees in South Africa.

[Begin Makoti recording in English fading into Zulu translation] There is a mighty campaign being waged today, both inside South Africa and also internationally, for the release of political detainess in South Africa, heroes of the antiapartheid struggle in that county. Nelson Mandela's name naturally comes to mind. We believe that this campaign is of great significance since those in detention because of their fight against the racist regime, are beloved sons and daughters of South Africa. The masses love them and believe in them and refuse to listen to the racist government's hollow promises of change while their true leaders are still in jail. Any talks that take place and any forms of negotiation with the racist regime are a complete waste of time if the real issues that would lead to a better future for South Africans are not addressed. These people are not in prison because they have violated any laws but because they were fighting for their land of birth and the birthright of their people. The masses hold the work done in the struggle for freedom by these people in high esteem and while they remain behind bars the people will continue to ignore all of the Pretoria regime's statements of intent.

There are many leaders of the struggle that have been in prison for a very long time and South African jails are renowned for brutal treatment of prisoners, in particular political prisoners. The regime fears them and considers them a dangerous breed, hence the brutal treatment in order to break their will. The racist government uses all means at its disposal to achieve this. Nowadays the government uses deceptive rhetoric to deceive people into believing that it genuinely wishes to release the leaders of the struggle, but only on the condition that they renounce violent revolution. What does this mean? After all violent confrontation was not our idea but that of the oppressors themselves. They are the ones who use arms against our people who campaign against apartheid.

The South African Government is holding onto power through the barrel of the gun and that is the reason for the appalling bloodshed in the country.

For our part, we do not reject proposals for dialogue on the future of the country, but the racist regime insists on us laying down our arms while it continues its wanton use of arms against our people. That is unacceptable to us and our leaders in racist jails. They do not accept the demands of the National Party government.

Like our leaders we say that political prisoners should be released unconditionally so that they can return to live among their own people. We take the campaign for their release very seriously, and we are gratified to note that this campaign has been joined by many from the international community. [end recording]

HONDURAS COUNTERS U.S. CLAIMS ON AID REQUEST

LD090712 Moscow TASS in English 0648 GMT 9 Apr 86

[Text] Havana April 9 TASS -- According to reports from Honduras, the government of that country has officially refuted the American Administration's contentions that Honduras had supposedly asked the United States for military aid to the sum of 20 million dollars.

Recently the White House urgently provided this assistance to Honduras allegedly to repulse an "armed incursion" from Nicaragua. The aim of this action is to make the American Congress approve a bill on granting 100 million dollars of aid to the Nicaraguan "contras". The official Honduran statement, observers stress, again exposes Washington's attempts to justify preparations for direct military interference designed to topple the Sandinist government.

RSFSR JUSTICE MINISTER VISITS NICARAGUA

LD081243 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 0630 GMT 8 Apr 86

[Text] Managua, 8 Apr (TASS) -- Aleksandr Sukharev, RSFSR minister of justice and chairman of the Association of Soviet Lawyers, was here on a visit at the invitation of the Nicaraguan Association of Democratic Lawyers. He met the juridical community of Nicaragua, the leadership of the Justice Ministry and the Supreme Court, and servicemen of the Sandinist People's Army. Aleksandr Sukharev was received by Tomas Borge and Victor Tirado, members of the national leadership of the Sandinist National Liberation Front.

During the visit. the sides exchanged experience in development of the legal system [Pravovoye stroitel'stvo], and questions of strengthening the relations between lawyers of the two countries on a state and on a social basis were discussed.

During the meetings and conversations, the RSFSR minister of justice directed the attention of Nicaraguan lawyers to the need to consolidate the international juridical community if order to expose the policy of "state terrorism" of the Reagan administration with respect to Nicaragua, and to defend the Nicaraguan people's sovereign right to self-determination.

In his speeches, Aleksandr Sukharev acquainted the Nicaraguans with the implementation of the USSR's foreign policy, elaborated by the 27th CPSU Congress, the improvement of Soviet democracy, and the further strengthening of discipline and law and order.

Gorbachev Tours Auto Plant During Kuybyshev Visit

Conversations With Workers

LD082337 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1700 GMT 8 Apr 86

[Report on visit by CPSU General Secretary M.S. Gorbachev to the Volga car works in Tolyatti, Kuybyshev Oblast; introduced by correspondent Tikhomirov and presented by Igor Kirillov — from the "Vremya" newscast — recorded]

[Text] Hello, comrades. Today is the 2d day of Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev's stay in Kuybyshev Oblast.

[Tikhomirov] Today Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev visited the Volga Motor Vehicle Works [VAZ] in Tolyatti. The first conversation took place at the southern entrance to the works, with the members of the Komsomol youth teams of the main assembly line. [Video shows Gorbachev and retinue approaching; one girl gives him flowers]

[Gorbachev] Thank you. Thank you very much. You know, surrounded by you as I am, I will start feeling like an old man right away. [laughter] No one over 30 can be seen. Or else they have hidden themselves away. [He turns to a group of female workers] Well, what do you say?

[Womens' voices] We are glad, glad that you have come to us.

[Gorbachev] VAZ workers adopted good pledges on the eve of the congress — well done! But, after all, this is how you should act. This is a new town, a new, fine workforce. The machines are fine, also; although one can also criticize a bit, especially here, since I am not facing the public. [laughter] The VAZ workers have heard often enough that they produce a model commensurate with world standards. Why should you not become trendsetters in motor vehicle construction? Isn't it time for that?

[Unidentified worker] Of course. [Others agree and laugh]

[Gorbachev, turning to a man in his retinue] I really said it more for his benefit, for Minister Viktor Nikolayevich's benefit. [Viktor Nikolayevich Polyakov, USSR minister of the automative industry]

[Worker] To become a trendsetter....

[Gorbachev] Yes, indeed. Such a fine town, such forces are concentrated here — an educated working class, strong scientific and technical intelligentsia — in a word, there is everything one really needs to design and master models of the future, and not just those commensurate with these world levels. Well, this is what I want to say. Is it possible to say this, to set a task such as this?

[Worker] Yes, it is possible. It is.

[Gorbachev] You know what startled me? It is the fact that soon you will have 700,000. A million? Well, look here, you have become accustomed to doing things on a large scale.

[Worker] The town is young and should develop.

[Gorbachev] You know, I think it is necessary to develop the town, but in such a way as to ensure that the industrial part, the production sphere does not lose contact with the social sphere.

[Worker] (?During development everything must be taken into account).

[Gorbachev] Well, this is the main thing. And what is of concern to the young people in the town, so to speak? Be outspoken, young ladies.

[Worker] We are concerned about everything. [laughter]

[Gorbachev] That is good. It is natural that you should be concerned about everything. And what problems are there, if one can pose the question this way? [passage indistinct] Housing?

[Worker] The main one.

[Gorbachev] The main one.

[Worker] We have several young people, but they have nowhere to go to relax.

[Gorbachev] Not possible to relax?

[Workers' voices] No. One cinema.

[Gorbachev] What?

[Worker] We have only one cinema

[Gorbachev] One cinema?

[Workers] Yes, yes. They are also building a palace of sports, bu[illegible]sage indistinct]

[Gorbachev] I do not know who is to blame. [laughter from workers] It is usually difficult for us to find where the responsibility lies, but I think both the director and the minister are guilty. Really, is it possible that there is only one cinema for a population of 300,000? Is there no room here to lay out simple sports zones, courts, and playing fields that people can travel to or walk to and do everything calmly. It would not even cost very much. I am sure that if the task was set you would all join in, on Komsomol subbotniks and so on; then it would get done. All the more so, since so many young people have come here from all over the country. So it would be interesting to live and work and to feel oneself a real person.

In order to improve life and to keep our defenses strong, we need productivity, we need work rates, and we need acceleration, the very same acceleration that we have been talking to you about for an entire year. All of our plans are aimed toward this; they received support at the 27th party congress.

Thank you for the meeting.

[Workers] You, too. Many thanks.

[Gorbachev] I wish you all the best.

[Workers] Thank you. [applause] [Gorbachev and retinue move away]

[Tikhomirov][Video shows car production line] When people talk about the VAZ many impressive and even majestic figures are mentioned. But it is enough to mention only one: every 22 seconds a new car leaves the main production line. One can imagine the rest: a giant production plant with metallurgical and metal processing and assembly, first small units; then they are assembled on the conveyor, in other words, the huge road along which separate parts and details are connected and secured together to become, finally, the famous Volga car. In short, there are hundreds and thousands of operations at various sections. As for the Zhiguli that fill our streets everyday, it is worth remembering that the hands of more than 100,000 association workers touch them.

[Video shows Gorbachev being greeted by workers at test track] The first stop is at the test track. All the mass production models of VAZ vehicles have been gathered here. They were presented by Isakov, general director of the association, and Mirzoyev, chief designer. The innovation program adopted at the VAZ envisages about 30 new car and engine models.

[Video shows Gorbachev inside factory surrounded by workers]

[Gorbachev] Well, it is difficult to talk to you here.

[Tikhomirov] This is the conversation at the final stage of the main production line.

[Gorbachev] I cordially greet you and want to express many thanks for your work. To add a bit more. Add — everybody should add a bit more in order to accelerate the national economy. We need more results in production deeds, social deeds, and human deeds. One goes and goes in the car and cannot see the end of the works. I see that there are a total of 53,000 in the other production shop and you have 27,000 here. There are 80,000 people working in those two shops alone. A huge works. I wish you all the best.

[Workers] Many thanks

[Gorbachev] Good bye! [applause]

[Video shows Gorbachev walking through factory; talking to workers]

[Tikhomirov] Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev visited forging and press production, talked to workers on the shop floor and to supervisors and engineers at the enterprise.

[Video shows Gorbachev outside factory, talking to workers]

[Gorbachev] My impression from the workers and, first of all, of the people who work here, is good. The main thing is that they are young and energetic and will produce a lot. Well, do not forget the main thing — we tell the entire country to follow your example. It is good that you are now assimilating new and good methods of management with the entire collective taking part and searching for reserves itself. It is all well. You understand, it is intelligent work and when people work intelligently they obtain good results. Thank you for everything you did and I hope you will not fail us.

[Unidentified man] What measures will we adopt after the congress regarding pilferers?

[Gorbachev] Pilferers — I understand. This is what I think. We are now working out a number of legal acts that will give greater rights to collectives, themselves, to take measures in introducing order to this matter. Pilfering, comrades, is doing us great harm.

[Worker] Yes, it is time to put an end to it.

[Gorbachev] I think that when you are the economic managers, when you yourselves are the economic managers, when you go over to self-financing, the question then arises: What are you doing taking things? That is some article we shall not be producing tomorrow. If we do not produce it, then we shall be marketing less, there will be less profit, less funds and this will affect everything. That is how the question must be put.

You know, our state is democratic. But one must not allow this democracy to be used against ourselves. So we are preparing documents that will increase the severity of economic, administrative, and, of course, moral measures. Therefore, the question of property is an extremely important question.

[Worker] Comrade, may I ask a question?

[Gorbachev] Please do.

[Worker] After the congress, what specific measures are planned to fight against drunkenness and how are they to be intensified?

[Gorbachev] I think we have existing measures and planned ones. It is only necessary to make use of them.

[Worker] No, it is still being dealt with very weakly here.

[Gorbachev] You know, we have reduced by almost half...

[Other workers interrupt] Even more.

[Gorbachev] Perhaps, by even more.

[Other workers] Perhaps by two-thirds.

[Gorbachev] We are reducing the production of vodka and all sorts of fortified wines. There is still dry wine and champagne. Well?

[Worker] To good purpose.

[Gorbachev] Let me tell you that in the village where I was born and where I spent the first years of my life, the people came to a rally and voted to stop the sale of alcohol and they stopped it. You in Tolyatti should gather at a meeting, discuss the matter, and stop the sale.

[?Oblast official] We have five rural rayons which held these rallies and said alcoholic drinks were not to be sold; we do not sell them there.

[Gorbachev] You know, this must come from the people. We welcome this. Every family declares prohibition. Declare prohibition first in the family, then at the enterprise, and then in the town and settlement. We shall support this. But to declare prohibition at state level — there is no need to go to such extremes as a state-imposed prohibition, imposed from above. To move toward a sober society, this, I think, is the correct way.

There are figures showing that the accident rate has fallen sharply, by 20 percent in half a year, as a result of cutting down on all sorts of drinking bouts; this is most correct. Divorces in the second half of 1985 fell by 19 percent.

[?Oblast official] And here by up to 40 percent.

[Worker] That is good. [laughter]

[Gorbachev] That is so. This all has an effect. Hooliganism caused by this has been reduced. In general, an improvement is under way. But if anyone has the idea that it is all over, I think it is just beginning. We put it like this: The main thing is that the beginning must be made with the party, the communists, and the leading cadres. That is the order it must go in.

The people, as we have seen, and the working people have supported this approach; we shall continue to pursue this line.

[Worker] So there is someone to set an example.

[Gorbachev] Quite right. If you are entrusted with leading people you must justify it not only in practice but also morally.

[Gorbachev] Someone else wanted to say something? Was it you?

[Worker] About your meeting with President Reagan, in the near future — when is it to take place, or...

[Gorbachev interrupts] We put the question like this: The meetings must continue, we must meet, and we must converse. We can't let things reach a collision point. However, it must be done in such a way that these meetings bring some sort of benefit, that there is some sort of progress. Whereas, if we just meet and exchange pleasantries and handshakes, while all the military programs are implemented — who needs meetings like that? It would be a fraud! We have said this quite plainly. In general, we don't need to pursue a line whereby the fate of the world is given over to them, put into the hands of the capitalists.

We, the socialist countries, the developing countries, even the peoples of the capitalist countries — all this is an enormous force that has an interest in preventing war. For that reason we must not fold our arms. We have to put pressure on them, and hard! And the most important thing, this is where all our strength is forged.

[Worker] Let them be afraid of us.

[Second worker] They must not be afraid of us.

[Gorbachev] Let them not fear us. We do not want to scare them. But let them respect us, yes.

I think you should be calm, calm and confident at work. We will not allow anything untoward to happen. It will always be clear that if they try anything, it will cost them dear. We got carried away with our conversation!

[?Oblast official] And we still want to show you the town today!

[Gorbachev] All the best! [applause]

[Video shows cars traveling along road thinly lined with people, views of new housing blocks, and Gorbachev talking to residents in the street]

[Kirillov] Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev familiarized himself with the Avto Zavodskiy Rayon of Tolyatti. A town in itself, modern and beautiful, it grew up at the same time as the giant factory. More than half of the city's inhabitants live in the new rayon. Their average age is 29. Perhaps it was for this reason that in their conversation with Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev a great deal of attention was paid to problems of housing, the construction of kindergartens and schools, and public catering establishments.

Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev toured a complex of young people's hostels and visited the dining hall and library. He had a talk with the inhabitants of the city.

Speech at VAZ Works

LD090034 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1723 GMT 8 Apr 86

[Speech by M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, at an 8 April meeting at the Volga Car Works in Tolyatti, Kuybyshev Oblast: Gorbachev shown speaking at podium, with shots of audience interspersed; from the "Vremya" newscast — recorded]

[Text] Dear Comrades, I am sincerely glad to be meeting with you. On behalf of the Central Committee and the Soviet Government I cordially greet the workers of the VAZ, representatives of other work forces of the town of Tolyatti, and all inhabitants of this major industrial center of our country. [applause]

It is interesting to be in Kuybyshev Oblast and to be here in the town of Tolyatti — one experiences tremendous satisfaction from being here. Yesterday, in Kuybyshev, and today, here in Tolyatti, I had many, albeit brief, though meaningful and very useful meetings with workers, specialists, and senior personnel. As you understand, the main theme of the conversations revolved around the results of our 27th party congress. It seems we have every basis to say yet again that the 27th congress was successful and fulfilled its task. [applause] The work of the congress — open and permeated with a feeling of responsibility — the examination of the topical problems of the present time, and the documents adopted at the congress have given rise to an enormous interest in our party, both in our country and abroad. The CPSU and the people currently face a task of historic importance: To implement the designs of the party congress. We will be more successful in our work, comrades, the better we assimilate — think over and ponder with our minds, souls and hearts — all that was said at our party congress and all that is embodied in its decisions.

Above all, this is what one would like to say: Why, precisely, did we have a need for a congress such as this? An answer to this question is, to a considerable extent, linked with the assessment of both our achievements and those problems that have arisen before society over the past few years. I think, comrades, that there is no need to go into a detailed description of the enormous transformations that have been carried out during the years of Soviet power. They are truly revolutionary in character; the Soviet people's achievements represent an incontrovertible fact in the history of the world.

The vast economic and scientific-technical potential, the great social achievements the impressive achievements of the country in the spiritual sphere, the socialist way of life — all this is our reality today, the property of the whole people. It is precisely this that has brought our country into a leading position in world development and has provided the basis for the important role of the Soviet State in the fate of contemporary civilization.

Soviet people can be justly proud of this, for this is the greatest monument to the revolutionary creativity, the inspired labor, steadfastness, and devotion to the cause of socialism of all generations of our Soviet land. [applause]

All of this, comrades, was assessed at its true worth at the congress. I shall say even more: Without this, it would not have been possible for us to put forward the majestic, but realistic plans for accelerating the country's social and economic development, and to set tasks that, in their scale, exceed everything we have had to face in the past.

The need to accelerate social and economic development is an urgent and immediate task, the grand scale of which is now clear as it faces our country, party, and people. Why was it necessary to pose the question in this way? This was already spoken about at the congress, but it is worth speaking of again. The point is, comrades, that alongside the vast achievements, in recent years we have also been found to have considerable failings in the development of the economy. I refer to work rates, labor productivity, efficiency indices, and the slow assimilation of the achievements of scientific and technical progress. We began to lose the dynamism that had been characteristic of the Soviet economy during the entire time of its development, that lies at the base of our society's vast achievements in a short historic period.

The economic situation was also reflected in the social sphere; this sphere is for us, in the final analysis, the main one, for it is here that the highest aims and values of socialism as a social system are realized and that the humanity and democratism of the socialist way of life are manifested most broadly.

The negative processes which were being revealed in the sphere of distribution [of incomes] caused great concern in the party and among the people. This was reflected in the leveling out tendencies in the payments for work that were not in accord with the demands of the basic principle of socialism — from each according to his ability and to each according to his work. For a section of the people, their incomes considerably exceeded their labor contribution. This is intolerable in a socialist society, not only for economic reasons but for moral ones as well.

At the congress it was stated — and I wish to repeat this today — that in recent years we did not have enough purposefulness or resolve in our practical actions. All of these processes were left without the necessary consideration because of serious shortcomings in the activity of party and state organs and many cadres. There was a weakening in the management of the economy and the social sphere. Feelings of taking life easy, complacency, and lack of exactingness became widespread.

The absence of wide publicity, criticism and self-criticism, and effective control did not make it possible to reveal in good time any negative phenomena or to raise painful questions in a pointed way and resolutely wage a struggle with everything which is impeding our movement forward and closing the road to everything new and progressive.

All of this, comrades, you and I have seen and experienced. Among the party and the people, it is understood that a decisive turnabout, changes for the better, and vigorous practical actions are necessary. Precisely such an understanding of the situation has led us to the conclusions which were clearly stated before the party and country at the April CPSU Central Committee Plenum. It was precisely then that the first major step was taken toward a critical analysis of the state of affairs, a party appraisal of the situation was given, and the foundations were drawn up for a long-term political strategy, the core of which became the course toward the acceleration of the country's socioeconomic development.

The decisions of the April CPSU Central Committee Plenum opened new horizons before society. The atmosphere of exactingness and demandingness, criticism and self-criticism, the open discussion of all pressing problems in society prepared the way for a further profound analysis, serious generalizations, and fundamental decisions, which were typical both of the pre-congress report-back and elections campaign and of the entire work of the 27th CPSU Congress.

It seems that among the party and the people, the 27th CPSU Congress was correctly called the congress of strategic decisions. The party's general line, the line toward the acceleration of the country's socioeconomic development and the safeguarding of peace on earth was confirmed there and was developed further. The congress approved the new edition of the CPSU Program, substantiated theoretically the future lines of development for Soviet society, and gave a profound analysis of international development trends.

The basic guidelines for the socioeconomic development of the country in the 12th quinquennium and up to the year 2000, which were adopted at the congress, concretize the social and economic strategy of the party and determine the main tasks of the contemporary stage of socialist construction and struggle for communism. The 27th congress gave a profound scientific analysis of the modern picture of the world and put forward an extensive and constructive program for the struggle for peace and for the creation of a comprehensive system of international security.

We can be very satisfied, comrades, with the results of the congress, for the party managed to express what has come to the fore in life, what our people have come to realize. The confirmation of this was that the results of the congress were greeted within the party and throughout Soviet society with tremendous interest and ardent support for the party. The main task now is to transform energy — as was said at the congress — the energy of intentions into the energy of practical actions. It is precisely in this that the essence of the issue now lies, or in Lenin's words, the nail of the issue.

Creative labor, a high level of organization and discipline, work at full strength in every sector of the national economy by everyone — worker and peasant, engineer and scientist, and workers in the sphere of management and in party, local soviet, and economic organs, by all without exception — this is the main condition for the implementation of the party's plans and the congress' decisions. I think the majority of Soviet people already understand this very well. [applause]

What should be of paramount importance here? We must begin, first and foremost, by restructuring our thinking and psychology in organizing the style and methods of work. I will say frankly that if we do not reorganize ourselves — I am deeply convinced of this — we will not reorganize either our economy or our social life in the spirit of the party congress' decisions. In such a case we will not cope with the tasks that have been set, the scale and newness of which are unprecedented.

Reorganization must take place in each place of work, in each labor collective, and in management bodies and party and state bodies, including the Politburo and the government. In any event, it presupposes that everyone must do his job honestly, conscientiously, and with every ounce of energy and knowledge.

If this concerns a production worker, then it is up to him to ensure discipline and organization at work, high productivity, and high quality of output; to look after that which he is entrusted with; and to use production resources economically. If he is an engineer or scientist, then it is his job to make the maximum contribution to the development of scientific-technical progress and the reconstruction of the economy on the basis of the achievements of science and technology. If it concerns a member of management personnel, then it is his obligation and direct duty to ensure the widespread utilization of new methods of management and an executive solution to all questions on which the long-term results of our economy and the work of production collectives depend.

In concluding this part of the argument about the need for a profound and thorough reorganization, I would like to emphasize that which is most important: We will win without fail if we do not stick to the old, worn-out ways to which you and I have become accustomed and where we have felt comfortable. The axiom for everyone should be as follows: We will not solve new tasks by using old methods and approaches.

And something else, no less important: We must start reorganizing by reorganizing man himself. This is also very important to bear in mind, because now, with the congress over, when plans are being considered, when the means and new measures to meet the targets determined by the congress are being considered, the old voices are starting to be heard once again: Let's have more resources, more energy, more capital investment, more numbers.

One must clearly see and distinguish those who have really started to reorganize themselves, who, perhaps, sometimes commit some negligence or blunders, but who are really questing and enthusiastic about matters. These should be distinguished from those who only bend to the new breeze without changing anything in practice.

One should see that, also. Such phenomena have already appeared. By the way, now one does not frequently hear that anyone disagrees with the fact that we have chosen the way of radical restructuring in all spheres of our society's life. Moreover, the overwhelming majority of people genuinely believe the time for change has come, but support for the party's plans is no longer sufficient. One needs practical actions to implement them, one has to work in a new way. It may be that someone thinks that now, after the congress and the adopted decisions, everything will go back to the old track. But, comrades, where does the old track lead us? Not to where the decisions of the party congress call us. It is necessary to change more quickly and to assimilate new methods and a new approach in one's work. If one follows the old track he can hardly expect to fulfill tasks that we have mapped out either for the near future or the long-term. It is on these that we base our personal plans and the fortunes of our motherland.

Of course, comrades, everything I say does not mean we have everything going on as before in the old way. No, restructuring is already taking place. We see how people's attitudes to their tasks is changing. I would only like to stress: The most important things here are still in the future. The fact that people received the congress favorably and responded to its decisions with their labor can be seen from their concrete deeds. The fulfillment of the 1986 plan will become the first serious test and the concrete reply of the labor collectives to the congress decisions. We can say now, that, on the whole, the year has not begun badly in the national economy. The shifts in key industries, primarily the machine-building, metallurgical, and gas industries, are noticeable.

Coal industry workers completed the first quarter with good results. I wish to note this fact in particular because this industry was lagging noticeably in the last few years. In general, the rate of increase in the volume of industrial production was — for 3 months — 6.7 percent. In agriculture, state purchases of cattle and poultry have increased, compared with last year, by 7.6 percent, and the purchases of milk and eggs increased by 6 percent. I would particularly like to emphasize the role of the 12th 5-Year Plan in the struggle for implementing our economic strategy.

The current 5-year period is the most complex, and, to a considerable extent, decisive, of all of the three 5-year periods we are to go through up to the end of the century. It is this one that must lay a firm foundation of production intensification on the basis of scientific and technical progress and make a beginning for subsequent, more rapid progress on the whole socioeconomic and development front.

You must understand that we do not have some kind of magic wand that, at a wave, immediately makes the necessary machinery, equipment, and instruments appear. There is still a lot to construct and manufacture. The country has only begun reconstructing the most important branches of the national economy. This will be done without doubt, but it takes time. What, under these conditions, should ensure real acceleration? First and foremost, existing reserves should be utilized — we are talking about existing production potential and the country's scientific potential. That, comrades, is now the most important thing.

In line with this, I would like to note the enormous significance of the initiative of the labor collective of the Volga motor vehicle works. Your pledges, comrades, to increase the volume of production while reducing the number of workers and reducing metal and power is intensification; it is also efficiency in practice. We, comrades, are counting on this kind of approach from every labor collective. The Central Committee accords exceptionally great importance to resolving matters linked with carrying out cardinal reforms and methods of management. Overall, comrades, work is under way in all directions. Of course, there are difficulties, but I would like to stress that, without fail, we will take what we have started to its end, whatever impediments and difficulties may arise for us. [applause]

You may be sure of that. But, of course, results will be achieved more quickly if all of the country's labor collectives, all without exception, themselves more speedily join in the work to reorganize our national economy. [applause]

In line with this, I will stop in order to share my impression of my conversations yesterday and today. Yesterday I succeeded in acquainting myself in a more or less detailed way with the work of the metallurgical enterprise in Kuybyshev, which turns out rolled aluminum for the country. You know what leaves, what left the strongest impression? It is people's dissatisfaction with their work, with their achievements. This collective, this huge collective, achieved a great deal. Its achievements are known throughout the country and have been recognized with Lenin and state prizes. Even so, the people think of the future and find new reserves in order to speed progress. It is this that has given great satisfaction. [applause]

Here at this enterprise, I have once again succeeded in convincing myself about the great advantages of reconstruction over new construction. Consider this: During the first stage of reconstruction, the collective of this enterprise saved R260 million and the expenditures were recouped in 2 years. During the second stage, this collective saved R140 million and expenditures were recouped in 3 years. The third stage is already in progress and will be completed in 1989; R200 million more will be saved and expenditures will be recouped in 3 years. Finally, they have made a request for help so that they can get the fourth stage underway — a very important, complicated but, they believe, the most successful stage of reconstruction for this enterprise. This stage, if it is implemented in the form they submit, promises to save R400 million more with expenditures being recouped in 2 years. Thus, over the 4 stages of reconstruction, which started in 1972, this works — one enterprise, one labor collective — will save the country R1 billion. [applause]
